Christian Advocate.

VOL. 28.—NO. 1. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 5, 1882. WHOLE NO. 1387.

PUBLISHED FOR THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.
Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are author ized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

A WINTER SONG.

BY HENRY RIDLEY COOK.

The winds are whistling through the trees,
The snow is falling fast,
The breaks upon the mountain side
No longer o'er the masses glide;
The laughing rill upon the hill
Under a spotless pole is still;
The summer days have passed!

The frost has clad the naked bush;
The pine trees sigh and moan,
The whirling road is lost in snows,
The birds of winter come and go,
The woods are dumb, the wild bees' hum
No more from blooming flowers will come
Till winter days have flown!

Sing out a ringing roundelay!
Be merry while ye may!
What tho' the winds are wild and cold—
What tho' the year is growing old?
If hearts are warm and love is strong,
The moaning wind is summer's song;
So love and laugh to-day!

—Home Journal.

Letter from East Tennessee.

MR. EDITOR: To-night I have been reading your editorial on "Christmas Tide," and as the rain has shut us in from going to church, I use the occasion to send you a holiday letter. The fact of our great religious anniversary coming this year on Sunday has made it doubly sacred. Long before day, I waked, and thought of Bethlehem, in Judah, with its wondrous star lighting like a lamp "the place where the infant Redeemer was laid," while a choir of angels hovering near sang in notes sweeter than mortal ears had ever heard, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, and good will to men."

Bro. Leith preached us a good sermon to-day on "The time is short." We are glad to have him with us as our pastor. My engagements did not permit me to attend our Conference, but every report of our work for the past year was said to be favorable. The missionary collection had increased over the previous ones, notwithstanding the effects of the drought which in portions of our territory were very serious. Bro. Lyons, our Sunday school agent, had done a good work as you may know by the number of scholars which was reported at 31,000. We are now building a parsonage for the circuit—a work which ought to have been done years ago.

Our literary institutions, all of which are advertised in your columns, are doing as well as could be expected. Hiwassee College continues to turn out good and useful men, many of whom find their way into the ranks of teachers and preachers. I was sorry to see the Alabama Conference cut loose its official connection with the ADVOCATE. But, they now have one of their own, and, like the old woman when she bought a washpot, they neither lend nor borrow. It will be long before they build up such a paper as the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, but they have certainly made a very fine start. Our Holston Methodist has changed editors and moved from Knoxville to Bristol, 130 miles, but is now nearer the center of patronage than before. It seems a necessity, this multiplication of church papers. The increasing number of readers demands it, and competition will not hurt the papers, but rather compel them to be more useful. It is a remarkably good sign that the older our papers are, the better they become.

In looking over the list of delegates elect to the General Conference, I think you are going to have a very able body. It will not come any too soon for the church is suffering for the want of new Bishops, of whom I hope you will elect a number equal to the old bench, and let several retire who are burdened with age and infirmities. There can be no lack of suitable material, though it may be difficult to select the proper number out of so many available names. We have no candidates in this Conference. We are willing to put up with our present representation at Nashville in the person of Dr. Cunnyngham, though we rather expect to see Dr. Young, who is also a Holston man, put in charge of the Publishing House, should Dr. McFerrin prefer to retire. Yours,

P. M. GRACE.

SWEETWATER, TENN., Dec. 25, 1881.

Faithful Preaching.

"S," writing in the Shreveport Daily Times, says:

The man who is called of God to preach his word is to be absolutely free from dictation on the part of those to whom he preaches. God sends him forth with his message, and to God alone he is accountable. The truth has always hurt and its hurts to-day. The man who prophesies "smooth things" to the people, who preaches—"only of love, only of peace"—does not do his whole duty, and can not have God's approval. It is a mistake to suppose that a man must not preach the law. The man who does is no more to be condemned than the surgeon who performs the painful yet necessary operation. Again, the soil has to be ploughed and prepared for the seed and so the law is our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ." "A man must be ploughed up and brought under conviction before he will so care for Christ as to actually come to him—i. e., so as that his nature and life shall be changed and he be made a "new creature." Hence, every true man, whether his hearers hear or forbear, will preach the word of God, hit whom it may. The story is told of a Quaker who, finding a thief in his house, took his gun and said: "Friend, thee had better get out of the way; for I intend to fire this gun right where thee standeth." The preacher must, of necessity, wound before he can help, and sinners must be made conscious sinners before they can be reached and saved. Why? Jesus said: "I came, not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Kid glove, rose water, not to hit, preaching is at war with thee. "Thou art the man" preaching God requires of his servants. A minister of God should never be like one of those Italian jugglers who practice throwing daggers at a friend. See the latter stand against a board and note the skill of the juggler as he pins him in and literally marks out his form with daggers. The juggler's skill is in not hitting—the preacher's skill is in his so hitting as to bring his hearers, all bruised and wounded, to the feet of his Lord for mercy and a perfect cure. Archbishop Whately says: "I remember one of my parishioners at Stalesworth telling me, that he thought a person should not go to church to be made uncomfortable." I replied that I thought so too; but whether it should be the sermon or the man's life that should be altered so as to avoid the discomfort, must depend on whether the doctrine was right or wrong." At every hazard, the man who stands for God, should preach God's word—and, wherever a man does that, he has seals to his ministry, not simply in additional names on his church registry, but in saved souls, spiritually vitalized of God and showing forth the power of godliness in their daily lives. "The carnal mind is enmity against God" and hence an audience of carnal men and women will not "endure sound doctrine." What, then, must God's minister do? Suit his sermons to please his hearers and fill their "itching ears" with sweet sounds? No, no! Let him "cry aloud and spare not." Studying his Bible, seeking in prayer the enlightenment and power of the Spirit, he should go into his pulpit and give his people "the whole counsel of God," never forgetting to hold up to them the crucified Son of God as an all sufficient Saviour. The man who fails to hold up Christ in his fulness of saving merit is as untrue to his people as the man who fails to warn them in unmistable terms of sin, death and hell. More than aught else there is needed honest, plain, pointed and awakening preaching. Shall the devil be free to seek man's ruin and the ministry be muzzled in seeking to warn and save him? It is indeed subject for devout thankfulness that in the pulpits of all denominations, there are still found men who can not and will not flatter and soothe to the eternal ruin of their hearers—men who would rather please God than be popular. The true minister makes constant use of such texts as the one beginning "God so loved the world," and that other "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest;" yet he does not neglect to use such as the following: "Enter ye in at the straight gate, etc.," "I tell you, nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal," and those found in Matthew x, 28, xviii, 8 and 9, and in Luke xvi, 19–31.

The preacher who would be true to God and to his fellow-men and who is determined to keep his skirts clear of the blood of souls, will hold back no whit of God's truth, willing himself to suffer that souls may be saved.

An Infamous Traffic.

John Wesley said that the slave traffic was the sum of all villainies. If he could tell us what he thinks of a certain traffic carried on in the East, he would, at least, claim that it takes the first place in the list of villainies. The rum traffic is vile, altogether vile. There is nothing about it that is in the least good or useful to mankind; but the opium traffic is viler. Let us look at some of its worse features.

1. It is a very great curse in China, morally, physically and socially. A large proportion of the adult males, in some of the districts eight out of every ten, are opium smokers. In Suchau, there are 7,000 opium dens. There is no difference of opinion on the subject of the disastrous effects of the drug. Both natives and foreigners bear one testimony. It is a common remark among Chinamen: "If you want to be revenged on your enemy, you need not strike him, you need not go to law with him, or do anything of the kind. You have only to entice him into smoking opium." If you can give him a taste for opium, you will take the surest means in your power of ruining him utterly." Missionaries say that opium is the strongest ally of heathenism. It blunts the moral sensibilities and fosters the worse vices. It stands directly in the way of the gospel. It is the most formidable of the obstacles the missionaries have to meet.

2. The traffic has been forced on China by a Christian power. Again and again have the voices of Chinese statesmen been raised against it. They declare that it is ruining their country, and that China never would have permitted the drug to be imported if it had not been compelled to. The government has shown its sense of the ruinous effects of it by suppressing opium dens in various places, issuing proclamations against it, and urging the people to have nothing to do with it. There is only one way, however, of removing the curse, and that is to forbid further importation; but China can not do this without violating its treaty obligations and involving itself in war with Great Britain.

3. The traffic is carried on solely for mercenary purposes. The British government derives an enormous revenue through the cultivation and exportation of the drug in India. It has fostered and developed the traffic to an enormous extent. In less than a century the exportation has been increased from 200 chests, per annum, to 80,000. In eighty years, England has drawn no less than $800,000,000 from China as the proceeds of opium delivered at the Chinese ports. The present revenue amounts to about $35,000,000 yearly.

These are plain facts and they are eloquent facts. They very aloud for heathen China against Christian England. The millions which go into the treasury of India yearly are blood money. It is the price of human wretchedness and ruin, exacted by superior force. How can Mr. Gladstone defend it? Why is the accursed traffic not abolished? There is but one reason. Soon after Mr. Gladstone became premier of England, the question came up in Parliament, and most eloquent appeals were made to him and to his colleagues to relieve Christian England from the shame, the abomination, the sin of procuring the ruin of China. Mr. Gladstone and the Marquis of Hartington had but one argument to offer in reply. The proceeds of the traffic were needed for revenue. They could not abolish it until some project was devised to make good the enormous deficiency which would occur. It is a simple question of right or wrong, not of sentiment on the one hand, nor of revenue on the other; but the government must have money, say the ministers, right or wrong.

We are glad to notice an evidence of the awakening of the Christian conscience of England on this subject. Recently, a remarkable meeting was held in the Mansion House, London, in which Roman Catholics stood side by side with Protestants in uttering vigorous protests against the iniquity, and in demanding that Parliament utterly abolish it. The civilized world seconds that demand. —New York Independent.

Origin of the Mormon Bible.

M. A. Cooper writes to the Cincinnati Gazette that he has been visiting in Washington county, Penn., Mr. Joseph Miller, Sr., now in his ninety-second year, a fresh, affable old gentleman, and elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and a man of unimpeachable veracity.

In answer to the question if he knew Rev. Solomon Spaulding, the author of the "Book of Mormon," he quickly turned toward the writer, and his face brightened as his mind ran back to the events of the past, and he said, with considerable emphasis, "I most certainly do."

"Did you ever read a copy of the work?"

"Yes, some years ago," he continued, "Rev. J. W. Hamilton, a Presbyterian minister, now living in Steubenville, O., presented me with a copy, which I read carefully."

"Is it your opinion that you ever read or heard read any portion before?"

"Yes, I am quite positive that I did."

He then referred to a passage on page 148, which he said was so strange, that at the time Mr. Spaulding read it to him from his manuscript it fixed itself upon his memory, and that he had never forgotten it. He said that about 1812 Mr. Spaulding came to Amity, a small village about five miles from his present home where he kept a hotel. That Spaulding was in delicate health, and that he (Miller) often spent his evenings at his home. While there, upon several occasions, Mr. Spaulding would bring out a large roll of papers and read select portions of their contents to amuse us of evenings. He told me that he wrote it for a novel, and intended to have it published as a means of support for his family. He called it the "Lost Manuscript Found," and said that he wrote it to pass away the time when he was feeling unwell. "I am confident," said Mr. Miller, "from what I know of Mr. Spaulding's manuscript and the Book of Mormon, that Joseph Smith by some means got possession of the copy of that novel, and promptly made some changes in it and issued it under the name by which it is known to-day." Mr. Miller said that Spaulding was an enthusiastic archeologist, and that he often obliged himself in the belief that the American continent was at one time peopled by a colony of ancient Israelites, and that his manuscript was only a fanciful history of the race which had built the mounds. Mr. Miller is the only man living, as I thought, who was acquainted with Spaulding, at least, the only person who has any knowledge of the exact origin of the "Book of Mormon," or who ever heard it read from the lips of the author. He said to your correspondent, during his stay, that as he neared the grave, with but one breath between himself and heaven, he hoped that that last breath might carry a message that would prevent people from being led into Mormonism, that most seductive delusion of the devil.

"Spaulding was a good man," said Mr. Miller, "and I would not cast a shadow upon his memory, for it never was his intention to create a false religion by anything that he wrote. I attended him through his last illness, and, when death had called him from earth, I, with my own hands, made the coffin that contains his sleeping ashes. He was buried in the churchyard of the village, and his grave remains unmarked, while the work of his idle hours, eighty years ago, has grown in the country he dearly loved, until the eyes of the nation are turned with horror upon its magnitude."

PROHIBITION IN KANSAS.—The proclamation of Gov. St. John, says the New York Observer, has made things lively in Kansas. He offers handsome rewards in money for the conviction of persons violating the laws forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors, or of officers neglecting their duty to enforce the laws. The law is popular in the agricultural districts, and is well enforced all over the State, except in certain cities. It is stated, in a letter from Topeka, in the Minneapolis Tribune, that "by nineteen-twentieths of the population the prohibitory legislation is readily acquiesced in, and it is approved by even a larger majority of people than that by which the measure was adopted. But the organized liquor interest in the United States has made common cause to defeat enforcement at three or four points, with the expectation that if this can be accomplished the law will soon be practically a dead letter everywhere." This is a very serious charge. The author of it adds:

"In an interview with Gov. St. John, I learn that he has no doubt of the outcome of the struggle, but which, he says, has now become simply one between the will of the people, as expressed in their well-considered laws, and a few hundred rum-sellers, banded together and backed by the outside whisky interest in a campaign of law breaking in four towns of the State. As the governor puts it, if there is a power within the State more powerful than the State itself, the sooner the fact is known the better, and he proposes to make the test."

USELESS EXPENDITURE.—While every girl and woman should take a pride in her own adornment and that of the home, she should use her own judgment and not buy because a thing is cheap. Get what you need, and before buying think whether you really need the article. It is probably a pretty trifle in dress, in furniture; but what solid benefit will it be to you? Or is it some luxury for the table, that you can as well do without. Think, therefore, before you spend your money. Or you need a new carpet, new sofa, new chairs, new bedstead, or new dress; you are tempted to buy something a little handsomer than you had intended, and while you hesitate the dealer says to you, "It's only a trifle more, and see how far prettier it is." But before you purchase, stop to think. Will you be the better a year hence, much less in old age, for having squandered your money? Is it not wiser to "lay by something for a rainy day?" All these luxuries gratify you only for the moment; you soon tire of them, and their only permanent effects is to consume your means. It is by such little extravagances, not much separately, but ruinous in the aggregate that the great majority of families are kept comparatively poor. The first lesson to learn is to deny yourself useless expenses, and the first step toward learning this lesson is to think before you spend.—Christian at Work.

Good Words.

When we take up the practical side of life, we find principles cover what is termed the higher life. To have a sweet temper and a more gentle spirit, is the best way to overcome the evil spirit; to have a purer life, strive against impurity; to love God with all the heart, taste sin so as to avoid it as you would an enemy; to have the assurance of happiness beyond this life, live truly, honestly and righteously every day. These principles underlie all higher living, and without the testing and praying are only the froth on a surging stream.

Two friends were walking together and occasionally jostled each other. "Take thy arm," keep step, and the jars will not annoy," said one of them. They did so and found not only harmony, but mutual support. "Am I walking with God? Do I link my arm with my brother? Are churches among themselves and as one army of the Lord, keeping step with the music, interlocked into living, loving sympathies under the one Captain of Salvation?" The same rule holds in parental and school discipline, and in all concerted action.

That God is indeed a father to us was one of those things kept secret since the world began until Jesus came, and, by the infinite love of his life, made the infinite love of God credible. Miss not the grandeur of this revelation. Come trusting—not afraid to ask. The children are not expected to "lay up for their Great Father;" but the Father lays up for the children. Whatever we have been, it is our duty to reckon on deepest interest and highest love filling God's heart toward us.

Fathers on earth can not always help us; they are on our level; themselves entangled and perplexed. But when Jesus says, "Say, our Father which art in heaven," he raises our view to the greatness and the power of God. There, in heaven, he has leisure to help us. He has the infinite perfection that leaves him free to bear the burden of others. He has the resources from which he can supply our needs, and the place of vantage from which he can influence all that happens.

How beautiful our lives would soon grow if we carried always with us, and put into practice, the lessons we learn by experience! Look back at the end of the year and see many things that cause bitter regret, but instead of leaving them behind we go on repeating the same follies and errors in the new year. A little heroic decision would enable us to rise every day on the mistakes of yesterday.—Sunday School Times.

Jesus often stands with the bereaved at the graveside, promising consolation, which the sorrowing heart receives, even as Martha opposed the word of Christ. To such comes the gentle rebuke: If thou wouldst believe! The healing balm can only be taken from the Saviour's hand by the hand of faith.

I am persuaded that many persons say more about their sins being too great to be pardoned, than they either believe or feel, from a supposition that it is a token of humility to talk thus. God can not be glorified, nor Christ honored, by doubting of his ability or willingness to save.—James.

The frosts of autumn sink into the leaves and prepare them for the necessity of their fall; and thus insensibly are we, as years close round us, detached from our tenacity of life by the gentle pressure of recorded sorrow.—Landor.

The right will produce more right and be its own reward—in the end a reward altogether infinite, for God will meet it with what is deeper than all right, namely, perfect love. —George MacDonald.

South Carolina Conference.

APPOINTMENTS.

CHARLESTON DISTRICT.—W. P. Mouzon, P. E. Charleston—Trinity, A. C. Smith; Charleston, Bethel, E. J. Meynardie; Charleston, Spring street, D. J. Simmons; Calhoun circuit, J. M. Fridy; Berkley circuit, R. H. Jones; St. Stephen mission, to be supplied by Jas. W. Murray; Summerville, Geo. W. Walker; Cypress circuit, W. H. Lawton; St. Paul mission, to be supplied; St. George circuit, W. S. Wightman; Ramberg circuit, T. E. Wannamaker; Colleton circuit, M. H. Pooser; South Branchville circuit, H. Tiller; Round O circuit, S. D. Vaughan; Walterboro circuit, C. C. Fishburne; Yemassee circuit, J. C. Loyal; Attendale circuit, M. M. Brabham; Black Swamp circuit, J. L. Sibley; Hardeeville circuit, to be supplied by E. H. Loyless; Editor S. C. Advocate, S. A. Weber.

ORANGEBURG DISTRICT. M. Brunson, P. E. Orangeburg station, W. H. Richardson; Orangeburg circuit, J. B. Platt; Branchville circuit, N. K. Melton; Providence circuit, W. D. Kirkland; St. Matthew circuit, F. Auld; Lewisville circuit, J. A. Tilfoli; Orange circuit, R. R. Dagnall; Elloree circuit, D. H. Prosser; Jesse E. Rushton; Edisto mission, M. M. Ferguson; Graham circuit, J. L. Shuford; Williston and Blackville circuit, J. B. Mansfield, one to be supplied; Langley, J. J. Neville; Graniteville and Aiken, S. Leard.

CHARLESTON DISTRICT. J. W. Carlisle, P. E. Columbia, Washington street, R. N. Wells, W. A. Clark, supernumerary; Columbia, Marion street, J. L. Stokes; Columbia city mission, L. M. Little; Richland Fork and Columbia circuit, J. W. Dickson, E. G. Price; Ridgeway circuit, G. W. Catlin; Winnsboro and Blackstock, G. J. Griffiths; Fairfield circuit, A. J. Cauthen; Chester station, C. T. Harmon; Chester circuit, J. M. Boyd; East Chester circuit, J. S. Campbell; Rock Hill circuit, J. C. Neal; Fort Mill circuit, W. W. Williams; Yorkville station, R. P. Franks; Lexington Fork circuit, H. W. Whitaker; Gilbert Hollow and Lexington, J. E. Watson; Batesburg circuit, P. J. Kistler; Saluda mission, to be supplied; Johnston circuit, W. A. Rogers; Edgefield circuit, J. A. Mood; Princeton Female College, O. A. Darby, Chaplain To Penitentiary, W. Martin.

SUMTER DISTRICT. T. G. Herbert, P. E. Sumter station, H. E. Chreitzberg; Sumter circuit, W. W. Mood; Spring Hill and Kershaw circuit, R. L. Doffie; Bishopville station, A. W. Moore; Manning station, H. M. Mood; Foreston circuit, T. B. Boyd; Santee circuit, J. S. Beasley; Camden station, D. D. Dantzler; Hanging Rock circuit, W. H. Arial; Lancaster circuit, J. W. Wolling; Chesterville circuit, C. D. Towell; East Lancaster circuit, J. W. Arial; Lynchburg and St. Lake, C. H. Wells; Wedgefield circuit and mission, J. C. Chandler; Shiloh, W. A. Betts; Clarendon, T. P. Phillips.

FLORENCE DISTRICT.—Seth H. Browne, P. E. Florence station, W. S. Martin; Darlington station, W. T. Capers; Society Hill circuit, S. Jones; Cheraw station, E. T. Hodges; Darlington circuit, J. W. McIlroy; Lower Darlington circuit, J. T. Kligo; Timmonsville circuit, N. B. Clarkson; Mars Bluff, A. J. Stafford; West Marion circuit, W. Carson; Effingham circuit, A. C. LeGette; Williamsburg circuit, J. P. Davis; Scranton mission, H. J. Morgan; Johnsonville circuit, A. W. Jackson; Georgetown station, D. Zimmerman Dantzler; Georgetown circuit, to be supplied by D. Durant; Black River circuit, J. S. Porter; Kingstree station, T. E. Gilbert; Missionary to Brazil, J. W. Koger.

MARION DISTRICT.—Thomas Raysor, P. E. Marion station, A. H. Lester; Centenary circuit, J. W. Humbert; Britton's Neck circuit, D. W. Seale; North Marlboro circuit, T. E. Morris, W. L. Pegues, supernumerary; Bennettsville circuit, J. W. Murray, J. C. Beard; Clio circuit, J. C. Bissel, L. H. Hainer, supernumerary; Little Rock circuit, S. J. Hill; Mullins circuit, T. J. Clyde, T. M. White; Conwayboro station, J. T. Pate; Cool Spring circuit, to be supplied by W. B. Baker; Camp Swamp circuit, B. G. Jones; Buckskville circuit, J. J. Workman; Wasamaw circuit and mission, A. B. Lee.

SPARTANBURG DISTRICT.—J. M. Carlisle, P. E. Spartanburg station, J. T. Wightman; Spartanburg city mission, A. E. Smith; Union station, J. A. Porter; Cherokee Springs circuit, W. H. Wroton, J. W. Tarbourx; Cane Creek circuit, J. A. Wood; Jonesville circuit, J. K. McCain; Gaffney City circuit, L. A. Johnson; Glendale circuit, A. P. Avant; Goshen Hill circuit, A. W. Walker; Laurens circuit, A. C. Walker; North Laurens circuit, P. A. Murray; Clinton circuit, W. M. Hardin; Belmont circuit, J. B. Wilson; Campobello circuit, to be supplied by R. A. Brock, B. M. Boozer, supernumerary; Pacolet circuit, J. H. Zimmerman; York circuit, A. Ervin; Vanderbilt University, A. M. Shipp, Professor; Wofford College, W. Smith, W. W. Duncan, Professors; Sunday-school secretary, R. C. Oliver.

COKESBURY DISTRICT.—C. H. Pritchard, P. E. Cokesbury station, W. Thomas; Cokesbury circuit, one to be supplied; Abbeville station, R. L. Harper; Abbeville circuit, J. W. Brown; South Abbeville circuit, W. W. Jones; Lowndesville station, M. L. Banks; Tumbling Shoals circuit, W. H. Kirton; Greenwood circuit, W. C. Power; North Edgefield circuit, W. P. Meadors; Newberry station, R. D. Smart; Newberry circuit, A. J. Stokes, J. W. Neely, J. C. Counts, supernumerary; North Newberry circuit, A. A. Gilbert; Saluda circuit, J. B. Traywick.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT.—S. B. Jones, P. E. Greenville station, J. O. Wilson; Greenville circuit, H. B. Browne; Reidville circuit, G. M. Boyd; North Greenville circuit, L. F. Beaty; Fork Shoals circuit, J. W. Daniel; Williamston circuit, L. Wood; Brushy Creek circuit, to be supplied by W. A. Hodges; Anderson station, J. E. Carlisle; Anderson circuit, J. Attaway; West Anderson circuit, J. F. England; Pendleton circuit, W. Hutto; Pickens circuit, S. P. H. Elwell; Seneca City circuit, P. B. Jackson; Walhalla circuit, C. D. Mann; Williamston Female College, S. Lander, President.

A. G. Gantt, transferred to North Carolina Conference.

SUPERANNUATED MEMBERS.—D. D. Byars, M. A. Connolly, David Derrick, J. Finger, J. R. Little, M. A. McKibben, Duncan J. McMillan,* T. A. Muncrlyn, A. Nettles, W. C. Patterson, L. Searboro, John Watts.

H. A. C. Walker and I. J. Newberry added to the list the present session.

*Died during the year.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5, 1882.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMN.

BY TRANSIENT.

(For the mountains, where terrible storms prevail.)

God of the terrible and piercing bolt,
The murderous lightning blazing from the sphere!
God of the whirlwind on its mad career!
God of the gulfs upheaving, black and molt,
The bursting torrents, hurling mire and clod,
The steamy volumes, blasting air and earth,
All hot from subterrene, mysterious birth!
Remember us, we pray, thou great, thou dreadful God!

And when the whirlwinds toss the harvest high,
And hurl their crowninls from the forest brows,
And awful sounds of crashing walls arouse,
And agonizing shriek, and deathful cry,
And we are nothing—then our safety be,
E'en from the fear that wrecks the spirit's power!
Help us to hide, and through the dreadful hour,
The giant ruin face, remembering, trusting Thee!

O when the rising morn is gilding fair
The misty channels of the mountain o'er,
We watch the riffin vapors while they soar
To viewless beauty in the azure air
And when the rainbows' mighty fabrics blaze,
While earth and heaven with glory bless them so!
From every arch we hear Thy voice, and oh!
Thy beauty, and Thy love with hearts exultant praise!

And Thou art just as kind in storm and gale,
Albeit Thy gracious will may none descry;
Thou art kind in judgment as in blessing—ay,
In death as life! Thy love doth never fail
Gentle the bolt will fall, should'st thou decree,
And safe the whirlwind bear on to Thy rest—
O Thou who sparest our mountain—builded nest,
All praises to Thy name, now and forever be!

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KRANER.

First Quarter—Lesson II.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 8, 1882.—MARK 1, 14-28.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light."—Isaiah ix. 2.

JESUS IN GALILEE.

OLD VERSION.	NEW VERSION.
14. Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God,	14. Now after that John was delivered up, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of God,
15. And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.	15. And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe in the gospel.
16. Now as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew his brother casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.	16. And passing along by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew the brother of Simon casting a net in the sea: for they were fishers.
17. And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.	17. And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.
18. And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him.	18. And straightway they left the nets, and followed him.
19. And when he had gone a little further thence, he saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets.	19. And going on a little further, he saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the boat mending the nets.
20. And straightway he called them: and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him.	20. And straightway he called them: and they left their father Zebede in the boat with the hired servants, and went after him.
21. And they went into Capernaum and straightway on the Sabbath day he entered into the synagogue, and taught.	21. And they go into Capernaum; and straightway on the Sabbath day he entered into the synagogue and taught.
22. And they were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.	22. And they were astonished at his teaching: for he taught them as having authority, and not as the scribes.
23. And there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out,	23. And straightway there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out,
24. Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God.	24. Saying, What have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God.
25. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.	25. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.
26. And when the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.	26. And the unclean spirit, tearing him and crying with a loud voice, came out of him.
27. And they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they do obey him.	27. And they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What is this? a new teaching? with authority he commandeth even the unclean spirits, and they obey him.
28. And immediately his fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.	28. And the report of him went out straightway everywhere into all the region of Galilee round about.

An interval of more than a year Mark passes over in silence, between the last verse of the first lesson and the opening verse of this. Why he did this we can not and care not to tell. Suffice it to say he tells us enough, and not too much to believe. Maybe he felt as he wrote, that if all the things Christ did and said were written in a book it would be too big to buy, and too wonderful to believe. The world would not receive it. He starts his history at the point when the great Baptist's voice was hushed in a dungeon, at a time when every eye was fixed upon Jesus; the great wilderness preacher, now incarcerated, no longer could divide the audience. He took up the note of his forerunner, and adds another to it. John said, repent, prepare, the kingdom is nigh unto you. Christ cried, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent and believe ye the gospel. He takes up the preaching of the Baptist, but he was in truth his own forerunner; his early teachings ever were preparing the way for his later; a new word even here is added—repent and believe. He joins belief to repentance; they are inseparably henceforth joined together by the lips of Christ, yet the belief must ever come more and more to the front, as the living object of faith becomes more and more revealed; it was a new note that John's preaching lacked. A repentance that culminated in trust, and a trust that was raised into faith, and faith's clear vision awakes another repentance, which but ends in another measure of faith. He preached the gospel of the kingdom of God; in that gospel was revealed the righteousness of God from faith to faith; between each step of faith was the repentance Christ preached.

"The time is fulfilled;" the set time of waiting, the time of the old covenant, the time of the prophets and symbols, the time of preparation, a long time; it was 4,000 years. Think of God, our God of such infinite resources, working on a scheme four thousand years; how much power and wisdom must have accumulated and condensed in the scheme, and yet some men doubt the power of the gospel to renovate a human heart in a moment. Oh! ye advocates of time, ye doubters of sudden and instantaneous conversion of souls through the power of the word of this gospel, how much more time will you have? God says the time has been fulfilled. Jesus worked and preached as conscious of this accepted time, this day of salvation. He begins at once to gather his workers.

He saw Simon and Andrew his brother casting their nets into the sea: they were fishers. The Master was on the shore, and the men in the boat some distance out, in hailing distance. He called out to them: "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men." What a happy selection of words for a call to these men; it was to them, like the star to the Magi, in the line of their calling. What words and signs Jesus uses to win our service! Remember, Andrew and Peter had met the Lord before. John had poluted them to the Lamb of God. Peter accepted, on sight, Jesus as the Messiah, the Christ of God. So did Andrew. Both accepted him as the Lamb of God. But, somehow, after their first enthusiastic adherence to Jesus, they left his company and went back to their boats. They were his earliest converts. Peter he had named Cephas, for his generous and ready acceptance of himself as the Christ. Both were converted to Christ: but now comes their call to preach. "Fishers of men" needed no explanation to these men—a change of game, from fish to men—but in the same line of labor, trials, dangers, disappointments, watching and exposure in each. The sea was full of fish, but they could not see through the depths; but they let down the net without seeing; they cast the line, and with sensitive hand held on, waiting. Catching the fishes in the hidden depths is like fishing for souls. We can not look into the depths of a human soul; nor can we tell what is going on in the whirl of God's providences, and in the mysterious movements of the Spirit as he broods over the face of these deep waters. Oh! the excitement of such fishing—catching souls, winning crowns, hiding sins, saving souls from death. No need to leave our labor to find Jesus. He calls on men who are at work, and he uses the very qualities of mind and energy employed in our labor to better and higher results. A call to preach his gospel is no reversion of man's whole life. Let the echoes on the shores of Galilee tell us who belong to the true succession, and the answer will be "they that straightway forsake all and follow him." The Lord calls busy men; he calls from work to work; the best call a preacher can have is to be called away from every other work. For interest and exciting pleasure, and for anticipations the most inspiring, there is no occupation which can for a moment stand with preaching when the call from Christ is such as these men received. The children of this world are, as a rule, wiser in their generation than the children of light. How sharp they are in seeking and catching their game. What enticing snares they set, what tempting baits they hang out, how they fish in all waters; but their skill and persistence and cunning in gaining their end, admirable as it is, is but child's play when compared with the deep laid schemes of some humble saint of God for saving of souls.

I have known of nothing so wise as some of the plans of faithful mothers, laid for the saving of her sinning boy, stretching through years, evincing a wisdom not of earth, and a pertinacity of effort that would shame the wisdom of this world. Jesus and his new preachers are next noticed by Mark, in the synagogue at Capernaum. Our Lord gave us a pattern of respect for the national church and its service. He came to Capernaum, and the first Sabbath finds him at church. Mark says, Straightway on the Sabbath day he went into the synagogue and taught; and with an authority which astonished his hearers. All other teachers referred to the books and to the rabbis, but this Teacher gave out his words, backed with his "I say." Oh! the force of that I when we remember who he was. When he spoke, what he said was final; it included all that could be said on that subject. He left nothing to be added. His discourse was interrupted by a man with an unclean spirit. Luke, in describing this poor fellow, says, A man who had a spirit (an stilatus) of an unclean devil; that is, a man in an unclean spirit; that is, under the influence of such a devil. Just as we say of man that he is in drink, in liquor, when he is under the influence of it. The man's identity was absorbed by the spirit of a low devil, and he could not separate between himself and the devil. It was the presence of Christ that made the evil spirit cry out. This poor demoniac, by his very helplessness and his great need, was drawn to the Saviour. The devil in him was troubled at the presence of Christ. He knew his power and holiness, and shrank and cowered before him. The man with an instinct of self-preservation was drawn to this Deliverer, and he came dragging with him devil and all; but when he speaks the devil puts the words on his tongue. The devil trembled; he had cause to tremble. Was he not in the presence of One who had just conquered his prince? Art thou come to destroy us, the man and me? See his subtlety; he will make the poor demoniac think that he and himself are inextricably one; so he says us. Christ silences the devil, and tells him to come out of him. What a wrench! No wonder the poor demoniac shrieked out with loud cries, for the spirit of an unclean devil had insinuated his coils along every nerve, and tangled himself in and out through every muscle of the man's frame. No wonder the man was convulsed when the devil came out. How came this pitiful man in the synagogue. Devil-possessed men have a strange hankering for Christ; it is the little remnant of humanity left which, in sheer desperation, seeks the only one who can deliver them. It is not the devil that brings them to the Saviour. We may see in this man possessed, the picture of those men who are most hateful to God; men who outwardly acknowledge Christ and inwardly hate him. Christ silenced him. All the unclean spirit said was true, but Christ will not accept the witness of evil. He does not want his character proclaimed by devils; men might say they were lying witnesses. Because a great many very bad men say many very beautiful and just things about our Lord, that is no proof of their goodness, for so do the common devils. This miracle got him great fame, but it did not please everybody. Some immediately began questioning what new thing is this. Where the authority for casting this devil out; there is not a line in all the ritual of sacrifice for this. Moses has never given us a word in regard to these. Christ did not destroy the devil. Why did he not? This was not his work. He came to destroy the works of the devil, not devils themselves. The Lord will attend to them after awhile; they are reserved unto the judgment of the great day. Have you any friends in the devils, or with devils, whisky devils, money devils, selfish devils. Take them to the Saviour of Mary of Magdala:

Colportage Sketches—No. 18.

BY A. M. JONES.

BUT HE WONT DO SO NOW.

On the afternoon of a cold, rainy day in February, 1878, while canvassing one of those barren, desolate, wire-grass regions in southeastern Alabama, I began to cast about for horse feed, and a place to spend the night. A number of excellent, intelligent, well-to-do families lived in other parts of the country, but none, as far as I could learn, within ten or fifteen miles of that lonely spot. The inhabitants of the community subsisted from their cattle, guns, timber, and lived after the most primitive style. Their houses were rude log huts, usually of one room, which answered for all the purposes of cooking, eating, entertaining company and sleeping. Many of those kind people offered me the hospitalities of their humble homes, but had no feed for my tired horses. As the hours so rapidly passed away, and the dark shades of evening drew near, with every indication of a stormy night, my anxiety became intense. The idea of spending such a night alone in the wild woods was simply fearful, and of staying in any of the houses seen during the day, without shelter and feed for my horses, almost as bad. Had I not felt my responsibility to God for the sacred trust committed to my hands, and fearing that those ignorant people might live and die without the Holy Bible, I would have abandoned the field hours before. Finally, when the day's work was accomplished, and while visiting the last family I could reach before night, some one informed me that an old Methodist man lived four or five miles to the west, with whom preachers had been known to stop. I hailed this as good news, and felt sure of a home for the night. Turning my horses in that direction, and urging them forward at full speed, in less than an hour they halted at the gate. The good woman of the house, an old lady, at least seventy-five years of age, on learning who I was, and what I was doing, said: "Git down an' come in out of the rain; I'm glad to see you. No preachers hardly ever comes to our house these days. The old man is not at home, but when he comes I know he'll be glad you come." In a short time my horses were in good, dry stable, fed and made comfortable, and I was warming and drying myself by the luxurious fire, which the kind old lady had replenished, with a good supply of pine-knots, while waiting my return from the lot. Two hours expired before the old gentleman came, during which time this mother in Israel entertained me by relating the following interesting narrative. She said: "I was a young girl when I got religion and jined the church, away back in the old State. I have bin a Methodist more nor fifty years, which is a long time. When me and the old man was married (I call him the old man, but he was not old then, though,) he was mighty wild and wicked. After we was married a while, an' was keepin' house by ourselves, I axed him, one Sunday mornin', if he was goin' to meetin', an' he said no, he was goin' some whar else. I said I wanted to go, an' he got mad an' said he didn't know what I wanted to go to meetin' for; it didn't do anybody any good. I told him I was a member of the church, an' wanted to go. Then he cursed an' said a heap of ugly words, an' said if I was gnin' to live with him I'd have to quit all sich foolishness as that. Then he went off and staid all day. I staid at home all day by myself an' cried, an' was sorry we was married; but I'm not sorry now, though. I was wicked too for havin' sich feelin's, and I didn't pray an' read my Bible a bit; but I didn't have no Bible to read. A long time after that I told him one day I wanted a Bible, an' he got mad an' cursed, an' said the Bible was a bad book, it made folks crazy, an' he wouldn't have one about the house. An' I went off an' cried, an' didn't say another word, because I knowed it wouldn't do any good. A long time after that, when we had two or three children, I most forget which, a man come along one day, who was a preacher, an' said he was huntin' up the people an' supplyin' them with Bibles, an' axed me if I wanted one. I hated to tell him the old man didn't want a Bible, an' told him the old man was not at home, an' I didn't have no money to pay for it. He told me he would give me one if I would read it an' tell my husband to read it too. Then he went on, an' I never seed him any more; but I knowed he was a mighty good man. I was mighty proud of my Bible at first; it was so nice an' purty, an' I read a right smart in it that day, but I thought after a while the old man would be mad, then I was sorry I took it, because I always tried to please him about everything. So when the old man come home that night, an' the children all went to sleep, I thought it was best to tell him all about it. So I got my new Bible an' made out like I was mighty proud of it, an' showed it to him. An' he got mad an' cursed, an' axed me how I got it. An' when I told him he got madder than ever, an' snatched it out of my hand, an' went to fling it in the fire. But I couldn't stand that. An' I know I was wicked again, because I was mad too, an' jerked it away from him, an' told him he shouldn't burn up my Bible. I looked him straight in the face, an' told him it was mine, an' didn't cost him anything. I was mighty sorry I did that way, an' talked cross to him, but somehow I couldn't help it when he went to burn up the Bible. Then he said, you had better keep it out of my sight, an' if that preacher comes along here again leavin' sich books at my house I will take a stick to him." At this she hesitated, fearing, I suppose, that such intelligence might make me uneasy, continued: "But he wont do so now. I was mighty unhappy them days, an' cried a heap at night. I knowed it was wicked to git mad like I did, but it seemed like I couldn't help it. An' the old man, I b'lieve, was glad I was mad, because he said, I thought church folks didn't git mad. An' this made me feel mighty bad. I kept the Bible put away a long time, an', when the old man was gone, read it most every day. When we had bin married eight or ten years the old man had not bin to church, an' one day one of our neighbor men come to our house an' told us a universal preacher was goin' to preach at his house the next Sunday, an' wanted us to come an' hear him. I told him I wouldn't go to hear him, because all the universal folks I ever saw was wicked, an' I reckon the preacher is wicked too. The old man said he would go, an' I didn't say another word. I knowed the old man thought the preacher was wicked, an' his preachin' would suit him. When Sunday come the old man went to hear the universal preacher, and when he come back he was in a mighty good humor, an' said the universal preacher convinced him the Bible was true, and universal religion the only true religion in the world. I didn't say a word, but the old man talked a long time about universal religion. When the preacher come the next time the old man went agin, an' when he come back he said he heard a mighty good sermon, an' was not afraid to die. He said the preacher proved from the Bible that there is no hell, an' when the Bible reads about hell it means the grave, an' when people die they all go to heaven, whether they are wicked or not. I axed him if he b'lieved that, an' he said he knowed it was so. An' he kept on readin' a universal book the preacher give him to read. I tell you all this made me mighty unhappy them days, but it's bin a long time ago. When he kept on talkin' and readin' out of the book I told him if he got me to b'lieve his universal religion I would soon go to heaven. He said, go right off. I told him yes, I wish I was there now. He said, what makes you want to go so soon? I told him I was very unhappy in this world. He said, what makes you so unhappy? I was not mad then, but told him the plain truth; you will git drunk, an' git mad an' curse, an' abuse my church, an' now always talkin' about universal religion, an' our little boys will soon be men, an' they will learn to be wicked like you. You know I am unhappy, and if I b'lieved in your universal religion I would end my life an' go home to heaven, where I could be happy. When I quit talkin' the old man (I keep callin' him the old man, but he was not old then, though,) did not say a word, an', when I looked around, he looked so sorry that I begun to cry, an' I cried a long time after he went to bed. After that night the old man never said any more about universal religion, an' never read the book any more, an' never went to hear the preacher preach agin. An' that's bin most fifty years ago." At this the old lady dried the tears from her face with her apron, and continued: "A month or two after I talked to the old man so plain the new preacher come on the circuit (they called it a mission then,) an' went all round to every house an' read the Bible and prayed. When he come to our house I was afraid the old man would say something bad to him, but he didn't, though. He said he had been sent to preach to us, an' wanted to see everybody in the neighborhood before he preached. That's the way preachers used to do a long time ago. Then he read the Bible an' prayed before he started, an' axed us to come to hear him preach. The old man didn't git mad a bit, an' I knowed he was gittin better. When the day for preachin' come the old man said he would go to church with me if I wanted him to go, and I knowed I was goin' to cry, an' went off in the other room, an' staid a long time, because I didn't want him to see me cry, an' I knowed he was gittin' better. The new preachor preached a mighty good sermon that day about Jesus comin' in the world to save sinners. I knowed the old man had bin a mighty bad sinner, but prayed that he might be saved too. An' when I saw the old man lookin' rite straight at the preacher, and lookin' so sorry; I begun to cry, an' cried all the time meetin' lasted. When we come home I thought the old man had bin cryin', but was not sure about it, an' I cried most all day, because I knowed the old man was gittin' better. The next Sunday the old man did not go off some place where he always did, an' I was so glad. After dinner, though, he went out an' was gone a long time, an' when he come back I seed he had somethin' in his hand on the other side he didn't want me to see. I didn't let on, but when he went to the book shelf I knowed it was my Bible which he had bin readin'. The next day, when I went in the house, he was lyin' on the floor restin', like he always does after dinner when he wnrks hard, an' I saw him put somethin' on the other side quick, an' I knowed it was my Bible, an' when I went out an' come back it was gone. He didn't want me to see him have it. That night, after I cleaned up my things after supper, an' went in the house, the old man was, settin' there readin', an' didn't care if I did see him. So he read a long time. An' when the children were all put in bed, an' asleep, he said, I have bin a mighty bad man, an' am sorry for it now, an' goin' to do better. When I wanted to burn up this Bible, an' talked about universal religion, I knowed it was wicked, an' I don't know what made me do that way. I am goin' to be a better man, an' jine the church the next meetin' day. Then he couldn't say anything more; an' we both cried a long time." This scene, almost fifty years ago, came up so fresh and so vividly before the good woman's recollection that she buried her face in her hands and sobbed aloud. The simple narrative, told with so much feeling, touched my heart, and caused me, time and again, to apply my handkerchief to my eyes. Having recovered her voice, and drying her face again with her apron, she proceeded: "The next meetin' day the old man jined the church, an' ever since then has bin one of the best men you ever saw. An' when he comes home to-night, an' you see him, you'll say he's a good old man." It was now time to spread the table, and the good old woman could talk no longer. I was anxious to see the old gentleman, who soon came, and expressed himself as being very glad to see me at his house. After an hour's conversation and prayers I retired to rest, with the full assurance that these two old people were ripe for heaven. What a treasure the Bible is. What a blessing to our race. Reader, read your Bible, and see that each of your children has a copy.

A USEFUL LESSON.—A large whale has just been reading a short lesson on an old theme to the inhabitants of Walls Island, Orkney, and even to mankind at large. This whale in his gambols ran himself ashore, when the islanders turned out in a body with knives, pitchforks, and every accessible instrument of attack, and, after satisfying themselves by inflicting innumerable stabs that he was dead, proceeded, by help of the rising tide, to tow him with their boats into harbor. The whale, however, with a union of stoical endurance and diplomatic craft hitherto unrecognized in the species, had been biding his time, and no sooner regained his own element than he rushed out to sea, dragging the fleet of screaming Orcadians behind him. To be hoist with your own petard is bad enough, but to be abducted by your own whale is worse; and the people of Walls, after three miles of an involuntary voyage, managed to cut the ropes and escape from the formidable sea Tartar whom they had caught. From this adventurous incident the Walls islanders and all who are willing to profit by the experience of others may learn how unsafe it is to contend with whales in their own waters or with men on their own ground, and, generosity apart, how imprudent it is to be cruel to the helpless, since there is no telling how formidable they may become when their opportunity arrives.—Pall Mall Gazette.

—The biennial meeting of the Synod of the Free Churches of France was held last month, in Paris, under the presidency of Dr. E. de Presseuse. The Union of Free Churches was established in 1849 by Frederick Monod, Count de Gasparin, and others, who withdrew from the Reformed Church, because the synod of that body had refused to declare the divinity of Christ as one of the fundamental doctrines of the church. The Union has gained but little strength, numbering only forty-three churches in all; but it is patiently waiting for the day when the Evangelical party of the Reformed Church will renounce its state connection, when, doubtless, a union of the two bodies will be brought about. Much of the attention of the Synod was given to the condition of several of the poorer churches, and it was resolved that, if the churches consented, they should be reduced to stations and be supported by the evangelistic committee. It was also voted to propose to the Wesleyan Conference that in small villages in the south, where a free and also a Methodist Church exist, a union be effected between the two, and thus time, money, and energy be economized.—New York Independent.

Marriages.

HART—MOAK.—December 8, 1881, near Holmesville, Miss., by Rev. H. P. Lewis, Mr. Thomas A. Hart and Miss M. E. J. Moak.

BROWN—WILLIAMS.—December 13, 1881, in Summit, Miss., by Rev. H. P. Lewis, Mr. W. M. Brown and Miss E. L. Williams.

GERALD—HAYMAN.—December 15, 1881, at the residence of the bride's mother, near Summit, Miss., by Rev. H. P. Lewis, Mr. E. W. Gerald and Miss R. J. Hayman.

MARA—REGAN.—December 22, 1881, at the residence of the bride's father, near China Grove, Miss., by the Rev. H. P. Lewis, Mr. C. R. O. Mara and Miss L. J. Regan.

THOMPSON—KEMP.—December 22, 1881, in the Methodist Church, Greensburg, La., by Rev. Inman W. Cooper, Mr. O. T. Thompson to Miss Addie Kemp.

EDWARDS—GORMAN.—December 22, 1881, in the Methodist Church, Greensburg, La., by Rev. Jas. A. Godfrey, Mr. Edwards to Miss Annie Gorman.

Obituaries.

NEAL.—On Sunday, November 27, 1881, ANNIE KATE, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas P. Neal, of Merrillan, Miss., after a brief existence of seven years and nine months, passed into death's long and dreamless sleep—her sunny, trusting eyes closed on earth forever, to open in Paradise.

In Annie Kate was found the most exquisite combination of those splendid qualities of heart and mind which gave promise of unusual excellence of character. Earnestness, sincerity, intense loyalty of heart, deep, inborn, religiousness, an uncommon power of attracting and fastening interest; the still more rare attribute of originality of character, and a perfect and entire lovableness of disposition; were her shining characteristics, fully recognized by all who knew her.

Annie Kate was known to be one of the most thoroughly truthful of children. Naturally religious, from the time she could first speak coherently her especial delight was in invoking God's blessing on every meal, folding her exquisitely beautiful hands, and in her simple, solemn childish fashion, "saying grace." The wringing of the church bells, calling her to Sabbath school, was the sweetest music to her. Her devotion to the slightest wish of her parents was marvelous; and her heart seemed a deep reservoir of affection, inexhaustible and boundless, overflowing toward those bound to her by the simplest ties of friendship or love; intensely sympathetic she even wept with every form of suffering or neglect.

When we ponder over the almost perfect character shown us for so brief a while, "like snowy lillies, fleet as fine," we can but question, though ever in vain, Why was she taken? Can it be for the best? Why her little feet so early needed rest on their journey? And amid the dull, unceasing pain of our aching, broken hearts, mourning over the vanquished light of our lives, comes the answering question, "Would we, in our selfish grief, wish to call her back from her native skies?" Even with our heart's best love and greatest wisdom to guide her in the path of right, could she ever have entered heaven with a soul so pure and bright as now? ANNIE WILLIAMS.

COMBS.—HARRIET JANE CUMMINGS was born June 7, 1822; was married to James A. Combs in 1844, and died July 20, 1881. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1859, and from that time to the time of her death remained a member of the same.

During her life time her house was open to preachers, and she seemed never so happy, as when it was her privilege to care for them.

She could stand the loss of property, and under the increasing cares of her changed condition, her stout heart never quailed. When she had been called upon to give up her loved ones, one after another, the strong arm of the Lord was around her, and she found comfort and strength at the foot of the cross. Four weeks before her own decease, the final blow came in the death of a favorite son. Her shattered constitution, rendered still more feeble by continued watching, gave way, and the crumbling body faded into the grave, and her spirit returned "unto God who gave it."

She left no parting word of testimony, but her children, who were permitted to minister to her in her last illness, have no doubt as to her final home. We trust that she is with the loved ones gone before, and that, with them, she walks "the streets of gold."

Her pastor, JOHN W. CHAMBERS.

REED.—The following resolutions were offered by Bro. R. A. Anderson, and adopted by the First Quarterly Conference, Kosciusko and Durant charge, Winona District, North Mississippi Conference, held at Durant, Mississippi, December 17, 1881:

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. J. D. REED, at Durant, this body has lost a useful member; our church a devoted Christian; the Sabbath school, at Durant, a loved superintendent; our community an honest man. We thank Go that he died triumphant. While we miss him we humbly submit.

God of the just thou gavest the bitter cup
We bow to thy behest and drink it up.

Resolved, That the above resolution be spread upon our Quarterly Conference record, and the NEW ORLEANS and Nashville Advocates be requested to publish the same.

M. T. BOSWELL,
Secretary.

CONEY.—MRS. MARY U. E. CONEY, wife of John E. Coney and daughter of Rev. James R. and Mary C. Langston, was born in Drew county, Ark., November 21, 1849, and died at her husband's residence in Webster parish, La., November 20, 1881. She embraced religion at Mt. Zion Camp Ground in Claiborne parish, La., September 26, 1875, on Sabbath evening, during the camp meeting held at that place. Rev. John A. Mills preached one of his heart-searching sermons, and the spirit found its way to her heart and she rejoiced with joy that is unspeakable and full of glory. She gave her hand to the church and her heart to God. She was a member at White Hall Church, Haynesville circuit, Louisiana Conference, when she died. She leaves her husband and five little children, (one only three days old,) her aged father and mother, her sisters and brother, and other relatives and friends to mourn her loss. "They mourn not as those who have no hope." Nora has only fallen asleep in the arms of the blessed Saviour; we shall all meet her just over the river. Our dear sister had a presentiment of her approaching dissolution; she often spoke of it as though she knew it would surely transpire. Her sister returned from Texas a short time before her death. She met her and said, "Emma, God has answered my prayers: I have prayed for you to return. I want you to take my children and raise them; I shall not live but a short time."

A FRIEND.

MONTGOMERY.—WM. H. MONTGOMERY was born in Madison county, Miss., March 10, 1851, and died November 23, 1881. He was a young man of rare promise; temperate, social, polite and religious in his life. When death came it found him ready. It is said that "death loves a shining mark;" if so, it was certainly true in this case. Devotedly attached to his mother, and being anxious to assist in making a support, he returned too quickly, after a severe attack of typho-malarial fever, to his place of employment, hence he relapsed, by taking a congestive chill, from which he died very suddenly. He was, by common consent, the favorite of the whole family. He was about seventeen years old, so that it is verily true, that in the midst of life we are in death." His last utterances were words of triumph: "I am going to be with God," and exhortations to his brothers and friends to meet him in heaven. His mother refuses to be comforted because he is not; the Lord has taken him; but she mourns not as those who have no hope. She will meet him again in the sweet by and by. P. A. JOHNSTON.

CASSIBRY.—MRS. CYNTH CASSIBRY, wife of O. T. Cassibry and daughter of Frank and Martha Cunningham, was born in Mobile county, Ala., April 7, 1850, and married to O. T. Cassibry, December 17, 1874. She departed this life December 2, 1881. Her death was very sudden. About nine o'clock P. M., without warning to her husband, mother, or children, death loosed the silver cord and broke the golden bowl. The scene in that room was sad beyond description. God only knows the grief of the loved ones and friends over her death. Our only consolation is, that while we mourn on earth, angels are rejoicing in heaven over another precious soul safe in the arms of Jesus. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. A true and faithful wife, a devoted mother, a true and affectionate child and sister. Always ready and willing to bear the trials and vicissitudes of this life with Christian fortitude. She left a true and noble husband and two darling little girls to mourn her death.

A FRIEND.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5, 1882.

THE OLD PASTOR'S DISMISSAL.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

"We need a younger man, to stir the people,
And lead them to the fold,"
The deacons said: "We want your resignation
Because you're growing old."

The pastor bowed his deacons out in silence,
And tenderly the gloom
Of twilight hid him and his bitter anguish,
Within his lonely room.

Above the violet hills the sunlight's glory
Hung like a crown of gold,
And from the great church-spire the bell's sweet anthem
Adown the stillness rolled.

Assembled were the people for worship;
But in his study-chair
The pastor sat unheeding, while the south wind
Caressed his snow-white hair.

A smile lay on his lips. His was the secret
Of sorrow's glad surcease,
Upon his forehead shone the benediction
Of everlasting peace.

"The ways of Providence are most mysterious,"
The deacons gravely said,
As, wondering-eyed and scared, the people crowded
Aloft their pastor—dead.

"We loved him," wrote the people on the coffin,
In words of shining gold;
And 'bove the broken heart they set a statue
Of marble, white and cold.

The Truth as it is in Jesus.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus.—Ephesians iv. 21.

St. Paul addressed these Ephesians as though they had personally seen, heard, and been taught by the Lord Jesus. There is not the least likelihood that one in a thousand of them had seen and heard the Saviour; but the apostle assumes that the teaching which they had from Christ's regularly-called and divinely-accredited ministers was just the same in truthfulness and authority as the personal ministry of Christ. We are quite apt to think that the generation who were the cotemporaries of Christ, and saw the works which "no man" could do, and heard him speak as "never man spoke," had greatly the advantage of us; that it would have been a fine thing for us if we could have lived then to witness his wonderful works, and listen to the gracious words which fell from his lips. But, really, our circumstances are more favorable than theirs to faith in Christ. The Jews had an inspired expectation of Christ—he had before him the prophetic portrait of the Christ, painted by the Holy Ghost; but, alas, he had sadly perverted or misunderstood the divine presentation—as a people they seemed, at the period of the advent, unable to conceive of God manifested in the lowly and unostentatious "carpenter," the man Jesus. But we have long been by education and reverence accustomed to conceive of and consider Jesus Christ as the God-man. His lowly carriage, his coarse attire and humble surroundings have been swept from our minds by the supernatural grandeur of his works, the unparalleled sublimity of his speech, and the godlike magnificence and vastness of his designs.

It is true that long centuries have rolled away since the feet of Jesus, of Nazareth, trod the soil of Judea, and since he wrought his "signs and wonders;" but well-authenticated facts suffer no decay of credibility by lapse of time—no facts that transpired ten years ago are more firmly believed by us than the great historic facts about Cæsar, Washington, or Napoleon. We believe as fully in the assassination of Cæsar as in the assassination of President Garfield. No additional evidence could make us believe these great historic facts more fully than we do. The truth as it is in Jesus, then, comes to us with conditions as favorable, if not more so, to its unhesitating reception, than to the personal cotemporaries of Christ.

"The truth as it is in Jesus" which we have been taught, doubtless includes that system of truth taught by the inspired writers; truth, which it is necessary should be taught, believed, and practically exemplified in order to salvation. We suppose it includes as a general summary what is called the "apostles' creed," to wit: "I believe in God, the Father, in Jesus Christ, in the Holy Ghost, the church of God, the communion of saints, the remission of sins, the resurrection of the body and the everlasting life after death."

We will now proceed to call your attention to some of the aspects and characteristics of the truth as it is in Jesus. And, first, the truth as it is in Jesus is revealed truth—that is to say, undiscoverable by human reason; truths which come not into the mind as the result of reasoning by induction, but were originally divinely communicated. It is true that we find various intimations and glimpses of these truths in the heathen world, not as the outcome of rational induction, but as traditional reminiscences of primitive revelations, or as yearnings and aspirations after a felt and needed good; but all this was but the dim and feeble illumination of earliest twilight compared with the full-orbed, and cloudless sunlight which flames, with supernatural radiance from the pages of inspiration. The unity, the eternity, the omnipotence, the holiness, the justice and the love of God have been revealed and harmonized in the teachings of Jesus as by none other, and nowhere else.

In the next place, we observe that the truth as it is in Jesus, is, so far as man is concerned, of universal necessity, and adapted to the moral and immortal needs of all. This is a characteristic that applies to few, or none, of the teachings of uninspired reason. Reason teaches many lessons useful for various classes of men, but no man imperatively needs to know all that is known to the race in the aggregate. Some branches of knowledge are useful and essential to men of a particular vocation, but comparatively of little value to others of a different calling. The curious knowledge and skill of the artists of the brush or chisel would be of small use to the tiller of the soil. The knowledge of the husbandman, though essential to his success, would be of little value to the sailor in navigating the seas; while the useful and important knowledge of the navigator contributes nothing to the skill and success of the physician in the art of healing. But it matters not what may be our station or profession, the truth as it is in Jesus is entirely applicable to us, and perfectly suited to our needs. No extent, or variety, or accuracy of knowledge puts us above or beyond the need of the truth as it is in Jesus. No other truth can compensate for it, or take its place. All other knowledge in the final close of probationary duties and possibilities will be valueless without the truth as it is in Jesus.

In the third place we remark, that the truth as it is in Jesus is plain, simple and level to the apprehension of all sane and accountable men. Not that there are not heights in revealed truth far above the loftiest flights of reason's most vigorous and daring wing, and depths profound, deeper than its longest line can fathom; but that all that is essential to faith, to practice and salvation eternal is within the mental grasp of every responsible man.

Many interesting truths, in the wide and varied fields of knowledge, are difficult of apprehension and beyond the grasp of the million, as for example: the problems of the higher mathematics and the sublime wonders of astronomical science. Natural philosophy has in its vast fields heights and depths far beyond the ken of common men. When we come into the field of metaphysical speculation, what multitudes are lost in labyrinths and obscured in impenetrable fogs. But the most unlettered, with but the shallowest training, may understand the truth in Jesus, so far as it is requisite to salvation. What a gracious provision, and what matter of thankfulness, that that which is most important of all things to be known, may be known by all. The way to Christ, the way to heaven, like the way to the ancient cities of refuge, is so plain that one running at full speed, and for dear life, has no need to err or stray. It is, thank God, a "highway," thrown up, kept open and maintained by divine authority for all who would flee to the hope set before them.

In the fourth place, we have to say that the truth as it is in Jesus is of vital and everlasting importance to all men: this is a characteristic peculiar to the truth in Jesus. There are many truths which it is interesting to know, in science, in history and in biography. But many of these truths are speculatively interesting, some only ornamental, and some simply amusing and have no higher value. There are many truths useful and highly valuable to man as a civilized inhabitant of the earth, in agriculture, architecture, medicine, navigation and mechanic arts; but it is peculiarity of the truth as it is in Jesus that it is essential to salvation. This is not true of any other form of truth: we may be almost entirely ignorant of other truths, and yet be wise unto salvation. But the truth as it is in Jesus is not only essential, that we may be wise in the estimation of God but, as immortal beings, it is of everlasting importance to us. We do not know that this can be truthfully affirmed of any other statement of truth. We think it safe to say there will be no need of the healing art, with its volumes and remedies, when there shall be no more pain nor death. No need of architecture, with its piles and orders in that "house not made with hands eternal in the heavens." Nor navigation, when we have reached that peaceful shore where winter and storms come no more. Nor agriculture, nor horticulture, where life's eternal tree spreads its verdant boughs, with immortal fruitage crowned, its twelvefold fruits ripening and yielding every month. No more shall we need to know the arts by which gold and precious stones are gained, for that "city hath foundations whose builder and maker is God, its walls of "all manner of precious stones," gates of pearl, and streets of fine gold.

But the truth, the eternally-blessed truth in Jesus—that God loved us, that Christ came to seek and save us, that the blessed gospel calls us in tones as sweet as angels use, that the Spirit woos and wins us to repentance, raises us from the death of sin, makes us new creatures and comforts us by his indwelling presence—will be interesting and precious to us while bright immortal ages roll.

Have we believed this "truth in Jesus," and has it made us wise unto salvation? What sayest thou?

Temptation.

In the first place, know that satan never makes his approach with noise and clamor so that we can descry him afar and stand upon our guard; for although it be said that he walketh about "like a roaring lion," he still contrives to keep his roaring, which is his eager desire for souls, secret until he come near. In the second place, we must never dispute with the devil; and if he has advanced so near as to be able to shoot his fiery darts at thee, which consist in thoughts of fleshly sin, on no account think of discoursing with him. He is a far greater master in the art of disputation than thou, and if thou begin to argue with him it is just as it were bringing more hay and stubble to heat his fiery darts the more. It was a saying of the pious Torson, that devilish thoughts are like a barking dog, which only becomes more furious the more blows you inflict and the more stones you fling. Take, then, no further notice of him, but pass by as if thou didst not care for him; for there is nothing which he dislikes so much as contempt. According to the story which we read in the "Lives of the Ancient Fathers," one of them puts the question to a brother, what he ought to do when troublesome thoughts entered his mind? and received this answer: As they suddenly came in, so let them suddenly go out. Don't fancy that it is frivolity when I say that in place of wrangling with the devil, it would be better for thee to play with thy little boy, or whistle to thyself a tune. Moreover, neither must thou give him the satisfaction of appearing to be afraid that what he shoots into thy soul can injure thee or cause thee to forfeit the favor of thy Lord. Thou canst not hinder the birds from flying over thy head, but let them not make a nest in thy hair. When he presents thee with a long account of thy debts, amounting in all to the everlasting wrath of God, ask him to show thee in it the one little word, "willfully." Until he can point out that in the account, he must instantly go his way. In the third place, if in the great flood of thy misery, there yet remain a little spark of faith unquenched, set thyself diligently to the study of the word of God, in order that the spark may still burn; and do this, however keenly the devil may wish to prevent thee. Above all, be careful on no account to remain alone. Solitary places are, above measure, dangerous to the tempted; for as the preacher justly says, "Woe to him that is alone when he falleth, for he hath not another to help him up."

O, how truly may a Christian brother, however humble, become to us a messenger of God in our hours of gloom! In his exposition of the nineteenth Psalm, Luther makes the following humble confession: "It is true I am a doctor of divinity, and there are many who own that by my help they have greatly profited in their knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. Yet it has often happened to myself to be much helped and recruited by the word of a brother who was far from reckoning himself in any respect my equal. The word of a brother is often of immense weight and consequence when, at a time of danger, it is quoted and addressed to us from the Holy Scripture, for the Holy Scripture has the Holy Ghost as its inseparable companion; and in diverse manners does he employ the word to move and encourage the heart. It was thus that Timothy, Titus and Epaphroditus comforted St. Paul, as no less did the brethren who came to meet him from Rome, although he was much more learned and better practiced in the Scriptures than they." And though it should be that thou hast no Christian friend, it is better for thee to listen to the talk of all kinds of worldlings, people than to the devil's blasphemies.

In the fourth place, there is no doubt that it is chiefly when men are laboring under weakness of body that the tempter has it in his power to weaken them so greatly in spirit; for the history of Luther and many other holy men shows that it is mostly at such seasons that his fiery darts are discharged, and that they lack the power to repel them. It may happen that while the body is weak, an excess of religious exercises may only aggravate spiritual affliction, and that it will be mitigated by diverting the mind to the many pleasant things which are to be found in the world, and which God has created to cheer the human heart.—Tholuck.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—A cable dispatch, dated London, December 7, gives good news of the expedition of the American Board to Umzila, South Africa. A correspondent at Durban, Natal says: "The Rev. Messrs. Richards and Jourdan, who were sent on a mission by the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions to Umzila, a powerful chief in the country north of Delagoa Bay, have returned here. Umzila granted their request that the American Board should be permitted so establish missions in his country. A section of the people here are disposed to resent the interference of Americans in South African affairs. The general public, however, clearly perceive that America can have no interest here beyond converting the heathen." The latest letter received by the American Board, printed in the December Missionary Herald, bears date of Mangauga, July 2. Mr. Richards wrote that the party left the point across the Bay from Inhambane June 24, and had traveled 414 kilometers. The paths were crooked and under the severe heat porters found their loads of less than fifty pounds very heavy. "They tremble under their loads and perspire freely. The people, without exception, are very kind," furnishing abundance of food without cost. Two chiefs had asked to have teachers sent them. The country seemed to be more healthy than that through which Mr. Pinkerton went.

—In a series of very notable articles in the Church Missionary Intelligencer on the "Religions of the World" is one on Buddhism in Ceylon, from which we extract this paragraph:

"I am unwilling to speak positively as to the moral character of the Buddhist priests as a body. The common report is unfavorable, but that there are many who sincerely desire to carry out to the letter the precepts of Buddha I do not doubt. They are constantly before the eye of the world, as every morning they slowly pass along the streets, with the alms-bowl. Indeed, they are so commonly abroad that one is constantly encountering them. I have often thought that there was a peculiar stolidness and listlessness in their mien; but this may easily arise from the comparatively monotonous and purposeless life they must most of them lead. Some, indeed, are men of parts and of industry, practicing medicine, in which they are often said to excel, teaching the young or employing themselves with literary occupations; but the amount of literary work is, I believe, at present very insignificant, those who employ their time even in copying manuscripts being a very small fraction of the body."

—We have spoken of the losses and reverses of the London Society's mission in Tanganyika, Central Africa, and from time to time have described the difficulties encountered by the Nyanza Mission of the Church Society. The present condition of this enterprise is as little encouraging as is that of Tanganyika. Beyond Mpwapwa there are only three missionaries in the field—one in Uyui, to the south of the Lake, and two in Uganda. Of the two in Mtesa's capital, one is ill and the other two has been in Africa five years under very trying circumstances. Two other members of the staff are on their way home, broken down in health, and of the two sent out in 1880 one is at Mombasa, on the coast, and the other in England. The Society has, therefore, decided to send out a reinforcement of five men—one for Uyui, two for the southern end of the Lake, and two for Rubaga.—New York Independent.

—A deputation of Roman Catholic bishops, introduced by Cardinal Manning, lately held an interview with Lord Spencer, in order to lay before him the opinions they held as to the effect which the proposed new education code would have on the Roman Catholic schools in England. Referring to the subject of religious instruction, the Cardinal suggested that a royal commission should be issued to take evidence on the subject of the introduction of religious teaching into all public-board schools, which he believed would result in no education without religion, and voluntary schools would not be placed at the disadvantage they now were. Lord Spencer said he was not in a position to encourage the hope that the government would propose a royal commission on the question of religious teaching in elementary schools. Such a commission would not only raise points which it was hoped for a time set at rest, but would introduce again a topic which had often divided parties and caused excitement.

—The Church Missionary Intelligencer gives a long account of the trials of the workers in Uganda, growing out of the fickleness of Mtesa, and the denial of favors from his court. He seems to understand Christianity well enough, but is bent only on the gratification of his own whims. He made the ridiculous condition that the missionaries should be permitted to teach if they would procure for him one of Victoria's children to be his wife, in which case he would abandon all his present wives. There are are at present only two men left at the station, and they write of horrible cruelties. One women had her ears and mouth cut off for some trifling act of disobedience, and when it was supposed, at one time, that Mtesa was near death his nine sons were confined with the intention of killing all except the one who would succeed his father in the kingdom.

—The Rev. J. L. Potter writes to the Observer from Teheran, Persia, under date of October 17, stating that the government, through the kind offices of the British minister, has interfered in the case of a pastor at Hamadan, where the Jews had been persecuted, who fled from threatened punishment by bastino. The Persian minister of foreign affairs addressed a letter to the governor of Hamadan, telling him that efforts for the welfare of subjects of the state, of whatever religion or sect, will tend to the security of his position; but neglect of their rights will give trouble to the officers of the state. The pastor is officially sent back and the governor is ordered to show him favor and protection.

—A missionary of Southern India speaks of a huge idol festival recently held at Conjeveram. This city is the most sacred in Southern India, with hundreds of temples and beautifully built tanks. The pilgrims were said to have numbered 150,000, and a large portion of them were entertained by the rich Hindus of the city. Some of the Hindus feed one or two thousand Brahmins daily, and other dispense rations to all comers free of charge. While this festival was in progress, each of the missionaries preached the gospel twice daily to large audiences, who paid strict attention, receiving with gladness the word spoken and printed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—One of the most approved and useful of the benevolent societies of New York is the Children's Aid Society. For nearly twenty-nine years it has been engaged in the good work of gathering up outcast children and sending them to homes in the West and other parts of the country, where they can grow up amid better influences and with a good prospect of usefulness in the world. Upward of 60,000 homeless children have thus been taken from haunts of crime and misery, and placed in families where they would be well cared for, and much has been done in the way of relief in the schools and lodging-houses of the society in this city. In the lodging-houses 200,000 boys and girls have been fed, sheltered, and instructed, and about 100,000 girls have been trained in the industrial schools. "Of these" girls, says the report for 1881, just issued, "it is not known that even a score have entered on criminal courses of life or have become drunkards or beggars, though four-fifths were children of drunkards." In proof of the reformatory effects of these schools, the statistics of commitments are pointed to, from which it appears that the number of commitments of females has fallen from 5,880, in 1868, when the population was 801,224, to 1,541, in 1880, when the population was 1,200,000. The police statistics of juvenile delinquency also show that, whereas 919 boys and girls were committed in 1875, only 357 were committed in 1880. The society's receipts for the year were $231,892 and there is a balance on hand of nearly $1,000.—New York Independent.

—The bishops or superintendents of the State Church of Prussia are certainly not overpaid. In the Province of Brandenburg there are 2,000 congregations, with 45 bishops or superintendents to ordain and induct pastors and elders, to conduct parochial elections, to consecrate churches, inspect churches and schools, and generally to carry on a large amount of correspondence. For this work they get nothing except their traveling expenses, which are paid by the congregations. The State gives them their title, but adds no pay. The synod of the province this year discussed the question of bishops' incomes, and decided that they might have $25 a year for office expenses, together with a gratuity varying according to parochial income. One of these bishops has an income of $410 a year and seven others have incomes falling below $750.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN ENGLAND.—Our English exchanges give exciting accounts of recent unpleasant experiences by the "Salvation Army." The London Echo says:

During the whole of yesterday the members of the Salvation Army, whose branch is in the Stoke Newington Road, paraded the various streets in the district, headed by a capitain, a banner-bearer, and a cornet-player. The army was followed from place to place by crowds of roughs, who made the day hideous with shrieks and catcalls, for the purpose of drowning the blasts of the cornet and the voices of the Salvationists. Stones and mud were occasionally thrown, the army hustled and disturbed, and at night matters looked so threatening that two constables were detailed off to keep guard at the Mission Hall, which would, but for the presence of the police, have been forced by the crowd, who molested every passer-by and yelled at any Salvationist entering the building. The door was kept locked, and only opened to admit the brethren. At ten o'clock last night the hall was still full, and hundreds of people waited outside to yell at the Salvationists as they departed. The nuisance has now become so intolerable, that the tradesmen are about to take action in the matter, with the view of testing the right of the army to parade the streets and cause disturbances.

—In answer to the slanders heaped on Count Campello for becoming a Methodist, the following is quoted from a recent volume published as a "Defense of Modern Civilization," by "Monsignor Savarese, Domestic Prelate to His Holiness," etc. He speaks of Count Campello as "a nobleman not deficient in learning, of unspotted life and reputation, who, unable to live any longer under the harrassing dilemma between church and country, solemnly abjures Catholicism," and adds: "But as to him allowances must be made for the agonizing incertitudes and gnawing doubts with which thousands and thousands of conscience are groaning—consciences which can not live without faith and yet find themselves placed in the same dilemma."

—The Protestant Episcopal Church, according to Whittaker's Church Almanac for 1882, has not gained as much in the present as in previous years. The net increase of communicants is 3,739. There is a decrease of 3,000 in baptisms, of 50 in confirmations, and of 10 candidates for orders. Other items indicate increase. The summary is as follows: bishops, 61; other clergy, 3,466; parishes, 3,035; mission stations, 1,229; candidates for orders, 391; ordinations—deacons 139, priests 118, baptisms, 41,963; confirmations, 25,401; communicants, 344,580; Sunday-school teachers, 34,363; scholars, 304,052; contributions, $7,311,784.

—St. Albans, the first and most important of the ritualistic churches of New York City, has proved a failure. The building has been sold to a Low Church organization, and the ritualistic paraphernalia laid aside.

—The secretary of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Association, New York, reports that their collections in Christmas week amounted to $44,371 97, which was distributed between fifteen hospitals and infirmaries.

Our Young People.

KEEP NOTHING FROM MOTHER.

They sat at the spinning together,
And they spun the fine white thread;
One face was old and the other young—
A golden and silver head.

At times the young voice broke in song
That was wonderfully sweet,
And the mother's heart beat deep and calm:
Her joy was most complete.

There was many a holy lesson,
Inwoven with silent prayer,
Taught to her gentle, listening child,
As they sat spinning there;

"And, of all that I speak, my darling,
From older head and heart,
God giveth me one last thing to say,
With it thou shalt not part:

"Thou will listen to many voices,—
And, oh, that these must be!—
The voice of praise, the voice of love,
And voice of flattery.

"But listen to me, my little one,
There's one thing thou shalt fear:
Let never a word to my love be said,
Her mother may not hear.

"No matter how true, my darling one,
The words may seem to thee,
They are not fit for my child to hear,
If not indeed for me.

"If thou'lt ever keep thy young heart pure,
Thy mother's heart from fear,
Bring all that is told thee day by day
At night to the mother's ear."

As thus they sat spinning together,
An angel bent to see
The mother and child whose happy life
Went on so lovingly.

A record was made by his golden pen,
This on his page he said:
The mother who counseled her child so well
Need never feel afraid;

For God would keep the heart of the child
With tender love and fear,
Who lisps, at her mother's side at night,
All to her mother's ear.

—Mother's Magazine.

The Crazy Fits of Elephants.

"Of all the mad elephants, Hannibal, I think, was the worst," said Dr. I. A. Graves, the veteran showman at Bunnell's. "Most elephants recover from a mad fit within a few days, but Hannibal—well, he would keep up a tantrum for weeks and months at a time. The longest spell he ever had began early one morning in June, 1854, while traveling with Raymond and Waring's menagerie from Pawtucket to Fall River. He broke away from his keeper and ran the highway thirteen miles, smashing everything he could. Talk about elephants being large! Hannibal looked as big as a locomotive that morning. The keeper attempted to check him and was chased into a swamp. The first vehicle the mad elephant met was a butcher's cart loaded with mutton. He smashed the cart, killed the horse, broke the driver's arm and scattered the quarters of mutton along the highways. Two vegetable wagons were upset and the horses were killed, the drivers escaping unhurt. When the fury of his fit was spent, Hannibal was found beneath a tree on the road side completely exhausted, and for the time submissive. Tusk chains were applied, and for many weeks afterwards he was kept under the strictest surveillance. To approach him during this period was dangerous. On turning out one morning in Burlington, Vt., I found a number of women and children petting him while he was swinging his ears in evident enjoyment. Then I knew the spell was broken. He was very docile and tractable the balance of that season.

"Hannibal was the most vicious elephant that ever tramped with a show. In 1849, while we were at Connellsville, Ohio, a stranger gave him a pail of water. He drank the water leisurely, and then, suddenly turning his head, struck the man with his tusks. The poor fellow died. While chained at Williamsburgh, N. Y., in 1857, he took a fit and pursued the keeper into a stableyard, when he got wedged in among the boulders, and was undone in that dilemma. Up to 1845, Hannibal was noted for his unchangeable good nature. In those days old "Put" Townsend used to be his keeper. "Put" had trained him to drive the stake to which it was customary to chain him. One day, "Put" started the stake and handed the sledge to Hannibal to complete the job. Hannibal made a ponderous blow at the stake head, but struck his foot instead. He threw the sledge so far that it required an hour's search to find it, and never would touch one again. Hannibal lived to be one hundred years old, and killed twelve men.

"Columbus was another bad elephant. In December 1849, while with Raymond and Waring's menagerie, Chestnut street, Philadelphia, he killed his keeper, took possession of the show and retained it for three days, killing in that time two camels and a llama, and upsetting a large stove and two animal cages. The doors were barricaded, cannon were mounted in the street, and soldiers paraded the premises in readiness to give him a warm reception should he appear. Finally two keepers entered the building from above, straddled the crossbeams, and dropped a noosed rope to the floor. He walked into the trap, and when he realized that he was caught, submitted quietly to the chaining operation. Columbus fell through a bridge at North Adams, Mass., the following summer, and died a few days later.

"Bill Williams, or 'Canada Bill,' as he was professionally called, was Columbus's first keeper. Forepaugh's elephant Romeo killed him in winter quarters at Frankfort, Pa., in 1865. Bill went into the elephants' den to do some chores and his crushed and mangled body was found a few hours afterward. George Waste was killed in much the same manner by Turner's African Romeo. Before a rescuing party could get his body away from the elephant it was denuded of everything except one boot. The elephant Pizarro had mad spells oftener than those I have mentioned. In 1850, he killed his keeper and two camels near New Orleans, and then raided the country for miles around, doing a great deal of damage to farm property. Chief, who is the only one of the mad or "rogue" elephants alive, killed John King, the keeper with Robinson's show in 1879."

"What causes the madness of elephants?" was asked.

"If you have ever noticed you may have seen that there are issues from the head of the elephant, just behind the ear. When these are kept open, a thin watery substance exudes therefrom. I have always remarked that elephants are kindly disposed and easily handled while these tissues are open, but just as soon as they become clogged madness ensues. The insertion of a common tape needle brings relief."

"Is it true that elephants are fond of stimulants and narcotics?"

"Yes, exceedingly so. Now there's a popular error that should be corrected. It has always been thought that if you gave an elephant tobacco he would never forget it, and years afterward would kill you should an opportunity present itself. That is not so. On the contrary, there are only two things which they relish more apple-tree boughs and thistles. Their passion for fine-cut tobacco is something marvelous. Some years ago when I was traveling with the elephant Conqueror, it was my custom to carry a meerschaum pipe in a particular pocket of my coat. One day I left my coat within reach of his trunk, and in less time than it takes to tell it, he had found the pipe, crushed it, and swallowed it, case, stem, and all. During the few years I was with Conqueror I reckon he must have eaten several hundred pounds of tobacco. The truth of the matter is, gentlemen, an elephant, like an intelligent person, will eat only what suits his taste, and never harbors any dislike for those people who give him disagreeable food."—New York Sun.

Gracie and Jennie.

This is a true story about two sisters who live in a certain city not very far from my home. These two sisters, whom I will call Jennie and Gracie, are very dear to each other. Not long since the class at school of which Jennie is a member was about to be examined for admission to the high school, and she spent many anxious hours, and shed many tears over the possibility of a failure.

But little Gracie was always confident of her sister's success. She would say, "Why, Jennie, you can't miss; I asked Jesus not to let you, and he will not. At last the dreaded examination was over. Jesus helped nervous Jennie to collect her thoughts and answer her questions correctly, and the certificate of admission to the high school was hers.

But, not long after this, little Gracie's class had an examination before passing into higher division, and Gracie made a sorry failure. All the family were surprised, and her papa said, "Why, little one, how is this? didn't you ask Jesus to help you answer the questions?" Gracie hung her head and answered No. Upon being asked the reason, she said, "O I knew he would help Jennie—she had done her best; but it was no use asking him to help me, 'cause I hadn't half studied."

I think, children, that Gracie was quite right in believing that Jesus would not be pleased with an idle, careless child, nor willing to help such an one. The Bible tells us that faith without works is dead; that is, if we are not willing to do our best, it is useless to believe that Jesus will give us success in what we are trying to do.

But, when we do our best, O how pleased he is to help us, and even if we are idle and careless and naughty, he will gladly cure us of our evil ways if we are real sorry for them, and ask him to cure us, and risk us as good. And then, when he has given us new hearts, lessons and work are so much easier, and day is so much pleasanter. I know this, dear children, because I tried it myself when I was a little girl. Won't you try it, too?—Beulah, in Christian Standard.

A LITTLE GIRL AND HER BIBLE.—When the Boston train came steaming into the depot the crowd rushed for seats. As a band of recruits mounted the platform they shouted back to their friends who had accompanied them to the train the various slang phrases they could command, interspersed with an oath now and then. As the train moved on they pushed each other into the car, where many ladies were seated, including Mrs. B— and her two boys.

Then the oaths came out thick and fast, each one evidently trying to out do the other in profanity. Mrs. B— shuddered for herself and her boys, for she could not bear to have their young minds contaminated with such language. If the train had not been so crowded she would have looked for seats elsewhere, but under the circumstances she was compelled to remain where she was.

Finally, after the coarse jesting had continued nearly an hour, a little girl, who with her mother sat in front of the party, stepped out timidly from her seat, and going up to the ringleader of the group, a young man whose countenance indicated considerable intelligence, she presented him with a small Bible.

She was a little, delicate looking creature, only seven or eight years old, and as she laid the book in his hands, she raised her eyes appealingly to his. But without saying a word went back to her seat.

The party could not have been more completely hushed if an angel had silenced them. Not another oath was heard, and scarcely a word was spoken by any of them during the remainder of the journey.

The young man who had received the book seemed particularly impressed. He got out of the car at the next station and purchased a paper of candy for his little friend, which he presented to her. He then stooped down and kissed her, and said he would always keep the little Bible for her sake.

The little girl's mother afterwards told Mrs —— that her child had been so troubled by the wickedness of those young men that she could not rest until she had given her little Bible, which she valued so highly herself.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE TWO MEN AND THE BEAR.—Two men had to go through a green wood. One of them was short and stout, and one was tall and slim.

"I could not run fast or climb well," said the short one; "if a foe, man or beast, came on me, I should have to stand my ground.

"Have no fear," said the slim man. I can run fast and climb well; but still it is my rule to stand my ground—I would fight for you until the last. I fear no man or beast, not I. Hark! what is that noise?"

"I am sure," said the short man, "that is the growl of a bear. I know there are bears in this wood."

The bear was soon in sight. The tall man ran a short way, and hid in a tree. The short one fell flat on his face on the ground, and held his breath. The bear came to him, smelt him, and thought he was dead. So he left him, and with a great growl or two went his way.

When the bear was out of sight, the short man arose from the ground, and the tall man came down from the tree.

"What did the bear say to you, my friend?" said the tall man to the short one. "I saw him put his mouth close to your ear."

"He told me," said the short man, "to put no trust in one who brags in the way you do, for those who boast so much are not brave."

Christian Advocate.

ORGANIZED BY THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. J. W. ROSS. REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT
REV. G. B. GALLOWAY, REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5, 1882.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.—The regular annual meeting of the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will be held at the office of the ADVOCATE, Wednesday, January 25, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

A New Volume.

With this issue the ADVOCATE begins a new volume. The editor being judge, the volume just closed has been about the best of any since he was placed at the helm. There has been a larger amount of original matter from able contributors, there has been altogether more reading matter, and the several departments have been filled with unusual care and painstaking. Our corresponding editors especially have added much to the attractiveness of our columns. As they all write over their own initials, their articles are known and read of all men. We do not doubt that they will continue to enrich and adorn the pages of this ADVOCATE, during the coming year, even more generously than heretofore.

It has been the aim of the editor to make a useful paper, in which the institutions and interests of the Conferences to whom the ADVOCATE belongs should be specially represented and promoted. We invite most urgently news items, and articles exhibiting the condition and needs of the church in different sections, and of our schools and colleges. The paper is the property of the Conferences, and is published by them to promote the work of Christ, and to strengthen and build up Methodism within their bounds. While it is now under the control of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, our circulation is not limited to them. We hope to have an increasing number of subscribers and contributors in other Conferences, and throughout the church. Give this paper an adequate patronage, and we will guarantee to our patrons a first-class religious journal.

For the new volume we have no promises to make beyond the assurance that we shall do the best we can with the means at our disposal. In whatever else we may fail, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will be a religious paper, aiming to promote the spirituality of the church, and to comfort, instruct and warn. We greatly desire for it a new year of enlarged usefulness, and of greatly increased circulation. We shall hope, with the greetings of many friends, to receive lists of new subscribers, and to know that our old subscribers renew. Do not neglect renewing. It is easy to meet so small a demand promptly. The credit system, bad in all business, is specially unfortunate in that of publishing a newspaper.

Our dependence is, of course, on the presiding elders and pastors. They can make the paper prosperous if they will. They are the only regular agents, and their influence is all powerful, if they will but put it forth. Let them make it a prominent feature in their pastoral work, and they will be able, in most cases, to put the ADVOCATE in every Methodist family.

It is now over thirty years since the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was founded. Those who were its first subscribers and readers have nearly passed away. Their children have taken their places however, and in many families the paper is an heirloom, and almost sacred, because of the associations connected with it. Our subscribers who feel an interest in the success of the paper can do something to promote its circulation. They can show it to their friends and neighbors, and thus in many instances secure them as subscribers.

No Christian family should be without a religious paper, and no Southern Methodist should fail to take a Southern Methodist church paper. It is safe to judge of the piety, intelligence and devotion to Methodism, of all, by the single fact that they patronize or neglect the literature of their church.

Going Forth to Sow.

Our preachers are entering upon the work of another year. They are sowers going forth to sow. The Lord himself is the chief sower, and the seed is his word. But subordinately his ministers are sowers. By them he sows. It is Christ's work they are doing. No one analogy or illustration exhausts the character and functions of the preacher. He is a shepherd as Christ is the chief, "that great shepherd of the sheep." He is an embassador for Christ, he is a reaper, a laborer in the fields "white to harvest," but he is also a sower. While not all, this is much of what he is.

The word is the seed. It has life in it. It has the property of germinating when deposited in the soil of human consciences and human hearts. It is so far different from mere dead matter as pebbles or dust. In the word is the life-germ of divine truth. Ministers are handling the word of life. They must be sure that they sow the living seed.

There may be sham sowing—as children might play at husbandry—using all sorts of dead and inert things in the place of "the word of the kingdom." There is also a thin sowing. Some preachers use the divine store with a sinck hand, in a stinted and parsimonious manner, as if afraid that it would not hold out. They use short texts, and these as mottoes; or mix the gospel with much literary, scientific or other lumber. They never take a generous paragraph, or a chapter, for exposition. There are other things besides the gospel, and of value in their place, but no sane man will scatter gravel when he wishes a crop of wheat. There is plenty of seed, and he who would reap abundantly must sow with a lavish hand.

There is life in the word. The living germ is in every syllable of it. But its growth, when cast forth, is not a matter of course. There are certain hindrances at best, wayside hearers, diabolical antagonisms, and the like, but careless sowing must not be. Sometimes ministers comfort themselves with the reflection that the living seed is bound to come up; sooner or later it will appear. But if there has been little prayer, few or no tears, no agonizing in the sowing, meager or no results may be looked for.

Where there is much inevitable loss the whole may be wasted, because of the sower's lack of earnestness and devotion to his Lord. This is about all the hope many have. There are no manifest fruits. So far as they know, not a grain has ever sprouted. But they fall back upon the reflection: "It is the word of God; it has a living germ in it. It must appear some time." Far from it. The parable does not deal with this aspect of the matter, unless the wayside hearers may exhibit it. But there is a great deal of careless sowing, of perfunctory preaching, of feeble and powerless talk that dies on the lips of the preacher. The only harvest of such sowing will be of condemnation to the unfaithful sower. When good seed has been well put in, the husbandman has a right to leave results to Providence. It is so in preaching, only we must be sure that "the word" has been preached with prayerfulness and with agonizing.

Every sower, though not every one in equal proportions, when he has done his best, will have to mourn over what seems to be lost labor. The devil is close at his elbow all the time, and he is adroitly catching away that which is sown in some hearts. The stony places and the thorny ground lie in every field of gospel husbandry. These obstructions are incidental to the work of spreading the gospel. No preacher can hope altogether to escape them. What proportion of the seed falls upon these untoward places varies constantly from year to year, and from charge to charge.

Some of these failures have, at the first, the appearance of wonderful success. Many a promising revival turns out largely to have been the sudden upspringing of the seed in stony places, or that which is choked by the thorns of worldliness. Much seed is lost before it sprouts, and perhaps much more after it seems to have covered the ground with promise of an abundant reaping. Some build better than others, and there is a difference in the sowing, but did ever a sower scatter seed that fell on good ground only? The preacher is something besides a sower, but, in this aspect of his work, is he ever exempt from these elements of loss? Whether it was the Master himself, or his inspired apostle that preached, we imagine there were always present these several sorts of apparent miscarriages in the work. "Other fell into good ground," but not all, by any means.

It was to warn, and also to guard his servants against discouragement, that these contingencies connected with gospel sowing were exhibited. The sower may not be too sanguine; he surely must refrain from over-much boasting. And he must not despair, though much labor seems to have been expended in vain. These hindrances are to be expected. The most faithful will meet with them. There is, however, good ground as well as bad. Ordinarily in the tilled field this largely exceeds the unproductive. Thus it may be with the gospel sower. Going forth to sow, he may assuredly count on many sheaves. Not every sermon will be alike fruitful, and some may be without apparent result. And when there is promise of abundant harvest, there will be blight upon some of it. But, in spite of all, a great deal of the seed sown will come to perfection. He who, in the name of the Lord, goes forth to sow will have his reward. Personal fidelity to the great commission should be his main concern.

Not for a long time have homicides been so numerous. The newspapers teem with accounts of them, and of the most atrocious character. The month of December has been particularly noted in this respect. A list of horrors has been in every morning paper—of aggravated and red-handed murder. The carnival of crime seems to have culminated with the coming of the holidays. We hope, at least, that the rage for killing has reached its culmination.

This epidemic of crime has not been confined to any particular section. It may have been more prevalent in the South, but of this we are not sure. The utter disregard manifested for human life, the general defiance of law, and indifference to the penalties of crime, are so patent that no observer of the times can overlook them. Here in the South whites and blacks seem to be about equally implicated, and to be equally athirst for blood. A cruel spirit of diabolism would seem to have been let loose, and murder and violence have become rampant.

In many instances—probably in most—whisky is at the bottom of the trouble. And, along with whisky, is the habit of carrying concealed weapons. Drinking men, with pistols and bowie knives in their pockets, are always dangerous. Murder will certainly flow from these two elements of destruction, especially when combined. Either one of them by itself is a constant menace to the peace of society and to human life, but where whisky and carrying of concealed weapons are united, bloodshed is certain. Most of our States and cities have laws prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons, but generally the penalty is light, and seldom inflicted.

While the greater number of instances of killing have been connected with brawls incited by whisky, some of them, of most aggravated kind, have been perpetrated for robbery, for money.

The suppression of the whisky traffic would put an end to most of the crime that now threatens to sweep away all barriers. This would be the effectual check, but in the meantime the laws against crime must be enforced. Murderers must be tried promptly and hung, and all violators of the laws must be made to feel the hand of power. Nothing but the certain and swift administration of justice will deter criminals and diminish crime. This is lacking. Law breakers, as a rule, are not promptly arrested, and, when arrested and tried, they are seldom convicted. And, we may add, when convicted they are too often pardoned by executive authority—an abused and damaging clemency.

The Closing Year.

MR. EDITOR: Last winter was unusually long, wet and cold. It set in early, was attended by frequent heavy rains, and fires were in demand for full six months. This one, so far, has been quite mild. Rains have been few and light, and frost came not till late in November to kill the growing crops and the grasses which the late summer rains had produced in great abundance. Cattle and stock of all kinds go into the winter in good condition. Though the summer was hot, and in places distressingly dry, the favorable season for gathering and disposing of crops has largely relieved the anticipated pressure from short crops. The price of cotton has kept up pretty well, while the good picking season has so supplemented the yield that there is perhaps a fair average result from the year's labors in handling the great staple of the South.

The trade in cotton seed has been more active than ever before. Agents of rival mills have competed in the market, and as much as twenty-five cents a bushel has been offered for cotton seed. In the latter part of the season one meets along the road quite as many wagons loaded with seed as with bales of cotton. Cotton seed oil is constantly extending the sphere of its utility. I have seen biscuit in which cotton seed oil supplied the place of lard, and beefsteak fried with it is by no means an unknown dish. It is scarcely improbable that within a few years cotton seed will be worth as much as the lint that grows upon them. Oil makers are trying to convince planters that the meal from which the oil has been pressed is a better fertilizer than the seed themselves. They offer a ton of the meal for two or three tons of seed. They claim that chemical analysis supports their theory. This reminds one of what the apostle Paul styles "science falsely so-called." To undertake to prove, by analysis or otherwise, that cotton seed are better qualified to aid in the production of other cotton seed after every particle of oil, which an amazingly powerful hydraulic press can squeeze out of them, has been barreled or bottled up for sale, is about the same as to assert that the chief ingredient of our cotton growing soil is oil, and that the more oil we take away from it the more there will be left to furnish oil to growing cotton seed. The man who sells his cotton seed will find himself, in the long run, penny wise and pound foolish. We have certainly reached one very unexpected result in the use of cotton seed; we have made true of ourselves what was stringely, preposterously and slanderously said of our treatment of our late slaves. Such publications as Chambers' Encyclopedia gravely stated to the world that the Southern people fed their slaves on cotton seed. We did not, but we eat them now ourselves. The corn crop has been found to be very short, chiefly because corn is slighted by our planters. Cotton is given preference in regard to both land and cultivation. Negroes, who do perhaps most of the work, are compelled to show a good prospect for a cotton crop from the beginning of the year or they can get no supplies from merchants or planters. Improved modes of cultivation would do much to forestall uncertainty and failure of crops. There are three things to which the wise and successful planter must give more attention than they usually receive. He will plant less area, fertilize more, and plant better seed. Large areas of poor land wear out the laborer, his team and his tools. No intelligent farmer can afford to cultivate an acre that will not produce, with ordinary seasons, a bale of cotton or twenty-five bushels of corn. The quality of seed is important. Cotton was raised by a negro near Bolton, Miss., this year which brought fourteen and a quarter cents readily in New Orleans. Culling and selecting one's own seed is perhaps better than buying every new kind that may be offered for sale.

Typhoid and typho-malarial fevers have prevailed very generally throughout the country during the fall and winter. In places the cases have been numerous and protracted, but not often fatal. The direst of all the diseases of the country is the whisky disease. It prevails everywhere. It is caught by frequenting grog-shops, or other places where intoxicating drinks are sold. The disease is well-nigh incurable, and is killing its victims daily. I could give names and circumstances of several very recent deaths from this disease, but tender regard for the feeling of those whose grief is already too intensified by the sad reflection that the death of their loved ones was self-inflicted forbids more than this mention. The voters of this country keep whisky on sale in every place, and death gathers its crop of drunkards as regularly as farmers gather corn. The whisky, the love of it and the deaths by it are all the work of man and not of God. Experience shows that men can not be kept from convenient whisky, yet nothing would be more in accordance with the spirit of legal enactment and achievement than the putting of whisky where men could not get it. Will any man refuse or fail to sign a petition to the Legislature to prohibit the sale of whisky? Everybody thinks that strong drink ought to be banished, but many seem faithless as to the possibility of doing it. They are whipped before the battle. Wherever I go in my travels the horrible results of the traffic in liquor meet my eye or distress my ear. Not long since a poor victim of drink begged another in the same sad condition to unite with him in an effort to prevent the establishment of an additional saloon in the town in which they lived, but men who thought themselves strong made all their efforts unavailing. I could despise my race, and wish that I myself had been born a dumb brute if I believed that men could subject themselves and their fellow-men to so degrading a curse, and yet power of deliverance be denied them. The passage of the Kansas liquor law was the grandest achievement of the American ballot-box; its enforcement will be the highest demonstration of the virtue of Democratic citizens that men or angels ever saw.

Church matters, as our reports at Conference showed, are generally progressing well, and the church is, in most respects, in a healthy if not a vigorous state. An elect lady, the widow of the late William L. Sharkey, recently donated about $2,000 for the purpose of building a new Methodist Church in the city of Jackson, Miss. Four persons, unknown to each other, and without solicitation, have sent me $50 for Bro. and Sister Lambuth's work in China. Some are thankful, and others ought to be, for the gifts of God, and show their gratitude by offerings to his cause. Christmas is upon us. What an appropriate time at the close of the year's labors, and at the gathering in of our goods to thank God for the gift of his Son. Christmas turkeys are on their way to the festal board, and thousands are preparing in secret precious things with which to surprise and bless the simple faith of childhood. To-morrow, by glad coincidence, we celebrate at once the birth and resurrection of our Lord. Let sevenfold praise be given.

When the earth shall have revolved seven times more 1881, with all its record of evil and of good, shall be numbered with the years of the unreturning past.

W. L. C. H.

CANTON, MISS., Dec. 24, 1881.

To be Continued.

The following communication from one of the most eminent laymen in the bounds of the Alabama Conference doubtless expresses the feelings of many others. We hope that the most of our old Alabama readers will be of the same mind, and never allow their ADVOCATE from New Orleans to be stopped. Expressions of appreciation and of benefits received from such a source are among the editor's most valued compensations:

MR. EDITOR: On the table before me lies your paper, dated December 22, 1881, volume 27, number 51, whole number 1,385. By this I am reminded that I am growing old, for the paper has been coming to my home since the first number was issued; and twenty-seven years added to the life of even a young man sprinkles his head with gray hairs.

I remember how much interested in the paper my mother used to be, and how she read every article in it, and, afterward, how she filed away and kept the numbers as something too good to be destroyed. She read her Bible and the paper as long as she lived, and, dying, went home to the heaven to which they pointed her.

Since the paper began to come to me I have had about twenty pastors, and several presiding elders. Some of these have been called to their reward, some have removed to other States, and some are still preaching the gospel in this Conference. But the paper has not ceased its weekly visits. How much do I owe to these faithful preachers? How much to the paper, this mute sub-pastor? I can not tell. Perhaps if it had not been for these instruments, in the hand of God, I should have abandoned the church, and forfeited my hope of heaven.

I have often thought that I should like very much to have grouped together in book form all the "leaders" that have appeared in the paper from the beginning—those from the pens of Bishop McTyeire and Bishop Keener and the present editor. They would make a splendid volume of fine reading. But though they may never assume this shape, they have not been lost. They have been read, and have been incorporated in the minds and spirits of the readers, and are living and will live; have moulded, and will continue to mould, character.

Continue to send me the paper. I want to read it myself, and I want my wife and children to read it.

ALABAMA.

Among the Editors.

New York Christian Advocate.

There is no doubt that some of the methods of Methodist preaching, if unwisely followed out, are specially calculated to produce an early dilapidation. Take many a man's mode of conducting a revival service. One will go into such a series of evening services in hot haste, preach long enough and loud enough to get hoarse in a fortnight's time, do far more than his share of singing, and, instead of saving his voice—what there is left of it—preach and sing on until he can only whisper. Then he must close his meetings, because he is an invalid, and he gives moderate Sunday fare to his congregation until summer comes, when he must take a long journey and rest, in order to be in working quality when the autumn begins. It would be gross injustice to charge such a failure to the revival meetings, the difficulty is not with them, but with the man who imprudently conducted them. We have known of pastors, who have spoken nearly every night for several months, and yet came out of their pressure about as well as when they went into it. They were careful, judicious, and knew how far to go. Many politicians make a long political campaign, speaking several times a day until they have canvassed a whole State, and yet are none the worse for wear when the voting day arrives. Is the good cause of the gospel any more calculated to produce a break-down and break-up than the less noble cause of a political canvass? We need a little more worldly wisdom to carry on the great work of promoting the spread of godliness over the world.

Extemporaneous speech need not cause the early dilapidation of a ministerial career. It is a health-giving exercise if properly pursued, but it is sadly abused by many of our preachers. There is no more need of rant and tear and jerk in this method of discourse, than with the manuscript before one's eyes. There is, perhaps, less mental agitation before the sermon, when one knows he is going to read; but, then, there are wanting the glow and inspiration that come from unread preaching. If one set out with the full purpose of becoming a successful extemporaneous preacher, he needs to know how to husband his force, to find out the very best methods to prevent subsequent exhaustion, and to make up his mind that such work will require about all his time; for no labor is there greater necessity of a vigorous body. One need not be a physical giant to be an extemporaneous preacher, but he must keep his body in the best possible trim. He must take regular and sufficient daily exercise, cultivate a cheerful and elastic state of mind, be careful to be disturbed by no small matters, and resolve to do his work without waste of vital energy.

Methodist Recorder.

The attitude of Mormonism towards the Government of the United States is that of opposition and defiance. The laws of Congress are disregarded and openly violated, and crimes, which in other places would consign men to the penitentiary, are committed in Utah, under Mormon rule, with impunity. Their avowed object is the ultimate overthrow of the government, and the subjugation of the country to their dictation and control. In all its elements Mormonism is antagonistic to the genius of our free institutions. It is a system of the most absolute despotism, thoroughly organized in all its departments, so as to keep in complete subjection and under the control of its leaders, all its members. Facts are abundant to prove that in political contests, not only in Utah but in the surrounding Territories, the whole Mormon vote is cast according to the dictation of the church. And in order to increase their influence and power in this particular, the legislature of Utah, in opposition to the law of Congress, has enacted that all women and girls, of whatever age or nationality, shall be regarded as of full age as soon as they are married, and that a female of foreign birth shall be considered a citizen of the United States and of Utah, without taking any other steps whatever to become naturalized upon her marriage with a citizen of this country. The effect of this law is to place the franchise in the hands of ignorant, alien foreigners, to be controlled by the church for the accomplishment of its own purposes.

Mormonism is a hostile organization in our midst, and can only be wiped out by force. It is re-enforcing itself by the addition of thousands to its number from foreign lands every year. It is in fact a great army, laying its plans and gathering in recruits from time to time, and if the government does not soon take effective measures to arrest its growth and overthrow its power, a most sanguinary conflict, in which the Indian tribes, brought under Mormon influence, will form no inconsiderable element, will be forced upon us at no very distant day. Mormonism is one of the great crimes of the age, and it most seriously threatens the peace of the country. The country should awake to its danger.

Nashville Christian Advocate.

There are just twenty weekly newspapers published in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. (This does not include our Sunday-school publications.) It is the opinion of many that this is a larger number than can or will be adequately supported, and that the true policy of the church would be to have fewer and stronger papers; and to secure this end they would have the church take not only official recognition but actual official management of them all. Others think that the true policy is to leave individual enterprise untrammeled and let the struggle go on, holding that the law of the survival of the fittest will assert itself in the end. These are the different views entertained, expressed in general terms. Brethren whom we highly respect have sent us communications on either side of the question, but we have withheld them. There was too much dynamite in some of them, and the explosion would, we believed, hurt the peace of the church. In other cases local and personal questions were involved, and we felt sure that the general issues would be lost sight of in the controversy that would be evoked. This paper, belonging to the whole church, should be the conservator of its peace as well as the advocate of its principles and the defender of its rights. Time has already brought about a settlement of some of the points discussed by our correspondents.

Let us be cool and patient in this matter. There is better work for all our editors and publishers than quarreling with each other. Time, the General Conference, and the people, will find a solution that will satisfy all reasonable persons. In the meantime, let a Methodist paper be put into every Methodist family.

Holston Methodist.

A mistake into which many preachers fall, is that there is a conflict between the duties of the pulpit and the pastorate. We have heard some men excuse their poor preaching by saying that they had given themselves largely to pastoral work; and on the other hand, we know many who try to acquit themselves of neglecting the oversight of the flock of God on the ground that their studies absorb all their time. Both are in error.

No man ought to be on the run all the time. Such a policy may develop his legs and his tongue, but will surely fail to improve his head and his heart. The privacy of the study is necessary both to fertility of intellect and to growth in grace. Jesus was often alone, and his ministers must follow his example.

But a minister must not become a recluse. If he attempt it, his very acquisitions of knowledge will dry up and lose their life. What he learns he must bring into contact with the world by associating with the people to whom he is to preach. In this way, he is likely to vitalize whatever he knows and to make his spoken utterances more effective.

Texas Christian Advocate.

How few of us do our best in any matter of duty. It is well not to strain either the physical or mental powers. Reserved force for emergency speaks of wisdom and prudence. But there are times when the circumstances with which we are environed make it necessary that every force, moral, physical and intellectual should be concentrated in the prosecution of certain duties. Enterprises, upon the success of which so much depends, often come to naught because we fail to do our best. How many churches might be built; how many debts that cripple the influence of religion might be paid, if only we did our best. How many a dry sermon would have been food to souls if only we did our best as the mouth-pieces of God, and as hearers in the congregation. It is sad to think that in matters so solemn, so urgent as the every-day duties of the Christian life, and the every-day needs of the Church of Christ, that we, his people, should act with so little interest and concern. Perfunctory service take the place of spiritual worship; laxity and inattention to the plainest obligations are growing to hideous proportions in the church.

"Do your best." No motto is more worthy to be inscribed upon the Christian's escutcheon than this. Many are slow to do anything because unable to do as would better satisfy their pride, perhaps their zealous desire. The words are not inspired, but are wholesome as the gospel—"do your best."

From China.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, NOVEMBER 1, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: We arrived in Shanghai on Thursday, November 3, about four P. M., all well and in good spirits. We passed through France, and on to Geneva, and then down through Italy, and over to that almost God-forsaken country, Egypt, taking the steamer of Suez October 21, and, after five weeks on the steamer, we reached Shanghai in safety, and all very well. I know you, with others, will rejoice with me when I tell you my health has been restored, perfectly restored. I thank God for his goodness to me and my family during our long journey by land and by sea. Pray for us, that we may yet labor many years in this land of darkness. Please say to Bro. Foster I have just received his letter, and will write him by next mail. I will give you, from time to time, some notes of our trip, unless you have had such an abundance of these notes from Europe as to make it rather common. Well, I will send you a few from away down in the dark corners; perhaps they may be read by some one. We shall certainly never forget our last visit to New Orleans, Mobile and other places. We thank God that we were thus permitted to make the acquaintance of so many dear Christian friends, whose names shall ever be dear to us.

Hoping to write soon to you a longer letter, I remain your brother in Christ, J. W. LAMBUTH.

Departure of Missionaries.

Rev. J. W. Grimes, of the Memphis Conference, and appointed to the Central Mexican mission, reached New Orleans with his family last week. He preached at the Carondelet Street Church on Sunday night, and left for Vera Cruz Monday, January 2.

Miss Charlotte Halloran left in company with Bro. Grimes and family, to resume her mission work in the City of Mexico. Her brief visit to her old home in New Orleans has been very gratifying to her many friends, and we trust a beneficial rest to herself. She was present at Moreau Street Church on Sunday morning, and the ladies of that charge organized a Woman's Missionary Society for the purpose, especially, of raising funds for the school-house for the accommodation of Miss Charlotte's mission school. May God bless the departing missionaries, and send prosperity upon their work.

—As we are preparing to go to press the preachers are gathering in, and there is promise of a pretty full attendance at the opening, Wednesday, January 4.

The only visitor from abroad at this writing, we believe, is Dr. C. F. Evans, now stationed at Hot Springs, Little Rock Conference, Ark. Dr. Evans has been absent from Louisiana for eight years. He will receive a warm welcome from our people, and his visit will be highly appreciated by his brethren of the Conference. Bishop McTyeire, we suppose, will be in on time. His old Conference claims a special interest in him, and we are always gratified to have him with us.

Bishop Keener left last week for Brenham, Texas, where he was to dedicate a $25,000 church on Sunday last, January 1. He was expected home on Tuesday, and will probably be with us during the session of the Conference.

—There were watch-night services on New Year's eve at the Carondelet, Morean and Felicity Street Churches of this city. They were well attended, and occasions of great spiritual profit. Our New Orleans Methodists keep in the old paths. Love-feasts, class-meetings and watch-nights are duly observed among them.

DEATH OF REV. L. PATTERSON, OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—We deeply regret to hear that this loved and useful minister is dead. Rev. J. L. Skipper, writing from Mount Carmel, Ala., December 24, says:

"We are all in tears to-day. The Rev. L. Patterson, of the Alabama Conference, died at his home, yesterday morning, at six A. M. A suitable memoir of him will be furnished soon. Let us pray for his sorrow-stricken wife and children."

MARRIED.—At the residence of the bride's father, Dr. T. S. Jones, Jackson, La., on the evening of December 29, by Rev. Dr. C. G. Andrews, Rev. D. M. Rush, professor in Centenary College, to Miss Annie L. Jones.

Along with many other friends we extend to Prof. Rush and his accomplished bride our hearty congratulations. May the sun of prosperity and happiness ever shine upon their pathway.

BISHOP WIGHTMAN.—The Southern Christian Advocate, of December 31, says: "We are sorry to report that the indications in Bishop Wightman's case are quite unfavorable. He seems to be daily growing weaker. He contemplates the situation with unclouded intellect and unshaken faith. He only desires to live to serve his family and the church. If the good Lord should call him hence he will obey with supreme submission, and perfect acquiescence in the Divine will."

Renew! Renew!

Do not wait to renew your subscription until your paper fails to come. Remember that the ADVOCATE stops when subscription expires. Renew in time, and if possible, obtain and send another subscriber's name with yours. Let all our readers become agents to secure subscribers. Send on the names either through our regular agents, or direct to the office. Every post-office will register a letter for ten cents, in addition to regular postage, and we take all risk on registered letters. Postal notices are sent each subscriber a month before expiration, in addition to printed date on address slip giving standing notice of month with which it expires. You can not afford to miss a number; therefore, renew now.

LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE.—Delegates to General Conference. Clerical: W. H. Browning, E. N. Watson and Horace Jewell. Reserves: H. D. McKinnon and Andrew Hunter. Lay: Dr. C. A. Gantt, W. S. Jeter and A. R. Hazen. Reserves: Dr. J. Custer and Judge W. C. Ratcliffe.

Personal and Other.

—The people of a Congregational Church in Connecticut played a risky prank on their pastor on the occasion of his fiftieth birthday. They gave him a special little pie, with a hint that it was all for himself, and that nobody else was to have any. On biting the pie he found that there were within it harder substances than are generally served up in eating-house "mince." Having narrowly escaped breaking off one or two of his artificial teeth, he paused to make inspection, and found that there were just fifty of these hard things, and that each one was a gold dollar.

—An Elmira clergyman reports that the war on mutilated coins has been a good thing for the contribution box. A man who has tried in vain to pass a half dollar with a hole in it finally gives up in despair and drops it into the Sunday collection, to which he was formerly in the habit of contributing nothing, or at most a dime. Such coins the churches sell as bullion, at an average reduction of five per cent. of their face value, much to the advantage of foreign missionaries and poor people at home.—Christian Union.

—The following are said to be the sixteen American inventions of world-wide adoption: the cotton gin, the planing machine, the telegraph, the grass mower and reaper, the rotary printing press, steam navigation, the hot-air engine, the sewing machine, the India-rubber industry, the machine manufacture of horse shoes, the sand blast for carving, the gauge lathe, the grain elevator, artificial-ice-making on a large scale, the electric magnet, and its practical application, the telephone.

—Adamowski, the violinist who is with the Kellogg troupe, at a grand concert at Cedar Rapids, attracted the admiration of a baby in the lap of a lady in the stage box. Baby beginning to crow and clap his hands, the soloist, laughing, was compelled to stop and remark, "Much flattered by bebe's accompaniment. But he sing minor; I play major." The mother retired amid a storm of applause.

—In one of the letters of Sir Charles Lyell, recently published, is a striking picture of Queen Victoria's young children working with spade and hoe and being rigidly paid by their father with day-laborer's wages, that they might get an insight into the condition of the class. In another letter Lyell relates how, in a long talk he had with the Queen, at Osborne, he explained, at her request, the principles of Darwinism.

—Bishop Kip of San Francisco recently joined in wedlock the Rev. Walter Ching Yung and Miss Ah Tim. Mr. Yung is an Episcopal minister educated in the Eastern States, and Miss Ah Tim is a cultivated young lady of Hong Kong. It was the first fashionable Chinese wedding in this country. The groom wore his clerical robes, and the bride robes of Chinese cut, including a cloak-like dress of blue, lined with bright scarlet and trimmed with gold color.

—St. Ann's Church (New York) for deaf-mutes has five hundred and sixty-one communicants. Of the three hundred families connected with the parish, thirty, including three hundred individuals, are deaf-mutes. The parish, which has been founded twenty-nine years, grew out of a Bible class. At a recent Conference held in the church, three clergymen, all deaf-mutes, made addresses in the sign-language, which were interpreted by Dr. Gallaudet.

—Ex-President Zachary Taylor's daughter who now lives in Virginia, received recently from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $16,000, which was the exact amount of salary that would have been paid General Taylor had he lived until the expiration of his term of office. The payment was made in accordance with authority contained in the Deficiency Appropriation Bill, passed June 6, 1880.

—A cable message from Nice, France, announces the death of Major-General John Henry Martindale, who from 1862 to 1864 was military governor of Washington. He was brevetted major-general for gallantry at Malvern Hill; and in that year resigned, on account of ill health. He was attorney-general of New York in 1866 and 1867 and was one of the ablest lawyers in the State.

—Four students at Wacousta, Wis., stole a farmer's gate. The college faculty condemned them to expulsion, or the alternative of whatever punishment the farmer might inflict. He sentenced them to chop four cords of his wood and deliver it to a poor widow. They did it to the music of a band and the plaudits of a crowd that watched the operation.

—Each year, on the Prince of Wales's birthday, his three young daughters play him a short dramatic piece to show their progress in foreign tongues. Last year the selection was from the German; this year it was French. The young Princesses Louise, Victoria and Maud acquitted themselves admirably in their respective parts.

—A Kentucky Judge has decided that a State can not by its Sunday laws stop the running of inter-State trains carrying the United States mail or engaging in commerce in any form, on the ground that such an exercise of the State police power will be an interference with the right of the federal government to regulate commerce.

—The American style of railroad car is making rapid headway in England. The Telegraph, most widely circulated of London newspapers, says with emphasis: "The railway train of the future must have a gangway running through out its length, and be accessible from one end of the car to the other."

—Florence Nightingale, in spite of her sixty-one years and her long confinement to an invalid's sofa, looks young and even handsome. Her fair face is unwrinkled, her large brown eyes are full of kindness, and she is still deeply and actively interested in various practical works for the relief of the sick and poor.

—Mr. Sackville West, the newly appointed Minister to the United States from Great Britain, is authorized to treat with our government on the international copyright question. It is to be hoped that some equitable arrangement may be made on this vexed question.

—Mrs. Garfield has rented a handsome and comfortable house on Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, and will spend the winter there, with her daughter and her younger sons. She will take possession in a few weeks, and her children will then immediately enter school.

—Sitting Bull is reported to have been educated at the College of Montreal. According to the Canadian Indians, he lived on the northern shore of Lake Superior before he joined the Utes.

—Sir Edward Thornton's son, who is going into diplomacy, visits the Capitol at Washington frequently, to gain instruction in republican methods of government.

—"I carried away from Rugby," said Thomas Hughes, "dreadfully bad scholarship, but two invaluable possessions. First, a strong religious faith in and loyalty to Christ, and, secondly, open-mindedness."

—Thomas Jefferson is said to be the only President who held no receptions in the White House. His daughters were with him but twice during his eight years' residence there.

—At the recent session of the Reformed Episcopal Council, Bishop Nicholson was re-elected presiding bishop, and J. K. Wheeler, secretary.

—A writer in the Journal of Science says that the sanitary regulations of Moses show a singular knowledge of disinfectants and prophylactic principles.

Books and Periodicals.

—The Sinai and Comparative New Testament. The authorized English version; with introduction, and various readings from the three most celebrated manuscripts of the original Greek text, by Constantine Tischendorf, (Tauchnitz edition, volume 1,000,) with the various readings so inserted in the text, that the whole Scripture, according to either the Sinai, Vatican, Alexandrian, or the Received Greek, can be read by itself, while the variations are all compared with facility. By Edward Leigh. New York: Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor and Company. Price in paper cover, 50 cents; in cloth binding, 75 cents. The above, from the title page, is a pretty full description of the work. The convenience of the arrangement for reference will have to be proved by use. It appears to be well calculated to meet the wants of those who have little knowledge of the Greek, and are without the helps which scholars are usually able to command.

—Teacher's Edition of the Revised New Testament, I. K. Funk and Company, New York, is well adapted to the use of religious teachers and bible students. It may be called a Working Copy of the Revised New Testament; being supplied with maps, index and concordance, notes, harmony of the gospels, and many valuable helps to the study of the New Testament. There is also appended a list of readings and renderings preferred by the American Committee. The usual references are also given, and the parallel readings are printed in full in the margin. Those who are interested in the study of the Revised New Testament, will find this volume very satisfactory.

—From the American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia, we have received, "The Picture World for Little People." It makes a very attractive volume, copiously illustrated, and well adapted to entertain and instruct very young people. Board covers, 10x8, 100 pages, four colored pictures. Price, 90 cents.

—Vick's Floral Guide, for 1882, contains a very full descriptive and illustrated catalogue of flowers and vegetables. A very beautiful work. Published by James Vick, Rochester, New York. Price 10 cents, post paid.

—Resources of Oregon and Washington, David and W. G. Steele, publishers, Portland, Oregon. A pamphlet of interest, and containing much valuable information.

—The Century Magazine, January, 1882, has: Frontispiece, Portrait of Louis Adolphe Theirs; A Provincial Capital of Mexico, illustrated; The Revival of Burano Lace, illustrated; Coquette; In November; Through One Administration, 3; English and American Song-birds; A Modern Instance; The Farmer of Marshfield; A Listener by the Sea; The Caverns of Luray, illustrated; The Flower of Flame; Oriental and Early Greek Sculpture, illustrated; The Increase of Divorce; Schumann's Sonata in A Minor; Who Were the Chartists? illustrated; From Menlo to Elberon, illustrated; The Horseman; Reminiscences of Theirs; Legal Aspects of the Mormon Problem; Old Madame. Editorial Departments are fresh and vigorous.

—Wide Awake, January, 1882, is very, very beautiful—full of Christmas pictures and Christmas stories. The frontispiece, "Winter Birds," is an exquisite engraving. Among the many charming articles are: Asaph Sheafe's Christmas; A Christmas Carol; Their Club and Ours; Poems of Christmas-Tide; From the Hudson to the Neva; Short Stories from the Dictionary; A Father Lost; Queer Company Home; Klitylieu—a Christmas Story; Magna Charta Stories; Door-yard Folks; Little Biographies. D. Lothrop & Co., publishers, Boston. Price, $2 50 a year.

—The Art Amateur, for January, 1882, is a fine number of this almost unequaled monthly. The supplement designs are numerous and excellent, and the engravings and illustrations are strikingly beautiful, and of great variety. Considerable space is devoted to the Art Gallery, Industrial Art, Ceramics, Decoration and Furniture, Art Needlework, Art in Dress. A valuable publication for cultivation of taste and also for instruction in things ornamental and useful. Montague Marks, Editor and Publisher, New York. Price, $4. per year.

—St. Nicholas for January, 1882, is a superior number of this unrivalled magazine. The illustrations are both numerous and well executed. Among the articles are: Max and the Wonder Flower; Sir William Napier and Little Joan; About Others; The Porter's Iron Collar; The Hoosier School-boy; Dr. Holland's Books; How to make Puppets and Puppet Shows; Bones and Bow-wows; Love in a Noah's Ark; The Land of Nod; Recollections; Hiawatha; A Dream of Little Women; Jack in the Pulpit.

—The Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, January 1882, has an attractive table of contents. The articles are: Polemics; Sir Walter Scott; Our China Mission; Inspiration of the Scriptures; Methodist Philosophy; Forms of Prayer; Fraternity—another view; McClintock and Strong's Cyclopædia; John B. Wardlaw, Jr., A. M.; Blair's Grave; Literary Notices; Notes and Queries. When we have more leisure we may notice the articles at some length.

—The Fortnightly Review, December, 1881, George Munro, publisher, New York, has the following articles: 1. Atheists in Parliament; 2. Kioto: 3. Thriftless Thrift; 4. Disgust, a dramatic monologue; 5. Has Conservatism Increased since the Reform Bill? 6 The Borgstorz at Elm; 7. Scientific Evidence of Organic Evolution; 8. A Page of Diplomatic History; 9. A Chapter in the Ethics of Pain; 10. Home and Foreign Missions. Also the Freres, by Mrs. Alexander.

—The Theological and Homiletic Monthly, December, 1881, R. N. Sledd, D. D., editor, Richmond, Va., has: The Prayer of the Leper and the Response of Christ; Prevenience of Divine Grace; Re-Christianization of France; Moses and his Wife; Original Sin and Primeval Probation; The Light of the World; Sermon Sketches; Editorial Miscellany.

—The Popular Science Monthly, January, 1882, has: Earth Worms and their Wonderful Work; Astronomy in High Schools; Time Keeping in Paris; Jurassic Birds and their Allies; New Guinea and its People; Sanitary Relations of the Soil; The Chemistry of Coffee and Tea; The Bunsen Lamp; The Colorado Desert, and other articles.

—Our Nashville Sunday school periodicals for January, 1882, are out in good style, and augur well for the coming year. There are two quarterlies—the Intermediate is, we suppose, for the younger Bible students. Dr. Cunningham furnishes our schools with every thing they can wish for the study of the International Lessons.

—Burke's Texas Almanac, for 1882, has a large colored map of the State and contains a vast amount of information concerning this great and growing country. It is compiled, printed and published by J. Burke, Jr., Houston, Texas; Office in New York. A valuable work especially for travelers and immigrants.

—The Scholar's Quarterly, first quarter, 1882, Philadelphia; The Sunday School Times, John D. Wattles, publisher. A valuable help to Sunday school teachers and scholars. It contains a map of Palestine, and is very complete in its treatment of the International Lessons.

—The Wyoming Literary Monthly is a new magazine, devoted to the study of Literature, Original Literature, Current Literature, College Life. Published at Buffalo, New York, by C. Wells Moulton. Price, $2 a year.

—Our Little Ones and the Nursery, for January, is a capital holiday number of this excellent monthly for the children. The Russell Publishing Company, Boston. $1 50 a year.

—Southern Musical Journal for December, has some excellent music, choice reading matter, and a portrait of Franz Liszt, the great pianist.

We have received a copy of the Minutes of the Memphis Conference, of the recent session held at Bolivar, Tenn., November, 9-13, 1881. Thanks to the sender.

Annual Conferences.

CONFERENCE.	PLACE.	BISHOP.	DATE.
Western	Howard City	Pierce	Sept. 7
Kentucky	Danville	Keener	Sept. 7
Missouri	Moberly	Pierce	Sept. 14
Indiana	Gnaporl	Keener	Sept. 14
Los Angeles	Carpenteria	Kavanaugh	Sept. 15
St. Louis	St. Johns	Pierce	Sept. 21
Illinois	Ashley	Keener	Sept. 21
S. W. Missouri	Springfield	Pierce	Sept. 28
Pacific	Petaluma	Kavanaugh	Sept. 28
Indian Mission	Caddo	Pierce	Oct. 5
Louisville	Owensboro	Keener	Oct. 12
Montana	Helena	Kavanaugh	Oct. 13
Arkansas	Bardenelle	Pierce	Oct. 18
Tennessee	Lebanon	McTyeire	Oct. 19
Holston	Wytheville	Wightman	Oct. 26
Denver	Denver	Kavanaugh	Oct. 27
Memphis	Bolivar	Paine	Nov. 9
N. W. Texas	Waxahachie	Kavanaugh	Nov. 16
N. Georgia	Athens	McTyeire	Nov. 30
Virginia	Charlottsville	McTyeire	Nov. 16
N. Mississippi	Grenada	Paine	Nov. 16
West Texas	Gollad	Keener	Nov. 16
N. Carolina	Durham	Wightman	Nov. 23
N. Alabama	Huntsville	McTyeire	Nov. 23
Texas	Houston	Keener	Nov. 23
Alabama	Selma	Pierce	Nov. 30
North Texas	Greenville	Kavanaugh	Nov. 30
German	Houston	Keener	Nov. 30
South Georgia	Columbus	Wightman	Dec. 7
White River	Bebee	McTyeire	Dec. 7
Mississippi	Brookhaven	Paine	Dec. 14
S. Carolina	Tyton	Pierce	Dec. 14
East Texas	Jacksonville	Kavanaugh	Dec. 14
Little Rock	Pine Bluff	McTyeire	Dec. 14
Louisiana	New Orleans	McTyeire	Jan. 4
Florida	Monticello	McTyeire	Jan. 17
Baltimore	Fredericksburg	McTyeire	Mar. 10

Bishop McTyeire has charge of the Missions in China and Brazil.

Bishop Keener has charge of the Missions in Mexico.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

The following is a genuine notice on an Irish church door: "This is to give notice that no person is to be buried in this church-yard but those living in the parish. Those who wish to be buried are desired to apply to Mr. Ephraim Grub, parish clerk." Here is another kindred specimen: "Notice—The church wardens will hold their quarterly meetings once in six weeks, instead of but yearly as formerly." In April of 1866, the following bill was stuck up: "This house to be let forever, or longer, if required."

She hit him hard:—Spooney dry-goods clerk to smart miss trying on a hat before the glass. "Don't I wish I was a looking glass!" Smart miss—"Yes, perhaps you'd get more girls to look at you then." Clerk collapses, and is carried out.

If you desire a true medicinal tonic that will positively rid you of all your ailments and general ill health, Brown's Iron Bitters is the best.

"If Jones undertakes to pull my ears," said a loud-spoken young man, "he'll just have his hands full." Those who heard him looked at his ears, and smiled.

MUSICAL.—American enterprise has already won golden opinions, and among the foremost in the ranks we find Wm. Knabe & Co., manufacturers of the celebrated "Knabe Piano-Forte," which is now receiving the highest encomiums of the press and musical fraternity. Its purity of tone and the absence of those harsh inharmonious sounds, recognized in many Pianos, and which drown all sweetness, make it the acknowledged favorite of all who once test its powers or listen to its exquisite tone.—New York Independent.

The New Orleans National Bank closes the present year with a carefully prepared statement, which shows it to be in a sound financial condition. Read it, and at the same time notice it is officered by prominent and progressive business men.

See the semi-annual statement of the State National Bank, as published in another column. Its capital stock of nearly half a million dollars, entirely secured by United States bonds, with its other immense resources, places it in a healthy and firm condition. It has been selected as the custodian of the funds of Louisiana.

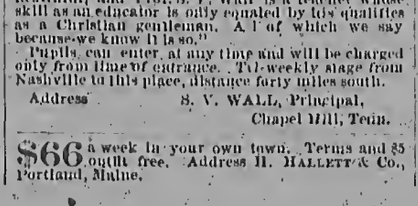
The great music house of P. Werlein continues to supply the world with musical instruments, and thousands of homes have been made happy by the possession of a piano or an organ through his low prices and astonishingly liberal terms. The name Werlein has become so identified with pianos that you hardly can think of pianos without thinking of Werlein. Go and try him, and our word for it, you will be pleased.

Now is the time to solicit subscriptions for the ADVOCATE.

Beneficent nature seems to have planted in every clime the proper remedies for the diseases incidental to it. Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm is made of an herb which grows all over the Gulf region, and it has never failed yet to cure all kinds of coughs and colds.

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend for the next year and you will not regret it.

ADVERTISEMENTS.



Will be mailed free to all applicants, and to customers without ordering it. It contains five colored plates, 500 engravings, about 100 pages, and full descriptions, prices and directions for planting the varieties of Vegetable and Flower Seeds, Plants, Fruit Trees, etc. Invaluable to all. Michigan grown seeds will be found more reliable for planting in the South than those grown in a warmer climate. We make a specialty of supplying Planters, Truckmen and Market Gardeners. Address,
D. M. FERRY & CO., Detroit, Mich.

FOR ONE DOLLAR!

I will mail you, post paid, a package containing five quires (120 sheets) of very nice note paper, and five packages (125) of white or colored envelopes to your address. If ordered in quantity by express or freight, will make a reduction of twenty per cent. Postage stamps may be sent when preferred.
Address G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans, La
Send for a dollar package and try it.

CHAPEL HILL ACADEMY,
MARSHALL COUNTY, TENN.
Opens the next session, the Sixteenth, under present principals, January 2, 1882. Course: English, Classics, Mathematics and Sciences. Thoroughness, Cheapness and Progress are all combined here. Efficient teachers employed, such as know how to teach, and are up with the spirit and progress of this age of Education. Entire expense, $70 to $80 per session of twenty weeks. Music by skillful teachers for $25 per session.
O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., editor Christian Advocate, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., of this school says: "Unsolicited, we speak a word in behalf of this school. The Chapel Hill community is one of the best in the country, the location is beautiful and healthful, and Prof. S. V. Wall is a teacher whose skill as an educator is only equaled by his qualities as a Christian gentleman. All of which we say because we know it is so."
Pupils can enter at any time and will be charged only from time of entrance. Tri-weekly stage from Nashville to this place, distance forty miles south.
Address S. V. WALL, Principal,
Chapel Hill, Tenn.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FISCAL AGENT BANK.

SEMI-ANNUAL STATEMENT

State National Bank,

December 31, 1881.

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$1,051,108 71
United States bonds		125,000 00
Other stocks and bonds		314,000 01
Real estate		67,750 00
Other assets, cash value		41,702 54
Five per cent. redemption fund		19,125 00
Demand loans	$314,853 32
Exchange	369,733 04
Current funds	325,791 45
Gold Coin	748,862 00
Checks on other banks	344,118 74
		2,022,305 15
		$1,040,733 80

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock		$ 435,000 00
Reserve fund		225,000 00
Circulation		382,500 00
Dividends unpaid		20,082 52
Individual deposits		1,041,685 67
State of Louisiana Deposits
Remitted interest fund, 1879	$313,113 10
Interest tax fund, 1880	342,331 00
Interest tax fund, 1881	98,579 41
Interest fund, 6 bonds	10,444 00
Sundry other funds	126,321 86—	870,747 47
Due banks and bankers		131,308 02
		$4,011,755 80

SAM'L H. KENNEDY, President.
J. E. JARREAU, Acting Cashier.
A. BALDWIN, President. S. KATZ, Vice-President.

SEMI-ANNUAL STATEMENT
—OF THE—
New Orleans National Bank
At the close of business December 31, 1881.

RESOURCES.

Bills discounted		$774,647 47
Demand loans		270 993 05
Overdrafts		2,052 35
U. S. bonds (par value	$200,700 00
U. S. refunding certificates (par value)	220 00
$300,000 Louisiana consols, 7 per cent bonds	130,482 50
		331,402 50
Currency and coin	238,665 75
Checks on local banks	1,931 30
Checks for Clearing House	177,201 87
Mutilated currency and sundries	2,627 27
		417,426 21
New York sight exchange	54,577 59
Due from banks and bankers	14,859 86
Five per cent. fund, with Comptroller of the Currency	9,000 00
Furniture and fixtures	500 00
		$1,998,165 00

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock	$ 200,000 00
Surplus fund	65 000 00
Undivided profits	1 817 82
Circulation outstanding	179,000 00
Dividends uncalled for	1,960 00
Dividends payable January 2, 1882	8,000 00
Individual deposits $1,214,016 77
Due banks and bankers 732,640 49—	1,946,657 24
	$1,905,465 06

I certify the above to be a correct statement,
WM. PALFREY, Cashier.

Farm, Garden and Flower Seeds!
DIRECT FROM THE FARM.
Warranted Fresh, Pure and Good, or money refunded.
Catalogue for '82 free. Please send for it.
Address JOSEPH HARRIS,
Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y.

JAMES COBBS,
Attorney at Law,
46 ST. FRANCIS STREET,
MOBILE, ALA.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,
MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,
MONUMENTS.
Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,
MARBLE, SLATE.
And Iron Mantels and Grates.
114, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans

CHURCH'S
MUSICAL VISITOR,
AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF MUSIC.
Every number contains 32 large pages filled with Musical Sketches, Original Articles, Criticisms, Poetry, Notes, Musical News, and five to ten pages of New Music. Every subscriber receives free, the choice of 10 Elegant Premium Volumes!
Each premium contains 32 pages of Sheet Music. Full particulars and list of contents of premiums sent on application.
Subscription only $1.50 a Year!
Agents Wanted in every Town and City, to whom a liberal commission will be paid.
Circulars, blanks, etc., supplied free.
☞ Send Stamp for Sample Copy.
PUBLISHED BY
JOHN CHURCH & CO.,
New York Office, 5 Union Square. | CINCINNATI, O.

Indian Turnip
COMPOUND
PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by H. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street. And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

Agricultural.

COUNTRY ROADS.—The Richmond Planter and Farmer has an article on common roads which says good roads tell of the advancement of a country; bad roads indicate no pregress, or positive retrogression.

All neighborhoods of ordinary density of population can have at least fair roads by combination and concentration of effort. The turnpike with its toll-gate is objectionable in many ways. It involves the granting of a franchise, and no special privileges should be conferred where such measures could be avoided. But the energy of a neighborhood, when combined, can remove rocks and stumps, fill up mud holes and ruts, lower steep grades, place protections against washings, and do many other things to smoothe and make comfortable the ordinary wagon roadway. All this kind of work should be done by public authority and paid for out of the public treasury; but where this action is withheld, neighborhood combinations can do much in the way we have suggested.

Our contemperary is right enough when he says "all this kind of work should be done by public authority," etc. It should, but unfortunately, even where authorized, it is seldom done. It may have been done at, but usually the good to the roads, by the doing, is little indeed. The people are permitted to work out their road tax, and they repert themselves on the days appointed and leaf along the line of the road, making a kind of pic-nic occasion of it, and really leaving but little more sign than a regular pic-nic would have left on the same ground.

Our contemporary goes on to remark that some of the States have laws by which the county authorities levy special taxes for road construction. A majority of residents along a certain portion of a road petition for its improvement, and a special tax is levied on the land fronting or contiguous to the road. Every farm benefitted by the construction of the road is taxed in proportion to its value and the amount of estimated benefit—those not immediately on the road not receiving as much benefit as those which are, and paying less pro rata of the cost of making it. The taxes for the improvement are spread over several years, so that their payment may not distress the farm owners desiring the road made. The road bed after being graded, bridged and culverted, is covered with gravel or broken rock. It is then taken in charge by the county authorities and kept in repair at the general expense—the original tax payers or constructors of the road paying no more for its maintenance than other property-holders in the county. The road is free to all, the land-owners who paid for its construction having dedicated it to public use in the prayer asking for it, as by law they are required to do.

In this way an entire country can be threaded with roads in a few years. The original cost is soon recovered in the saving of vehicles, harness, animals and time, to say nothing of the comfort enjoyed and facilities afforded for the transaction of ordinary everyday business. This is a subject for serious thought and energetic action in all communities that still cling to bad roads and all the bad ways inseparable from bad roads.—Mobile Register.

THE DEMAND FOR NUTS.—During recent years the trade in foreign and domestic nuts has developed wonderfully. New York City has become the most important center of the trade the extent of which indicates that people have either secured patent stomachs or that indigestion has lost its terrors. Africa used to supply us with peanuts, sending them by ship-loads, but our Southern States have so successfully cultivated this popular nut that we are now independent. The States that furnish the bulk of the supply are Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee. During the present season the crop of Virginia was 1,100,000 bushels, of Tennessee 550,000 bushels, and of North Carolina 120,000 bushels.

The Texas pecan is especially in demand. While a few years ago several barrels of pecans abundantly supplied the demand, car-loads and invoices of one or two hundred barrels are not now uncommon.

In many localities, especially in the Eastern States, the hickory nuts are sufficiently plentiful to ship to New York half-a-dozen car-loads a week when demanded.

The chestnut is becoming scarcer every year, but their great popularity will probably prevent their total disappearance, for they are already being successfully cultivated, and it is expected that in a few years the cultivated nut will equal in quality the high-priced Italian chestnuts.

Black walnuts and butternuts are regarded as too rich and only for table use; but the former is largely used by confectioners. The American hazel nuts are not an important article of commerce, the filbert largely taking their place. Only a few English hazel nuts find their way to the American market. It is stated that growers in California contemplate introducing a number of varieties of nuts native to Spain and Italy.

The trade in foreign nuts is enormous. The demand is said to have tripled during the last five years. The almond always has been in demand, and probably always will be. The English walnuts, formerly called Madeira walnuts, mainly come from France and Spain, the English crop being consumed at home. They have been successfully raised in the States on the Pacific coast. The Brazil nuts are a kind of which a few go a long way. For cocoanuts the demand is steady and so immense that our dealers feel safe in buying them by the hundred thousand. The process of desiccating them has widened their family use, and they are now a favorite ingredient of pies, cakes, and candies.—Cincinnati Commercial.

EDUCATED FARMERS.—Lawyers, physicians, clergymen and literary men make the discipline of their intellect a constant study. They read more, think more, write more, than the laboring classes. The difference between the educated and uneducated portions of society is a real difference. Now a proud and lazy fellow may rail and swear at this, and have his labor for his pains. There is only one way really to get over it, and that is to rear up a generation of well-educated, thinking, reading, farmers and mechanics. Your skill and industry are felt; and they put you in these respects ahead of any other class. Just as soon as your hands are felt, as much as your hands are, they will bring you to the top.

Many of our best farmers are men of great natural shrewdness; but when they were young they "had no chance for learning." They feel the loss, and they are giving their children the best education they can. Farmers' sons constitute three-fifths of the educated class. But the thing is that they are not educated as farmers. When they begin to study they leave the farm. They do not expect to return to it. The idea of sending a boy to the school, the academy and the college, and then letting him go back to farming, is regarded as a mere waste of time and money. You see how it is even among yourselves. If a boy has an education you expect him to be a lawyer, or a doctor, or a preacher. You tacitly admit that a farmer does not need such an education; and if you think so you can not blame others if they follow your example.

There is no reason why men of the very highest education should not go to a farm for a living. If a son of mine were brought up on purpose to be a farmer, if that was the calling which he preferred, I still would educate him if he had common sense to begin with. He would be as much better for it as a farmer as he would as a lawyer. There is no reason why a thoroughly scientific education should not be given to every farmer and to every mechanic.—Henry Ward Beecher, in "Flowers, Fruits and Farming."

DENT CORN.—Professor Shelton, of Kansas Agricultural College, sends corn to the Michigan Agricultural College which had been raised there for three years. It went to Kansas as King Philip, it comes back well marked with dent. He says it is the effect of the climate and is not due to crossing with dent corn. Dr. Sturtevant mentions a similar case of an eight-rowed flint corn, removed and cultivated in Ohio, became from seven years' use closely allied to gourd seed, being much dented, and the number of rows on the cob had increased to twelve and twenty. In Louisiana the continued cultivation of soft gourd corn from the West, produced a hard flint corn, with a larger cob, in twelve years. At Lansing dent corn has a tendency to ripen earlier and become round at the tip of the kernel from year to year, unless care is taken by selecting seed which shows prominent dents in the ends of the kernels. In Southern Ohio and Indiana there is not that tendency for dent corn to change to flint corn.

HOW TO CATCH A HORSE.—If the horse is shy and hard to catch, take finely-grated tartar, pile of rhodium and cummin. Keep them in separate bottles, well corked. Put some of the oil of cummin on your hand and approach the horse on the windy side. He will then move toward you. As soon as you can reach him rub some of the cummin on his nose, give him a little of the castor on anything he likes, and get a few drops of the oil of rhodium on his tongue. After this you can make him do nearly every thing you want. Treat him kindly, feed him well, handle him gently, and your victory is certain.—Turf, Field, and Farm.

GOOD FARMING.—"My idea of good farming," says a writer in the American Rural Home, "is deep plowing, thorough cultivation, a judicious rotation of crops, plenty of clover and sowed corn, with stock enough to eat all the fodder and coarse grain raised on the farm. Manure made of straw alone is not very valuable, but, with the addition of corn meal, bran and oats, it will make the crops grow. I did not design to sell any grain from my farm but wheat and beans until it is fed to stock and made into meat. I prefer to buy bran by the ton, thus enriching the manure pile and giving increased fertility to our fields."

SEED CORN.—In a recent address upon the subject of corn, Professor Beal remarked that the topmost ear was best for seed. Of two fields, one planted with seed taken at random, and the other selected in the field, the latter yielded as much again as the former. Manure and cultivation may be thrown away on poor seed. The best time to cultivate corn is before planting. A shallow cultivation was recommended. Twenty-three ears of corn can be produced from one kernel—by proper cultivation and the use of the best seed, as high as twenty-five ears. Smut is a great damage to corn, and smutty corn is very injurious to cattle.

MAKE THE GROUND COUNT.—We have learned one mistake we have made for years past, and that is, covering too much ground with too few plants. Vacancies not only make a loss, but are expensive every way—in preparation and cultivation of soil, in extra expense for manure, and in interest and tax on land. We are too apt to be ambitious as to having a great number of acres planted, regardless of the yield, expense, etc. We will guarantee that, as a rule, persons having the least land get the most fruit from their land in proportion to the number of acres and make the most money.—Fruit Recorder.

ANOINT WEEDS.—Our best farmers are beginning to learn, and, in fact, many of them have already learned, that the time spent in destroying weeds in the autumn is well spent, and that if they would save time in cultivating hoed crops, they must keep the weeds from seeding as much as possible in all parts of the farm; a little carelessness in this respect will soon cover a farm with weed seeds. A single root of milkweed in a field, if left unmolested, will spread over and take possession of a large field in a few years.—Lewiston Journal.

CLOVER AS A FERTILIZER.—When clover is wanted to enrich the soil for a succeeding crop it is better to let it mature rather than cut it early. When clover is grown for seed the roots are the best developed and contain most nitrogen. This is the reason why those farmers who precede wheat with clover for a fertilizer, first cut a crop of clover early and then allow the second crop to go to seed, before plowing it in. The roots and scattered leaves of clover make most excellent fertilizers.

PACKING FRUIT IN BRAN.—Using wheat bran for packing tender specimens of fruit to prevent bruising, has been long practiced, but an improvement has been made by which, in addition to this protection, the fruit is preserved from decay. The bran is slightly charred by a patented process. We are informed that delicate California grapes and plums have been thus shipped East with safety, and that the carbonized bran prevents decay long enough for the fruit to be sold off gradually as wanted; but the claim that ripe peaches may be thus kept till Christmas will doubtless be found to fail, as they have enough of the elements of decay within them to prevent so desirable an attainment.—Country Gentleman.

A HOT-WATER SUGGESTION.—Do not forget to give a plentiful supply of cool water to stock of all kinds. A pailful of water, into which a large handful of bran has been stirred, should be given to each cow at noon. It will very perceptibly increase the quantity of milk.

Household.

SALADS.—We will give to our readers the various recipes, under this head, from Miss Parloa's "New Cook-book:"

Mayonnaise dressing: A tablespoonful of mustard, one of sugar, one-tenth of a teaspoonful of cayenne, one teaspoonful of salt, the yolks of three uncooked eggs, the juice of half a lemon, a quarter of a cupful of whipped cream. Beat the yolks and dry ingredients, until they are very light and thick, with either a silver or wooden spoon—or, better still, with a Dover beater of second size. The bowl in which the dressing is made should be set in a pan of ice-water during the beating. Add a few drops of oil at a time until the dressing becomes very thick and rather hard. After it has reached this stage the oil can be added more rapidly. When it gets so thick that the beater turns hard, add a little vinegar. When the last of the oil and vinegar has been added, it should be very thick. Now add the lemon juice and whipped cream, and place on ice for a few hours, unless you are ready to use it. The cream may be omitted without injury.

Salad dressing made at the table: The yolk of a raw egg, a tablespoonful of mixed mustard, one-fourth of a teaspoonful salt, six tablespoonfuls of oil. Stir the yolk, mustard and salt together with a fork until they begin to thicken. Add the oil gradually, stirring all the while. More or less oil can be used.

Cream salad dressing: Two eggs, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one of cream, one teaspoonful of sugar, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of mustard. Beat two eggs well. Add the sugar, salt and mustard, then the vinegar and cream. Place the bowl in a basin of boiling water, and stir until about the thickness of rich cream. If the bowl is thick and the water boils all the time, it will take about five minutes. Cool and use as needed.

Salad dressing made with butter: Four tablespoonfuls of butter, one of flour, one tablespoonful of salt, one of sugar, one heaping teaspoonful of mustard, a speck of cayenne, one cupful of milk, half a cupful of vinegar, three eggs. Let the butter get hot in a saucepan. Add the flour and stir until smooth, being careful not to brown. Add the milk and boil up. Place the saucepan in another of hot water. Beat the eggs, salt, pepper, sugar, and mustard together, and add the vinegar. Stir this into the boiling mixture, and stir until it thickens like soft custard, which will be in about five minutes. Set away to cool; and when cold, bottle, and place in an ice chest. This will keep two weeks.—Western Christian Advocate.

VEAL AND HAM PIE.—Take the thick part of a breast of veal, removing all the bones, which put on for gravy, stewing them long and slowly; put a layer of veal, pepper and salt, then a thin sprinkling of ham; if boiled, cut in slices; if raw, cut a slice in dice, which scald before using; then more veal, and again ham. If forced-meat balls are liked, make some force-meat as for Windsor pie, using, if you prefer it, chopped hard-boiled eggs in place of chopped meat, and binding into a paste with raw eggs; then make into balls, which drop into the crevices of the pie; boil two or three eggs quite hard, cut each into four, and lay them round the sides and over the top; pour in about a gill of gravy, and cover the same as Windsor pie. In either of these pies the forcemeat may be left out and sweet-bread, cut up, or mushrooms put in.

ROAST VEAL.—When properly cooked it is an excellent foundation for a good dinner. Choose a piece which is firm and fat. When it has been in the oven long enough to be heated through, begin to baste it with melted butter and water which is well salted and peppered; keep this up until the meat is done, basting it every ten minutes. Do not leave the kidney in the meat to roast, but take it out, and let it brown and crisp over on the outside. Have a very fine oven and roast a long thing—veal needs to cook a third longer than beef. Add butter to the drippings for gravy. If you like stuffed veal, be sure that it is chopped very fine and well seasoned, as, unlike beef and lamb, the veal will add nothing to the flavor, so put in plenty of sage, pepper and salt, and let "onion atoms lurk within and scare suspected animate the whole."

SEVERAL WAYS OF COOKING TRIPE.—Buy the coarse honey-comb tripe; put it in an earthen crock and cover it with vinegar and a little salt to season it. Keep it in the vinegar for a few days, and then remove it and fry brown in hot fat, or stew, seasoning with butter and pepper. Do not add any water to the stew. Enough liquor will cook out of it, if it has been in pickle. Thicken with a little flour and serve hot. It is an excellent breakfast dish fried or stewed. No tripe requires much cooking, as it is always cooked when it is exposed for sale in the market.

MUTTON SOUP.—Boil a leg of mutton from two to three hours and season with salt, pepper, and about a tablespoonful of summer savory rubbed fine. Just before serving add noodles made in this way: Beat one egg light, add a pinch of salt, and flour enough to make a stiff dough; roll out in a very thin sheet, dredge with flour to keep from sticking, then roll up tightly; begin at one end and shave down fine like cabbage for slaw.

ORANGE PUDDING.—One dozen oranges. Make a thin corn-starch pudding to one quart of milk, two eggs, three teaspoonfuls corn-starch, leaving out the whites of the eggs. When corn-starch gets cold, pour it over the oranges already sugared. Beat the whites of eggs and sugar together, and put on the top of the pudding; then set in a pan of cold water, so the oranges will not heat while the meringue is browning.

DELMONICO PUDDING.—Stir three tablespoonfuls of corn-starch into one quart of boiling milk, and let it boil two minutes; beat the yolk of five eggs with six tablespoonfuls of sugar, flavor and stir in the corn flour. Put the whole in a dish and bake it. Beat the whites of the eggs and stir into them three tablespoonfuls of sugar, and when well done spread on the top and bake a light brown.

APPLE CHARLOTTE.—Cut pieces of bread into diamonds and squares, and fry to a light brown in butter. Stew good cooking apples, season highly and let cool. Pour one spoonful on every piece of bread, and send to table while the bread is hot.

SUET PUDDING.—One cup suet, one-half cup molasses, one and one-half cups milk, one cup raisins, three cups flour, one teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful of cloves, cinnamon and nutmegs. Boil three hours. Serve with soft sauce.

Scientific.

WHAT CAUSES THE BLOOD TO CIRCULATE?—To what degree the heart is aided by other forces is yet a matter of investigation. Probably there are several forces assisting. The elasticity of the arteries increase their carrying capacity. They are firm, elastic tubes, which expand under the pressure from each heart-contraction, and then by their own elasticity contract and help the onward flow of the blood. In the smaller arteries the flow loses the intermittent character it possesses in the larger arteries, and becomes a steady stream. The elasticity of the arteries serves precisely the same purpose as the air-chamber of any force-pump, that of equalizing the flow, and so increasing the amount delivered. The whole force is derived from the heart; the arteries cause the force to act continuously.

The veins are lax tubes, somewhat larger than the arteries, and capable of holding all the blood of the body. They convey the same amount of blood as the latter, but more slowly. In the larger veins, however, near the auricles, the velocity may be two hundred millimetres per second. They are provided with valves which effectually prevent the blood from flowing backward toward the heart. Any compression, produced by muscular contraction, or otherwise, will therefore, assist the forward flow of venous blood. This is one explanation why exercise hastens the circulation. The movement of the chest in breathing probably aids the pulmonary circulation, the blood, as well as the atmosphere, tending to fill the vacuum during inspiration.

Physical capillary force is not generally regarded as an active force in the circulation. But there is an admitted force in the capillaries, resulting from the attraction of the tissues for the arterial blood, containing the required oxygen and nutriment. "The vital condition of the tissue becomes a factor in the maintenance of the circulation." It is this force, primarily, which adapts the amount of blood to the varying needs of any organ; the nervous system regulates the supply by varying the caliber of the vessels.

The force in the capillaries, or some other force, carries the blood, after death, from the arteries, where the heart leaves it, into the veins. Finding the arteries empty after death gave rise to the idea that they conveyed only air; whence the name. It was this belief which Harvey overthrew in 1620.—H. L. Faircild, in Popular Science Monthly.

GIANT POWDER.—Chemistry itself is at a loss to estimate the power of nitro-glycerine, and yet this new agent of death is twenty per cent. stronger. That our readers may be enabled to form a faint conception of the danger of such a preparation, we will give a brief description of the process by which nitro-glycerine, giant powder and Hercules powder are supposed to be manufactured, and of the extreme caution necessary in their manufacture. In the manufacture of nitro-glycerine, two tubes, each about a quarter of an inch in diameter and six inches in length, lead into a single tube of double their capacity but of the same length. Nitric acid is introduced into one and sulphuric acid into the other of these small tubes. The large tube containing glycerine. The two acids are then forced quite gradually into the glycerine, and the chemical combination thus forms an explosive of incalculable power.

So powerful and dangerous is this article, that not an ounce of it is allowed in the manufactory while this tube, six inches long and half an inch in diameter, is being filled, and this tube is kept constantly swathed in ice during the process. To make giant powder, this nitro-glycerine is allowed to drip upon a clay (similar to meerschaum) imported from Germany. This clay is the only perfect absorbent of nitro-glycerine known. As Hercules powder is darker, it is believed that that explosive is manufactured by the same process, charcoal, an imperfect absorbent, being used instead of said quality of clay. If in the manufacture of nitro-glycerine, a strong tube is kept swathed in ice, and a quantity of the liquid only six inches in length and half an inch in diameter is allowed in the building at the same time, no wonder that General Von Bokkelen, with his preparation twenty per cent. more powerful, remarked that he would have it handled thermometer in hand!—Virginia City Chronicle.

UNDER-WATER LAMPS.—A new method of illuminating the tanks at the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, was lately shown by means of the "Faure" electric battery, and which, so far as it went, was of a successful character. The lights shown were, to the number of six, submerged in the tank at the foot of the west staircase with excellent effect, showing up every fish and plant with great distinctness—a result impossible to attain under the old system of gas illumination. One of the great advantages of the electric over the gas-lighting system, is that the fish do not seem to mind in the least the close proximity of the incandescent lamps, while at the same time they do not suffer from the noxious emanations evolved during the combustion of gas. Under Mr. Faure's system a steady light of almost any intensity can be obtained, while the engines, which can be run without cessation during the whole of the twenty-four hours of the day, effect a great saving by their power of storing the electric energy, while at the same time they obviate the danger of a sudden accidental extinction of the arbor light employed. The electricity used for the lighting of the tank was generated in Woolwich and carried down to the aquarium, where it arrived but a short time before it was used.

—The crystals of hæmoglobin obtained from the blood of different animals have forms so distinct and characteristic that the origin of a sample of blood may thus be determined. The editor of the London Journal of Science, in calling attention to this statement, remarks that it is a serious argument in favor of separate creations of animals, as opposed to the law of evolution.

ELECTRIC LIGHT AND THE EYES.—The brilliant light of the electric arc is found to be much less dangerous to the eyes than was for some time believed. So high a medical authority as the London "Lancet" reports that but one case of serious injury from exposure to the dazzling light has come under its notice, and in that instance, the exposure was unusually severe and prolonged.

—The ashes and lava of the recent eruption of Etna have been examined by M. Cossa. The lava is formed in great part of triclinic felspar, disseminated in a crude mass made up of small crystals of the same felspar, augite, magnetite, and a little grayish vitreous matter. He is not inclined to believe that the crystalline elements of the lava had previously existed in the solid state.

EDUCATIONAL.

East Mississippi Female College.

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.

One of the most accessible and prosperous schools in the South. Its facilities, course of study, system and faculty are superior. It is a growing and popular institution under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"It has developed into great usefulness, and has established itself in the hearts and confidence of the people."—Mississippi Conference.

"The college is finely located to command a large patronage, and its management has been such as to secure the confidence of the people. It is an institution that deserves the liberal support and patronage of the Methodists of Mississippi."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Send for catalogue and examine terms.

Whitworth Female College,

BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.

Will re-open September 21, 1881. Number of pupils last term, 291. Number of teachers 18. Board per half academic year, $60; Tuition from $15 to $25; Incidental Fees from $1 to $4.

The languages, ancient and modern, mathematics, the sciences, music, drawing and painting thoroughly taught.

The continued success of this school is its best indorsement. There has not been a death in the college for years past. Send for a catalogue.

H. F. JOHNSON, A. M., D. D., President.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Session 1881-82.

THE Academic, Biblical and Law Departments open September 1. The Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Departments open October 1.

The fees are as follows: Academic Department, $65; Biblical, $15; Law, $100; Medical, $65; Dental, $90; Pharmaceutical, $65.

Ten scholarships, worth $100 each, were awarded to meritorious students at the close of the last session.

Four Graduate Fellowships, worth $300 each, and two Post-graduate Fellowships, worth $500, each, were likewise conferred.

The various Chairs of the University are filled by forty Professors and Instructors. Six hundred and thirty-two students, from twenty-one States, were matriculated last year.

For the ANNUAL REGISTER, or further information, address J. M. Leech, Secretary of the Faculty, or L. C. GARLAND, Chancellor.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kneringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

The Fall Session will begin September 15, 1881.

Send for catalogue to

REV. E. E. WILEY, D. D., President.

Millwood Female Institute,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Founded 1866. Chartered 1870.

This school opens the first Monday of September 1881, with efficient accomplished teachers in every department.

Expenses, per session of five months, including Tuition, Board and Washing, $75.

Music on Piano or Guitar, with use of Instrument and class singing, $25.

For further particulars send for catalogue.

MISS McCALMONT, Principal.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin October 5, 1881.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Principal.

J. B. MAGRUDER A. M. Assistant.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Session 1880-81 had 133 students, six professors and teachers and three A. B. graduates. The entire expenses for board and tuition for scholastic year need not exceed $144 in Preparatory department, nor $164 in College classes. Next session begins September 5, 1881. Send for a Catalogue.

C. O. ANDREWS, President.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,

HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

The thirty-second year begins August 31. A more healthy location can not be found. The College was never in a more prosperous condition. A full Faculty of thorough teachers, splendid buildings and a complete outfit for all departments, literary, music, languages and art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Prices reduced to suit the times. Special inducements offered. For terms and new catalogues address

REV. A. B. JONES, A. M., President.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Next session opens September 21, 1881. The services of experienced and successful teachers secured. Buildings undergoing necessary repairs. Every room being thoroughly renovated, and neatly and handsomely furnished. No pains will be spared to give entire satisfaction. For further information address, Rev. T. C. BRADFORD, President. Port Gibson, Miss.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

Will open on the first Monday in October. For terms and circulars, address,

MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,

GREENSBORO, ALA.

The next session will open on the first Wednesday in October next, with a full corps of able, experienced Instructors. Course of study extensive and thorough. Expenses moderate. $175, in advance, will pay Board and Tuition in University classes for the entire scholastic year. $135-$165 in Preparatory Department. Health record almost unrivaled. Situated fifty miles from Selma, on the Selma and Greensboro' railroad. For catalogue and further information, address

REV. J. LEWIS, D. D., Chancellor.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE

Female College,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The next session of this school will open on Monday, September 19, 1881. We ask attention to the following points:

I. Our curriculum embraces a good course of study which we teach thoroughly.

II. We are prepared to satisfy the most cultivated taste in the departments of Music and Art.

III. We employ the best teaching talent within the range of our knowledge.

IV. We keep a good table in the College Boarding Department.

V. This school has a health record which is unsurpassed.

VI. Our charges are as moderate as they can be made without marring the best results in culture.

For full information, send for catalogue.

JOHN MASSEY, President.

Tuskegee, Ala.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded in 1849, offers superior advantages and healthy retreat.

The MALE DEPARTMENT is located in a quiet farming community, seven miles from Sweetwater East Tenn., Va. and Ga. R. R.

The FEMALE DEPARTMENT is located in the model town of Sweetwater, in a lovely section.

Experienced teachers, good work and low charges in both departments. Patronage merited.

For particulars address

REV. J. H. BRUNNER, D. D., Hiwassee College, Tenn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

In the South-west is now in stock and ready to fill all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at the notice, and prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application. Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

indergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

Send for anything you want or address for prices,

G. T. LATHROP,

New Orleans.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. C. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

NEW GOODS.

GREAT REDUCTION IN

CARPETS,

Tapestry Brussels,

Seventy Cents a yard up to $1 05.

Wiltons, Axminsters, Velvets, Moquettes, Brussels, Ingrains, Three Plys. Window Shades, Lace Curtains, Cocoa, Napier and China Matting, Turkish Rugs, Crumb Cloths, Rugs and Mats in great variety.

A. BROUSSEAU'S SON,

17 Chartres St.

Call and see for yourself.

S. K. RUSS,

—WITH—

Ayers, Richard & Co.,

WHOLESALE GROCERS

—AND—

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

74, 76 Magazine, 88, 90, 92 Poydras St.

NEW ORLEANS.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,

P. O. Box, 595, New York.

Christian Advocate.

The Stone Hill People.

HOW THEY RAISED MONEY FOR MISSIONS.

A missionary came along to the Stone Hill Church. The members were really interested. They wanted to do something, they said, but they hadn't any ready money. The missionary replied that he didn't want money; he would take produce. He spoke to them thus: "I know your circumstances well. Here you are a little farming community; you've only got about sixty members in your church; most of you are scattered about on a dozen farms. Now, wouldn't you be willing to give a little wheat and potatoes and a few apples to spread your Master's gospel? Very well. Now I don't want money; I'll take produce. Honor the Lord with the first fruits of all thine increase."

"But how will you get possession of the produce?"

"Oh," he replied; "I will get you to bring it to the village some time when you are coming in on business. Brother Elwell will receive it at his store, and turn it into money; after which it will be easy enough to send it along."

In the main, the plan seemed reasonable; but they doubted whether it would work well.

"You leave all that to me," said the missionary. "You do just as I say. Get an old flour barrel or a bag, or a box of any kind, and chalk on it, 'For the Lord;' then, when you gather your wheat, take a bushel, or a half bushel if you think the other too much, and put into the sack that belongs to the Lord. At another time, do the same with your oats; and when the season comes round, put in a bushel of apples, and then, later, your bushel of potatoes. Perhaps your wives and daughters would agree to give a pound of butter or a dozen of eggs, the first yield of every spring. You will be surprised how it will foot up."

"Well, well," they said; "it looks fair enough; it would be no harm to try it for a single time; only we might not get a good price for these donations of produce."

"Don't trouble yourself about that," said the missionary; "as soon as you have measured out your bushel into the Lord's sack, your work will be over; let it remain at the Lord's risk; whether it sells for little or much, it is his business. If any of it rots or is eaten by rats, or if it meets with any accident, still consider it the Lord's loss, and not yours."

They laughed at his idea. Three or four said they would do it; others hung back. One man there was a day-laborer; every year, there were a few or more days in which he had little to do. He said he would give one day's work every year; he would fix on a certain day ahead; when that fixed day came round, he would consider it the Lord's day; whatever he might happen to make on that day should be the Lord's without fail. If that day should happen to be a rainy day, or, if he got nothing to do that day, it should be the Lord's loss and not his.

Another brother was a shoemaker. He offered to give the work of four Saturday nights in each year. It was agreed that it should be the last Saturday night of each quarter; those particular nights, and no other. Whatever jobs of half-soling and mending boots and shoes came to him on those evenings, were to be paid into the Lord's treasury. If no work should happen to come in, it was to be the Lord's loss, and not his; or, if he should be sick and unable to work, the loss still was the Lord's; he was free from his obligation.

A grocery keeper agreed to fix on one day of the year, to be determined on at least three months in advance, on that day, whatever might be the profits of his sales, whether five cents or five dollars, should be devoted to the spread of the gospel.

The results surprised them all. In previous years they had never taken more than six or seven dollars for mission purposes. Elwell, the grocer, had received the produce and made the sales and collected the little sums earned. He now rendered his account:

Received from John Pye, one day's work	75
Thomas Smith, four evenings' patching shoes	1 30
Edward Manly, one bushel of wheat	1 00
" " " " potatoes	40
" " " " corn	25
" " " " apples	50
" " pound of butter	15
" " dozen of eggs	12
John Elwell, one day's profits of grocery	2 25
Jas. Rees, bushel contributions, wheat, apples, etc.	3 35
John Kirk, bushel contributions, wheat, apples, etc	3 32
Henry Davis, bushel contributions, and other things	3 75
Timothy Dexter, bushel contributions, and poultry	5 50
Edward Redden, bushel contributions, a ham, wool, etc.	8 00

And so the accounts went on. Over forty-two dollars were raised, and sent on to the Missionary Union to support a native preacher somewhere in China.

The members enjoyed the giving. John Pye said he never put forth his strength with so much pleasure, as on that day when every stroke of his hand was to help his Master. It sweetened his toil for a month afterward. Thomas Smith said that on those nights when he was working for missions, the sound of his lap-stone was like music in his ears. John Elwell said, it was the easiest and smoothest day's business he ever did in the store. Edward Redden said that whether any missionary agents came along or not, henceforth the Lord's word should have a share in the yield of everything on his farm, from the sale of a fat ox down to a peck of turnips. Giving had been a blessing to him. It had kept God before his mind all the time. It had sanctified his flocks and his herd, and he meant to do a great deal more next year than he had done this year for missions at home and abroad. He wanted, also, about their being able to raise the pastor's salary next year. Money-getting might be a curse, or it might be means of grace; and so said they all.—National Baptist.

The Lessons of David's Life.

We ought to be deeply grateful to God for the inspired history of the life of his servant David. It was a great life, a vigorous life, a life spent in many positions and conditions. I almost rejoice that it was not a faultless life, for its failings and errors are instructive. It is the life of a man after God's own heart; but still, the life of one who went astray, like a lost sheep, and was recovered by the great Shepord's grace. By this fact he comes all the nearer to us poor, faulty men and women. I would venture to apply to David the description which has been applied to the world's own poet:

"A man so various, that he seemed to be
Not one, but all mankind's epitome."

Each one may find something like himself in the life of this wonderful and checkered man of the olden time. Among other things we learn this, that where there is faith there is more to be tried; for David, though he trusted God so heartily, had good need of all the faith he possessed. In his early days he was hunted like a partridge upon the mountains by Saul, and was constantly in jeopardy of his life. He had so choice a treasure of faith about him that Satan was forever trying to plunder him of it. Still, the worst trials that David suffered arose not out of his faith, but out of his want of it. That which he did to avoid trouble brought him into deeper distress than ordinary providences ever caused him. He left the country where he was so ill at ease, which was, nevertheless, thy land, O Emmanuel, and he went away into the land of the Philistines, expecting there to escape from further turmoil. In so doing he transgressed, and fresh trials came to him—trials of a worse kind than those which had happened to him from the hand of Saul. Brethren, the poet said:

"The path of sorrow, and that path alone Leads to the land where sorrow is unknown," and he spake truly; for "in the world ye shall have tribulation."

Another lesson is this: Though we shall be tried, yet faith in God is an available resource at all times. Faith is a shield which you may use for warding off every kind of arrow, yea, even the fiery darts of the great enemy; for this shield can not be penetrated even by javelins of fire. You can not be cast into a condition in which faith shall not help you. There is a promise of God suitable for every state, and God has wisdom and skill and love and faithfulness to deliver you out of every possible jeopardy; and therefore you have only to confide in God, and deliverance is sure to come.

Mainly note this, that even when your trouble has been brought upon you by your own fault faith is still available. When your affliction is evidently a chastisement for grevious transgressions, still, trust in the Lord. The Lord Jesus prayed for erring Peter that his faith might not fail him; his hope of recovery lay there. Faith under a sense of guilt is one of those noble kinds of faith at which some are staggered. To my mind the faith of a saint is comparatively easy; it is the faith of a sinner that is hard. When you know that you have walked uprightly before God, and have not stained your garments, then you can trust him without difficulty; but, oh, when you have stepped aside, and when at last the Heavenly Father makes you smart under his rod—to cast yourself upon him then is faith indeed. Do not fail to exercise it, for this is faith which saves.—Spurgeon.

How The Great Amuse Themselves.

It is curious to notice how men who have been noted for their polish and culture as writers or conversationalists have in their leisure moments found a strange pleasure in associating with their inferiors. Prior, one of the most elegant of our minor poets, the companion of princes and diplomatists, constantly passed whole evenings in chatting with a common soldier and his slattern wife in a low public house in Long Acre. Thomas Wharton, the historian of English poetry and a singularly refined scholar, was often to be found in sordid taverns joking and being joked. Porson and Elmsley had similar propensities. So also had Turner, the painter. Machiavelli and Burke delighted to forget politics by sharing the labors of their farm servants; and even the stately Bolingbroke, as we learn from one of Pope's most delightful letters, was not above shouldering a prong. Byron's principal amusement during his residence at Venice was shooting with a pistol at a coin in a cleft stick, and that pursuit he practiced more methodically than any other thing in his unmethodical life. The conqueror was devoted to the hunting-field, "loving the tall deer as if he were their father," says the old chronicler, Henry V was the slave of tennis, and Edward IV of falconry. Tiberius and Louis XI—the Tiberius of modern Europe—delighted to shut themselves up with astrologers and quack prophets. But it is time to turn to more eccentric frivolities. Philip the Good, of Burgundy, spent enormous sums of money in contriving houses full of diableries, such as hidden trap-doors, spring snares, false roofs, undermined floors, and the like. He would then invite guests to a grand banquet, which would suddenly disappear; introduce them into magnificent saloons, which would suddenly dissolve in ruin, the miserable guest finding himself falling through space, at another time soused in water or banged with sacks which came tumbling, charged with flour, on his bewildered head. Into the still more extraordinary recreation of Alexander VI, and Cesar Borgia, in Italy, and Louis XIII, in France, we can not enter for reasons obvious to readers of the diaries and memoirs illustrating those periods.—Temple Bar.

THE MANUFACTURE OF PLATE GLASS.—To cast, roll, polish and burnish plate glass requires machinery of peculiar construction, and a "plant" that is costly by reason of its complex nature. The pouring of liquid glass from the furnace upon the cast iron plates, and the subsequnt rolling, are processes comparatively simple. Any house-keeper who has used a rolling pin on a batch of pie crust dough, performs an operation very similar to this stage of plate glass making. It is the succeeding processes of grinding and polishing and final burnishing that require time and costly mechanicism. After leaving the rolls and bed plate the glass is rippled and rough, and only fit for grating or skylights. Each plate must be transferred to machines that resemble the turn tables of a railway. On the revolving platform the glass is cemented into a bed of plaster of Paris, and the machine started. Bearing heavily on the surface of the glass are blocks of metal, and while in motion the surfaces are kept supplied with sharp sand and a constant stream of water. The next stage of the glass grinding process is the same as to machinery, but instead of sand, coarse emery is used. Then finer emery is used in another revolving table, and so on for a half a dozen times. The final polishing is done by heavy reciprocating devices, fed with rouge, and maintaining a constant back and forward motion, and also a lateral movement over the surface of the crystal. All this requires the assistance of a large force of men, many of them skilled laborers. After going through the different grindings and polishings the plate that measured an inch in thickness is only three-quarters of an inch thick, has lost all its roughness and is ready for the show window of the purchaser.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. S. PFISTER,

Millinery and Dressmaking,

539 Magazine Street,

Bet. St. Mary and Felicity. NEW ORLEANS.

Bonnets and Hats Cleaned, Dyed and Altered.

E. E. LELAND,

No. 185 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

IMPORTED

MILLINERY

French Flowers and Feathers,

ORNAMENTS

Fringes and Tassels, Dress Trimmings, Novelties in Buttons, Ribbons, Corsets, Novelties in Ladies' Neckwear, Veilings and Crapes, Velvets, Lace Goods, Etc., Etc., Etc.

Special attention paid to Country Orders.

CRESCENT INSURANCE COMPANY,

Incorporated as a Mutual Company in 1849—Re-organized as a Stock Company in 1880.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - - $400,000.

Has paid nearly NINE MILLIONS for losses Since 1849.

Annual and Term Policies Issued on Desirab Fire Business.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.
CHAS. H. DOLSEN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

TRUSTEES:

Sam'l H. Kennedy,	Paul E. Mortimer,
Victor Mayer,	Joseph Bowling,
W. B. Conger,	S. Hernsheim,
George W. Sentell,	Ed. J. Gay,
Alf. Moulton,	Edwd. Nalle,
Charles Newman,	J. J. Reiss,
U. Marinoni,	Louis Prados,
Lucien Delery,	W. W. Swain,
Charles H. Dolsen,	Harry L. Fisah,
Reuben G. Bush,	John Brunaso,
John Calder,	A. H. Sieverd,
S. C. Conlon,	E. H. Adams,
W. A. Phelps,	Sigmund Katz,
M. Gillis,	N. D. Wallace,

W. R. Lyman.

See our Agents throughout Louisiana Texas, Mississippi and Arkansas.

Factors' and Traders'

INSURANCE COMPANY.

49 CARONDELET STREET,

Paid Up Capital .....$1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President,
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President,
THOS. F. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

TRUSTEES:

John I. Noble,	John Chaffe,
Richard Milliken,	Sam'l Friedlander,
R. M. Walmsley,	A. H. May,
T. Lyll. Lyon,	Samuel H. Boyd,
Wm. J. Behan,	B. F. Kahleman,
Chas. Chaffe,	L. C. Jurey,
Wm. Hartwell,	C. J. Leeds,
A. T. Janin,	A. M. Bickham,
Henry Abraham,	Louis Bush,
A. Brittin,	G. W. Sentell,
Wm. Cunningham,	John I. Adams,
R. T. Buckner,	Wm. A. Gwyn,

Chas. E. Black.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S

MAMMOTH

QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 160 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF

CROCKERY

Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods

OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS

JOHN CAUCHE,

AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,

109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,

Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

HOW TO PAINT.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture, cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures.

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations whenever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

TRADE MARK — PURITY, QUALITY, QUANTITY

A TRUE TONIC.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS are a certain cure for all diseases requiring a complete tonic; especially Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Intermittent Fevers, Want of Appetite, Loss of Strength, Lack of Energy, etc. Enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. Acts like a charm on the digestive organs, removing all dyspeptic symptoms, such as Casting the food, Belching, Heat in the Stomach, Heartburn, etc. The only Iron Preparation that will not blacken the teeth or give headache. Sold by all Druggists at $1.00 a bottle.

BROWN CHEMICAL CO.
Baltimore, Md.

See that all Iron Bitters are made by Brown Chemical Co. and have crossed red lines and trade-mark on wrapper. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.

SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Wgt with yoke & frame	Cost o Bell & Hang's.
No. 6,	25 in.....230 lbs.....	$ 25 00
No. 6½,	27 in.....240 lbs.....	36 00
No. 7,	30 in.....490 lbs.....	50 00
No. 8,	34 in.....730 lbs.....	75 00
No. 9,	38 in.....925 lbs.....	130 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A

H. D. McCOWN,

DEALER IN FINE

CLOTHING,

SHIRTS

AND

Mens' Furnishing Goods,

Cor. Common and St. Charles Sts.

NEW ORLEANS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S MANUAL

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, JR.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages--Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

NEW HOME! SEWING MACHINE

Is More Perfect, Costlier to Make, More Durable, and Finer Material than any other Machine, and

SOLD FOR LESS MONEY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: If you do not wish to buy the New Home, I advise you to wait until other machine companies make a machine equal to it.

HEADQUARTERS, 170 CANAL ST.,

GUSTAV SEEGER,
Sole Agent.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 8000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ORDERS

—FOR—

Fresh, First-Class Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Etc.,

—SENT TO—

E. H. ADAMS & BROTHER,

WILL RECEIVE THE

PROMPTEST AND MOST CAREFUL ATTENTION.

AS THEY DO NOT DEAL IN

"Damaged Goods," "Auction Goods," or "Job Lots,"

THEIR PATRONS ARE SURE TO GET GOOD VALUE.

No. 594 Magazine Street, New Orleans.

D. H. HOLMES,

155 Canal Street, - - - 15 Bourbon Street

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in

Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.

HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.

D. H. HOLMES,

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE. 155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,

(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,

Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. Business Suits, $12 to $25
6 Shirts for $9 Collars, $1.50 per Dozen

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, dropping, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, offensive breath, deformities, and finally consumption. From first to last, Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The only safe, successful and pleasant treatment is

Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT

It does not require months to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing remedial agent known to science. Balsams and Cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar, that the mere breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by thousands, who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT—Circulars, etc., Sent Free—Cent. Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness

U. S. BONDS.

Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.
Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

58 CAMP STREET.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,

112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

I have decided to distribute the remainder of

My Stock of Pictures

among my customers, rather than sacrifice them. Any person buying $5 and upwards of other goods, will be entitled to select from a class of Pictures ranging in price according to the size of bill purchased. No additional price will be put upon the goods, as this is entirely a bonus to induce sales during the dull Summer months.

My stock is comprised in part of Carpets, Oil Cloths, Upholstery Goods, Mattings, Wall Paper, Widow Shades, Cornices, Curtain Goods, Wire Screens, Frames, Mouldings and Mirrors.

E. HEATH,
97 and 99 Camp Street,
NEW ORLEANS.

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward

All guaranteed.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

FURNITURE.

W. G. TEBAULT.

47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!

Personal experiences in the

UNITED STATES and

CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES,

BY J. B. HOOD,

Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army.

Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.

Price in cloth binding, $3; in leather, $3 50. Mailed, post paid, on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street.

Liverpool and London and Globe

INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT.

Office, Cor. Carondelet and Gravier Streets.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

STATEMENT OF THE COMPANY.
JANUARY 1, 1881.

Gross fire assets	$12,167,538 44
Fire liabilities, including paid up capital	5 875 957 54
Net surplus	$ 6,201,580 90

STATEMENT OF THE U. S. BRANCH.
JULY 1, 1881.

Assets	$4,592,248 18
Liabilities	2,550,166 52
Surplus	$2,042,081 66

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of L. Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson & Simpson.

HENRY V. OGDEN,
Resident Secretary.

JULES P. ROUX, Assistant Resident Secretary.
CLARENCE F. LOW, Deputy Ass't Resident Sec'y.
New Orleans, October 20, 1881. novcoin

Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The Shortest and Quickest Route to all Eastern Cities.

THROUGH WITHOUT CHANGE TO
Nashville, Louisville, Lynchburg, Washington, Cincinnati, Columbus, O., and St. Louis.

ENTIRE TRAINS THROUGH FROM NEW ORLEANS TO LOUISVILLE.

	Leave.	Arrive.
Express	7.02 A. M.	10.02 P. M
Const'n Accommodation	3.02 P. M.	9.12 A. M.
Fast Mail	5.00 P. M.	10.02 A. M.

ONLY ONE CHANGE OF CARS TO NORTHERN AND EASTERN CITIES.

Ticket office corner St. Charles and Common sts., where Sleeping Car accommodations can be secured.

C. P. ATMORE,
General Passenger Agent;
J. H. SMITH,
Ticket Agent;
J. T. HARAHAN,
Superintendent.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.

By A. J. COOK,

Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.

THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being new it is fully up with the Times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SULLIVAN & BULGER.

27 CAMP STREET.

Plumbers and Gas Fitters,

DEALERS IN

Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all kinds, Iron, Lead and Terra-cotta Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges; also, different kinds of Gas Machines, for country use.

All Orders Promptly Attended to.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c, Agents wanted. L. JONES & Co., Nassau, N. Y.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Tuesday, Jan. 3, 1882.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Ast.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	8⅛	8⅛
Ordinary	9⅜	9⅜
Good ordinary	10⅜	10⅜
Low middling	11	11
Middling	11⅝	11⅝
Good middling	11⅞	11⅞
Middling fair	12	12
Sales to-day	4,500 bales.
Receipts since our last	67,283 bales.
Receipts previously	951,156 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	6⅛	6⅛
Fully fair	6⅜	7
Prime	7⅛	7⅛
Choice	—	7⅝
Yellow clarified	8	8¼
White clarified	8¼	8¾
Powdered	—	—
Crushed	—	—
Molasses, in bbls., ₱ gallon:
Common	40	42
Fair	43	45
Prime	49	52
Choice	57	58
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	4	4¾
Fair	5¼	6
Prime	6¼	6¾
Choice	—	6¾

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	12	46
New York	—	—
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio ordinary	9	9¼
Rio, fair	10⅛	10¾
Rio, prime	11¾	12
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	—
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands	14½	15
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.:
Choice K. D	—	3 70
Flour, ₱ bbl.:
Superfine	4 50	4 75
XX	5 25	5 50
XXX	5 75	6 00
Choice XX	—	—
Choice family	—	—
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1, in bbls	7 20	8 00
Half barrels	4 00	4 50
Kits	67	87
Mackerel, No. 2, in bbls	6 30	7 00
Half bbls	3 50	4 00
Kits	62	80
Mackerel, No. 3, in bbls	5 55	6 75
Half bbls	3 15	3 70
Kits	59	87
Codfish, ₱ lb	—	—
Herring, ₱ box	—	—
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Coal, in cases	—	—
Coal, in bbls	—	—
Linseed, raw	62	62
Linseed, boiled	65	65
Cotton seed	38	47
Lard	80	1 00
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia	—	2 40
Olive	—	2 85
Palm	—	—
Castile	—	2 75
Soda, ₱ lb	—	—
Starch, ₱ lb	3½	4
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse	80	85
Fine	1 00	1 20

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	—	—
White	—	77
Mixed	—	81
	—	77
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	55	55
sled run proof	—	70
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs.:
Choice	1 17½	1 20
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	22 00	23 00
Choice	—	25 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed	—	—
Clay	—	—

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	—	11
Shoulders	—	8
Sides, clear rib	10¾	10¾
Sides, clear	10¾	10¾
Hams, sugar-cured	11¾	13
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	17 50	17 75
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.:
Clear rib sides	9¾	10
Clear sides	—	9¾
Shoulders	6	6½
Lard, ₱ lb:
Choice, in kegs	—	—
Choice, in pieces	11¼	12½
		11¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl.:
Irish	3 00	4 00
Sweet	2 25	2 50
Onions, ₱ bbl	2 50	2 75
Apples, ₱ bbl:	3 50	4 50
Cabbages, ₱ box	—	—
Sour Kraut, ₱ bbl	—	10 00

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
India	—	—
Jute	—	—
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	—	15
Ties, ₱ bundle:
20 ties and buckles	1 50	1 60

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen:
Grown chickens	3 25	3 75
Young do.	1 75	2 50
Ducks	—	3 00
Geese	3 50	4 00
Turkeys	9 00	11 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen:
Western	20	20
Southern	20	22½
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon	—	—
Comb, ₱ lb	—	—
Pecans, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	11	18
Texas	6	7
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	—	14 00
Foreign, ₱ box	—	—
Wool, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	22	23
Texas	—	—
Feathers, ₱ lb:
Geese	—	—
Hides, ₱ lb:
Country green	5	7
Dry salted	—	10
Dry flint	—	12
Ox Horns, each	—	8
Tallow, ₱ lb	6	7½
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton:
In sacks	—	14 00
Meal	—	29 00
Oil cake	27 00	27 50
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	2 50	2 75
Molasses barrels	—	1 35
Half barrels	—	1 05
Kegs	—	70
Oak Staves, per 1000 t
Kegs	—	60 00
Barrels	70 00	75 00
Extra claret	100 00	105 00
Extra hogshead	140 00	145 00
Extra pipes	100 00	105 00
Tobacco:
Low leaf	—	6
Medium	—	7¾
Good to fine	—	—
Low leaf	—	—
Medium	—	8
Good	—	9¾
Fine	—	10
Selections	—	12½

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED.

CHRISTIANSBURG, Va., 1881.

Suffering from kidney diseases, from which I could get no relief either from medicine or the prominent physicians of our country, I tried Brown's Iron Bitters, which cured me completely. A child of mine recovering from scarlet fever, had no appetite, and did not seem to be able to eat at all; I gave him Iron Bitters with the happiest results. J. MYLE MONTAGUE.

—A friend has anonymously contributed the entire cost of the new steel boat required for the Baptist expedition on the African Lakes, and it is to be named the Plymouth.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

PENSACOLA, Dec. 26.—The city election passed off very quietly. A very large vote was polled. The entire Republican ticket was elected by some 300 majority. J. M. Tarbie, Republican candidate for mayor, was re-elected.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—Col. Riley, of Virginia, has just received by the will of Col. Preston, of England, recently deceased, a bequest of $25,000 as a token of gratitude for having saved Col. Preston's little boy from drowning during a voyage across the Atlantic many years ago.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—In view of the prevalence of small-pox at various points in the West, Surgeon-General Woodward, of the marine hospital service, has issued orders to his subordinates at Cincinnati, Louisville, Cairo and St. Louis to vaccinate, without charge, all steamboatmen on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, who may apply for vaccination, without regard to the usual requirement of a certain length of service.

ATLANTA, Dec. 27.—The visiting members of the Tennessee Legislature were welcomed to-day with addresses in Judges' Hall, at the Exposition. At the closing exercises of the Exposition on Saturday, addresses will be made by H. J. Kimball, Hon. Jos. E. Brown, Col. W. C. C. Breckinridge, Hon. Daniel Dyugherty and Gov. Colquitt. The machinery will be stopped by Gov. Colquitt, and a poem will be read by F. H. Nort n.

NEW HAVEN, Dec. 27.—The funeral of the Rev. Dr. Leonard Bacon, was largely attended, at Centre Church this afternoon. Previous to the services, there was a short service of prayer at the late residence of the deceased. Theodore S. Walsey, ex-president of Yale College, conducting the services. The sermon was by Prof. Timothy Dwight. The pall-bearers were Dr. Francis Bacon, Leonard W. Bacon, Rev. Edward W. Bacon, Rev. Thomas R. Baron, and Theodore and Alfred Bacon, lawyers, all sons of the deceased.

MONTGOMERY, Dec. 27.—State Treasurer Vincent has forwarded to New York and Mobile, funds to meet the interest due January 1, on Alabama bonds. Interest will also be paid here on any bonds presented. More than half the bonded debt of the State is held by Alabamians.

AUGUSTA, Dec. 27.—Between 500 and 600 negroes from Edgefield county, South Carolina, passed through Augusta to-day on their way to Arkansas. They are under the leadership of a colored preacher named Hammond, who promised to have a chartered train waiting for them at Augusta, but failed to do so and the party had to pay full rates to Atlanta. They say they found it too hard work to make a living in South Carolina and determined to go elsewhere. Hammond went to Arkansas some time ago and examined the country, and on his return advised the negroes to go out there. It is expected a thousand altogether will go.

ABERDEEN, Dec. 27.—Fire broke out in J. F. Patterson's store last night. The damage was only about $500, and fully covered by insurance.

W. Robert Jones and the negro William Miller, murderers of the Walker brothers, have made full confessions, and on arraignment in the committing Court to-day, on being asked if guilty or not guilty, each replied, "I am guilty." They were remanded to jail without bail. Judge Greer has ordered a special term of court, to begin January 30 for their trial.

EL PASO, Texas, Dec. 28.—The capture and execution of Chief Arzofo, long the terror of Presidio del Norte and vicinity, and thirty of his band, near Chihuahua, is confirmed.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—The census report shows the wool clip of 1880 to be 155,000,000 pounds, but this does not include pulled or ranch wool, or the lamb clip, which is estimated at 55,000,000 pounds additional, or a total of 222,000,000, against 100,000,000 in 1870.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—The Guiteau trial has had a new feature imparted to it to-day by the order of Judge Cox to put Guiteau in the dock usually assigned to criminals on trial. There is no earthly reason why he should not have been put there at the commencement of this trial; but the present order comes at a very opportune moment, to let the jury understand that the prisoner does not enjoy the sympathy of the Judge.

The evidence of to day and yesterday by experts has been very damaging to the prisoner.

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Dec. 29.—A social event of great interest occured here to-day. Miss Minnie Gorgas, daughter of Gen. Josiah Gorgas, ex-Confederate chief of ordinance and late president of the University of Alabama, was married to Mr. Geo. D. Palfrey, of St. Mary parish, La., at three o'clock this afternoon. They left immediately for their Louisiana home.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29.—The removal of Guiteau to the prisoners' dock has had no perceptible effect on his courtroom conduct. He persists in his interruptions and offensive babblings. The general impression becomes stronger from day to day that the jury will return a verdict of guilty. There is no doubt of the fact that Guiteau's relatives are fast losing the hope of his acquittal on the ground of insanity. They realize that the current of evidence has recently been strong, and unmistakably against the assassin.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 30.—Col. H. S. McComb, of Wilmington, Del., formerly actively engaged in Southwestern railroad enterprises, died here to-day.

Col. McComb died of apoplexy while conversing with a friend in the parlor of the West End Hotel.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 31.—The Cotton Exposition closed to-day with appropriate and imposing ceremonies. At half-past 1 o'clock the judges' hall, which had been profusely decorated with flags and paper floral, was thrown open, and an immense throng entered, and as many as could secured seats.

The stage had been enlarged, and upon it were the officials of the Exposition, members of the Executive Committee, and orators, and orchestra, and chorus, which furnished music. The scene was an imposing one. Prayer was offered by Bishop H. E. Warren, after which some letters of regret from several distinguished men were read. Director General Kimball then delivered his address. He said the exposition depended wholly for its support on the voluntary subscription of its friends in many and widely separated parts of the country, it received no bonus from the city and no bounty from the State, but the countenance which the people's representatives refused, has fortunately been accorded by their Chief Magistrate. Sustained and applauded by the people themselves, the grand central idea of the exposition's main shaft, to which has been bolted every wheel that has worked for its success, is concentrated in one word—improvement.

As to the great resources at their command, what American ingenuity has adapted to the demands of American industries, productive and creative, has been shown far more abundantly and in a higher degree than ever before in the history of the country. Referring to cotton ginning devices on exhibition, he notes as wonderful the fact that every cotton gin was but a modification of Whitney's principle; this fact alone constitutes a valuable discovery, and enhances in no small measure the fame of an American inventor whose labors raised him to the rank of a benefactor. There has been here, also, brought to the attention of the cotton producers of the world a recent invention that is likely to be as grand a gift as the cotton gin was when it first revolutionized the industry; I refer to the cotton cleaner which has been declared the best device ever invented for the accomplishment of the universally desired end has been awarded the grand prize of this Exposition.

In announcing the close of the Exhibition he expressed the thanks of the directors and all concerned to their friends in the different cities of the Union who had aided the work, and to the press of the country which had so liberally upheld this cause. He thought every exhibitor must be proud of the success which the Exposition had achieved. Who can measure its beneficent effects? Who, after failing to estimate the results on our production and our industries, can hope to weigh the influence it has cast on the hearts of the people?

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 2.—The Legislature meets to-morrow. Members are arriving by every train. The town is full of people.

The city election for mayor to-day resulted in the election of Jno. McGill, Independent, over H. M. Taylor, Democrat, by a majority of 225.

At the election in November the Independents carried Jackson by 169 majority. To-day's result shows an Independent gain of 58.

The Independents also elect the full Board of Aldermen, being a gain of three out of six Aldermen.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Dec. 27.—The Pall Mall Gazette believes it to be substantially true that the government has divided the distributed localities of Ireland into five or six districts, each of which is to be under a superior sort of magistrate, who will be able to act without previous superior sanction, and have entire control of the troops and police, with a view to prompt action in the event of disturbance. The Gazette adds: Possibly this is a preliminary step toward the enforcement of the payment of rent.

The Dublin correspondent of the Daily News says: Appeals have been taken in 60 per cent. of the land cases decided by the Assistant Commissioners. There are now on the docket about 300 appeals for a hearing. The Chief Commissioners will sit for the first time as an Appeal Court, at Belfast, on January 10.

DUBLIN, Dec. 27.—The Gazette to-day contains a proclamation placing the city and county of Dublin and nine other counties under the arms act.

MADRID, Dec. 29.—Senor Armijo, Minister of Foreign Affairs, replying to a question in the Cortes yesterday, as to whether the government would intervene in the event of a powerful nation undertaking to protect the right of the Pope in Rome, said that as far as he was aware no power contemplated taking the rights of the Pope under its special protection.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—The Berlin correspondent of the Standard says: Since the anti-Socialist law was promulgated in 1878, 225 Socialist societies have been dissolved, and 758 Socialist publications suppressed.

BERLIN, Dec. 29.—Tagoblatt says: A French citizen named Hollander, who was arrested in Berlin at the instance of Russia, after the assassination of the Czar, on suspicion of being the person who threw the fatal bomb, is to be surrended to Russia in pursuance of an understanding with France.

GENEVA, Dec. 30.—The trial trip through St. Gothard Railway Tunnel yesterday was highly successful. The time occupied in the passage of the train was 50 minutes one way and 33 minutes the other.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—A dispatch to the Times from Tunis says: The reality and durability of the submission of the tribes in the south of Tunis are doubted by all who are acquainted with the native feeling. It is generally believed there will be an extensive rising in the spring.

TUNIS, Jan. 2.—The southern tribes have again revolted, and a small column of troops has been dispatched southward, with orders to proceed to Tripolitan frontier. The Governor of Tripoli has ordered that the insurgent Tunisian tribes be prevented entering the territory.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—Two mormon missionaries who attempted to conduct service in one of the suburbs of Loudon yesterday, were grossly maltreated by a mob.

GOOD FOR THE WOMEN.

Many ladies suffer from an extreme nervous, semi-hysterical condition. They have disturbing dreams, exciting muscular startings, peculiar painful symptoms of nightmare. They lie awake and suffer the brain to be flighty when that weary organ ought, according to nature, to be asleep. Brown's Iron Bitters give sweet repose and quickly remove all such nervous disorders.—Home Physician.

Quarterly Conferences.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

JACKSON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Canton	Jan. 1, 2
Jackson	7, 8
Edwards	14, 15
Hind's mission	17, 18
Bolton	21, 22
Madison, at Wesley	28, 29
Soule Chapel	Feb. 4, 5
Sharon, at Union	11, 12
Benton	18, 19
Silver City	25, 26
Yazoo City	Mar. 4, 5
Dover	11, 12
Mt. Carmel	18, 19

W. L. C. RUSHCUTT, P. E.

BRANDON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Marvin circuit, at Wesleyann	Jan. 7, 8
Cato circuit, at Clear Creek	14, 15
Trenton circuit, at Pokeville	21, 22
Raleigh circuit, at Raleigh	28, 29
Brandon station	Feb. 4, 5
Fannin circuit, at Hully Bush	11, 12
Lake circuit, at Lake	18, 19
Walnut Grove circuit, at Hillsboro	25, 26
Carthage circuit, at Gilchen	Mar. 4, 5
Newton circuit, at Newton	11, 12
Forest circuit, at Grange Hall	18, 19
Beech Springs mission, at Mill Dale	25, 26
Decatur mission, at Mt. Hebron	Apr. 1, 2
Philadelphia mission, at Philadelphia	8, 9
Ludlow mission, at Conrell	15, 16

District Stewards will meet at Morton, on Friday, February 3.

J. M. GANN, P. E.

WOODVILLE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Amite City	Jan. 7, 8
Clinton	14, 15
East Feliciana	21, 22
Ponchitoula, at Ponchitoula	28, 29
St. Helena	Feb. 4, 5
Amite	11, 12
Jackson	18, 19
Pipkins and Port Hudson	25, 26
Bayou Sara	Mar. 4, 5
Livingstone	11, 12
East Baton Rouge	18, 19
Wilkinson	25, 26
Woodville	Apr. 1, 2
North Wilkinson	8, 9

Address, Greensburg, La. Pastors, by card, inform Presiding Elder of place for First Quarterly Meeting.

35 D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Crystal Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Wesson and Beauregard, at Wesson	7, 8
Hazlehurst	14, 15
Brandywine, at Rehoboth	21, 22
Summit, at Summit	28, 29
McComb and Magnolia, at Magnolia	Feb. 4, 5
Providence, at Bahala	11, 12
Bayou Pierre, at Pleasant Ridge	18, 19
Adams and Boguechitto, at Adams	25, 26
Scotland at Bethesda	Mar. 4, 5
Spring Ridge, at Forrest Hill	11, 12
Terry, at Pleasant Grove	18, 19
Brookhaven	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in Hazlehurst, January 14, 1882.

52 J. A. B. JONES, P. E.

VICKSBURG DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Natchez	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Vicksburg	Jan. 7, 8
Warren circuit, at Bovina	14, 15
Port Gibson	28, 29
Rocky Springs, at Grand Gulf	Feb. 4, 5
Carnpa, at Utica	11, 12
Fayette circuit, at Fayette	18, 19
Meadville, at Oak Grove	25, 26
Kingston	Mar. 4, 5
Clover Hill, at Mayerville	11, 12
Rolling Fork, at Rolling Fork	18, 19
Mt. Olivet at Satartia	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in the Methodist Church at Port Gibson, January 28, at 10 o'clock A.M.

52 R. S. WOODWARD, P. E.

SEASHORE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Ocean Springs ct., at Ocean Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
East Pascagoula, at Zion	Jan. 6
Moss Point, at Moss Point	7, 8
West Pascagoula, at Oak Grove	14, 15
Handsboro, at Scot's Station	20
Pearlington, at Pearlington	21, 22
Franklinton, at Franklinton	25
Covington, at Covington	28, 29
Whittington, at Whittington	Feb. 4, 5
Spring Cottage, at Stewarts	11, 12
China Grove at Waterholes	18, 19
Mt. Carmel, at Mt. Zion	25, 26
Westville, at Pleasant Hill	Mar. 4, 5
Bethel, at Hebron	11, 12
Enon, at Soule Chapel	18, 19

52 T. B. WEST, P. E.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

PENSACOLA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Pensacola	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Warrington	Jan. 7, 8
Milt view and Rose Point, at Milt view	7, 8
Powelton, at Powelton	14, 15
Milton	21, 22
Stockton, at Stockton	28, 29
Perdido mission, at High Pine	Feb. 1
Pollard, at Pollard	4, 5
Evergreen, at Belleville	11, 12
Repton, at Belleville	11, 12
Monroeville, at Liberty	18, 19
Herbert mission, at Union Camp Ground	25, 26
Georgiana, at Wesley Chapel	Mar. 4, 5
Sepulga, at Bethel	11, 12
Monterey, at Monterey	18, 19

Yellow River mission. We have an appropriation of seventy-five dollars for this work, and wish to employ a local preacher. Address me at Chronelle, Alabama.

Pastors will please urge their official members to be present at their first quarterly conferences.

52 S. H. COX, P. E.

GREENSBORO DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Greensboro station	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Newberne circuit, at Newberne, Wed'y	Jan. 4
Greensboro ct., at Union Chapel Friday	6
Havana circuit, at Havana	7, 8
Green circuit, at Salem, Wednesday	11
Gainsville circuit, at Gainsville	14, 15
Belmont circuit, at Wesley Chapel, Friday	20
Livingstone and Fotaw, at Livingstone	21, 22
Cuba circuit, at York, Tuesday	24
Gaston circuit, at Sharon, Thursday	26
Butler and Mt. Sterling	28, 29
Choctaw circuit, at Oak Grove, Tuesday	31
Forkland circuit, at Forkland	Feb. 4, 5
Demopolis station, Wednesday	8

DEAR BRETHREN: In order that we may get all to work as soon as possible, I have put a any of the above appointments in the week. I do not expect, in the end, to do you any the less service. Let us put everything into working order at once.

51 R. CRUCHART, P. E.

MONTGOMERY DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Hartville circuit, at Seale	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Elmore circuit, at Oak Valley	7, 8
Tallassee station	9
Tuskegee circuit at Warrior Stand	14, 15
Tuskegee station	16
Salem circuit, at Pierce Chapel	21, 22
Auburn station	23
Crawford circuit, at Mt. Zion	28, 29
Montgomery station	Feb. 4, 5
Tallapoosa mission, at Rock Springs	9
Loachapoka circuit, at Notasulga	10, 11
Opelika station	18, 19
Franklin mission, at St. John	25, 26

54 T. F. MARCUM, P. E.

PRATTVILLE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Wetumpka	31, Jan. 1
Clanton and Verbena	Jan. 7, 8
Lowndesboro	14, 15
Camden and Oak Lawn	21, 22
Bell's Landing	28, 29
Autaugaville	Feb. 4, 5
Prattville	11, 12
Pine Apple	18, 19
Randolph	25, 26
Jemison mission	Mar. 4, 5
Pleasant Hills	11, 12
Plantersville	18, 19
Coosa mission	25, 26
Deatsville	Apr. 1, 2

50 A. H. MITCHELL, P. E.

MOBILE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

St. Francis street	Dec. 18
Eastern Shore, at Bay Minette	21
Whistler	25
Toulminville, at Four Mile Post	28
Franklin Street, Mobile	Jan. 1
Citronelle	7, 8
Grove Hill, at Tulion	12
Suggsville, at Suggsville	14, 15
St. Pauls	22
Dladon and St. Stephens, at St. Stevens	28, 29
Isney, at Isney	Feb. 4, 5
Escatawpa	11, 12

50 O. R. BLUE, P. E.

MARIANA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Geneva circuit, at Ella	31, Jan. 1
Cerro Gordo, at Otter Creek	Jan. 7, 8
Freeport, at Freeport	14, 15
Holmes's Valley, at Abigail	28, 29
Marianna, at Marianna	Feb. 4, 5
Big Creek, at Big Creek	11, 12
Greenwood, at Collins Chapel	25, 26
Headland, at Poplarhead	Mar. 4, 5
Chipola, at New Brittan	11, 12
Calhoun, at Bethel	18, 19

The District Stewards will meet at, Mariana, February 4, 1882.

J. S. FRAZER, P. E.

SELMA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

East Selma	Dec. 10, 11
Selma	17, 18
Summerfield	24, 25
Orrville circuit, at Orrville	31, Jan. 1
Brush Creek circuit, at Providence	Jan. 7, 8
Marion	14, 15
Uniontown mission, at Brown's station	15
Spring Hill circuit, at Dayton	21, 22
Uniontown station	28, 29
Clifton circuit or Arlington	Feb. 4, 5
Members Hills, at Sweetwater	11, 12
Choctaw Corner, at Rashi	14
Lower Peach Tree circuit, at Peach Tree	18, 19
McKinly mission at Prairie Bluff	21
Perryville mission, at Mt. Pleasant	Mar. 7

The District Stewards will please meet in the basement of the Methodist Church, Selma, January 4 1882, at eleven o'clock, A. M.

50 J. M. BOLAND, P. E.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WINONA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Kosciusko circuit, at Marvin	Dec. 10, 11
Newport, at Harmonia	14
Attala, at Spring Ridge	15
Kosciusko and Durant, at Durant	17, 18
Richland, at Shiloh	24, 25
Lexington, at Lexington	31, Jan. 1
Zilpha, at North Union	Jan. 6
French Camps, at Shady Grove	7, 8
West, at Howell's Chapel	13
Winona and Valden, at Valden	14, 15
Walthall, at Spring Hill	16
Winona circuit, at Salem	21, 22
Carrollton, at Bluff Springs	23, 29
Black Hawk, at Acona	Feb. 4, 5
Minter City, at Minter City	11, 12

The district stewards will meet at Durant, December 17.

THOS. Y. RAMSEY, P. E.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co. Augusta, Maine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SINGER 10 OBELISK

THE GENUINE SINGER MACHINE HAS BEEN AWARDED THE FIRST PRIZE OVER ALL COMPETITORS MORE THAN 200 TIMES

HIEROGLYPHICS THAT EVERY ONE CAN UNDERSTAND

BEING OVER THREE QUARTERS OF ALL THE SEWING MACHINES SOLD THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

BUY NONE BUT THE GENUINE

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

85 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

$5 to $20 per day at Home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

PHILIP WERLEIN,

135 CANAL STREET,

The Leading Southern Piano House.

SEND FOR CATALOGUES.

Every Instrument Warranted

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

PIANOS.
CHICKERING,
MATHUSHEK,
HALE.

ORGANS.
ESTEY,
MASON & HAMLIN,
STERLING.

Lowest Prices, Most Liberal Terms.

No. 56 USE THE St. Charles St.

A WONDERFUL and

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, AND possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, as when first you use them. They have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European oculists claim that the MEDICATED GLASSES have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that is usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.

2. The chemicals make the glasses hard; they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first.

3. The chemicals keep the glasses cold, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.

4. With these glasses you can read, write or sew all night, the light having no effect on the eye, without distressing or tiresome sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS—NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED.

The MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the frame H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED.

Dealers Supplied Wholesale at Liberal Discount.

ALL EYES SUITED. Persons residing at a distance who may wish to procure these spectacles can send for a circular containing description, prices, etc., and directions for insuring a perfect fit, and have them sent by mail, by addressing

HERC. HOUSAH,
CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,
56 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing mention this paper.

DIUTURNITY:

A COSMICAL ESSAY,

By REV. R. ABBEY.

Concerning the World's Present Infancy, Its Immense Future, Its Undiscovered Treasures, Its Indestructibility. The Wisdom of Providence. The Office of Science. The Scope of Christianity. The Folly of a Millenium. The Non-human Second Coming of Christ, and The Glorious Destiny of Mankind.

"No ordinary ability is displayed. We have read the whole book with unflagging interest. It is salable, readable and remarkable."—N. Y. Methodist.

"One of the most remarkable books we ever read."—Christian Advocate, Nashville.

"The author is a man of mature and scholarly mind."—American Christian Review.

"An entirely original argument. Readable and remarkable."—Missouri Presbyterian Herald.

"Diuturnity is the name of the book of the age."—Gospel Herald.

"Clear thinking, wonderful originality. Vast amount of information."—Home Monthly.

Highly commended by more than a hundred writers. Price, $1 50.

Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville,

G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS.

Dealers in all kinds of LUMBER, SHINGLES, &C.

AND IN

ALABAMA COAL.

Shipments made from either Mobile or New Orleans or from Mills or Mines direct.

WANTED.—White Oak Staves, Red Cedar and Black Walnut logs, received at either New Orleans or Mobile. Highest cash price paid.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

TUERK'S

POSITIVE ROTARY

HYDRAULIC MOTOR,

For running all kinds of Machinery by

Water Power.

Send for Circular and Price List to

G. T. LATHROP,

112 Camp street, New Orleans.

KNABE

PIANOFORTES.

UNEQUALED IN

Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

Nos. 204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.

No. 112 Fifth Avenue New York.

Health is Wealth!

DR. R. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT: a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 28.—NO. 2. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 1882. WHOLE NO. 1388.

PUBLISHED FOR THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
J. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.

Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.
REV. T. B. GALLOWAY.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. FELIX R. HILL.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

A DAY'S RIDE—A LIFE'S ANALOGY.

Mid tangled forest and o'er grass plains wide,
Beguiled a devious path and bridle-way,
Through the short brightness of an Indian day,
In saddle wholly, 'twas my lot to ride,
Scaling the round-topped pine-clad mountain side,
While far away upon the steely sky,
Horizon, half concealed and half in view,
Hungry's peaks upreared their snow-crowned pride,
In utter purity and vast repose.
Ere the first faint blush of morning glowed
Within her eastern chamber, took the road,
And, slowly riding between day and night,
I marked how, through the wan, imperfect light,
The pine and gray-loomed cedar mingled,
Nearer they seemed, each crack and crevice small
Like bas-relief work showed, while, in the light
Of sickly, morn, gray changed through pink to white,
Between the sun, upclimbing, flooded all
The heavens, and then a chill and misty pall
Of exhalations rose, and pale of hue
And fainter ever those far summits grew,
Till the day waned low, and shadows fell
Nigh eastward. Then once more, in radiance clear
Piercing sunlight, beautiful as brief,
Each peak and crag stood out in bold relief,
Till slowly, pink-faded to ghostly gray,
So through life's morning, noontide, evening, may Real hopes dawn, fade, and reappear.

—The Spectator.

Kentucky Correspondence.

We are in the midst of the holidays. Christmas trees have been numerous and fruitful, and the hearts of the children have been made glad. Happy childhood! We are transported to the scenes of other days; the old homestead—father, mother, brother, sister; the early rising to catch the Christmas gifts; the soft touch of the bare feet on the cold floor; the gentle turning of the latch on the door; the rapid cry: "Christmas gift! Christmas gift—everybody!" Renowned generals have not been more eager to surprise a foe nor to capture a stronghold. This parsonage has been peculiary fortunate this Christmas. The children are gathered in from their schools; kindly eyes of parishioners have looked in upon us; liberal hands have brought bundles and baskets—heavier gifts have been rolled in on wheels—till both pantry and wardrobe rejoice in their opulence. You may say what you please about these donations, but I confess I rather like them. Among other things that came in during the holidays were two new books: Andrew Jackson Potter, and California Sketches; each of which has contributed its share to the general pleasure. By the way, Bro. Potter's given name reminds me that Gen. Jackson's celebrated duel with Dickerson was fought within two miles of this place, on the banks of our Red river. I was over the ground but the other day. That duel came near being fatal to both men. What a pity that so many of our illustrious men have responded to calls under the so-called code of honor, thereby sullying their reputation and staining their very souls with blood! Old Uncle Joe Townsend, a colored centenarian, told me that his father got a bottle of whisky out of a hollow tree on the duelling ground some time after the event. Whisky and death! they travel together. But to return to my books. Potter is a remarkable man, bold, earnest, heroic. He has had hair-breadth escapes, some hard fighting, hard work, various experiences and has done a vast amount of good. He is just the man for frontier work, and he knows it—glories in it! His life has been really eventful and when completed, in competent hands, will make a first-class biography. Of California Sketches I will say this: "It is a thing of beauty," which you know, the poet says "is a joy forever!" Dr. Fitzgerald excels as a sketch writer. Why, sir, he is a poet born! His sentences are rythmical and often sparkle with the dew of poesy, even in his prose pieces. For purity of style, grace, beauty and life likeness of representation read California Sketches.

This has been a very favorable season for protracted meetings, and the results have been such as to inspire earnest gratitude to God. Our Sunday schools are doing finely—a number of them in the country refusing to go into winter quarters. Our local Bible Societies are holding their anniversaries; and from the efforts made to get speakers and to give prominence to these occasions, we believe that additional interest will be given to this great work.

We are having our first snow of the season. The thick-headed editors of country newspapers have greatly discouraged our young poets from trying their 'prentice hands on parodies of the Beautiful Snow by indiscriminate assaults with ridicule—a potent, but unfair weapon of attack. Looking over some papers the other day, I found some verses—let the critics sharpen their pencils—and this is the way they ran:

"Welcome the snow! the beautiful snow!
See how it flashes! see how it plays!
Over the house-tops, down through the ways,
All through the corn shocks, down the long rows,
All through the forest trees, under the rose;
Wildly careering wherever it blows,
Gleeful as childhood wherever it goes—
Welcome the beautiful snow!

"Welcome the snow! the beautiful snow!
Piled on the mountains, spread on the vales,
Robing the cattle grim, lofting the sails,
Flinging the trees with its lines of white
And delicate frost-work through the night,
Warmly clothing the tender green wheat,
And dropping a veil on the filth of the street—
Welcome the beautiful snow!"

A few years ago, a poetess of Louisville, Ky., Mrs. Maria R. Butler, wrote one of the prettiest Christmas poems I have read. It was entitled "Immanuel." I read it every Christmas. Take a few verses as a specimen of her genius:

His was the power sublime
That filled eternity and boundless space
Before creation of the earth or time
Beheld his radiant face.

His is the wondrous power
That breathed the soul-light into forms of clay,
To shine forever from that glorious hour
Lamps of immortal ray!

His loving, watchful eye
Looked down in pity while the angels wept,
When man—God's image—caught by Sin to die
In earth's dark bosom slept.

His was the soul of love
That stooped in pity from his shining throne,
Left the bright angels and the bliss above
To suffer here alone.

To suffer and to die
Meekly descending to the shrouded tomb,
Where generations of the years gone by
Sleep in mysterious gloom.

His was the mighty hand
That swept the shadows from the grave away,
And lit the portals of the spirit land
With hope's undying ray.

And many a tear-dimmed eye
Grows bright and brighter with each graveyard view,
Till at the door they lay them lowly by
And pass with angels through.

If I have offended against the generation of prose writers, I beg pardon; plead a dearth of local news, and promise not to offend in this way anymore.

VENOSTA.

Dec. 24, 1881.

Wood Notes.

FROM INVALID.

It is Saturday night—Christmas eve—and I am alone in my humble "bethel." It is so quiet within that the strokes of the tiny "watch-hammer" is heard distinctly across the room, while the cricket sings its cheery Christmas song to this accompaniment. "The fire burns low on the hearth" while I am musing—thinking of the past, "the loved and lost," the friends still true, the present with its lights and shadows. It is "passing strange," yet a reality, that at this blessed season, every year for many, while the world is jubilant, and joy as well as peace are expected guests in thousands of hearts and homes, that a shadow always falls across the threshold of our hearts and homes. Let the sun shine ever so brightly, let hope—like Bethlehem's radiant star—be beaming over all, a cloud will rise and dim its glory, the song of joy is brought low, or hushed, amid the hosts of the unseen heralds singing, "Glory to God in the highest."

So often it has been the shadow of Death that entered our home driving out the angels Joy and Peace. It is thus to night in the homes of some dear friends, and I am grateful to God it is not the chilling hand of Death that is laid upon the brows of my loved ones, yet there is sorrow and sickness within the walls of our "Woodland Home." We ask no earthly joy—no gaudy Christmas gift could bring the cheer that our hearts are craving. "The peace that passeth knowledge"—the gracious words of healing to both soul and body from him who can be "touched with a feeling of our infirmities"—this is all we ask.

The moments are passing, the cheerful song of the cricket in its cozy corner has a soothing charm for me—not alone because the story of Dickens is associated with it in my memory with other bright and beautiful things; but because of its gentle reminding that its Creator is mine also, and he is ready and willing to listen to my song of praise and thanksgiving.

"List! I hear a song." Voices—though not gay and glad—sing sweetly a Christmas carol:

"Once o'er Judea's hills by night, was heard a joyful sound;
A host appeared of angels bright, and glory shone around.
'Fear not,' they sing, 'to you we bring'
Glad tidings, peace on earth,
Good will to men,' they carried then,
And sang the Saviour's birth."

Oh, how that sweet story set to music—sung by men and angels—thrills my soul! Like Moses' rod it smites my heart, and tears, like waters, gush from their hidden fountain. O, come thou Saviour and Redeemer of mankind, thou Friend to the friendless, and be my Comforter in this my hour of pain and sorrow! O, thou great and good Physician, come and heal my stricken loved ones. Take me—a willing sacrifice—in their stead. Lay all their burdens of sorrow and affliction upon me, and let me bear the cross; yes, let me die if needful, but give them life, joy and peace. Oh! I feel that this little prayer of faith has gone back with those white-winged heralds, and I know that the Christ-child, that came on "that first glad Christmas morn," can come into our hearts to night! His star still shines for those who watch and wait, and I feel that he will abide with us to-night. "My faith looks up" to him, and while I prepare my heart—"a guest-chamber"—my "heavenly guest" approaches.

"Sweetly the tones are falling,
'Open the door for me—
If thou will heed my calling,
I will abide with thee.'

"Oh! my heart, I hasten
Thee will I open wide.
Thou he rebuke and chasten;
He shall with me abide."

While he abides with me, I can bear this burden of pain and sorrow—"these light afflictions that bind my heart and brow." While walking through the flames I am not consumed; I am not alone; but "one like unto the Son of God" is walking with me. I have no fear, no doubts, no anxious care, no will but his; and "all things are mine since I am his." So welcome pain, suffering, and even death—"thy will be done."

Dr. Lipscomb Writing.

Dr. A. A. Lipscomb, writing in the Southern Christian Advocate, on "How a sick man has spent this year," says:

"Just here is the place to say that the invalid has kept up his habit of writing whenever able, and, moreover, he has done much of this work in bed. Between the paroxysms of pain he says that his mind is clearest, and that he specially enjoys the rhythmic action of language. How this is, I do not know, but he insists that pain, such he has to endure, intensifies the intellect, and most of all, its expressional faculty. There is another reason which he gives for writing, and that is, that a sick man should do his utmost to keep up nature's habits. To show his tenacity on this subject I quote his own words: 'A man's good habits are his safeguard sick or well, and he must do his best to hold fast to them. In sickness these habits are interrupted. Let him watch every chance to resume them as far as possible.' Philosophy in this, it strikes me. "Yes," he continued, "a man must fight off disease and death as long as he can by means of his good habits, these being the forces in him that disease and death first overpower." So devoted is he to this matter, that he has his meals brought regularly to him whether he can eat or not. The sight of food, he argues, does him good by putting his imagination to work, and thereby exciting the glandular system. So of other habits; he assumes the formula, if no more. This is his reason for writing while an invalid; it retains the hold on the past in him, and he urges that this is an excellent thing for a sick man to do. Periodicity is one of his hobbies, if I may venture to call it such. A man must organize himself into the solar system—these are his very words—or take the risks of Sisera. To illustrate this I state that whenever it is practicable, he rises very early and reads and writes before daylight. The morning lamp, not the midnight lamp, shines the brightest for the nerves and brains. Not seldom he has to go back to bed, but he says: "No matter, I've kept up the solar system!"

This year (1881) he has written two reams of paper, using one side of the page. And he takes great pains with his manuscripts. Editors and printers say kind words about him on this particular. One of his sayings is, that editors and printers are entitled to good manners on the part of their correspondents, adding a personal touch to the effect that he is so tortured by the inventions of illegible writing in the letters of some friends as to be conscientious in not inflicting this misery on others. I like to look at his manuscript; it is a bold hand, muscular, with that sort of erect look which a man has whose spinal column is not ashamed of the head it supports. "Don't your right arm get very tired of writing so much?" "Not often," he replied, "for I take good care to groom it." "Groom it, how's that?" "Why, you see," he answered, "the animal must be treated like an animal, like a good animal, like a Christian animal, rubbed and oiled, and all that, so as to be preserved in fine condition." I noticed another habit of his—he seldom interlines, and very few words are changed. And I learned from him that he never puts down the first word of a sentence till he has formed the whole sentence in his mind. "Slow work?" "Not so," said he, "slow it was when I began it years ago, but let me tell you something: There's a secret in forming our habits. This is it—the slower a habit is acquired, the faster becomes its action afterwards."

The line of thought we were on led the invalid to say some things about the non-volitional forces of thought as exercised in writing, which interested me much. He remarked "that these were the main feeders of a process of thinking. Watch yourself when composing an essay. If association and suggestion stop, you stop. If they get off the track so will you, unless your will interpose. Without doubt, they are spontaneous activities, and yet the will may act indirectly on them by the habit of cultured attention, and as a matter of experience it does so act in every regulated intellect. Fix the attention on the leading or formative idea; keep it always in front; give it a luminous spot; never allow the light to abate; intensify the light as you go on with your composition; and this method of working will react in time on the associative and suggestive energies. It will enhance their quality. More than this, and far better than this, it will improve their quality. When reading the best authors, study with eager watchfulness how their associations and suggestions arise, by what laws or methods, and practice yourself in tracing an idea from its germ to its full development. All your reading will thus be applied mental philosophy, and this is precisely what you need. But that involves," said the invalid, "the education of the body, of the nerves, of the breathing, of the arterial circulation; and just here most students break down. The mind can not be cultivated without cultivating the body, and especially the nervous system. These nerves are very worrying things—rampant often, born rebels, opposed to the solar system—and St. Paul's doctrine of the body must be put in practice and then kept under. Every Christian knows that his worst enemies are the nerves, and that this is the case because Satan sneaks into them as he sneaked in the toad to the ear of Eve, according to the 'divine John,' Paradise Lost, fourth book. Whether students or saints, or both together, if we can manage the filibustering nerves, we can easily conquer the devil and ourselves."

From Meridian, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: Let me wish you and the publisher a happy new year! The pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Meridian, had a pleasant Christmas. The occasion was made pleasant, in part, by the kind remembrances of some of his flock at the Christmas time. These remembrances were expressed in turkies, hams, cake, fruit and many edibles. We begin this second year with hope for abundant success. A kind and thoughtful people make the pastor cheerful and willing to labor for them. Our city is constantly and rapidly growing in population and financial importance. There is not now a vacant house in the place, and twelve or fifteen persons wanting to get homes for their families in our midst. The first shovelfull of dirt in the construction of the new railroad from this place to New Orleans, was thrown on Monday last. The vice-president, Capt. Hardy, promises that the road will be completed in twelve months. When this road is completed, Meridian will be in seven hours' run of your own city. East Mississippi Female College is moving off bravely. President Atkisson and Prof. R. J. Jones, with a very ample and competent number of female teachers are at work. Let me say, Mr. Editor, to all who may read this, that if they desire a good school where everything essential to the mental, physical and spiritual welfare of the young ladies are attended to, let them patronize this college. I am sending three daughters to the school and ought to know, and think I do know, whereof I affirm. The city is growing, as we have already said, and the church and college will and must grow with it. I do not forget the ADVOCATE. I regard it as my pastor and as my assistant in every house where it enters. Indeed, what would we do without the ADVOCATE?

W. D. SORSWORTHY.

MERIDIAN, Miss., Jan. 4, 1882.

The Church Paper.

Good books are useful if they are read; but for every reader of books, there are ten readers of newspapers. It is the periodical literature that molds the thought and character of our age. The devil knows this and acts accordingly. He fills our homes with papers and magazines that misrepresent Christianity, sneer at orthodoxy, and insinuate that the piety of the church is sheer hypocrisy. How can our families be protected against this subtle influence? Manifestly, in one way only—by a Christian literature: where the enemy comes we must countermine. If the daily paper or the fashionable magazine brings poison into our homes, and we can not exclude them, we should at least provide antidote, and no antidote is so cheap or so effectual as a religious newspaper. It is the pastor's best assistant in his work. It is the parent's ablest auxiliary in training his children. Go into families where a good church paper has been taken and read, and you will find there intelligent views in regard to the great moral questions of the day. Infidelity does not recruit its ranks from such households. Visiting some years ago where there were grown-up children, and finding them unusually well-grounded in both theoretical and practical orthodoxy, we asked: "Why are you so different from the conceited boys and giddy girls around you?" "Oh," replied one of them, "we have been brought up on the Bible and the Catechism, and the Christian Herald." This was a much more healthful and nutritious pabulum than ultra novels and the daily newspaper. The Bible and the Catechism are indispensable; but they do not satisfy the natural desire to know what is going on in the world. We want the news. The church paper gives it from a Christian standpoint. It tells what the God of the Bible is now doing in the world.—Occident.

Animal Vaccination.

Thus, then, it becomes possible to affect sheep and cattle with a form of anthrax-disease so mild as to bear much the same relation to the severer forms that cow-pox bears to small-pox; and for this artificial affection with the mitigated disorder, Pasteur uses the term "vaccination." The question which now arises—to which the whole previous investigation has led up—is the most important of all: Does this "vaccination" with the mild virus afford the same protection against the action of the severe, that is imparted by cow-pox vaccination against small-pox? To this question affirmative answers were last year obtained by Prof. Greenfield (on Prof. Burdon-Sanderson's suggestion) in regard to bovine animals, and by M. Toussaint in regard to sheep and dogs; the former, when "vaccinated" from rodents, and the latter from fluids "cultivated" outside the living body after a method devised by M. Toussaint, proving themselves incapable of being infected with any form of anthrax-disease, though repeatedly inoculated with the malignant virus, and remaining free from all disorder, either constitutional or local. The same result having been obtained from experiments made by Pasteur himself, probably about the same date, with charbon virus, cultivated in the manner previously described, it was deemed expedient by one of the Provincial Agricultural Societies of France that this important discovery should be publicly demonstrated on a large scale. Accordingly, a farm and a flock of fifty sheep having been placed at M. Pasteur's disposal, he "vaccinated" twenty-five of the flock (distinguished by a perforation of their ears) with the mild virus on the third of May last, and repeated the operation on the seventeenth of the same month. The animals all passed through a slight indisposition, but at the end of the month none of them were found to have lost either fat, appetite, or liveliness. On the thirty-first of the month, all the fifty sheep, without distinction were inoculated with the strongest charbon-virus, and M. Pasteur predicted that on the following day the twenty-five sheep inoculated for the first time would all be dead, while those protected by previous "vaccination" would be perfectly free from even slight indisposition. A large assemblage of agricultural authorities, cavalry officers and veterinary surgeons having met at the field the next afternoon (June 1), the result was found to be exactly in accordance with M. Pasteur's predictions. At two o'clock, twenty-three of the "unprotected" sheep were dead; the twenty-fourth died within another hour, and the twenty-fifth an hour afterward. But the twenty-five "vaccinated" sheep were all in perfectly good condition; one of them, which had been designedly inoculated with an extra dose of the poison, having been slightly indisposed for a few hours, but having then recovered. The twenty-five carcasses were then buried in a selected spot, with a view to the further experimental testing of the poisonous effect produced upon the grass which will grow over their graves. "But the result," says the reporter of the Times, "is already certain; and the agricultural public now know that an infallible preventive exists against the charbon-poison, which is neither costly nor difficult, as a single man can inoculate a thousand sheep in a day." I have since learned that this protection is being eagerly sought by the French owners of flocks and herds; and, if any severe epidemic of the same kind were to break out in this country, our own agriculturists would probably show themselves quite ready to avail themselves of it.—Dr. William B Carpenter, in Popular Science Monthly.

—The Seventh-Day Baptist Missionary Society returns for its mission at Shanghai, China, one missionary and his wife and a missionary teacher, two native preachers, one Bible-woman, a Sabbath-school and two day schools, a church of about twenty members, and mission buildings valued at $14,800. The Board is considering the subject of extending its mission work in Holland beyond the bounds of the church at Haarlem.

Good Words.

The smallest bark on life's tumultuous ocean,
Will leave a track behind forevermore.
The lightest wave of influence set in motion,
Extends and widens to the eternal shore.
We should be wary, then, who go before
A myriad yet to be, and we should take
Our bearing carefully, where breakers roar,
And fearful tempests gather; one mistake
May wreck unnumbered barks that follow in our wake.

—Man is higher than his dwelling-place; he looks up and folds the wings of his soul; and when the sixty minutes, we call sixty years, have passed, he takes flight, kindling as he rises, and the ashes of his feathers fall back to earth, and the unveiled soul, freed from its covering of clay, and pure as a note of music, ascends on high. Even amidst the dim shadows of life, he sees the mountains of the future world gilded with the morning rays of a sun which rises not here below. So the inhabitants of polar regions look into the long night in which there is no sunrise; but at midnight he sees a bright light like the first rosy rays of dawn, gleaming on the highest mountain-tops, and he thinks of his long summer in which it never sets.—Jean Paul.

—An old citizen died the other day, in want, though he had large sums in the bank. His neglect to draw on his stores was attended with the same fatal consequences as real poverty. Many Christians live and die with a meagre experience because they fail to apply to the "bank of heaven" where untold spiritual wealth has been deposited by their Lord, subject to their order. To live poor when God has endowed us with true riches is a sign of ingratitude, carelessness and unfaith, rather than humility.

—One perfect diamond is more valuable than many defective ones. One truth well fixed in the mind and comprehended is better than many half-understood. A small opportunity fully realized is better than a great one misimproved. The wealth of affectionate sympathy and aid is better than gold, and fills the soul with most perfect peace. Faithfulness lays up treasure in the heavens which nothing can injure and no one remove.—J. M. Leighton.

—A Christian is always on the perch, or on the wing; he is always reposing in God, or in flight after him; and the latter is as good an evidence of religion as the former; for delight is not only a part of complacency and affection, but also fear, complaint, desire, fear of losing the object, complaint of our enjoying so little of it, desire to attain and feel more.—Henry.

—A word infused into the minds of men as the only force that can withstand the chilling easterly winds sweeping over from the universities of Holland and Germany, threatening by false logic, unfair criticism, blighting skepticism and satanic cunning to undermine our blessed Bible, from which comes all our knowledge of divine things, and on which does rest all our hopes.—Howard Crosby.

—There are a few Abrahams; not a large number of Isaacs; but a great many Jacobs, to whom it is most comforting to know that however poor stuff we are made of by nature, God can make use of us, if only we will yield ourselves to him, "vessels unto honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work."—John Monroe Gibson.

—Our hope is not hung on such an untwisted thread as "I imagine so," or "it is likely;" but the strong cable of our fastened anchor is the promise and oath of him who is eternal verity. Our salvation is fastened with God's own hand and Christ's own strength to the stronghold of God's unchanging nature and truthfulness.

—Under the laws of Providence, life is a probation; probation is a succession of temptations; temptations are emergencies; and for emergencies we need the preparation and the safeguard of prayer.—Austin Phelps.

—We can easily manage if we will only take each day the burden appointed for it. But the load will be too heavy for us if we add to its weight the burden of to-morrow before we are called to bear it.—John Newton.

—That may be right which is not pleasant, and that pleasant which is not right; but Christ's religion is both. There is not only peace in the end of religion, but peace in the way.—Henry.

—Get your doctrine from the Bible, get your example from Christ. A day will not pass after you have closed with Christ's promise, ere he will meet you with a counsel. Embrace both.

—Wealth and social position, unfortunately, go further to determine one's standing in most of our churches than real piety and active godliness.—Spurgeon.

—Men of great genius and large hearts sow the seeds of a new degree of progress in the world, but they bear fruit only after many years.—Mazzini.

—We behold all round about us one vast union in which no man can labor himself, without laboring at the same time for all others.—Longfellow.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 1882.

UNQUESTIONING.

BY MARY M. GUNNISON.

I question not this cross of pain
That wearily I bear,
I dare not think that aught is vain,
Where he hath borne a share.

I know not why the pastures green
Are barren wastes for me,
Or why he bids me trust unseen
The years that are to be.

His purposes I dimly guess,
His mercies are not plain:
I only trust his righteousness
And know that naught is vain.

I ask not why the chastening rod
On me so oft hath lain:
For I am Christ's, and he is God,
The Lamb of Calvary slain.

I question not, nor care to know,
I follow him, the "way."
He leads me on, I trusting go,
Nor dare my feet to stay.

And so through every passing day
I trusting watch for him.
Sometimes I miss the narrow way,
Sometimes his face grows dim,

But whether darkness clouds my path,
Or with glad eyes I see,
Through all the doubts that cloud my years,
A pleasant help is he.

And helping thus, my every doubt,
Before his face recedes,
My foes within, my foes without,
He leads me, oh, "he leads me."

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEESER.

First Quarter—Lesson III.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 15, 1882.—MARK 1:29-45.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I am the Lord that healeth thee."—Exodus xv, 26.

POWER TO HEAL.

OLD VERSION.	NEW VERSION.
29. And forthwith, when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John.	29. And straightway, when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John.
30. But Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever, and anon they tell him of her.	30. Now Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever, and straightway they tell him of her.
31. And he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up, and immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them.	31. And he came and took her by the hand, and raised her up; and the fever left her, and she ministered unto them.
32. And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them which were possessed with devils.	32. And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were sick, and them that were possessed with devils.
33. And all the city was gathered together at the door.	33. And all the city was gathered together at the door.
34. And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils; and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him.	34. And he healed many that were sick with divers diseases, and cast out many devils; and he suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him.
35. And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed.	35. And in the morning, a great while before day, he rose up and went out, and departed into a desert place, and there prayed.
36. And Simon and they that were with him followed after him.	36. And Simon and they that were with him followed after him;
37. And when they had found him, they said unto him, All men seek for thee.	37. And they found him, and say unto him, All are seeking for thee.
38. And he said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth.	38. And he saith unto them, Let us go elsewhere into the next towns, that I may preach there also; for to this end came I forth.
39. And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.	39. And he went into their synagogues throughout all Galilee, preaching and casting out devils.
40. And there came a leper to him, beseeching him, and kneeling down to him, and saying unto him, If thou will, thou canst make me clean.	40. And there cometh to him a leper, beseeching him, and kneeling down to him, and saying unto him, If thou will, thou canst make me clean.
41. And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean.	41. And being moved with compassion, he stretched forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou made clean.
42. And as soon as he had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.	42. And straightway the leprosy departed from him, and he was made clean.
43. And he straitly charged him, and forthwith sent him away;	43. And he sternly charged him, and straightway sent him out,
44. And saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.	44. And saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing the things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.
45. But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and they came to him from every quarter.	45. But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to spread abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into a city, but was without in desert places: and they came to him from every quarter.

The Sabbath service in the synagogue, which had been interrupted by the outcry of the demoniac while Jesus was preaching, would seem to have been enough work for one Sabbath, and so it would for any mere man, but this mighty worker was without pauses in his works; he was wonderful for the lavish use of his power. After this wonderful cure in the synagogue he goes with his four disciples to the humble home of Andrew and Simon. It seems they had moved to Capernaum, and had left their old home at Bethsaida, where they lived when they first heard of the Messiah. Here he finds Peter's wife's mother sick with a fever. Luke, who was himself a physician, calls it a great fever. The doctors in that age did not have fevers classified as scientifically as our present Board of Health; they had only two sorts, great and little; the great were, no doubt, malarial types, lasting long and prostrating the whole system; the little fevers were the third day chills, which one can stretch and shake through, and live to eat more than a well man's allowance. But this was a malignant type of fever. Mark says she lay sick. She was prostrate; in the very worst condition to be situated for entertaining anybody, save Jesus. He brings his entertainment with him. Jesus never appears more beautiful or speaks more graciously than in the darkened chamber of sickness, where the sufferer is shut out from the world, and shut in to reflection and meditation. I have visited sick-rooms where the presence of the Saviour was as real as my own. The next best thing to talking to the Saviour is to be in the company of a person who sees and talks with him. The family are not long in letting the Saviour know of her condition, "anon they tell him of her." Notice the gospel injunction in these words that follow, and he came and took her by the hand and lifted her up, and immediately the fever, rebuked by the Lord of Life (Luke,) left her; there was no period of slow convalescence, and she ministered unto them. Wonderful cure, which at once healed the disease and imparted strength to the patient. So with all his cures. Every one he heals receives a measure of strength for the immediate service of their Lord, and, if it is not rendered, it is because of a shameful ingratitude, and not for want of strength. Let those who have just been lifted by the Saviour out of the low fever of sin begin at once to serve the Master. None can work with better success in the service of Christ than the young convert, fresh from the touch of the Divine hand. His heaven-sent faith, burning with its original flame from heaven's altar, shines in his eyes as he faces his old comrades in sin, and invites them to Jesus. To be waited on by this woman's hands was like being waited on by Jesus himself, for he gave her the strength to rise and minister unto them. It is this serving with the Saviour's strength which accounts in part for the success of the early ministry of preachers. The young preacher, on his first work, often sees more souls converted than in after years, in spite of his riper experience and better ability to preach the gospel. It is Christ in him, as an experience, working.

The rest of the Sabbath evening was spent in healing all that were diseased—dis-eased—the absence of ease. There are divers ways of losing ease and peace. Christ could ease all that came to him; he gave an invitation that cured every case of disease: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

He cast out many devils, and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him. More knowledge is not the only qualification for a witness; he must know of what or whom he speaks, but he must also have a good moral character.

Christ will not accept the witness of evil. It might have been a stumbling block to some had he allowed his holiness to be proclaimed by devils, and, besides, some would have declared such witness to be lying witnesses. Remember, then, when you single out some poor inconsistent church member as an exponent of the church you receive testimony from a witness which the Lord has challenged and rejects, and whom the church itself trusts not, but only bears with. It is not fair to judge of a nation's currency by the counterfeits that may be extant in the country. Test some of the good coin. We are not surprised to hear that after this day of work, in which Christ was giving all and receiving nothing, to find him up early refreshing his soul in prayer. His whole life was divided between labor and prayer. Blessed are they who, like him, can rescue from sleep precious hours for that silent and undisturbed communion with God which the busy day denies. In this prayer he was interrupted. The disciples tell him that all men seek for him; that is, all the men of that place; but Christ's time was precious; he hurries to other towns, to preach the gospel in other cities.

The church Christ came to set up was not national, but catholic. He slights no place, no matter how poor and illiterate its inhabitants. Mark abruptly cites another instance of his power to heal. A significant cure of a leper. Leprosy, though a most foul and loathsome complaint, was not contagious; that is, it did not spread by touch as is sometimes supposed, so that the law which obliged lepers to remain apart from others was not to prevent the spread of the disease, but had, like other ceremonial laws, a much deeper meaning; it was to teach a spiritual truth; to picture and represent the foulness and defilement of sin; it was the type of sin. What leprosy was to the body sin was to the soul; and, as the anti-type always exceeds and transcends the type, so we may expect to find in sin that most dreadful malady of soul, something more awful in its effects upon the soul than the effects of leprosy upon the body. This miracle of healing was an acted parable, teaching us the power of Christ to heal the soul, and the conditions upon which the services of this Physician can be had.

The strength of this man's appeal lay at first in the profound sense of his own need. He was suffering under an incurable disease, which eventually would cause his death. It ostracised him from the company of men, and shut him up to the company of lepers. He desired to be healed, and felt his need. This felt need of a Saviour is a long step toward life. All men nearly will admit they are sinners, but few, very few, feel that they are. Another count in his favor was that he had come to the one sole man who could heal him. Men waste much time and spend much money on doctors that can not heal. He had some belief. He was persuaded that Jesus could make him clean, but, as to his willingness, he was in doubt; his unbelief in his willingness about neutralized his belief in his power; but just here Christ strengthened his poor belief, and helped his unbelief by saying: I will; be thou clean. The Lord was moved with compassion toward him, and he touched him. That touch saved him. It turned his half belief into faith, and faith put him in immediate connection with the Fountain of Life, and of course cleansing followed immediately. The unbelief of to-day is of worse form than this leper's, for men doubt not merely the willingness of the Lord to save, but also his power to forgive. The Lord sent him away, charging him to tell no man, but go to the priest and offer the gift; that is, bring the peace offering Moses commanded in such cases, which part, no doubt, he obeyed, in order that he might be restored again to the fellowship of man, but the command to tell no man he did not obey. We can not blame the man, but it is always best to obey the Saviour, as the sequel proved. His telling gathered such curious crowds about the Saviour that he was forced to leave the place. Mere curiosity is a hindrance to the work of Christ, and so some loud but sincere professors of our Lord's power to heal have the effect of driving the presence of Christ away. We have known all the religion driven out of communities by one or two of these irrepressible witnesses. Prayer doctors who insist on the power of Christ to heal the body and reject the entire materia medica, except a little oil for anointing. Such obtrusive witnesses have in every case succeeded in driving the Saviour clear out of the country, and leave the field open for the devil to reinstate himself in his original strength.

The Right Way.

Yes, there is always a right and wrong way to everything. But, alas! most of us choose the wrong, and keep it until reason, like a tender mother, draws us back to the starting point; or, having so enervated our will power by the habitual practice of sin, we move on until chaotic ruin stretches forth her gloomy arms, and pulls us down to her couch of blackness. Then we fully understand the meaning of the language—too late! Yes, and it would be well if the larger world would take a lesson from the individual or smaller world. For the individual mind is but a microscopic view of that united mass which we call world. And, having this object in view, we call the attention of our readers to the following remarks made by a leading citizen, of a certain parish in this State, to the writer as he was on his way to help a brother minister in a protracted meeting: "Mr. Galvin, the preachers are having a big time of it at ——, but I don't think their work will count for much." Why? "O, well, the fact is they haven't touched the leading people at all; none but the poor of the poor have united with the church so far." Now, this individual's language contains the verdict of the secular world at large. It falls out with Christianity, because her book of heraldry contains the coats of fishermen and the crooks of shepherds.

In blue blooded countries society demands a religion based upon "lions Rampant," and in those places where money is at a high par religion, to be popular, must possess a roll-call of merchant princes and bankers, otherwise it must be placed on the list of failures. Ah! foolish world! well might the apostle say: "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." Why? This modus operandi of Christianity contains the truth of Christ's prophecy, and shows us a divine Legislator at the head of the moral kingdom. Jesus, while on earth, declared that the poor should have the gospel preached unto them, and by way of example, as well as in proof of his Messiahship, preached the great truths of his Father's kingdom under the spangled sky, having for his carpet the grass of the fields, and the pebbly sands of the sea for his altar; and the church in every age since best proves her Master's presence when she is found walking in his footsteps. As a Methodist, I glory in the fact that I am a member of the "poor man's church," for our divine Pillar of Light, Jesus, traveled the same way, and if I am on the same road that he passed over heaven is at the other end.

His track I see, and I'll pursue
The narrow way, till him I view.

Yes, my friend, the majority of our people are very poor, but the church can not turn away from them. They are the heirlooms of her Father's household. When they leave her her charter goes with them; so, after all, we see that Christ's church can not be the world's church. We are not in the world, therefore the world loves us not. But we said that Christianity's modus operandi reflected the wisdom of a divine Legislator. In all ages man has been striving after the perfect. Humanity, having awoke up to a consciousness of its defects, has been fingering the beads of centuries in hopes that after making its nolenda its soul would be lifted up out of the purgatory of imperfection. But, alas! ere its lips could frame the first gloria, the beads had fallen on the granite floor of reality, and a new pair had to be made. Made for what? To be broken! The teachers and rulers of the past tried to spread the light of purity over all hearts, yet they could never say it is finished. Why? They began at the wrong place. As no man can build a house without a foundation, so no legislator can ever make a pure and good nation until he educates the lower ranks into a respect for his laws. Law left loose among a loose people "is dead." This embraces the two-fold nature of man—internal and external. Jesus, being the divine logos, saw that the hopes of a pure world must be based upon the lower strata of humanity, therefore he begins his work by preaching among the poor. And it was the right way; for if we desire the masses to enter into the enjoyment of and behold the glories of a pure life we must first emancipate their minds and hearts from the thralldom of the gross and impure. Then, as their minds expand more and more under the pure rays of the pure light, they will draw closer to our uplifted hearts, and, when the hearts of the nations beat in congenial rythm, then shall we see one common altar, and hear all the sons of men say: Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! Not till then. But why say more on this subject? The pages of the past and present corroborate our statement, and prove the wisdom of our divine Legislator. Whenever Christianity enters into the soul the external man puts on a new livery. Ah! how I do wish that some of our modern new lights would take the trouble of making one or two rounds with a piney woods circuit rider. Why, I have seen log cabins converted. Do you say how? By the preaching of the gospel. The wife went to church, heard the good word, and, like Mary, put it in her heart for safe keeping. But, as no part of the body can receive a galvanic shock without the other members feeling the intrusion, neither could this woman retain the good word without the hands showing its presence. Therefore the house assumed a new look. The once bare walls had their sad monotony broken by a few cheap pictures framed with pine bars. The plain table for the first time received a clean cover; in fact, the barren desert of a home covered itself with the thirty-fifth chapter of Isaiah. For as the months passed by the fruit of progress was plainly seen, until at last Sister F.'s house became the beacon light to which the circuit rider and his horse would often turn. Charles Dickens, in his sketches on gin shops, says: "If temperance societies could establish dispensaries for the distribution of bottles of Lilliputian water gin palaces would be numbered among the things that were." Now, may we not say that in one sense Christianity does that very thing? She draws the poverty of the "present" beneath the big waves of the Christians yet-to-be. She whispers to the bruised and bleeding soul of a life upon which rests no crown of sorrows, and of a home that is eternal, and this two-fold nature nerves the sinking heart, and enables it to write a life history well pleasing to God. If you doubt the truth of this picture please turn over the pages of our own Southern church. There stands a Bascombe, a Munsey and a Marvin. Where did they come from? From the depths; now they rest upon the heights. Yes, like the apostles, they came from the lowest seats of society, and passed on to the upper places of the church militant; and, if this was their reward here, what must it be in heaven? Here I must stop. The vision at this point becomes too bright for my flesh-veiled eyes. Then let us be of good cheer. We are in the way our fathers trod.

They are happy now, and we
Soon their happiness shall see.

P. GALVIN.

BAKERSFIELD, La., Nov. 4, 1881.

Winona District, North Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I have just returned from the quarterly meeting at Durant. The presiding elder is T. Y. Ramsey, and the pastor is S. M. Thames. You will at once recognize these brethren as having been members of the Alabama Conference. Bro. Ramsey has not lost his life and vigor as a preacher. Bro. Thames looks healthy and strong, well able to do the work before him; but is in a state of great anxiety in behalf of an afflicted wife. May the Lord restore her health.

In looking over the Winona district, I see we have six of the Alabama preachers, and, the seventh, a son of one of my old votegans of the cross, William Murrah. This takes me back to days of the past, when we met on Alabama soil with so many of our dear friends and brethren. I will never forget the fourteen years of my life, spent in labor and rejoicing, with those brethren. Many of them have passed over to the better world; but in casting my eye over the appointments of the Alabama and North Alabama Conferences, I see many names in active work who were my schoolmates, or classmates, in the Conference. I also see many names who were my presiding elders, or associates with me in revival meetings. May the good Lord bless the brethren! I love them all, and would be glad to shake hands with them once more.

I transferred to this Conference, seven years ago, believing it to be a better field of labor for one of my age. I have become acquainted and identified with the brethren and country. I have had my crosses and losses, common to an humble transfer; but after all, I believe it was for the best. This year, myself and family have suffered greatly from sickness; for months we have not known what it was to have an uninterrupted night's rest. About the first of October I was attacked with hematiuria, or hemarragic fever, and have not been able to preach since. I am now recovering, and hope to be in the field in a few weeks. My pastoral charge, Richland circuit, deserves much credit for their energy in closing up my work so well, while I could not leave my room. Greater kindness I have never seen. Not a want but they appeared to anticipate. We have no great poundings, but a pounding from first to last. Above all, the Lord has been good. Not one of us have died. Oh! what sweet communion, what feasts of heavenly grace and views of glory world, when I was so near the grave. Religion is worth living, if there is no reward except in an hour of such severe sickness. My soul still grows happy when I think of what I have passed through. Religion, how sweet! heaven, how glorious!

I am sorry to see Alabama turning her attention to another paper than yours. I can not think they will do better until it is proven. Your paper stands at the head of the list. God bless you in your labor!

J. F. EVANS.

GOODMAN, MISS., Dec. 20, 1881.

Father Williamson.

On Sunday, December 18, I preached in the town of Greenwood, on the Yazoo, and the following morning rode out a few miles to visit that venerable father in Israel, the Rev. Humphrey Williamson. He is now, and has been for some years, a superannuated member of the North Mississippi Conference. Doubtless, his many friends in Mississippi and Alabama will be glad to hear that, considering his extreme old age, he is in the enjoyment of good health. Father Williamson commenced his itinerant career over fifty years ago. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Andrews at Greensboro, and elder by Bishop Morris in Mobile. After a half century of unremitting and successful warfare, he now rests upon his worn and beaten armor, awaiting the call to the King in his beauty.

The relation of incidents in connection with his early ministry was full of interest. During the Conference held in Mobile, one of the preachers died. Bishop Morris was requested to preach a sermon on the day of interment. The word preached was "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." The hearts of the brethren were strangely warmed, and the service closed with shouts of praise. Bro. Williamson continued, "Those Mobile people must have thought we were strange beings to shout over a dead man."

Father Williamson stands very near the cold and silent river. Already he seems to hear the washing of the waves, his natural strength is abating; his eye grows dim, and the snows of age gather on his brow; yet, while the outward man perishes, the inward man is renewed day by day. Through the darkness he sees the harbor-lights of the eternal city, and he confidently expects "To gain the coast of bliss securely."

JOS. S. OAKLEY.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

Expense of Preaching.

MR. EDITOR: The beginning of a new year will soon call together the stewards of stations, circuits and missions to make provision for the support of their preachers for the coming year. I believe, as a rule, our stewards are willing to do what is right by their pastors, but they are often at a loss to know what is right. In making their calculations for the expenses of the preacher and family the question is too often asked: "What will your church give?" Instead of this, the stewards ought to say: "Our preacher needs just so much if we expect he and his family to live comfortably." Then divide this amount equitably among the churches, and, if they fail to get the amount assessed, when they have done their duty, this is all that can be expected. I append to this a statement of actual expenses. The prices of some of the items named below may seem high, and so they are. But remember that the majority of preachers buy nearly all they use by what is known as the "paper bag system," and hence costs them much more than if they were able to buy in larger quantities. See account, to-wit:

PREACHER'S ACCOUNT FOR 1881.

25 cords of wood, at $2 25	$55 25
600 pounds meat, average 16 cts	96 00
150 pounds lard, average 17 cts	25 50
275 pounds rice, average 9 cts	24 75
200 pounds sugar, average 12 cts	24 00
40 pounds coffee, average 18 cts	7 20
52 packages meal, average 40 cts	20 80
25 packages grits, average 40 cts	10 00
4 barrels flour, at $10	40 00
50 bushels corn, average 81 35	34 50
36 bushels oats, average 75 cts	22 50
Laundry bill per month, $6	72 00
Cook, for three months	9 00
Tuition for four children	50 00
Repairs on buggy, and horse-shoeing	10 00
Medicine for family	25 00
Clothes for self, hats, shoes, etc	62 00
Clothing bill for wife and six children	150 00
Stationery bill	15 00
Traveling expenses to Conference	12 00
Total	$747 50
Receipts	$660 00
Paid by self for the support of the gospel	$87 50

which is $47 50 more than any other man on my circuit has paid for the support of the gospel the past year.

PREACHER.

Save Your Paper.

Save your paper for those who are not able to take it, for often you can thereby make the widow and orphan happy by loaning it to them. I am in favor of all paying for it that can, but often there are persons who are not able to do it; then I would say loan yours. I will just tell of one circumstance in which there was much pleasure derived by saving papers. I received a nice present from an old brother minister's widow, wraped in a piece of the ADVOCATE, which was very much defaced and soiled, yet I washed it and dried it, and drew much consolation from it; it had a communication from a man on his ninety-third birthday. The paper contained food both for body and mind. I do not say send them with food for the body, but as a feast for the mind.

Yours,

A WIDOW.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

GOING TO CHURCH.

BY D. H. HARRIS.

Some go to church just for a walk,
Some go there to laugh and talk,
Some go there for observation,
Some go there for speculation;
Some go there their time to spend,
Some go there to meet a friend,
Some go there to doze and nod,
But few go there to worship God.

Marriages.

REDDITT—ISBELL.—December 29, 1881, at the Methodist Church, Floyd, La., by Rev. R. S. Isbell, Mr. Robert R. Reddit, of Columbia, La., to Miss Nina H. Isbell, daughter of Rev. R. S. Isbell, of the Louisiana Conference.

HESTER—HOLCOMB.—December 21, 1881, at the residence of the bride's father, by Elder J. Jasper Geen, Mr. L. P. Hester to Miss Dora T. Holcomb, all of Franklin county, Miss.

CAMNACK—HAYS.—December 22, 1881, at the residence of the bride's step-father, Rev. W. W. Simmons, by Rev. T. C. Bradford, Rev. W. W. Camnack, of the Mississippi Conference, and Miss Mollie J. Hays.

JEFFRESS—McDONALD.—December 22, 1881, at the residence of the bride's mother, at Rochester, La., by Rev. Philip Allen, Mr. Wm. D. Jeffress and Miss A. E. McDonald, all of Jackson parish, La.

MILLER—PALMER.—December 22, 1881, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Mary Palmer, by Rev. C. T. Munholland, Mr. J. W. Miller to Miss Della Palmer, all of Webster parish, La.

NORRIS—LUKENZIE.—November 27, 1881, by Rev. W. H. Jennings, Mr. Charles Norris to Miss Lukenzie Scott.

PURVIS—MOORE.—December 29, 1881, by Rev W. H. Jennings, Mr. S. J. Purvis to Miss Mollie Moore; all of Powelton circuit.

HOOPER—HAY.—December 28, 1881, at the residence of the bride's father, in Neshoba, county, Miss., by Rev. J. W. Ellison, Mr. W. R. Hooper and Miss Mary Ray.

RENCHER—RENCHER.—December 28, 1881, at the residence of the bride's father, Dr. C. R. Rencher, in Enterprise, Miss., by Rev. Joshua T. Heard, Mr. Abram Rencher, of Uniontown, Ala., to Miss Sue E. Rencher.

TAYLOR—LA RAVIA.—December 31, 1881, at the residence of Dr. J. E. Wright, Columbia, La., by Rev. C. R. Godfrey, Mr. M. Taylor to Miss Viate La Ravia.

Obituaries.

KERNAN.—MRS. SARAH C. WALL, wife of Judge W. F. Kernan, departed this life in Clinton, La. Saturday, December 17, 1881.

Prepared by months of suffering, which she bore with Christian fortitude, she carefully arranged many little things which pertained to her household, and awaited the call with full confidence in the realization of the divine promise of life, hereafter becoming cognizant of approaching dissolution—the night before the end—she tenderly caressed each of her loved ones, and during the succeeding day calmly and gradually breathed her life away—her life and her last day on earth ending together. Always a true Christian, her faith taught her how to die.

Mrs. Kernan was born near Jackson, La., February 28, 1835, and baptized in the Methodist church of that town by the Rev. Thomas Clinton. In childhood she was conscientious and religiously inclined, but did not assume the vows of the church until after her marriage, subsequent to which event she fully and deliberately acknowledged her belief in the doctrines of the church of her ancestors, and thereafter maintained, unshaken, the faith in which she had been baptized—being throughout her life a "bright examplar" of the grand effects of true Christianity. In the Sunday school she was ever at her post, and church and school knew no more faithful worker in their interest.

She was united to Mr. Kernan in Clinton, La., at which ceremony her maternal grand-father, Rev. Dr. Whann, officiated. As wife and mother she was self-sacrificing, and her fireside was a "charmed circle" within which her dear ones loved to linger. They will miss that cheerful presence; but her influence will be ever with them, for her life was like the vase in which roses have once been distilled—

You may break, you may ruin the vase if you will,
But the scent of the roses will hang around it still.

Her married life was one of peace and content, and her union was blessed with offspring whose lives were to her an enduring source of joy and gratification. Her stricken husband reminds to lament the lord has not permitted the companion of his young manhood to dwell longer with him; not to lament, but to regret; for the ways of Providence are inscrutible, and we must content ourselves as she did, with the invocation, "Thy will be done."

She has passed through the gates and has long since resolved all the doubts and uncertainties that perplex the "dwellers 'neath the stars"; while we remain to wonder and to wait; believing that

"——— hope will brighten days to come,
And memory gild the past."

G. P. D.

SMITH.—MRS. OPHELIA H. SMITH was born in Clark county, Alabama, near Coffeeville, September, 1842, and departed this life at her residence, near Destoville, Ala., December 19, 1881.

She was converted in early life, and joined the Baptist Church, at Flea-Nash, in Clarke county, Ala., under the pastorate of Rev. Wm. Campbell. She was a devoted Christian, always willing and ready to work for the Master. She loved the church of her choice, and delighted in its services, but she was catholic in her views of Christianity, and loved all God's people of whatever denomination. Her religion was unselfish. She was so kind and gentle in her disposition that all who knew her loved her, and the better she was known the more she was loved.

She was comparatively a stranger in our community, having been married to Capt. H. H. Smith, and having moved into this community not quite two years ago. Yet she had many warm friends, and all who knew her deeply mourn her loss, and truly sympathize with our dear brother in his deep affliction, and pray that God may give him supporting grace in this his hour of severe trial.

Capt. Pace, her aged father, arrived just in time to attend her funeral. In talking to him about Sister Smith, he said, with deep emotion, "I believe Ophelia is with her mother," who crossed the river some years ago.

The community at Coffeeville, where she was born and raised, and the church at Flea-Nash, where she gave her heart and life to God, will be deeply afflicted at the loss of our sister, but our loss is her eternal gain, for we believe that having borne the heat and burden of the day here, she has received the crown, and is now resting in that beautiful land, where sickness and death never come.

May our kind father in heaven bless the sorrowing ones left behind, and pour into their hearts the consolations of Christ, and thus sweeten this bitter cup by his own divine presence.

G. HAWKINS.

CASSABRA.—MRS. CYNTHIA CASSABRA was born April 7, 1859, in Jackson county, Miss., joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Salem Camp Ground, at the age of twelve years; was married to Mr. Oscar Cassabra, December 16, 1874, and died at Ferdland, Mobile county, Ala., December 2, 1881.

The death of Sister Cassabra, so sudden and so unexpected, threw a dark shadow over the entire community. Less than an hour before her death she was sitting in pleasant chat with her husband, but suddenly complained of feeling ill; a lady living near was summoned, but before other help could be obtained she had passed away—away from earth, home, friends, kindred, loved ones—away to the home of the good and pure, "the home of the soul," which in visions of faith she had so often seen.

Of a modest and retiring disposition, she was not demonstrative in her religious profession, yet sufficiently pronounced as to leave no room to doubt as to where she stood in all matters of Christian duty. Following the leadings of her heart's young affections, she had deliberately chosen her life work, and was content to perform that work as "unto God."

She leaves a husband and two lovely children—he, with widowed heart, to tread the path of life and bear its burdens alone, they, bereft of a mother's love, a mother's care. May he and they be kept by the mercy of God to a happy reunion in the "better land."

W. M. LOVELACY.

OLIVER.—SISTER SALETA A. MCCOY was born May 5, 1834, in the State of Georgia, and was married to J. N. Oliver in 1859. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1866, and died in Webster parish, La., June 29, 1881. Sister Oliver was left a widow with three children some six years ago. Her sickness was protracted, being several weeks confined to her bed with a slow grade of fever. She expressed herself reconciled to God, and perfectly resigned to his will. She leaves three children, a large family connection and many friends to mourn their loss. But the hope of the resurrection comes to light up the darkness of the tomb, and to cheer the bereaved heart.

JNO. A. MILLER.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 1882.

THE ROCK-TOMB OF BRADORE.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

"A drear and desolate shore!
Where no tree unfolds its leaves,
And never the spring wind weaves
Green grass for the lander's tread;
A land forsaken and dead,
Where the ghostly icebergs go
And come with the ebb and flow
Of the waters of Bradore!

A wanderer, from a land
By summer breezes fanned,
Looked around him, awed, subdued,
By the dreadful solitude,
Hearing alone the cry
Of sea-birds clanging by,
The crash and grind of the floe,
Wail of wind and wash of tide.
'O wretched land!' he cried,
'Land of all lands the worst,
God-forsaken and curst!
Thy gates of rock should show
The words the Tuscan seer
Read in the Realm of Woe:
Hope entereth not here!'

Lo! at his feet there stood
A block of smooth-hewn wood
Beside a rock-closed cave
By Nature fashioned for a grave,
Safe from the ravening bear,
And fierce fowl of the air,
Wherein to rest was laid
A twenty-summers' maid
Whose blood had found share
Of the lands of sky and snow,
Half French, half Eskimo.
In letters unefaced,
Upon the block was traced
The grief and hope of man,
And thus the legend ran:
'We loved her!
Words can not tell how well!
We loved her!
God loved her!
And called her home to peace and rest.
We love her.'

The stranger paused and read.
'O whiter land!' he said,
'Thy right to feel own;
God leaves thee not alone.
And if the fierce winds blow
Over thy wastes of rock and snow,
And at thy iron gates
The ghostly iceberg waits,
Thy homes and hearts are dear.
Thy sorrow o'er thy sacred dust
Is sanctified by hope and trust.
God's love and ours are here.
Still wheresoe'er it goes
Love makes us atmosphere,
The flowers of Paradise
Take root in the eternal ice
And bloom through Polar snows.'"

The Brahmo Somaj.

We have tried to keep our readers fully informed of the progress of the Theistic movement in India; but since Mr. Sen and his Calcutta friends have become separated from the body of the Somajes in India, and he has inaugurated what he calls "The New Dispensation," the development of ceremony and doctrine has gone on so rapidly that it has been difficult to keep pace with it in these columns. It is known to our readers that the great majority of the Somajes of India broke with Mr. Sen on the occasion of the marriage of his young daughter to the Maharajah of Cuch Behar. Not only was this marriage in violation of the rules on marriage reform, proposed by Mr. Sen himself and adopted by the Somaj, prohibiting marriage under a certain age, but heathen ceremonies were performed at the wedding. Each party has pursued its separate way since the division and the breach has become too wide probably ever to be bridged over.

In the supplement to The Sunday Mirror, of Calcutta, called The New Dispensation, Mr. Sen has given descriptions from time to time of the new ceremonies he has introduced in the worship of his Somaj. Among these ceremonies are those of the "Flag," the "Hom," the "Sacrament," and "Baptism." The "Hom Ceremony" is also called the "Ceremony of Overcoming Temptation." It was first performed in June last. An iron pan was provided, with a bundle of wood, a vessel of butter, and a spoon. The minister put the wood in the pan, put fire to it, and poured over it the butter, addressing solemnly the "Blazing Agni" as a "blazing witness unto the Lord," and whose glory was sung in the Rig Veda four thousand years ago. The closing part addressed "O Thou Resplendent God of fire," we copy:

"'O God of Agni, as Agnihotri and priest, I initiate the ceremony of the true Hom, under thy command, for the destruction of carnal propensities. Help us, God. Good God, help us. In thy holy fire we desire to burn to-day our sins and iniquities, our foul desires, and the lusts of the flesh. As the fire before us burns these pieces of fuel, so shall we burn our anger, avarice, lust and pride, and all our passions in the fire of thy holiness. We are not saved till the very root of sin and temptation is burnt up. The Son of God mean assistant bravely vanquished Satan and overcame temptation; and so the blessed Buddha indignantly drove away the tempter, Mara, and conquered flesh. Administer unto us, O Resplendent Spirit, fire-baptism, that we may vanish the tempter as those master souls did. Root out iniquity. Destroy the very seed of corruption, O Lord. Annihilate Satan and burn Death, that we may put on incorruption and everlasting life. These six pieces of fuel, tied together, which represent the six evil passions of the heart, do thou burn and destroy in the flame. And as these pieces of fuel burn and are reduced to ashes, may they typify the destruction of our carnal passions in the fire of thy holiness.'

"Thus saying, the minister cast the six pieces of fuel into the burning fire, the congregation exclaiming together: 'Victory to God! Victory to God! Victory to God! Peace! Peace! Peace!'"

This ceremony was followed the next Sunday by a "new baptismal ceremony." The minister, after an address to the "Great Varuna, Water of Life," read Matthew III, explained the secret of baptism, anointed himself with flower-oil, and immersed himself thrice in the name of the Christian Trinity, and once more in the name of the Vedantic Trinity, closing with an address to the "Lord of Rivers and Seas." The sacramental ceremony is thus described in the New Dispensation:

"Jesus! is the sacramental rite meant only for those nations that are in the habit of taking bread and wine? Are the Hindus excluded from partaking of the holy eucharist? Will thou cut us off because we are rice-eaters and toddy-drinkers? That can not be. Spirit of Jesus! that can not be. Both unto Europe and Asia thou hast said, 'Eat my flesh and drink my blood.' Therefore, thou Hindu shalt eat thy flesh in rice and drink thy blood in pure water, so that the Scripture might be fulfilled in this land.

"On Sunday, March 6, the ceremony of adapting the sacrament to Hindu life was performed with due solemnity, in accordance with the principle above set forth. The Hindu apostles of Christ gathered after prayer in the dinner-hall, and sat upon the floor, upon the bare ground. Upon a silver plate was rice, and in a small goblet was water, and there were flowers and leaves around both. The minister read the following verses from Luke xxii:

"'And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying: This is my body which is given for you. This do in remembrance of me.

"'Likewise also the cup after supper, saying: This cup is the new testament in my blood which is shed for you.'

"A prayer was then offered, asking the Lord to bless the sacramental rice and water:

"'Touch this rice and this water, O Holy Spirit, and turn their grossly material substance into sanctifying spiritual forces, that they may, upon entering our system, be assimilated to it as the flesh and blood of all the saints in Christ Jesus. Satisfy the hunger and thirst of our souls with the rich food and drink thou hast placed before us. Invigorate us with Christ-force and nourish us with saintly life.'

The Lord blessed the rice and he blessed the water.

"And these were then served in small quantities to those around, and men ate and drank reverently, and the women and children also ate and drank, and they blessed God, the God of prophets and saints."

The following is the address of Mr. Sen at the "Flag" ceremony:

"Behold the flag of the New Dispensation! The silk flag is crimson with the blood of martyrs. It is the flag of the Great King of Heaven and Earth, the One Supreme Lord. Victory flies around his holy banner. His almighty arm will crush all evil and annihilate sin and sensuality.

"Behold the spirits of all the prophets and saints of heaven assembled overhead, a holy confraternity, in whose union is the harmony of faith and hope and joy; and at the foot of the holy standard are the Scriptures of the Hindus, the Buddhists, the Christians and the Mohammedans; the sacred repositories of the wisdom of ages and the inspiration of saints, our light and our guide. Four scriptures are here united in blessed harmony under the shade of this flag. Here are knit together in international fellowship four great continents—Europe, Asia, Africa and America. Here you see the meeting-place of the East, the West, the North, and the South; of the young and old, of men and women; of the rich and poor, of the wise and the unlearned. Here is the harmony of the mind and the heart, the soul and the will, of knowledge and love, devotion and duty. Glory unto God in the highest! Honor to all prophets and saints in heaven and to all Scriptures on earth! Unto the New Dispensation victory, victory, victory!"

These ceremonies received a great deal of attention from the Somajes throughout India, and many protested against them, as conducted under the name of Brahmoism. One of these published protests declares that the New Dispensation is inimical to Brahmoism and seems to have arisen to swell the number of appalling superstitious creeds." It adds:

"If Keshub Babu and his disciples had only made a general acknowledgment that they were no longer Brahmos and had no sympathy with the Brahmo Somaj we should have said nothing upon this subject; but they are unblushingly preaching the religion of the New Dispensation in the name of the Brahmo Community and the Brahmo faith. This we can not endure. We can not bear such an unjust attack upon our dear Brahmo Somaj. Therefore, O Brahmos! let us gird on our armor for the defense of our beloved church and community. A very great responsibility lies upon us. Let us all, every Brahmo and every Brahmo Somaj, combine to let the world know that the New Dispensation is not the Brahmo religion; that it is quite opposed thereto; that we have not the least sympathy with this creed; and that, if any provincial Brahmo Somaj, in blind belief, has accepted or does accept this New Dispensation as Brahmoism, then the Brahmo Somaj will not have any sympathy with it." Some of the Theists of Western India, in a similar protest, says that Mr. Sen's religion will soon be as cumbrous as Hinduism and will lead to the destruction of pure Theism.

The Somajes who do not sympathize with "The New Dispensation" have organized what they call the Sadharan, or Universal Brahmo Somaj, which has its headquarters in Calcutta. Its general affairs are managed by a general committee. Its principles declare that no man or book shall ever be acknowledged as infallible; that the object of the Somaj is "to teach men and women to love God, to seek piety, to hate sin, to grow in devotion and spirituality, to promote purity among men and women, to uproot all social evils, and to encourage virtuous deeds;" that "anything that will directly or indirectly encourage idolatry, engender superstition, take away spiritual freedom, lower conscience, or corrupt morals shall never be countenanced;" and that, in order that the "spirituality of the doctrine" may be carefully maintained, it is determined that "flowers, spices, burnt-offerings, candles and other material accompaniments of worship shall never be used, and care shall be taken to avoid everything tending to reduce religion to mere parade and lifeless forms."

The whole number of Theistic Churches in India is 114. The exact number adhering to Mr. Sen is not given, but it is a very small minority.—New York Independent.

The Lord, with regard to the restoration of exiled Israel to their own land, said, "With supplications will I lead them" (Jer. 31: 9.) There is sweetness in the thought, that the Lord leads his people, and surprise in the thought, that he leads them with their own supplications. His guidance is already in their cries for guidance, for "he pours out the spirit of grace and of supplications", on them, (Zech. 12: 10) and through that spirit prompts the askings on their part which correspond to the purposed givings on his own. Both the prophets speak in the plural, intimating at once the united supplications of the body of believers and the persevering supplications of the individual believer, for the prayer which God answers is the prayer offered by his people with one heart and one soul, and none has a share in that answer but he who shows the fervency of his prayer by its frequency.—Christian Index.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—The history of Sierra Leone has been one of great interest and Christianity has had no more notable triumph in Africa than it has achieved in this colony. A hundred years ago Sierra Leone was a great slave depot. Slaves were the circulating medium, and it was at the peril of his life that a white man landed among the savages, who committed most horrid acts, destroying crews and plundering cargoes and doing Satan's work generally. The nucleus of the present colony was formed by a free settlement of Negroes, who seemed to have no home or vocation in England. Early in the present century the Church Society began to send out missionaries for the benefit of the colonist and the surrounding heathen. In 1808 Sierra Leone became a crown colony and was made a settlement for released slaves. The present population, therefore, is of a singularly mixed character, embracing natives of all parts of Africa. It is said that sixty languages are spoken in the streets of Freetown, but the various tribes have become so thoroughly fused that the general harmony is scarcely or never broken by tribal riots, which were frequent enough some years ago. The missionaries, chiefly representing the church and Wesleyan societies, had, as may be imagined, a wonderfully difficult field. The climate was of the most deadly character. The rainfall is no less than 150 inches a year, or more than a foot a month, and the dampness, combined with the intense heat and noxious exhalations, were terribly destructive of life. Of eighty-seven missionaries and catechists sent out by the Church Society in forty years, thirty-five died and the Wesleyans also suffered terribly, but a wonderful work has been wrought. According to the government census of April of last year, there are 18,860 members of the Church of England; 17,000 Methodists, exclusive of 2,717 in Lady Huntingdon's Connection; and 400 Baptists. There are but very few white men in the colony, which, with its dependences, has a total population of upward of 60,000, of whom 35,430 are classified as "Liberated Africans or their Descendants." These Christian communities are very largely self-supporting. The native Christians connected with the Church Society maintain an independent organization, which is doing some missionary work and receives only a few hundred dollars from the parent society. The commissioner of the census says: "It would be difficult to point to a town or country which contains so many churches, chapels, preaching places, or meeting-houses as Sierra Leone and Freetown in particular." In the colony and its dependencies the pagan population, including Timmanees, Mandingoes, Foulahs, Soosoos, Mendis, and Kroomen, numbers about 16,000. The travel from interior countries to Freetown is very large, and the trade quite extensive, so that good opportunities are furnished of reaching the heathen tribes surrounding the colony.

—The Rev. T. W. Whitfield, Wesleyan missionary in Whydah, Dahomey, is meeting with great difficulties in carrying on his work. Last January he wrote that the school he had established in the capital had been broken up. Late in August he sent another letter to his society in London, in which he says he has been trying ever since January to re-establish the school, but with no prospect of success. Every time he made an application, he was told he must wait for a message from the king. At last, the message from the king came. He offered his compliments to Mr. Winfield, and, naively inquired how he was "getting along in my country." He went on to say that he could not permit his people to learn to read in the white man's book, nor the children to learn about the white man's God; because, if they came to know the book, they would no longer worship the fetish, "and we can not do without the fetish in this country. The King of Dahomey is not like any other king in the world, and he must keep slaves and have fetish, or else his country would be taken away and given to somebody else, in the same way Quittah and Lagos were given. If you like to come here to trade—to sell cloth and guns and rum—we shall be glad; but we can not have your book." It was in vain that Mr. Winfield sought to reason the matter. Those in authority seemed to have but two ideas—trade and war; and they could not see why the missionaries were in their country, if not to trade or as emissaries of the English government. The people had gladly heard the missionaries and expressed great regret at the failure of their plans. Their king is a great obstacle to civilization. He is probably the worst, vilest and most barbarous ruler on the face of the earth, sacrificing hundreds of poor slaves at the death of every notable personage, making war constantly on weaker tribes of the interior and enslaving or killing outright his unfortunate prisoners. It is a pity some government can not interfere in the interests of humanity.—New York Independent.

The Presbyterian Woman's Foreign Missionary Society have done a very commendable and we trust profitable thing in publishing separately in pamphlet form historical sketches of the ten foreign missions of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions—viz., South America, India, Africa, Siam, China, Japan, Persia, Syria, Mexico, and among the North American Indians. The sketches are written by competent persons. Dr. Gosman writes that of the Japan Mission, Dr. Nassau that of Africa, Dr. Bradhead that of India, and so on. A map is given with each sketch, and the general features of the country and the people, the beginning and purpose of the mission, the difficulties encountered, the results achieved, etc., are outlined, and a list of missionaries is appended. The idea of presenting the salient points in each mission in a compact, attractive form, so that everybody can get easily the necessary information as to what the church is doing in the foreign fields, is a bright one and we should like to see other churches adopt it. It is not enough to urge people to give for mission work. They must know what their money accomplishes. These sketches are published at 1334 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.—New York Independent.

—The Rev. C. F. Warren, of the Osaka Mission of the Church Missionary Society, refers in terms of high praise to the work of the American Board in Japan. He says it is the strongest mission "in this part of Japan," and "perhaps there is none stronger in the empire." He contrasts the modest efforts of his own society with the vigorous work of the Board, and says: "I am not aware that we have exercised more caution than they have, and yet they have a much larger number of converts and our best workers connected with their churches, several of which are presided over by native pastors, who are partly or entirely paid by their people." He mentions among the excellent features of the system of the Board (1) the concentration of its work, (2) the employment of female agents, (3) medical missionaries, (4) admirable schools.—New York Independent.

—The English Baptist Missionary Society reports, in its statistics for 1881, 38,397 members in its various fields, including 26,742 in the Jamaica Union. The baptisms for the year were 3,373, of which 2,391 were in Jamaica. The baptisms last year numbered 2,181. The net gain in communicants is 4,562. The net gain of the Jamaica Union is 3,945, from which it would appear that the work in the mission-fields proper has not been very prosperous. The pastors of self-supporting churches have increased from 57 to 61.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—In the Glasgow Free Presbytery, recently, there was an interesting discussion on a resolution protesting against lectures on merely secular topics on the Lord's day and exhorting all Christians to shun such meetings. The resolution was directed against the Sunday Society, which is in favor of the opening of libraries and museums on Sunday. Prof. Bruce and Prof. Lindsay earnestly opposed the resolution, on the ground that it made too much of a small matter and could result in no practical good. Prof. Lindsay said a good deal had been heard of the ministerial misuse of the Lord's day by the taking of cabs. He believed there was no minister in Glasgow had done so much preaching as himself and had taken fewer cabs, and he was perfectly prepared to join Mr. Gault, the mover of the resolution, and any number of his brethren, in some practical abstinence in the taking of cabs on the Sabbath, and he would be ready not to use one of these vehicles where the distance was not more than five miles. The result was the adoption of the motion by a large majority.

—A General Conference of representatives of Evangelical Deaconesses' houses has been held in Kaiserswerth, Germany. Thirty-nine mother houses were represented by 122 delegates, who came from Scandinavia, Denmark, Russia, Switzerland, France, Holland, and Germany. Pastor Ulrich, of Breslau, said the office of deaconess was becoming more and more an office of the churches. Several questions concerning the usefulness and permanency of the institution were discussed, and the Conference adjourned to meet in the same place three years hence. According to the statistics of 1880, fifty-three evangelical establishments had 4,748 sisters in the work at 1,436 stations, the total income being $1,206,944, and at expenditures $1,179,636.

—The act of synodical consolidation in the Presbyterian Church goes into effect January 2. The bounds of the new organizations will conform in most cases to state lines. That of New York will include two foreign presbyteries, besides that of New England. It will have 29 presbyteries, 1,010 ministers, 792 churches, and 130,374 communicants. That of Pennsylvania alone will have more communicants. This synod, which will include a foreign presbytery, as well as that of West Virginia, will have 131,054 communicants. The third in the list will be Ohio Synod, with 68,326, and the fourth, New Jersey, with 54,057.

—The Seventh Day Adventist General Conference has been in session in Battle Creek, Mich., the headquarters of the denomination. In connection with a suitable notice of the death of the founder of the Church, Elder James White, the Conference put on record its "confidence in the spirit of prophecy," which God has imparted to Sister Ellen White, who is now in a feeble condition, and expressed the hope that she might be vouchsafed strength to visit the different parts of the field and participate in general gatherings.

—Prof. Robertson Smith is to deliver a short course of lectures this winter in Edinburgh and Glasgow on the prophetical books of Scripture. His friends have raised him a fund which guarantees him a larger salary than he received in Aberdeen College. The money with which the books presented to Prof. Smith were purchased was raised in a few days, and the professor himself selected the books and manuscripts he wanted.

—The English Congregational Union adopted a resolution at its jubilee meeting, speaking of the Revision as "an important service rendered to the whole Church of Christ," thanking the revisers for their patient and scholarly work and congratulating them "on the favorable reception which their work has found at the hands of Christians of all denominations."

—Bishop Huntington a few days ago, at Syracuse, N. Y., ordained two young Indians who have been educated for missionary work; Paul Caryl, a chief of the Kiowa tribe, whose Indian name is Zotum, and David Pendleton, a Cheyenne, whose Indian name is Oakerhater. The two men were captured on the plains several years ago by United States troops.

Some English travelers have built an orphanage at ancient Nazareth. It has been open four years, and there are in it now thirty-six girls, of ages varying from four to fifteen. They are all taught, whatever may have been their parentage, to love the one true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent.

—Rev. Thomas Harrison, the revivalist, is holding a series of very successful meetings in New Albany, Ind. During the coming winter he will conduct a series of meetings in St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, Cincinnati.

—Mrs. Thomas H. Powers, of Philadelphia, has presented to the congregation of the Cummings' Memorial Reformed Episcopal Church of Baltimore, her check for $12,000 to buy in for the ground on which the church stands.

—At the cremation ceremonies of the Queen of Siam in March, Mrs. Dr. Dean distributed one hundred copies of the gospel of John to representatives from various sections brought together for that occasion.

—The peace commission charged by the General Synod with the task of harmonizing the differences of the two parties in the Reformed (German) Church has been in session at Harrisburg.

—York county, Pa., is the banner county for the Lutheran Church. Within its bounds are about eight thousand members of the General Synod Lutheran Church.

—The General Synod of the Disestablished Church of Ireland received a report from the representative body stating that the capital fund is now $5,162,665.

—The Presbyterian Church at Irwin, Colorado, is 10,500 feet above tide-water, and so is probably the highest Presbyterian Church in the world.

Our Young People.

THE FAIRY ARTIST.

BY NELLIE M. GARAGHANT.

O there is a little artist
Who paints in the cold night hours
Pictures for wee, wee children,
Of wondrous trees and flowers;

Pictures of snow-white mountains
Touching the snow-white sky;
Pictures of distant oceans
Where pigmy ships sail by;

Pictures of rushing rivers
By fairy bridges spanned;
Bits of beautiful landscapes
Copied from either hand.

The moon is the lamp he paints by,
His canvas the window-pane;
His brush is a frozen snow-flake;
Jack Frost the artist's name.

—Our Little Ones.

The Story of a Horseshoe.

BY MRS. CHRISTINE CHAPLIN MARSH.

When painted horseshoes first came in fashion, little Miss Mollie was so carried away with the work that she was often seen picking her way about through the shabbiest streets in town. One day she walked into Mr. Flaherty's shop. The blacksmith paused in his work, and asked, "Well, Miss, and what can I do for you? Do you want your horse shod?"

"No; I only want to buy old horseshoes."

We can not wonder that Mr. Flaherty was rather surprised at this.

He bowed politely, saying, "Wouldn't you prefer new horseshoes, miss?"

"Old shoes bring good luck, and they are easier to paint than new ones," said Molly. "I paint them to hang over parlor doors; everybody does them now."

He found some smooth ones and filed them neatly, but refused to take any money for them.

"But I'd rather pay for them; they are certainly worth something, and I have troubled you to file them," said Molly.

"Well, I'll tell you, miss; we'll settle it this way: You'll paint me a shoe, and we'll call it square!"

Molly agreed to do it. A little wreath of May-flowers trailed over the golden shoe; a dainty blue ribbon was passed through the nail-holes and tied in a handsome bow at the top. The word "Glück" was painted on it in German text. Molly presented it to Mr. Flaherty. He was charmed with it, and said he should carry it home to his little girl. He lived in a tenement-house with his wife, Margaret, and their only child, Rosie, who was nine.

You may fancy how pleased Rosie was when her father came home at night. He would make believe he was a strange man, and would knock on the door. When Margaret opened it he would say, "Is there a young lady here by the name of Miss Flaherty, who would like a call from a fine gentleman." Or, "How do you do, Mrs. Flaherty? I believe I met ye once in Ireland, and if ye're a mind I'll step in and take a cup o' tay wid ye."

But Margaret and Rosie had a great sorrow. Although Tim loved them, he would go off once in a while and drink.

One evening Timothy put his dingy face in the door with this inquiry: "Is there a young lady within by the name o' Rosie, who would like a present as would bring good luck to her?"

"I would," cried Rosie, the light coming into her pretty, pale face. Timothy laid a paper parcel down and carefully washed his begrimed hands. He next untied the pink cord, while Margaret and Rosie looked on.

"A gold horseshoe?" Rosie was fairly dazzled by it, with its blue ribbon fluttering around it. "What is it?" she asked?

"Its a horseshoe, and it was painted for me by a very foine young lady, and give to me for you! It's to be put over the door, and the word on it means 'Good luck,' in Dutch," said Timothy, confidently.

"O! let me put it up in the paper again," said the little girl. "I can look at it then, once in a while. It would be all spoiled out in the room."

"If our room was cleaner, I'd like to have it put over the door, like the young lady's," said Rosie to her mother the next day.

"I'll make it cleaner, then, my darlin'! But the trouble is it won't stay so."

Margaret went to work, however, and scoured and scrubbed so thoroughly that Rosie hardly knew the room when she was brought back from the small bed-room to her big rocking-chair.

"O, mother, this looks lovely. Now drive a big nail over the door, and hang up my gold horseshoe—and O, mother, can't I have on my best dress? And you put on your black alpacky?"

There was soon a sort of holiday air about the place. Margaret arrayed herself in her alpacky, and then set the tea-kettle on the shining stove.

"Mother," asked Rosie, "why can't we get down the sugar-bowl with the flowers on it, and the plates with the white edges to—for that was given to you before you was married—from the top shelf?"

"And so we will, Rosie!" And Margaret set the table, and drew it out from the wall where it usually stood during their careless meals.

When Timothy came, he stood still in utter surprise on his own threshold. There were Margaret and Rosie, all dressed up, and sitting at a tiny tea-table in the middle of the floor.

"If I'm invited to this tay-party," he said, "I'll scrub myself up a bit, for honor o' it? Have ye any soft-soap about, Margaret, to take the smut off my hands?" And he put on a paper collar, and wet his hair till it lay down smooth on his head.

"Hullo, hullo! There's the gold horseshoe over the door!" he cried.

Rosie laughed, and said, "We fixed up, so as to have things nice enough for the horseshoe. O, I wish we could look this way always!"

"An' so we will, dear, if father 'll dress up as fine every night, an' come home to us," said Margaret.

The evening was a very merry one, and Timothy was overcome with joy at owning two such lovely creatures as Margaret and Rosie. The next evening the room looked the same, and again Timothy washed himself. After tea he brought out a new corn-popper and plenty of corn, and he and Margaret and Rosie popped and ate the pretty white kernels as long as they could; and then they drank a great deal of cold water—a very great deal! Another night they made molasses candy; and other evenings they told stories. Margaret soon saw that these pleasant evenings at home were helping Timothy to be a better man. She kept her rooms bright and clean after that, and Rosie grew stronger and happier every day.

If every painted horseshoe brings the good fortune which Rosie's did, there will be a vast deal of good luck in the homes of the United States of America.—Wide Awake.

Newton's Childhood.

Sir Isaac Newton is the greatest of modern philosophers and mechanics. When he was born, December 25, 1642, three months after his father's death, he was so small and feeble that no one supposed he would live a day; but the weak infant grew to be a healthy, robust man, who lived until he was eighty-four years old. He began to invent or contrive machines and to show his taste for mechanics in early childhood. He inherited some property from his father, and his mother, who had married a second time, sent him to the best schools, and to the University of Cambridge. At school he soon showed his natural taste; he amused himself with little saws, hatchets, hammers and different tools; and when his companions were at play spent his time in making machines and toys. He made a woolen clock when he was twelve years old, and the model of a windmill, and in his mill he put a mouse, which he called his miller, and which turned the wheels by running around its cage. He made a water clock four feet high, and a cart with four wheels, not unlike a velocipede, in which he could drive himself by turning a windlass.

His love of mechanics often interrupted his studies at school, and he was sometimes making clocks and carriages when he ought to have been construing Latin and Greek. But his mind was so active that he easily caught up again with his fellow-scholars, and was always fond of every kind of knowledge. He taught the school boys how to make paper kites; he made paper lanterns by which to go to school in the dark winter mornings; and sometimes at night he would alarm the whole country round by raising his kites in the air with a paper lantern attached to the tail; they would shine like meteors in the distance, and the country people, at that time very ignorant, would fancy them omens of evil and celestial lights.

He was never idle for a moment. He learned to draw and sketch; he made little tables and sideboards for the children to play with; he watched the motions of the sun by means of pegs he had fixed in the wall of the house where he lived, and marked every hour.

At last, when he was about sixteen, his mother placed him in charge of a farm, and every Saturday he went with a servant to Grantham market to sell his corn and vegetables. But the affairs of the farm did not prosper; the young philosopher hid himself away in a room in a garret which he hired, studying mechanics and inventing a water-wheel on a new model, while the sheep wandered away in the field, and the cattle devoured his corn.

Next he went to Cambridge University, and became a famous scholar. At the age of twenty-four he began his study of the spectrum, as philosophers call that brilliant picture of the colors of the rainbow, which is shown by the sun's rays shining through a three-sided piece of glass, called a prism. It is one of the most beautiful objects in science or nature, and Newton's study of its splendid colors led to his greatest discoveries of optics, or the science of the sight. In our own time the use of the prism and its spectrum has shown us of what the sun and moon are composed.

One day, as Newton sat musing in his garden at his retired country home, an apple fell from a tree to the ground. A great idea at once arose in his mind, and he conceived the plan of the universe and of the law of gravitation, as it is called. He was the first to discover that famous law. He showed that the heavier body always attracts the lighter; that as the apple falls to the earth, so the earth is drawn toward the sun; that all the planets feel the law of gravitation, and that all the universe seems to obey one will. Newton soon became the most famous of living philosophers. But at the same time he was the most modest of men; he never knew that he had done anything more than others, nor felt that he was any more studious or busy. Yet he never ceased to show, even in late old age, the same love for mechanical pursuits and the study of nature he had shown when a boy. His most famous work, the Principia, proving the law of gravitation and the motion of the planets, appeared in 1687. He made beautiful prisms of glass and other substances, and two reflecting telescopes, the best that were yet known. He wrote valuable histories and works. He was always a devout Christian and scholar. He died in 1727, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

This tiny baby that was scarcely thought worth the care of his nurses, became an active and healthy boy and man, with the clearest mind of his time. He was stout, ruddy, healthy, and never, it is said, lost a tooth. But he preserved his health by avoiding all that was hurtful. He was a philosopher at twelve years old, and the world owes much of its progress to Newton's well-spent childhood.

ALWAYS DO IT WELL. Whatever you do, do it well. A job slightted because it is apparently unimportant, leads to habitual neglect, so that men degenerate insensibly into poor workmen.

"That is a good rough job," said a foreman in our hearing recently; and he meant that it was a piece of work not elegant in itself, but strongly made and well put together.

Training the hand and eye to work well, leads individuals to form correct habits in other respects, and a good workman is in most cases, a good citizen. No one need hope to rise above his present situation who suffers small things to pass by unimproved, or who neglects, metaphorically speaking, to pick up a cent because it is not a dollar. Some of the wisest lawmakers, the best statesmen, the most gifted artists, the most merciful judges, the most ingenious mechanics, have risen from the great mass. A rival of a certain lawyer, sought to humiliate him publicly by saying:

"You blacked my father's boots once."

"Yes," said the lawyer, unabashed, "and I did it very well."

And he also of his habit of doing even mean things well, he rose to be greater. Take heart all who toil! All youths, in humble situations, all in adverse circumstances, and they who labor unappreciated. If it be but to drive the plow strive to do it well, if only to cut belts, make good ones, or to blow the bellows, keep the iron hot. It is attention to business that lifts the feet higher up on the ladder.

—A Chinaman has been appointed to a position on the Philadelphia police force, much to the disgust of the ward politicians.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. J. W. RUSH, REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY, REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 1882.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.—The regular annual meeting of the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will be held at the office of the ADVOCATE, Wednesday, January 25, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

By the Mercies of God.

These as the incentive to a consecrated and holy life. They are a storehouse full of the strongest motives to devotion and self-sacrifice.

They are not free from the element of fear, inasmuch as the mercies of God aggravate the guilt of negligence. The edge and point of our condemnation will be in the sense of mercies received for which no return has been made. Redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, enlightened by the patient ministry of the Holy Spirit, blessed with the gospel, and yet filled with self and worldliness! How, in the face of abundant privileges, the love of God exhibited in the gift of the only begotten Son, and the good providence which has conspired with the means of grace to bring us to the knowledge of Christ, can we meet the final account if we have not laid all upon the altar? These mercies of God, beneficent and sweet as the light, falling about us as softly and gently as the dew, and as pleasant odors distilling perfume in all the air we breathe! And yet there is fire in them, and blasting, and the terrible awakenings of the righteous judgments of God. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God." There is in them death as well as life, danger as well as security.

And yet it is likely that the appeal is made to other considerations. The very thought of the mercies of God, blessings bestowed upon the unworthy, provided for those who have merited nothing but wrath, should stir the soul to its profoundest depths. The strange thing is, that believing souls should ever need to be reminded of these mercies, and especially that it should be needful to urge them as the incentive to more devoted and spiritual living. Can they ever for a moment lose sight of them; is it possible to walk in the light and not be conscious of the sun? As a matter of fact, it would seem to be so. The inward life may have lost much of its freshness, and the faith has become comparatively weak and inoperative, but there is the profession, and something of the experience left. Perhaps this act of presenting the body—the entire being—a living sacrifice, has not been distinctly brought before the mind. Conformity to the world has not been habitually regarded as the heinous sin that it is, and the necessity of a transfiguring power, that shall distinguish and separate from the world, has not been felt. Or under the pressure of the spirit of the age, its love of lucre, its engrossment with the pleasures and fashions of society, the mercies of God, once so strong to influence and mould the character, have become partially obscure.

It is probably true of all Christians, that without special effort to recall the goodness of God, and to establish this effort as the habit of the mind, they lose sight, in some degree, of what should be the absorbing object of their thoughts. It is in proportion, as the mercies of God are vivid, that there will be this continual endeavor to realize a complete sacrifice of self, and the fullest transformation of the renewed man. In one view of them they coerce. Their office is to drive and compel the laggard to a swifter step, and to a greater fidelity. But their nobler and more powerful office is to awaken the sluggish spirituality, to kindle the flame of love that burns languidly, and to arouse a gratitude that is torpid rather than dead. The mercies of God, rather than the wrath of God, are for the purpose of inciting in believers the spirit of complete consecration. The terrors of the Lord have their uses in moving men to repentance, and in toning up the piety of God's children. And yet the mercies of God are alone adequate to inspire the highest and most perfect spirit of self-surrender, and to change the mind into the attitude of complete submission to the perfect will of God.

However this may be, an appeal to Christians, based upon the mercies of God, is manifestly the exhaustive appeal. None but they are capable of feeling its full force, since none other have tasted of the good word of God and the power of the world to come. Others may have some conception of God's compassion in redemption, and of his goodness in Providence; but the Christian alone can know and feel the import of the mercies of God, in its widest sweep, as related to the redemption of the soul from death, and its preparation for the heavenly glory. As distinguished from others, this appeal is to the children of God, and as the crowning incentive to the most complete devotion. If this does not arouse them, bring them to the altar of personal sacrifice, and lift them out of the world and above it, nothing can.

By the mercies of God! It is not possible to think of the love of the world, and absorption in its fashionable and sensual pleasure, in connection with any adequate conception of these mercies. Do worldly Christians ever think of them? Do they pause in the whirl and excitement of worldly gayety to recall the agony of Gethsemane, the pain of the cross? The money-loving, the worshipers of mammon, those who dress richly, fare sumptuously, and deny themselves no comfort or luxury, while the poor are starving and the heathen are perishing, do they meditate upon the cost of their redemption?

Would it not suffice for all, for the awakening of a slumbering church, for the alarm of pleasure-loving and money-loving Christians, and for the complete separation of believers from the world, if we could induce all to think of the mercies of God? Adequately considered, they would so fill the thoughts, and so occupy the head, that every vestige of self and of worldliness would be expelled from the soul.

Louisiana Conference.

The Louisiana Conference met in the Carondelet Street Church, New Orleans, Wednesday, January 4, Bishop McTyeire presiding. John T. Sawyer was elected secretary, J. M. Beard and Samuel Keener, assistant secretaries. Among the visitors from abroad were W. T. Harris, D. D., and Dr. Duckworth, of the Memphis Conference, C. G. Andrews, D. D., president of Centenary College, and member of the Mississippi Conference, A. W. Wilson, D. D., secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions, Nashville, Tenn., C. F. Evans, D. D., of the Little Rock Conference, and Dr. H. F. Johnson, president of Whitworth College, Miss. Bishop Keener was usually present, and on the platform, evidently enjoying the Conference all the more because exempt from the labor and responsibility of the chair and the cabinet. A Bishop off duty must enjoy a Conference with a peculiar zest.

Bishop McTyeire believes in statistics, specially in having them read as the preachers' names are called, and he keeps an eye on the tables of last year as the reading proceeds, making comparison, and calling at times for explanation. This method is full of revelations, and of making manifest, enlightening the Bishop, the Conference and the people.

Much was heard about the drouth and the short crops, though the reports were generally better than last year. In the Shreveport station, for instance, besides a subscription for a new church of $20,000, the amount raised for other purposes averaged more than $17 per member. The best report that was made, in all respects, was, perhaps, from the Shreveport pastor, and from the pastor of Carondelet Street and Opelousas, although there were others nearly as good. The collections for foreign missions in the New Orleans district are $500 in advance of last year, and the pastoral support, and collection for Conference claimants, and for domestic missions in this district, are considerably ahead of last year. The other districts showed improvement in some respects.

Considering the drouth—which never seems to be out of sight in this connection—the Conference has done about as well as any we have heard from. In proportion to membership—say fifteen thousand—we imagine no Southern Methodist Conference has done as well. The faithful administration of Discipline has advanced, notably in the Shreveport district. Generally there has been less neglect in administering the sacraments. Bishop McTyeire made special inquiry in regard to the administration of the Lord's Supper, and emphasized the importance of it.

The preachers have not been adequately supported as a general thing, but they have not fared worse in this respect than heretofore. The impression from the reports—and the Bishop most heartily recognized and gave expression to it—was that the preachers of the Louisiana Conference have done a hard and most faithful work this year.

There are a few anti-missionary spots in Louisiana still, but they are slowly fading out before the advancing light of the gospel, and the persistent efforts of the church to inform and educate the conscience of the people. Much remains to be done in this direction to bring our most liberal charges up to the gospel standard, but the day is breaking. Dr. Wilson gave the Conference a very incisive and awakening talk when he was introduced, and the impression was deepened by his masterly address at the anniversary. There is a great deal of missionary ground in Louisiana, much land yet to be fully occupied, and the building of railroads will call for increased activity in church building and church work of every kind. Will the Conference move up to the opportunity and the necessity of the times now upon us?

Bishop McTyeire's address to the candidates for admission into full connection, bristled with clear and sharp points. "Are you willing to conform to the Discipline of the church?" received from him a very impressive and luminous exposition. "Conform" in reference to administering the sacraments, the order of public worship, doctrine, discipline, pastoral visiting, instructing the children. The importance of visiting the sick was specially insisted on. In this connection he referred to the fact that President Garfield, during his long illness, never saw a minister of the gospel at his bed-side. He thought he could locate the cause much more accurately than his doctors located the ball. Physicians sometimes make unreasonable opposition to the presence of ministers at the bed-side of the sick.

Incidentally, as the reports of pastors were being rendered, there were strong expressions from the chair, and from the floor, against building union churches, organizing union Sunday-schools, and using other than our own Sunday-school literature. We hope there were representatives of the laity from all parts of the Conference to hear and to make a note of these strictures.

We were glad to hear from the presiding elder of the Opelousas district that the French mission in the Attakapas, notwithstanding the fall of the missionary, is still alive, and likely to live and grow. It seemed to be the conviction of the Conference, and also that of the Bishops and missionary secretary, that this mission must be maintained and cared for.

Some promising young men were admitted on trial. They were: Hickson Capers, William Wimberly, Edmond B. Galloway and John W. Davis. Admitted into full connection: Chas. F. Stivers, Chas. T. Munholland, Robt. M. Blocker, Albert T. Galloway. Elected and ordained elders: John B. Cassity, Patrick Galvin, John L. P. Sheppard, Albert M. Wailes. Local elder ordained: Christian Schoffner. The supernumerates are: John S. Davis, Wm. E. Doty, E. W. Yancey, Philo M. Goodwyn, Joel Sanders, P. H. Diefenwierth, Jesse Fulton, W. D. Stayton, James L. Wright, James A. Parker. Died during the year: Dr. H. C. Thweatt, John C. Reed, Thomas Hall Jones.

Delegates to General Conference—Clerical: Linus Parker, C. W. Carter, B. F. Alexander. Reserves: James A. Parker, Christian Keener, John Pipes. Laity: W. H. Foster, Dr. A. S. Helmick, A. C. Mitchell. Reserves: A. E. Read, W. T. Blackshear, John L. Scales. Conference directed that a collection for expense of delegates to the General Conference be taken by the preachers in charge on the first and second Sundays in February, the collections to be forwarded to L. Parker, or to the nearest delegate as may be most convenient.

The attendance of laymen at the Conference was nearly full, and among them some of the best men—representative Louisiana Methodists. The clerical attendance was as full as we have ever seen it, and we were glad to see a number of the preachers' wives. It ought to be understood that they are welcome at Conference, and that places desiring the Conference session are expected to make provision for them. During the week there was preaching at night by members of the Conference and visiting brethren in our principal Methodist Churches. The missionary anniversary on Saturday night was well attended; addresses, excellent ones, were made by Bishop Keener and Dr. Wilson. Collection, $500. On Sunday the pulpits of the most of the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches, and that of Ames' Methodist Episcopal Church, were filled by members of the Conference and visitors. Bishop McTyeire preached at Carondelet Street at eleven o'clock, enlarging with great liberty and amplitude on the "Old Paths"—a most timely and useful deliverance. Dr. Wilson preached in the morning at Felicity Street, and at Carondelet Street at night—sermons of wonderful power and unction.

The report of the Conference Board of Finance showed: Collection for Conference claimants, $2,642 45; received from trustees of New Orleans Methodist Depository, $750; distributed to Conference claimants, $3,392 45; Bishop fund, $800; raised for education of young men preparing for the ministry at Centenary College, $517 45; collected for foreign missions in the churches, exclusive of collection at Conference anniversary, $3,283 16; for domestic missions, $878 85. From the Lowell estate, Rev. M. C. Manley executor, paid over to Dr. Wilson, for foreign missions, $850. The assessment for the aid of young men studying for the ministry in Centenary College is this coming year $800, the same amount as assessed for the support of the Bishops, and to be apportioned in the same way to the several charges. The collections, as above stated, have been remarkably good, especially that for the Conference claimants, being nearly up to the basis of the old quarterage claims.

In the report of the Committee on Church Publications a declaration was adopted disclaiming any responsibility on the part of this Conference, or of the Methodists of New Orleans, for the management of the affairs of the book depository of which R. J. Harp was the assistant agent, under the control and appointment of the book agent at Nashville. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was heartily endorsed, and the two ex-editors on the platform—Bishops McTyeire and Keener—gave good and entertaining talks in its behalf. Bishop McTyeire reminded us that on the tenth of February the paper enters upon its thirty-second year.

The memorial service at twelve M. Saturday was most impressive. Bishop Keener presided, and his remarks on the character of Dr. Thweatt were full of light and unction. The dead of the year were: Henry C. Thweatt, D. D., aged seventy-six, John C. Reed, a traveling preacher for more than thirty years, and Thomas Hall Jones, a young man of great promise, admitted on trial at the last Conference. Tributes were paid to the memory of these beloved brethren by several members of the Conference. As we have published obituaries of them it is not needful that we make further notice of them here.

The Committee on Education presented an excellent report through its chairman, Rev. J. T. Daves. On the motion to adopt, Dr. C. G. Andrews, president of Centenary College, addressed the Conference, and with good effect. By special resolution Dr. Andrews was welcomed to the sessions of the Conference, and invited to visit our charges whenever convenient for him to do so. Mansfield Female College was represented as enjoying a good degree of prosperity; Centenary as doing well for the times. The report on education will be published in the ADVOCATE at an early day.

Reports of Committees on Education and other interests occupied most of Monday. The Legislature of Louisiana was memorialized to submit to the people a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. The General Conference was memorialized to organize a Church Extension Society. The next session of the Conference will be held at Mansfield, DeSoto parish. There was a scarcity of preachers, several appointments being left to be supplied. Resolutions on observance of the Sabbath were discussed and adopted. Thanks were voted to lines of travel extending courtesies to members of the Conference, to the reporters of the city press, to the people for their hospitality. The appointments were read by Bishop McTyeire, after a brief and pertinent address, in the presence of a large congregation.

APPOINTMENTS.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT.—Christian Keener, P. E. Carondelet street, Felix St. (till); Felicity street, C. W. Carter; St. Charles Avenue, J. B. Walker; Morgan street, J. M. Beard; Louisiana Avenue, F. C. Butler; Algiers, Patrick Galvin; Lafourche mission, C. F. Stivers; Baton Rouge, J. T. Daves; Plaquemine and Grass Tete, T. S. Randle; Editor NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Linus Parker; Agent Southwestern Bible Society, J. A. Ivy.

DELHI DISTRICT.—B. F. Alexander, P. E. Monroe, B. F. White; Delhi and Madison, R. S. Isbell; Trenton circuit, A. M. Wailes; Bastrop, J. E. Bradley; Lind Grove, J. M. McKee; Oak Ridge, N. S. Cornell; Rayville, C. W. Hodges; Winnsboro, to be supplied; Waterproof, St. Joseph and Vidalia, A. E. Clay; Tensas, W. Wimberly; Lake Providence and Pecan Grove, H. O. White; Floyd, J. Landrum.

HOMER DISTRICT.—L. A. Cornett, P. E. Homer, J. H. Stone; Tulip, Baxter Clegg; Haynesville, J. A. Miller; Minden, J. M. Brown; Sparta and Saline, C. T. Munholland, R. M. Crowson, supernumerary; Arcadia, R. T. Parish; Vernon, J. W. Medtack; Julian Village, R. S. Collier; Rochester, to be supplied; Downsville, J. F. Patterson; Farmerville, R. Parvin; Webster circuit, to be supplied.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT.—Thos. H. McClendon, P. E. Shreveport, John T. Sawyer; Mooringsport, to be supplied; Caddo circuit, John Pipes, Hickson Capers; Logansport mission, to be supplied; Mansfield, J. J. Billingsley; Pleasant Hill, W. Hart; Natchitoches, R. Randle; Anacoco, to be supplied; Springville, John W. Hearn; Coushatta, J. B. Cassity; South Bossier, Enos B. Foust; North Bossier, R. A. Davis; Manny circuit, R. M. Blocker; President Mansfield College, J. Lane Borden; Sabine circuit, to be supplied.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.—F. G. Hocutt, P. E. Pineville, J. L. P. Sheppard; Alexandria, J. M. Johnston; Winfield circuit, E. B. Galloway; Harrisonburg and Sicily Island, C. R. Godfrey; Jena circuit, to be supplied; Columbia, J. D. Harper; Castor, C. R. Bonson; Bayou Boeuf and Evergreen, G. M. Livermon; Spring Creek, Abel Hoffpauir; Simsport, A. T. Galloway; Black River, to be supplied; Little River, W. R. Whatley; Avoyelles French mission, to be supplied; Belle Cheney, F. White; Colfax, S. H. Whatley; Bayou des Glaize, Geo. Jackson.

OPELOUSAS DISTRICT.—Lewis A. Reed, P. E. Opelousas, T. J. Hough; Washington, M. C. Manly; Vermillionville, S. S. Keener; Plaquemine Brulee and Kimball's Chapel, J. F. Wynn; Abbeville, J. F. Scurlock; New Iberia, T. J. Upton; Franklin, T. K. Faust LeRoy; Pattersonville and Morgan City, R. S. Trippett; Lake Charles, S. H. Cooper; Sugar Town, J. W. Davis; Calcasieu mission, to be supplied; Grand Cheniere, to be supplied.

SUPERANNUATES.—John S. Davis, W. E. Doty, E. W. Yancey, Philo M. Goodwyn, Joel Sanders, Philip H. Diefenwerth, Jesse Fulton, W. D. Stayton, James L. Wright, James A. Parker.

TRANSFERRED.—John W. Harmon, to Mississippi Conference, and stationed at Marion, Miss.

John Mathews was transferred by Bishop Pierce to Southwest Missouri Conference, and stationed at Kansas City.

With Authority.

Jesus assumed his teaching function on the Mount of Beatitudes. In the beginning of his sermon there we have the most beautiful and the most consoling and the most inspiring words that ever fell upon human ears. All at once the speaker seems to rise up out of the dimness of Old Testament truth, and light gleams and flashes in every direction. There are clear revelations, which show heights of truth and depths of truth, of which the wisest never dreamed. He quotes from the Old Testament and his, "but I say unto you," though apparently in opposition to the quotations, shows how expansive was the nature of truth, and his interpretations of those quotations show how the truth ramified through the whole nature of man, and through the whole structure of society. At one point the truth appears to lengthen to an infinite length, because of the spiritual interpretations which he gave. At another point the whole is condensed to the perfect simplicity of love. Jesus began his teaching function by asserting his absolute authority in this department. "But I say unto you" is the way he begins, and that to people who recognized the words of Moses and the prophets as the words of God, and acknowledged the authority of no other. He not only asserts absolute authority, but it is an authority from which there is no appeal. "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them"—these words opened his prophetic ministry. "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you"—these words closed that ministry. Now, between these opening and closing words of our Lord's teachings there is no word nor look nor act nor tone that diminishes aught from this high claim, or weakens in the least this absolute authority. When we read the record of his life we see this authority in every look of his eye; we feel it in every touch of his hand; we hear it in every tone of his voice. There is no weakening of this authority at any point in his history. None of his teachings wears the expression of being tentative. He never appears like a man walking an unknown path. There is always the firm tread of the man who knows the way, and who knows all the way. There is never a betrayal of the feeling common to all other teachers that he said too much or too little. He appeals to no man nor angel to support his authority. While other teachers are asking opinions, and putting forth theories, Christ comes directly to the heart of every subject he touches, and simply says: "This is the truth." All truth about any subject converges to and focalizes upon one point, and at that point is where the full and final truth on that subject is obtained. As a Teacher, Christ stood at this point, and all truth concentrated in him, and when he spoke, on any subject, what he said was final. When he said, "he that believeth the gospel shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned," that is the last word of unappealable authority on that awful subject. Christ had perfect knowledge of everything, and this is the reason that he "spake with authority, and not as the scribes." He knew what men bore responsibilities, of which they could not divest themselves, and, as he came to teach them how to live, he spoke in words whose tones and meaning demonstrated his authority to teach. Now, this authority is what invests these "sayings" with so much awfulness. Life and death hang here. Out of these "sayings" come eternal life or eternal death. These words of Jesus are the words of salvation, or the words of damnation, according as they are heeded or not heeded. There is no appeal from them. They are final.

C.

Mississippi Notes.

With the close of another Conference session comes numerous journeyings of preachers and their families. Nearly all of the changed pastors are settled in their new homes, and many of them received greetings amounting to ovations. Such receptions compensate, in a large measure, for all the worry and expense of moving, and all the sorrow in giving up old friends. The pastor at the capital found the handsome parsonage nicely refurnished, brilliantly lighted and comfortably warmed, a delegation in waiting to receive him, an elaborate supper prepared, the store-room supplied, and a check for his first month's salary. Vicksburg extended her new pastor a similar welcome. But the moves of some of our brethren are very long and expensive. How they can start so readily and move so far on their meager income, and, withal, so cheerfully, is the perpetual wonder of our itinerancy. For like sacrifices and heroism, we look elsewhere in vain. But much of this inspiration and support under trial is found in the itinerant's home, in the heroine of the parsonage who "tarries by the stuff." When one brother returned from Conference with a heavy heart, and told his wife of an unexpected change, she replied: "Well, husband, it may be all for the best; I want you to go if it costs me my life." Noble words, and bravely spoken! A thousand blessings upon the glorious womanhood of our itinerancy.

The State Teachers' Association met in Jackson on the twenty-seventh ultimo, and remained in session two days. Many subjects of interest connected with the great cause of education were carefully considered. A paper on normal schools, read by Mrs. Walter Hillman, received hearty applause and favorable comment. It is a matter of imminent importance, and will receive the attention of the Legislature. Trained teachers is the imperative demand of the times. Our common school system must largely prove a failure until they can be secured. A resolution was introduced advising that the preparatory department of the University of Mississippi be abolished. This brought Prof. L. T. Fitzhugh to his feet, the principal of that department, and gave him an opportunity to make explanations that will effectually silence further clamor against that honored institution, the pride of Mississippi. He showed that the morals and discipline of the university would compare favorably with other colleges, and that the preparatory department could in no appreciable sense antagonize private high-schools in the State. His remarks were applauded to the echo, and the resolution withdrawn. The association also adopted a report, prepared by Dr. H. F. Johnson, on State Aid to Female Education. This report considered the much discussed State Female College project, and advised against it. The report was adopted without a dissenting voice, and in that the teachers acted wisely.

The Legislature met in biennial session on Tuesday, January 3. The Senate is presided over by the new Lieutenant Governor, G. D. Shands. The House organized by electing Hon. W. H. H. Tison, of Lee, as speaker. Mr. Tison has a legislative experience dating back many years, and was therefore most fittingly honored. On Monday next the Governor elect, Gen. Robert Lowry, will be inaugurated with appropriate ceremonies. Gov. Stone, who retires from office, after having graced his high position for six years, will be followed in his retirement with the plaudits and blessings of the entire State. It is doubted if Mississippi ever had a better Governor; certainly never one purer or more patriotic. He goes to his home without a blur on his name, or a stain on his shield. Yet in the prime of a vigorous manhood, he will doubtless soon be called to some conspicuous place of public trust.

A local option liquor bill was introduced in the House to-day by the Hon. W. M. Inge, of Alcorn. That and other similar bills were referred to a special Committee on Temperance. Petitions to the Legislature for a prohibitory constitutional amendment are coming in by every mail. A large number of our Legislators are strong temperance men, which causes us to hope for some much needed and wholesome legislation.

C. H. C.

From Texas.

MR. EDITOR: I have just finished reading the ADVOCATE of the twenty-second instant, giving account of my dear old Mississippi Conference, and, Oh! how great a feast wife and I have enjoyed all alone in our cosey little Texas parsonage, while we recalled precious memories of the brethren and friends beloved whose names still brighten the roll of the Conference where we spent the earlier and better days of our itinerant life. But the pleasure is mingled with pain when we see the mortuary list and the number of faithful ones who constitute the "roll of honor"—superannuates.

I see that quite a number of changes were made in the appointments. Bishop Keener certainly exercised the episcopal prerogative, and I happened not to be one of those who were effected by it, but, familiar with the field, and well acquainted with the preachers, I feel free to say that, in my humble judgment, he exercised it most judiciously in most instances. There is no quesion but the work is benefitted often greatly by changing the preachers, and especially is it beneficial to change presiding elders, as well as other preachers, at least from one district to another, if not by putting new men into this office, when those already filling that place have served the disciplinary term. Many good and useful men have outlived their usefulness by being too long in the same field. I used to think it a little hard that I was moved so often, and so far, and others left to tramp around a stake until they had literally destroyed the pasture; but I feel to-day, after an experience of forty-two years, that the appointments I received, without any suggestion from myself, and solely in the exercise of the godly judgment of the Bishop, were best for me and for the work.

I am away off here in Texas, but the Master is here, and I find it is safe to trust him here as elsewhere. I find myself among a noble band of Methodist traveling preachers. Contrary to impressions made upon my mind before I came to Texas, my experience is that "transfers" from other Conferences have as fair showing in the way of appointments as original members of the Texas Conferences, and it is an injustice, I think, to charge the Texas brethren with undue prejudice against "transfers." Our church is connectional, and every true Methodist preacher will recognize the fact practically as well as theoretically.

My appointment for the ensuing Conference year is in the midst of the prettiest country, I am sure, that I have seen in Texas or elsewhere in all my travels. It is a small circuit, only four churches to serve, the furthest appointment from the parsonage only about twelve miles distant. The village of Ladonia, after which my circuit is named, is some twelve or fourteen miles from the T. and P. railroad, but we have daily mail communication—a hack line affording transportation for those who do not want to travel upon the railroad. We have a population of perhaps three or four hundred souls, two good school buildings, two churches—Presbyterian (which we occupy temporarily) and Baptist. Our people will soon have a church of their own. One member subscribes $800 toward the building. The parsonage is located here. It has been nearly finished since my arrival here, and the brethren promise soon to have additions and improvements made that will render it altogether comfortable. I feel like consecrating myself afresh to the work, and earnestly pray that this may be the best and happiest year of my life.

The tide of immigration pours in constantly into Texas from all parts, and "still there is room." It is certainly the most progressive land in all the South, if not in the United States. The Methodist Church is trying to keep abreast of the tide, and is waking up to every enterprise that contemplates thrift social and moral as well as the material development of the rapidly increasing population.

I hope the General Conference will reenforce the episcopacy with able-bodied as well as truly devoted men. Our beloved superintendents, with the exception of Bishops Keener and McTyeire, are physically unable to do the work that is imposed upon them. We need some younger men, and a sufficient number of them to afford the churches opportunity to see our Bishops more frequently than they do. There is no doubt of their support. Well, I have written enough for this time. Pray for us.

Your brother, R. J. HARRIS.

LADONIA, TEXAS, Dec. 26, 1881.

Bishop Wightman.

Rev. J. T. Wightman, writing in the Southern Christian Advocate, of a recent visit to Bishop Wightman, says:

At the close of the Conference I dropped down to Charleston, and had a pleasant interview with Bishop Wightman. He is at his comfortable home on Anson street, surrounded by his family, and is receiving all the kind offices of skillful physicians and devoted friends. He is very much emaciated, and is so weak that he can not turn himself in bed, from which now he is never moved. He suffers some days from neuralgic pains, which fly from limb to limb, but he is generally free from acute suffering; his tongue is furred and dry, his pulse 90 degrees, temperature normal, sleep good but short, appetite variable, though he relishes a little food. The physicians think that the point of impingement in the disease is the liver, which does not perform its function, and thereby deranges the kidneys and bowels. From the latter sources there has been a constant drain on his strength and vitality, and as soon as these are checked the liver threatens congestion. From this cause he has had recently several severe chills, and it is too painfully evident to the eye of his physicians that he can not survive many shocks of this character. It fills the minds of his friends with the deepest sympathy and anxiety to see this beloved and honored man of God prostrate, with no reasonable hope of his surviving more than a very short time.

The Bishop himself gave me an account of the probable cause of his sickness. He is now about entering his seventy-fourth year, and was never before on a sick bed. Possessing a vigorous constitution and of a long-lived family, his sudden prostration is almost a mystery to his friends. He was run down with fatigue in the summer of 1880, when he came from the malarial swamps of Virginia to attend a District Conference at Foster's Chapel, ten miles from Union, South Carolina. It was a sultry August day, and the chapel was crowded at the hour when the Bishop preached. The meeting was one of unusual interest, and though he complained of exhaustion, he made an effort to meet the occasion. It was his last effort. Immediately after preaching he drove to Union, and it is not improbable that a check of perspiration drove in upon the liver, which was already charged with malaria, the disease which seems now to have its center in that organ. His mother died from a cause very similar to this. He was confined to the house at Union, and part of the time in bed. His kind friends were very attentive and called in a physician, but they supposed that he would soon recover from the attack. He spent a week in this place. His friends tried to dissuade him from attempting to preach on the Sabbath following, but his reply was, "I will try if it kills me." This was probably his last sermon. He was very exhausted. After this he spent two months in Asheville, N. C., hoping to regain his strength in this salubrious region; but he returned with his family to Charleston in the fall of 1880, and from that time has not been able to leave the city, except on short excursions to Sullivan's Island and Summerville during the past summer. The physicians saw from the beginning that there was little or no hope of recovery. The wasting away of his strength and the threatened congestion of his liver rob his friends of almost all hope that he will ever again take his place on the walls of Zion to sound the trumpet of the Lord. But he lays him down on the battlefield as an old warrior, calm in the confidence of a glorious victory.

I was with him several days, and found him always calm, hopeful, cheerful. He was specially interested in the late session of the South Carolina Conference.

The good Bishop lies on the bank of the river waiting for the Master. In a moment he may cross. It strengthens the faith of all who visit him to see the calmness with which he surveys the passage over Jordan. When his blessed Master was about departing this life, there came one whose gentle ministry of love "prepared him for his burial." How often to his disciples does woman come again to repeat her office of affection, as to the person of her Lord and Master. One can not but be excited with the holy desire, when he stands at the bedside of the beloved Bishop, "let my end be like his," and let the hand of that one who stands nearest to me in life be placed on my brow, as the hand of a devoted wife is laid now upon his brow. Heaven is not far from a good man's death-bed.

New York Christian Advocate.

The coming on of the long and stiffening frost declares the dull and wintry stand-still of the natural world. The stagnation is not violent and forcible, for nature is generally mild and gradual in her transitions. Only man is paradoxical and abrupt. The spring-time and summer have been the time for growth and expansion, but the hour has now struck when the halt must be made. Why does nature need to stop? Why do not the seasons push on, now blossoming and now bearing fruit, without this waste of time which the dictionary calls winter? Whence the need of three, or four, or even a six months' hiatus in the march of the year? What is the use of the winding-sheet of snow, and the still ground, and the frozen fields, and icy streams? The frost is as much a necessity as the sunlight of June or the showers of May. There is just as great need for nature to stop and catch breath as for man. She must pause, and rest, and adapt herself to new surroundings before another sowing and another harvest can come. Men are frequently required to stop in the midst of their plans, and look over the past, and take note of the errors and failures, in order to do better work and have higher aspirations for the future.

When Whitefield was once compelled, to go into retirement for awhile, because of a diseased throat and failing voice, he had no language in which to describe his sorrow at the staying of his work. But when he was once in the harness again, he made ample amends for the interruption. His voice seemed never so eloquent or his heart so fervid. John Fletcher is, perhaps, our most notable Methodist illustration of how often a man may break down, and yet derive new strength for the Master's cause. We all knew Bushnell was a good preacher when in the midst of his Hartford ministry; but after his health gave way, and he had to stop and take his hearings, he began to publish those sermons, which have gone wherever the English tongue is spoken, and are to-day the best printed fruit of American pulpit eloquence. His ministry at large only began when he ceased to go up his pulpit steps in Hartford. The same applies to Guthrie, whose "Out of Harness" has done work enough for any dozen great books in other than the clerical field.

Church Dedicated.

MR. EDITOR: On this, the first day of the new year, Ebeneezer Church, DeSoto parish, La., was dedicated to the service of God. Rev. J. Lane Borden, president of Mansfield Female College, preached the dedication sermon which was appropriate and effective. At the close of the sermon, Mr. G. W. Sutherlin, Major Wilcox and wife joined the church, and two were consecrated to God by baptism and by taking the vows of the church. Then the collection was raised, the church debt liquidated and the balance of the preacher's salary raised. Then the dedication service was read, the doxology sung and the benediction pronounced, when the large congregation dispersed feeling that it was truly a happy new year. This closes our fourth years' labor on Logansport mission. We take away with us the warm sympathies and earnest prayers of this people.

J. PIPES.

MANSFIELD, LA., Jan. 1, 1882.

One of our contemporaries publishes an article by the Rev. Dr. John Hall, called "A Thing to Cry Over," which touches in a pathetic manner the common habit of laughing at drunken men. Dr. Hall stood on a boat in New York harbor. Not far off was a well-dressed but tipsy young man. Beside the doctor was a plainly dressed man. When Dr. Hall saw the people laughing at the drunkard, he saw in his neighbor's eyes such a sad, pitying look that he said to him, "They should hardly laugh at him." Said the man, "It is a thing to cry over." Then he told Mr. Hall of his own wife, who took to drink in Scotland, and who promised to reform if he would come to this country, but did not, and died of drunkenness; and when the doctor hoped that he had comfort in the children he said, "One, the second, is; she is a good child. The oldest is not steady, I can do nothing with her; and the youngest, a boy, can't be kept from drink. I've sold my place, and am going to a town in Ohio—where, I am told, no liquor can be had—to try to save him." Dr. Hall closes as follows: "Who would not wish for abstinence societies, tracts, books, ministers' sermons, young people's pledges, humane laws? One almost cries out for anything that will stop this slow cruel murder of home-love of men, of women, of little children, of hope, of peace, of immortal souls."—New York Christian Advocate.

The picture of General Garfield for Queen Victoria was recently forwarded to her through the State Department. The photograph was enclosed in an envelope bordered with mourning, addressed to Queen Victoria, and having the name of Mrs. Garfield written on the lower corner. It was inclosed in a box, lined with dark blue satin velvet, which was again inclosed in a mahogany box.

—Rev. Wm. E. Stuart, of Doniphan circuit, Missouri Conference, died December 19, 1881.

The Southern Christian Advocate of January 7, says: We are sorry to state that Bishop Wightman has not improved since our last report. He is still quite ill.

Renew! Renew!

Do not wait to renew your subscription until your paper fails to come. Remember that the ADVOCATE stops when subscription expires. Renew in time, and if possible, obtain and send another subscriber's name with yours. Let all our readers become agents to secure subscribers. Send in the names either through our regular agents, or direct to the office. Every post-office will register a letter for ten cents, in addition to regular postage, and we take all risk on registered letters. Postal notices are sent each subscriber a month before expiration, in addition to printed date on address slip giving standing notice of month with which it expires. You can not afford to miss a number; therefore, renew now.

Of recent gifts for educational purposes we notice the following: $125,000, by the late William Wheelwright, to found a school for instruction in practical business knowledge, in Newburyport, Mass.; $15,000, by the Hon. Henry H. Curtis, to found scholarships in Kenyon College; $2,000, by the legislature, to the University of Georgia, to make indigo free; $5,000, by the late H. Geo. Gilman Fogg, to Dartmouth College; $2,000, from Senator Smith and $1,000 from Willdigton and Dr Wm. S. Smith, toward the Garfield professorship at Williams; $10,000, from Mrs. J. S. Herrick, to Beloit College, for an observatory; $12,000, from various persons in New York City, to the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary; $2,500, by the late Rev. Jarad L. Elliott, chaplain U. S. A., to Princeton Theological Seminary, to the scholarship fund; $75,000, by Mr. J. R. Buchtel, to Buchtel College, Akron, Ohio, making his gifts aggregate $200,000; $500, by Mrs. Noah Woods, to found the Blake scholarship at Bowdoin. In Canada, McGill College has had a gift of $50,000.

—On his seventieth birthday, the Hon. John Bright, M. P., received an address from his constituents. In it they say: "Never, in the whole course of our connection, has there passed between us the faintest shadow of misgiving or distrust. At the outset we gave you our confidence without reserve. It has remained unabated and unbroken. To political confidence we have long since added the rare and precious gift of personal affection; for in your fidelity to us you have been unswerving, your service has been devoted, and your intercourse with us has been marked with a grace and a tenderness which have won our hearts. We promise you that so long as your life endures these relations shall continue. Between you and us there exists a bond that never can be broken."

—Ollve Logan, writing of the Marquis of Lorne as he appeared as an after-dinner speaker, recently, in England, says: "The young Scotch noble has greatly changed since he left these shores to assume the vice-royalty of the domain to the north of us. His bearing at that time was that of a shy, aristocratic, almost frigid, youthful noble, whose only conception of a fine manner is an essentially cold and unimpressioned one. Now, on my word, he seems like an American "of ours." He is jovial, hearty, off hand—I had almost written slap-dash. The Princess seemed to take the greatest pride in his success as a speaker and gave him many loving smiles of approval as he expatiated on the evils of smoke."

—The eminent British commander, Sir Garnet Wolseley, says in a letter to Mr. Masset: "I am one of those who have always felt that anything great done by our cousins on the other side of the Atlantic is a family achievement. I only wish more Americans would come here and more Englishmen travel in the United States, for I am certain that we have only to know one another well to join hands on all occasions as members of the same clan, the same family. If all the English-speaking provinces in the world were joined together in one federation, no Bismarck or king dare fire a shot in any part of the world."

—The battle of Trafalgar was fought seventy-six years ago; nevertheless, there are still alive five officers, who took part in that engagement—namely: Admiral Sir George Rose Sartorious, now ninety-one years old; Admiral Robert Pation, of the same age; Commander William Vicary, aged ninety; Commander Francis Harris, also ninety; and Colonel James Symmore, of the Marines; over ninety-two years.

—The Executive Committee of the English Liberation Society, at a late meeting, after expressing satisfaction at the statement of the colonial secretary that the government had decided on the withdrawal of ecclesiastical subsidies from Ceylon, declared themselves encouraged by this success to renew their efforts to secure the extinction of grants for ecclesiastical purposes in other crown-governed colonies.

LOTTERIES.—The Japan Mail reports that when application was made to the Japanese Government for permission to dispose by lottery of such articles as remained unsold at the National Exhibition, the authorities refused. The majority decided that it was a dangerous precedent, and the Government itself advanced the fifteen thousand yen necessary to cover the cost of the goods.

—Jennie Lind is only sixty years old and does not look fifty, her hair being but slightly touched with gray, her eyes still bright and happy, and her form well preserved. Her home in London is spacious and attractive. She retains warm memories of America, and has kindly welcomed and advised the young American singers who have sought her out.

—An advance guard of sixteen Jesuits, who have been expelled from the Republic of Nicaragua, have arrived in Panama and the others are expected shortly. They have been expelled on account of having stirred up, it is alleged, the Indian revolt last year and because they are regarded as dangerous to free institutions.

—Lady Burdett Coutts, of whom the gossips have written so much, is described as admirable for the singular sweetness and gentleness of her manners, as well as her boundless benovolence. There is hardly a charity in London, or in all England, which does not receive aid from her.

—As a speaker, the youthful King Alfonzo of Spain is called able, even in a country where oratorical gifts are prized, and predictions are made in London newspapers that he will ere long rank next to Queen Victoria as the most popular constitutional sovereign in Europe.

—The Duchess of Edinburgh lately said to somebody who wanted to sell her an expensive shawl: "I am not rich enough. Show it to the wife of one of my cooks." And she was right, for the cook has just purchased the hotel de Rhin, in Paris, for the sum of 1,200,000 francs.

—King Humbert, of Italy, anxious to pay his father's extraordinary debts, practices an economy unparalleled by a crowned head. Besides reducing the royal stud to a minimum and diminishing the court officials, he has tried to sell several of the royal palaces.

—Queen Victoria has authorized the publication of the musical works of the Prince Consort. In the dressing-room of the Prince Consort at Balmoral all remains as though he were alive. His hats and gloves are on tables and on the bed there is an effigy of him.

Books and Periodicals.

—Leaves of Life, poems by the late Francis Ridley Havergal, a beautiful little volume, containing some of the choicest gems of sacred poetry, from the pen of this gifted Christian author-ess, from the American Sunday-school Union, 122 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

—The Nineteenth Century, December 1881, George Munro, Publisher, New York, Issue 1. The Irish Juggling. 2. The Scotch land question. 3. Recent Phases of Indian Opphobia. 4. Balloon and Pope. 5. Opium and Common Sense. 6. Dean Stanley, as a Spiritual Teacher and Theologian. 7. Gossip of An Old Book Worm. 8. The Position of the Whigs. 9. Industrial Schools and the Home Office. 10. Vivisection. 11. Palms and Its Uses, by J. Sir James Pagét, Bart., 2. Professor Owen, C. B. F. R. S., 3. By Wilks, F. R. S.

—The Contemporary Review, December, 1881, George Munro, Publisher, New York, has the following articles: 1. Two Studies in Dante. 2. Evolution, Physical and Dialectic. 3. National Wealth and Expenditure. 4. Old and New Canons of Footical Criticism. 5. Common Place Fallacies Concerning Money. 6. The Austro-Italian Alliance. 7. A Missing Science. 8. Fair Trade and Free Trade, a dialogue. 9. The Greek Text of the New Testament.

—The Season—Lady's Illustrated Magazine—"This Journal does not treat of science or literature, but is full of graceful and artistic designs for every department of the toilette, and fancy needlework, embellished with colored plates, containing pattern sheet, price of complete monthly part thirty cents. United States News Company, 55 Chambers street, New York.

The Cottage Hearth for February has been received. An unusually interesting number of this finely illustrated monthly. Cottage Hearth Company, Boston. Price $1 50 a year.

Annual Conferences.

CONFERENCE.	PLACE.	BISHOP.	DATE.
Western	Howard City	Pierce	Sept. 7
Kentucky	Danville	Keener	Sept. 7
Missouri	Moberly	Pierce	Sept. 14
Indiana	Gosport	Keener	Sept. 14
Los Angeles	Carpenteria	Kavanaugh	Sept. 15
St. Louis	St. Johns	Pierce	Sept. 21
Illinois	Ashley	Keener	Sept. 21
S. W. Missouri	Springfield	Pierce	Sept. 28
Pacific	Petaluma	Kavanaugh	Sept. 28
Indian Mission	Caddo	Pierce	Oct. 5
Louisville	Owensboro	Keener	Oct. 12
Montana	Helena	Kavanaugh	Oct. 13
Arkansas	Dardenelle	Pierce	Oct. 19
Tennessee	Lebanon	McTyeire	Oct. 19
Holston	Wytheville	Wightman	Oct. 26
Denver	Denver	Kavanaugh	Oct. 27
Memphis	Ballvar	Paine	Nov. 9
N. W. Texas	Waxahatchie	Kavanaugh	Nov. 16
N. Georgia	Athens	McTyeire	Nov. 30
Virginia	Charlottsville	McTyeire	Nov. 16
N. Mississippi	Grenada	Paine	Nov. 16
West Texas	Gollad	Keener	Nov. 16
N. Carolina	Durham	Wightman	Nov. 23
N. Alabama	Huntsville	McTyeire	Nov. 23
Texas	Houston	Keener	Nov. 23
Alabama	Selma	Pierce	Nov. 30
North Texas	Greenville	Kavanaugh	Nov. 30
German	Houston	Keener	Nov. 30
South Georgia	Columbus	Wightman	Dec. 7
White River	Helee	McTyeire	Dec. 7
Mississippi	Brookhaven	Paine	Dec. 14
S. Carolina	Union	Pierce	Dec. 14
East Texas	Jacksonville	Kavanaugh	Dec. 14
Little Rock	Pine Bluff	McTyeire	Dec. 14
Louisiana	New Orleans	McTyeire	Jan. 4
Florida	Monticello	McTyeire	Jan. 12
Baltimore	Fredrickburg	McTyeire	Mar. 10

Bishop McTyeire has charge of the Missions in China and Brazil.

Bishop Keener has charge of the Missions in Mexico.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country, with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

THE BLUE-BOTTLE FLY.

Buzzing and gay in the early dawn,
Fresh from a nap on the parlor wall,
Out for a flight over garden and lawn,
Fearing no trouble and dreading no fall,
Came a fly;
A lively, frolicsom, blue-bottle fly;
And his feet
Were as neat,
And his style
As complete,
As his brain
Was replete
With the mischief that laughed in his eye!

"What glorious fun I'll have to-day,
When the baby's asleep and the nurse away;
When Rover lies by the kitchen door;
I'll wake them both and make them roar!
Oh, what larks!"
Cried the rollicking, reckless blue-bottle fly;
"What a cry,"
Said the fly,
"There will be
After me,
When I've done
With my fun!"
And the wickedly winked his wee eye!

"Then I'll go and dance on grandpa's head,
While he struggles to brush me away;
And tickle his ear till he'll wish I was dead;
And over the table at dinner I'll play
Back and forth,
And feast on crumbs from a freshly-baked pie!
And I'll sip
From the lip
Of each glass
That may pass
All sweet things
Dinner brings!"
Quoth this riotous blue-bottle fly.

But, alas for the plans he had laid!
And alas for the day just begun!
For this fly soon fell by the grateful shade
To escape the hot rays of the sun;
And to dream
Of the sights that should soon greet his eye;
When unseen,
From the green
Of a limb
Above him;
On his head,
By a thread,
Fell a spider,
Who coolly devoured that blue-bottle fly!

A motherly looking woman yesterday carefully handed the stamp clerk at the post office a letter marked "In haste," and inquired if there was any extra charge for writing that on. "Not a moment at all." "How soon will the letter go out?" "In about forty minutes." "No sooner than that?" "Well, we might hire a special train and get it out in about twenty minutes." "Would it be too much trouble?" "Oh! none at all." She thought for a moment, turned the letter over three or four times, and finally said: "I guess I won't ask you to hire a special train; but if you will be kind enough to telegraph my sister that I have written her a letter to tell her that I can't come till Monday, and to meet the depot to meet me, and that mother did not go to Toledo, after all, I shall be ever so much obliged. Good morning."

Clergymen, lawyers, physicians, farmers, merchants, business men, gentlemen of leisure and their women folk and their children all use Brown's Iron Bitters. It keeps them well.

A bright youth, undergoing examination a few days since, for admission to one of the departments, found himself confronted with the question: "What is the distance from the earth to the sun?" Not having the exact number of miles with him, he wrote in reply: "I am unable to state accurately; but don't believe the sun is near enough to interfere with a proper performance of my duties if I get this clerkship." He got it.

The great music house of P. Werlein continues to supply the world with musical instruments, and thousands of homes have been made happy by the possession of a piano or an organ through his low prices and astonishingly liberal terms. The name Werlein has become so identified with pianos that you hardly can think of pianos without thinking of Werlein's. Go and try him, and our word for it, you will be pleased.

The President has developed the highest qualities of constitutional statesmanship," were the words that Billie Mikhiades Marrowfat read from the paper he was holding, and then added: "What does that mean, Pop?" "It means, my boy," explained Mr. Marrowfat, "that the editor is probably a postmaster, and feels agreeably disappointed that he hasn't been turned out."

Beneficent nature seems to have planted in every clime the proper remedies for the diseases incidental to it. Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm is made of an herb which grows all over the Gulf region, and it has never failed yet to cure all kinds of coughs and colds.

Elder Sistor—"What did cook say when you told her that the children didn't like the soup, Biddy—"Sure, thin, and what 'ud it be but her soup that dropped in, and she thought the children 'ud have it was pipper?"

"Just take a bottle of my medicine," said a quack doctor to a consumptive, "and you'll never cough again." "Is it so fatal as that?" gasped the patient.

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

Arithmetic: How many perches are there in a chain of lakes?

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend for the next year and you will not regret it.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Farm, Garden and Flower Seeds!

DIRECT FROM THE FARM.

Warranted Fresh, Pure and Good, or money refunded.

Catalogue for 1882 free. Please send for it.

Address JOSEPH HARRIS,
Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y.

FOR ONE DOLLAR!

I will mail you, post paid, a package containing five quires (120 sheets) of very nice note paper, and five packages (125) of white or colored envelopes to your address. If ordered in quantity by express or freight, will make a reduction of twenty per cent. Postage stamps may be sent when preferred.

Address G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans, La.

Send for a dollar package and try it.

CHAPEL HILL ACADEMY,

MARSHALL COUNTY, TENN.

Opens the next session, the Sixteenth, under present principals, January 2, 1882. Course: English, Classics, Mathematics and Sciences. Thoroughness, Cheapness and Progress are all combined here. Efficient teachers employed, such as know how to teach, and are up with the spirit and progress of this age of Education. Entire expense, $70 to $80 per session of twenty weeks. Music by skillful teachers for $25 per session.

O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., editor Christian Advocate, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., of this school says: "Unsolicited, we speak a word in behalf of this school. The Chapel Hill community is one of the best in the country, the location is beautiful and healthful, and Prof. S. V. Wall is a teacher whose skill as an educator is only equaled by his qualities as a Christian gentleman. All of which we say because we know it to be so."

Pupils can enter at any time and will be charged only from time of entrance. Tri-weekly stage from Nashville to this place, distance forty miles south.

Address S. V. WALL, Principal,
Chapel Hill, Tenn.

FOR $2.50!

Mailed Postage Paid.

I have nineteen copies left of the

Complete Church Register,

Historical and Statistical, comprising: A General Index; An Alphabetical Register for Church Members; Register of Official Members, of Baptisms, Marriages and Deaths; Register of Annual, Quarterly and Church Conferences; Tables for Church Collections; and an Annual Summary of the Yearly Work and condition of the Church.

It is substantially bound in cloth, leather back, ruled and printed, size about 9x15 inches, over 200 pages, and no more can be had when this is disposed of. Original price $4. All in perfect order.

Address G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

W. F. MELLEN,

Attorney at Law,

12 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,

RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,
220 Jackson St., bet. Chestnut and Coliseum,
NEW ORLEANS.
Office Hours—Eight A. M., and three to four P. M.

SEND 25 CENTS

For a copy of the new

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Mailed post-paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,

MONUMENTS.

Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,

MARBLE, SLATE,

And Iron Mantels and Grates,

111, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans.

CHURCH'S

MUSICAL VISITOR,

AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF MUSIC.

Every number contains 32 large pages filled with Musical Sketches, Original Articles, Criticisms, Poetry, Notes, Musical News; and five to ten pages of New Music. Every subscriber receives free, the choice of 10 Elegant Premium Volumes!

Each premium contains 32 pages of Sheet Music. Full particulars and list of contents of premiums sent on application.

Subscription only $1.50 a Year.

Agents Wanted in every Town and City, to whom a liberal commission will be paid.

Circulars, blanks, etc., supplied free.

☞ Send Stamp for Sample Copy.

PUBLISHED BY

JOHN CHURCH & CO.,

New York Office, 5 Union Square. | CINCINNATI, O.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION DEPOSITORY.

With a full line of Question Books, Catechisms, Hymn Books, Class Books, Library Books, Reports, and everything needed in the Sunday-school. Send for catalogue.

Also Sankey & Bliss' Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs, Teachers' Bibles, Concordances, Bible Dictionaries, Commentaries, etc., at the Depository.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

Indian Turnip

COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by H. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Royal or Chartres street. And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co. Augusta, Maine.

Agricultural.

LIME ON SOILS.—Prof. E. W. Hilgard, now of California, is deservedly prominent as a first-class authority in scientific matters, particularly such as relate to soils, etc. In his recent discussion on the "Objects and Interpretation of Soil-Analysis, he sets forth the advantages resulting from an adequate supply of lime on soils, and we work his showings down to "nut shell" proportions as follows:

1. Plenty of lime gives a more rapid transformation of vegetable matter into active humus, which manifests itself by a dark or deep black tint of the soil.

2. It favors the retentions of such humus against oxidizing influences of hot climates; witness the high humus percentages of such soils, as against all others, in the Southern States.

3. There can really be no humus without lime, and humus is necessary for the existence of phosphoric acid and potash so that, in the case of deficiency or absence of lime, the soil is practically sterile.

4. Lime tends to secure the proper maintenance of the conditions of nitrification, whereby the inert nitrogen of the soil is rendered available.

5. It exerts a most important physical action on the flocculations, and therefore on the tillibility of the soil.

Prof. Hilgard goes on to state that in the majority of the soils excepting those that are extremely sandy, the lime percentage is greater in the subsoil than in the surface soil. This is, doubtless, he explains; the result of the easy solubility of calcic carbonate in the soil water, which carries it downward and thus tends to deplete the surface soil. This fact is strikingly shown in the results of Loughridge's investigation on the composition of the several sediments. The efficacy of liming in preventing "running-to-weed" of cotton, and in favoring the production of fruit, is conspicuously shown in a number of cases.—Mobile Register.

CARE OF SHEEP.—The new Breeder's Gazette, of Chicago, deals in plain talk. It says the man who seeks to become a flock-owner, because he expects to escape the care and work to which he has been subjected in looking after the details of some other business, will certainly meet with disappointment in one of two ways. He will either find that negligence here, as everywhere else, will bring disappointment and disaster, or he will meet the requirements of the situation, and put in all the time and labor necessary to success. The merit of sheep husbandry is, not that it can be successful prosecuted without hard work and liberal expenditures; but that it will pay for these with so much certainty, and in such liberal returns, as to give it merited prominence among the industries. The man who seeks to demonstrate to himself and others the minimum requirements of the flock, may succeed until mistaken economy becomes manifest cruelty, and even then may "gather where he has not strewn;" but the highest capabilities of the flock will be left to the demonstration of the man who supplements the well-filled trough and teeming pasture, with a careful scrutiny and foresight into the comfort and convenience of every animal. He will have provision against inclemencies of cold and heat, wet and drought; will have winter and summer food convenient and plentiful; will carefully guard against danger and disturbance from every source—knowing from experience that these will ensure a compound return for the time and money required for their consummation. Parsimony never pays the sheep husbandman. In proportion to his liberality "such will the harvest be."

THE HORSE-SHOE.—The number and disposition of the nails depend upon the kind of shoe. For speed and light draft, from five to seven may be employed, while for heavy horses and for heavy draft the number may be increased. Where few nails are used they should be more widely distributed than is usually the custom. When it is remembered that the introduction of every nail is so much injury to the structures of the foot, it will be readily seen that the smaller the number requisite for the purpose the better for the animal. In driving the nails, it is essential that a thick short hold of the crust should be had, rather than a long thin one. Not only is the shoe thus held more firmly, but there is a probability that the nail holes may by the downward growth of the horn, be removed at the next shoeing, which in most cases should not exceed an interval of four or five weeks. The points of the nails should be shortened to just that length which will permit them to be turned over and hammered down smoothly, with perhaps the least possible rasping. The common method of rasping notches for the extremeties of the nails is not advisable. In fact, as I have already said, the rasp should never be used upon the external walls of the hoof except in cases of absolute necessity to prevent striking of the opposite limb. Its use destroys the natural polish, exposes parts beneath which are not fitted for such exposure, and renders the horn brittle, and liable at any moment to quarter cracks and other maladies.—American Agriculturist.

COTTON SEED.—The people are beginning to wake up on the subject of the value of cotton seed, but as yet scarcely more than the "a, b, c," of the subject has been reached. Cotton seed is becoming an important article of commerce, though, according to the best authorities, even but a very small proportion of it is being utilized, up to this time; the remainder is wasted. In a recent communication to the New York Herald, Mr. Edward Atkinson says of cotton seed that its value is still unknown, so to speak. If the entire crop was treated, as a small portion is now treated, the result would be wonderful. From a crop of 6,000,000 bales, which will be about the figure this year, there will be, after reserving enough for another year's planting, 3,000,000 tons of cotton seed. From this can be produced 90,000,000 gallons of oil, 1,300,000 tons of oil-cake, 1,500,000 tons of hulls, from which there is every reason to suppose, from recent experiments, 750,000 tons of paper may be made; otherwise, these hulls may be converted into oil-cake for food for stock, making in all 2,800,000 tons of that product. Each ton of this ground meal will carry at least five sheep six months; the rest of the year they would have ample food from the annual grasses that are the pest of the cotton planter, or from corn fodder, cow peas, or other refuse and fertilizing crops; in other words, what is now wasted at the cotton gin and the cotton press would be sufficient to maintain from 14,000,000 to 20,000,000 sheep, which would enrich instead of impoverish the soil.—Mobile Register.

HOME-MADE FERTILIZERS.—While the feeling in favor of special crops is inclined to be dying out, there are still many strong and earnest advocates of their proficiency and necessity. Messrs. Harrison Bros. & Co., of Philadelphia, stand prominent among those advocates. They have just issued a pamphlet setting forth the value of special fertilizers, and telling how the farmer may make many of them at home. From it we fix up the following formulas:

For potatoes—Irish or sweet—work well together sulphate of potash, 550 pounds; sulphate of ammonia, 200 pounds; ground bone, 100 pounds; oil of vitrol, 40 pounds; land plaster, 120 pounds; sulphate of soda, 40 pounds; making in all 1,050 pounds.

For onions—sulphate of ammonia, 120 pounds; ground bones, 150 pounds; oil of vitrol, 60 pounds; sulphate of potash, 250 pounds; land plaster, 120 pounds; making in all 800 pounds.

For turnips—Ground bone, 100 pounds; oil of vitrol, 40 pounds; sulphate of ammonia, 275 pounds; sulphate of potash, 600 pounds; land plaster, 150 pounds; sulphate of soda, 35 pounds; the total amount being 1,200 pounds.

For peas—Muriate of potash, 90 pounds; sulphate of ammonia, 250 pounds; ground bones, 100 pounds; oil of vitrol, 40 pounds; sulphate of soda, 60 pounds; land plaster, 160 pounds; making in all 700 pounds.—Mobile Register.

PROFITABLE POULTRY.—The Chicago Times discourses at length on the subject of "Profit in Poultry." It says that success in keeping poultry largely depends on having a good location. A farmer who lives a long distance from a large town will derive a little profit from sending fowls to market, as the cost of packages, expressage, and commissions will be large. He will however, find fowls profitable to raise for the supply of his own table, as there is difficulty in procuring fresh meat on farms during the warm months of the year. Generally, a farmer will do better by using the poultry raised at home, and sending more beef and pork to market. Fowls to sell well must present a fine condition when they are exposed for sale. They should not be dressed long before they are offered to customers. By dressing them at home, the feathers may be saved, and they will be quite an object where a large number of fowls are killed on a place. Turkeys and geese are more profitable to supply a distant market than chickens. The former are more in demand during cold weather, when poultry can be shipped to the best advantage and at the least cost. Turkeys are not in good condition to eat in the summer, and geese are most desirable during quite cold weather, as they contain much oil. Chickens are harder to transport than turkeys and geese, and are preferred for eating during warm weather.

RAW POTATOES.—Pigs, says a writer, will not always eat, and never can be fattened upon raw potatoes, while, if they are boiled, next to boiled peas, perhaps, will bring them to the greatest weight they are capable of attaining, and to greater perfection than anything else that may be continuously used with safety, admitting that three to four weeks' feeding upon corn, oats or barley is necessary to make the pork firm and impart flavor. It is the experience of very successful pork raisers that one bushel of corn meal mixed with four bushels of boiled potatoes gives a very satisfactory feed for pigs.

THEORIES.—Too much hollow and rapid advice is given to farmers in essays which tell them to use their brains. A writer who has never seen a farm—even a girl in a public school can write a "piece" advising farmers to be intellectual and brainy. The thing newspaper editors should do who write about farming topics is to give the latest practical hints. We do not write or quote long-winded theories, and are always thankful when we find a thorough going article about how to do anything on the farm.

TO PREVENT CATTLE FROM JUMPING.—A way to stop an unruly cow or steer from jumping—nail a common horse-shoe to one forward foot. This prevents the hoof from spreading, and consequently renders the animal unable to spring. This is claimed to be very effectual. It often happens that the best cow of a dairy will get into the habit of jumping into the meadow or corn-field when nobody is around to drive her out.

A PROFITABLE ACRE.—Waldo, says, in the Ohio Farmer, that he remembers one year making a very large profit from an acre of land managed in this way: He first grew a crop of Tom Thumb peas, with matured in time for cucumbers for pickles, and then he grew 500 bushels of turnips, sowed broadcast among the cucumbers. He found that these crops will mature without crowding each other if properly managed.

FARM STOCK.—Good stock can not be secured without care and attention. The ordinary farmer does not concern himself about pedigrees in his own stock, but he does care about the cattle he raises. Accordingly he should see that what he raises are from pure bred male animals and then that they are properly fed.—Home and Farm.

The Gardner's Chronicle says: "Pulverized fresh lime will effectually drive earth-worms from lawns. The lime also kills moss, which is so troublesome on old lawns, often destroying large patches of grass, and so sadly interfering with mowing. Mix the lime with twice its bulk of fine soil. Leached wood ashes we have found better than soil for mixing with lime."

BRAN FOR CATTLE.—It is claimed by some feeders that ten pounds of corn meal and ten pounds of bran mixed will give a greater gain in flesh than 200 pounds of meal fed alone. Meal and bran mixed is more perfect food than meal alone. Bran contains a larger percentage of phosphoric acid, potash, and nitrogen than Indian meal, while the latter contains more oil, sugar, and starch than the former.

PLANTING SEED.—The dryer the soil the deeper the seed must be planted. A common rule is to cover seeds with from three to five times their diameter of soil. Two inches is sufficient for wheat unless the soil is very dry. Grass seed will not bear more than half an inch and should never be harrowed in. Cover with a fine brush or roller.

More experienced gardeners condemn the practice of planting celery in trenches. It should be planted in rows four feet apart, and six inches apart in the row. If the transplanting can not be done in cloudy weather, it is better to do it after sunset, using great care to press the earth closely round the plants. Use water freely.

Household.

BEST WAY OF PACKING BUTTER.—Mr. X. A. Willard, in the report of the Vermont Dairymen's Association, has this to say in regard to the proper packing of butter:

Butter, to keep well for any considerable time, must be excluded, as far as possible, from the air. The usual way of packing in tubs and casks will not do this in as perfect a manner as is required to insure nice, fresh flavor. A better way is to surround the butter with brine on the plan of the white packages. In this plan the tub is made very much in the form of the old Welsh tub, except that it is more tappering The staves are heavy, and heads are provided at both ends, so as to make a package that will not leak. In packing, the tub is turned on the small end, and a sack of cotton cloth is made to fit the tub, and into this the butter is packed until it reaches to within an inch of the groove for holding the upper head. A cloth is now laid upon the top of the butter, and the edges of the sack brought over this and neatly pressed down; then the head is put in its place and the hoops driven home. The package is now turned upon the large end, and the sack of butter drops down, leaving a space on the sides and top. Strong brine is now poured through a hole in the small end until it will float the butter. The hole is tightly corked, and the butter is pretty effectually excluded from the air. Butter put up in this way—I know from actual experiment—will keep a year in sound condition, and I believe, would cross the Atlantic, and open as fresh in the London market as when it left the dairy on this side. Experiments have been made in sending butter from California to our Eastern markets packed in brine, and it came in prime, fresh condition, and altogether superior to the same kind of butter put in dry packages.

Those who are fond of pumpkin pies will be interested in what an exchange says about the mode of drying them for winter use:

We have tried all modes of drying, but no plan is equal, we think, to this: Take the ripe pumpkins, pare, cut into small pieces, stew soft, mash and strain through a colander, as if for making pies. Spread this pulp on plates in layers not quite an inch thick; dry it down in the stove oven, kept at so slow a temperature as not to scorch it. In about a day it will become dry and crisp. The sheets thus made can be stored away in a dry place, and they are always ready for use for pies or sauce. Soak the piece over night in a little milk, and it will return to nice pulp, as delicious as a fresh pumpkin—we think much more so. The quick drying, after cooking prevents any portion from slightly souring as is always the case when the uncooked pieces are dried; the flavor is much better preserved, and the after cooking is saved.

OYSTER SALAD.—One quart of oysters, one pint of celery, one third of a cupful of mayonnaise dressing, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one of oil, half a teaspoonful of salt, one-eight of a teaspoonful of pepper, one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Let the oysters come to a boil in their own liquor. Skim well and drain. Season them with the oil, salt, pepper, vinegar, and lemon juice. When cold put in the ice-chest for two hours. Scrape and wash the whitest tenderest part of the celery, and with a sharp knife cut in very thin slices. Put in a bowl with a large lump of ice, and set in the ice-chest until serving time. When ready to serve, drain the celery and mix with the oysters, and half of the dressing. Arrange in the dish, pour the remainder of the dressing over, and garnish with white celery leaves.

PREPARING CREAM.—Chop fine one and one-half ounce of sweet almonds; mix with one quart of thick sweet cream and one half pound of sugar; add a few drops of almond extract; the almonds should, of course, first be blanched by pouring hot water on them, when the brown skin will slip off easily; cut one ounce of citron in thin slices, and stir in with the almonds and sugar; freeze like ice-cream; when ready to serve, dip a towel in boiling water and put around the freezer; repeat this until the cream will slip from it, and you can then cut in slices.

STEWED MUSHROOMS.—Take a quart of fresh mushrooms, peel them and cut off the lower part of the stem, season them with a little pepper and salt, put into a skillet, with a lump of butter the size of an egg and sufficient cream or rich milk to cover them. Put on the lid and stew about quarter of an hour, keeping them well covered, or the flavor will evaporate. Some like the addition of one or two beaten eggs. Stir the eggs gradually into the stew after it is taken from the fire. Send it to table in a covered dish. We always cook a piece of silver with them; if any are not genuine the silver will turn black.

CHEAP GINGER CAKE.—One teacup of brown sugar, one of molasses, two light tablespoonfuls of lard or clarified drippings and two eggs, all beaten well together; then add a teacup of milk, two tablespoonfuls of ground ginger, a saltspoonful of mace and one of cloves; three cups of flour and a heaping teaspoonful of baking-powder. Pour immediately into a hot well-greased, large baking-pan and bake in a quick oven.

ESCALOPED CAULIFLOWER.—Cook the cauliflower one hour in salt and water, drain, and break apart. Put a layer of the cauliflower in an escalop dish, moisten it with Bechamel or cream sauce, and sprinkle in a little grated cheese. Put in another layer of cauliflower, and continue as directed before until all the vegetable is used. There should be two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese and one pint of sauce to each head of cauliflower. Cover with bread crumbs and cheese, and dot with bits of butter. Bake half an hour in a moderate oven.

APPLE PIE.—Pool and core one pound of apples, place them in a stewpan with eight ounces of sugar and a pinch of ground nutmeg. Let cook until tender; pass the apples through a sieve and let get cold. Whisk up rather stiff half a pint of cream, add the apple pulp, a little essence of lemon, one ounce of isinglass boiled in a gill of water, mix well together; pour into a jelly mold and let set. When required dip the mold into warm water for half a minute, wipe it with a cloth and turn it out on a glass or silver dish. Garnish with red flowers and slices of lemon.

HICKORY NUT COOKIES.—Two cups of sugar, one-half cup butter, two eggs, six tablespoons milk, one teaspoon cream tartar, half teaspoon soda, one cup chopped hickory nut meats.

Scientific.

—South Carolina now has 3,057 schools, with 3,249 teachers and 133,458 pupils. Of these pupils 72,119 are colored; of the teachers 1,223 are colored. As compared with the previous year, 1879-80, there is an increase of eighty-four in the schools, and of seventy-eight in the number of teachers. The school fund amounts to $420,000. The average monthly wages paid to male teachers are $25 45; to female teachers $21 48. The consolidated report of the male and female colleges of the State shows an attendance of 1,810 students. Claflin University for colored students has had the largest number—390. The high schools and academies report an attendance of 2,838 pupils. The State superintendent says that the prejudice against free public schools is diminishing, that educational questions are now actively discussed in the South Carolina newspapers, and that institutes—one for white and one for colored teachers—were successfully held in the past year. The Normal department of Claflin University has contributed some excellent colored teachers to the schools.

—Some of the most eminent of the academical teachers of medicine in Russia have given a deliberate preference in choosing assistants to certain ladies, who have given proof of genuine scientific attainments, both in practice and literature. During the last few years the members of female students of the medical faculty have risen to 400. The reactionary party believes or feigns to believe that the education of a women as a physicim is almost one and the same thing as converting her into a Nihilist, and it is pressing for government interference with the admission of women to the medical course. The new war minister has "advised" (possibly means commanded) the professors to dismiss all their female assistants, and to employ men; and in the military hospitals orders are given to exclude women students.

—The opposition of college faculties to secret societies has resulted in a lawsuit. A boy who belonged to one of the "Greek letters" applied for admission to Purdue College, in Indiana. The faculty, before receiving him, requested that he should pledge himself to sever his connection with the secret organization. He declined. Then they refused to take him as a student. He applied to the courts to compel his admission, on the ground that he was a taxpayer, of sound mind and body, and had tendered the usual fees in such cases made and provided. The court, however, ruled that the faculty had the right to take the ground they did, and added, suggestively, that the success of the college could be maintained without the secret societies.

—Aside from the $65,000 income from the Porter fund, the Academical Department of Yale received last year $151,572 45. Its expenses were $140,-733 52. Theological Department, with an income of $27,659 38, expended $25,-967 11. The Sheffield Scientific School is so flourishing that the salaries of its professors, which for several years have been materially curtailed, are to be restored. President Porter's report shows that all the departments are prosperous, but that the Academical Department, nevertheless, needs new dormitories, increased endowments for professorships, and an increase in scholarship funds.

—Colby University, Waterville, Me., has an attendance of 132 students. The college library contains 17,500 volumes and 8,000 pamphlets, and additions are made from the income of the library fund and from the Keely Memorial Fund, established by the alumni. Hon. J. Warren Merrill has authorized the president to offer, upon certain conditions, to students needing aid who may enter the university next year, a special prize, to be given to the one who, upon the competitive examinations, shall be found to be exceptionally well fitted for college. The prize, with the ordinary university prize, will secure to its possessor an annual income of $182 to $728 for the entire course.

—Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., is growing in number and is very prosperous. The freshman class is larger than usual; and the prize for the large prize for superior scholarship by G. I. Seney has awakened a general interest and a more thorough preparation for earnest work. Dr. Beach has already secured $70,000 of the $100,000, and has received another $100,000 from Mr. Seney to the endowment fund.

—Zion's Herald says: "Greenwich Academy issues a very bashful calendar. It is just the thing for the desk, and is ornamented with a fine picture of the attractive suite of academic buildings, so well situated on the beautiful bill of Seisuite, overlooking Narragansett Bay. Any one sending a postal card requesting one can have it." We recently gave a wrong impression about the number of boarders, which is not twenty-nine but eighty-one.

—Archbishop Heiss, of Milwaukee, in obedience to a general order from Rome, has ordered the clergy of the city to require a year's attendance at a church parochial school of all applicants for confirmation. The Catholic Church has a strong hold upon its people in this country; but it is doubtful if it can bear the strain of a general attempt to enforce this order.

—Professor Sumner, of Yale, has given notice that the Colton Club medal awarded for excellence in political economy will be open for competition this year and there will be an examination in June. This is one of a number of medals given by this Colton Club to the principal universities throughout the world, to promote the study of economics.

—Cyrus W. Field has proposed to erect at Williams College a memorial window to the memory of the late President. There is also a plan to found a memorial professorship. The popularity of her great alumnus, doubtless, had something to do with the increased number of students this year. Williams needs a liberal endowment and deserves it too.

—President Burns, of the Central Ohio Teachers' Association, complains that with hosts of the children in his State no direct sustained effort is made either at school or at home to have them form the reading habit—or at least the habit of reading what will be best for them.

—Princeton Theological Seminary has forty men in each of the upper classes and thirty-five in the junior. The accession of Dr. Francis L. Patton to its faculty will probably mark an era in its history, if not in the history of theological development in the Presbyterian Church. He will be inaugurated October 27.

—The school authorities at Washington, D. C., by a vote of 17 to 3, have decided against the admission of colored children to the schools attended by white children.

EDUCATIONAL.

East Mississippi Female College.

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.

One of the most accessible and prosperous schools in the South. Its facilities, course of study, system and faculty are superior. It is a growing and popular institution under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"It has developed into great usefulness, and has established itself in the hearts and confidence of the people."—Mississippi Conference.

"The college is finely located to command a large patronage, and its management has been such as to secure the confidence of the people. It is an institution that deserves the liberal support and patronage of the Methodists of Mississippi."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Send for catalogue and examine terms!

Whitworth Female College,

BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.

Will re-open September 21, 1881. Number of pupils last term, 291. Number of teachers 18. Board per half academic year, $80; Tuition from $15 to $25; Incidental Fees from $1 to $4.

The languages, ancient and modern, mathematics, the sciences, music, drawing and painting thoroughly taught.

The continued success of this school is its best indorsement. There has not been a death in the college for years past. Send for a catalogue.

H. F. JOHNSON, A. M., D. D., President.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Session 1881-82.

THE Academic, Biblical and Law Departments open September 1. The Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Departments open October 1.

The fees are as follows: Academic Department, $65; Biblical, $15; Law, $100; Medical, $65; Dental, $90; Pharmaceutical, $65.

Ten scholarships, worth $100 each, were awarded to meritorious students at the close of the last session. Four Graduate Fellowships, worth $300 each, and two Post-graduate Fellowships, worth $500, each, were likewise conferred.

The various Chairs of the University are filled by forty Professors and Instructors. Six hundred and thirty-two students, from twenty-one States, were matriculated last year.

For the ANNUAL REGISTER, or further information, address J. M. Leech, Secretary of the Faculty, or L. C. GARLAND, Chancellor.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kneringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

The Fall Session will begin September 15, 1881.

Send for catalogue to

REV. E. E. WILEY, D. D., President.

Millwood Female Institute,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Founded 1866. Chartered 1870.

This school opens the first Monday of September, 1881, with efficient accomplished teachers in every department.

Expenses, per session of five months, including Tuition, Board and Washing, $75.

Music on Piano or Guitar, with use of instrument and class singing, $25.

For further particulars send for catalogue.

MISS McCALMONT, Principal.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin October 5, 1881.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Principal. J. B. MAGRUDER A. M. Assistant.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Session 1880-81 had 137 students, six professors and teachers and three A. B. graduates. The entire expenses for board and tuition for scholastic year need not exceed $141 in Preparatory department, nor $164 in College classes. Next session begins September 5, 1881. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,

HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

The thirty-second year begins August 31. A more healthy location can not be found. The College was never in a more prosperous condition. A full Faculty of thorough teachers, splendid buildings and a complete outfit for all departments, literary, music, languages and art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Prices reduced to suit the times. Special inducements offered. For terms and new catalogues address

REV. A. B. JONES, A. M., President.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy,

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Next session opens September 21, 1881. The services of experienced and successful teachers secured. Buildings undergoing necessary repairs. Every room being thoroughly renovated, and newly and handsomely furnished. No pains will be spared to give entire satisfaction. For further information address, Rev. T. C. BRADFORTH, President. Port Gibson, Miss.

READYILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

Will open on the first Monday in October. For terms and circulars, address,

MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,

GREENSBORO, ALA.

The next session will open on the first Wednesday in October next, with full corps of able, experienced instructors. Course of study extensive and thorough. Expenses moderate, $175, in advance, will pay Board and Tuition in University classes for the entire scholastic year. $135 $150 in Preparatory department. Health record almost unrivaled. Situated fifty miles from Selma, on the Selma and Greensboro railroad. For catalogue and further information, address

REV. J. LEWIS, D. D., Chancellor.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE

Female College,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The next session of this school will open on Monday, September 19, 1881. We ask attention to the following points:

I. Our curriculum embraces a good course of study which we teach thoroughly.

II. We are prepared to satisfy the most cultivated taste in the departments of Music and Art.

III. We employ the best teaching talent within the range of our knowledge.

IV. We keep a good table in the College Boarding Department.

V. This school has a health record which is unsurpassed.

VI. Our charges are as moderate as they can be made without marring the best results in culture.

For full information, send for catalogue.

JOHN MASSEY, President, Tuskegee, Ala.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded in 1849, offers superior advantages and healthy retreat.

The MALE DEPARTMENT is located in a quiet farming community, seven miles from Sweetwater East Tenn., Va. and Ga. R. R.

The FEMALE DEPARTMENT is located in the model town of Sweetwater, in a lovely section.

Experienced teachers, good work and low charges in both departments. Patronage merited.

For particulars address

REV. J. H. BRUNNER, D. D., Hiwassee College, Tenn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

In the South-west is now in stock and ready to fill all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at sho notice, and prices guaranteed as low as they can t had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application.

Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CAHL BELLS,

ndergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Offers quoted on application.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

E. T. LATHROP,

New Orleans.

FRED. N. OGDEN, BENJ. D. L. RAYNE

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

NEW GOODS.

GREAT REDUCTION IN

CARPETS,

Tapestry Brussels,

Seventy Cents a yard up to $1.05.

Willton, Axminsters, Velvets, Moquettes, Brussels, Ingrains, Three Plys, Window Shades, Lace Curtains, Cocoa, Napier and China Matting, Turkish Rugs, Crumb Cloths, Rugs and Mats in great variety.

A. BROUSSEAU'S SON,

17 Chartres St.

Call and see for yourself.

S. K. RUSS,

—WITH—

Ayers, Richard & Co.,

WHOLESALE GROCERS

—AND—

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

74, 76 Magazine, 88, 90, 92 Poydras St.

NEW ORLEANS.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,

P. O. Box, 598, New York.

Christian Advocate.

Plain Speaking.

One will not be ashamed of what to him is real vital truth. Talking and acting religion timorously and mincingly, instead of in a plain, manly way, has made skeptics accuse Christians of not believing what they profess, and ministers of not believing what they preach.

Mr. Hastings, of the Christian Publishing Company, related some time since the following incident of an interesting winter in Troy, New York, about thirty years ago:

The pastor of one of the churches there became dissatisfied with his own religious life, and the religious life of his people, and entirely changed the style of his sermons. Instead of "prophesying" smoothly, as he felt that he had done, he began to speak boldly. Instead of paraphrasing the gospel timidly and cautiously, he began to preach it plainly.

This direct way of working cost him something at first; and terrified his careful friends. But it was only because it was new. The result was as full of blessing as was the result of the great change in the preaching of Chalmers. Idling Christians became wide-awake and busy, and wicked men forsook their ungodly ways. The first movers called the laggards forward, and those who felt the love of God strong within them visited their neighbors to bid them "come."

Two of those visitors called at the office of an eminent lawyer, a man who had long been a professed follower of Christ, and a church officer, but who had buried his active piety in the business cares of business. They waited some time, seeing him very much occupied, and then arose to leave without urging their errand.

"Don't go," he said, looking up from his writing. "I'll be with you directly."

Very soon after he laid down his pen, and locking the office door sat down beside them.

"I know what you have come for," he said, "and I can fancy what your thoughts are. The tempter tells you, now that Mr. C. is an elder, and a very busy lawyer. You are younger than he. Be modest, and handle it carefully. My friends, I want you to be no such thing, but tell me honestly just what you think of J. P. C. since he entered the matter."

Well, then," said one, "since you encourage us to be frank, I think J. P. C. more anxious to be an eminent lawyer than he is to be an eminent Christian."

"True," exclaimed the lawyer.

After that there could of course, be no restraint or reserve between him and his visitors. They kindly talked over the consequencies with him; and at last he charged them not to forget him in their prayers.

From that hour Lawyer C.'s professional ambition was chastened and made subsecondary to his zeal for Christ. He lived a bright example of fidelity and godly devotion. The Christian friends who had spoken so faithfully to him seemed peculiarly dear to him ever afterwards. He not only respected them for their plainness, but treated them as loving brothers.—Watchman.

The Writers of the Bible.

Moses wrote Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy. Joshua, Phinehas or Eleazar wrote the book of Joshua; but it is not certain of them. Samuel is the penman of the books of Judges and Ruth. He wrote the first acts of David; and probably Nathan and Gad wrote his acts, and the whole was formed into two books, which were named after Samuel, as the most eminent person, of the first and second books of Samuel. Jeremiah most probably compiled the two books of Kings. Ezra compiled the two books of the Chronicles. He is also author of the book bearing his name. Nehemiah wrote his own. The author of the book of Esther is unknown. Elihu was most probably the penman of the book of Job. Moses may have written the first five Psalters and the last. Some think David wrote all the book of Psalms. Asaph penned a few of them. Solomon wrote Proverbs, Ecclesiastes and the songs of Solomon. Isaiah is the author of the prophecy of Isaiah. Jeremiah wrote the book bearing his name and the Lamentations of Jeremiah. Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, probably Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai and Zechariah wrote the books of the prophecies bearing their respective names. Matthew, Mark, Luke and John wrote the Gospels named after them. Luke wrote the Acts of the Apostles. Paul is the author of the Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians, Timothy, Titus, Philemon and Hebrews. James, the son of Alpheus, who was consin-german to Christ, and one of the Apostles, wrote the Epistle of James. The apostle John wrote the three Epistles of John. Jude, the apostle, the brother of James, called Lebbeus, whose surname was Thaddeus, a near relative of our Lord, wrote the Epistle of Jude. St. John, the divine, wrote the Revelations.

Summer in Norway.

BY H. H.

In the Norway summer one comes gradually to yearn for a little Christian darkness to go to bed by; much as he may crave a stronger sun by day to warm him warm, he would like to have reasonable night-time for sleeping. At first there is a stimulus and a wicked sort of triumphant sense of outwitting nature in finding oneself able to read or write by the sun's light until nearly midnight of the clock. But presently it becomes clear that the outwitting is on the other side. What avails it that there is light enough for one to write by at ten o'clock at night if he is tired and does not want to write, and longs for nothing but to go to sleep? If it were dark and he longed to write, nothing would be easier than to light candles and write all night if he chose and could pay for his candles. But neither money nor ingenuity can compass for him a normal darkness to sleep in. The Norwegian house is one all window: in their long winters they need all the sun they can get: not an outside blind, not an inside shutter, not a dark shade to be seen; streaming, ceiling, radiating in and round about the rooms, comes the light, welcome or unwelcome, early or late. And to the words "early" and "late" there are in Norway summer new meanings: the early light of the summer morning sets in about half-past two; the late light of a summer evening fades into an inadequate twilight about eleven. Enjoyment of this species of perpetual day soon comes to an end. After the traveler has written home to everybody once by broad daylight at ten o'clock, the fun of the thing is over; normal sleepiness begins to hunger for its rights, and dissatisfaction takes the place of wondering amusement. This dissatisfaction reaches its climax in a few days; then, if he is wise, the traveler provides himself with several pieces of dark green cambric, which he pins up at his windows at bed-time, thereby making it possible to get seven or eight hours' rest for his tired eyes. But the green cambric will not shut out sounds; and he is lucky if he is not kept awake until one or two o'clock every night by the unceasing tread and loud chatter of the cheerful Norwegians, who have been forced to form the habit of sitting up half their night-time to get in the course of a year their full quota of day-time.—Atlantic.

INTERCESSION.—If we love our heavenly Father there is a gentle constraint upon us to hunger for his glory; and souls are his honor, and sin his dishonor. Now, we may not be able to preach, or to write books, or to traverse distant lands as missionaries, or to give money to send others there. It may be little, indeed, that of ourselves and by our actions we can do for God's glory or conversion of souls. But intercession reaches everywhere. Neither time nor place bound it. Wherever grace can come prayer can reach. We hear of some land where God's glory is endangered; or, again, we read with burning eyes and heart of the spiritual destitution of the slaves or aborigines in certain countries. We may be the weakest and most obscure among God's children, yet we can reach all this by intercession, and reach it, too, with efficacy and power. We may work for it without interruption; our ordinary actions may go to it; we may do more than all the embassadors and legates that ever were, and yet not for an hour be distracted from our profession or our trade. We shall never know, till it meets us at the judgment—a goodly show, a beautiful vision—how much glory we have thus gained for God, without cost, without toil, almost without advertence, yet with such infinite and eternal recompense. Do at least as much as this: intercede for those who are being tempted with the same temptation as yourself. Intercession can shut up casinos, take away licenses of taverns, discountenance races, draw betting offices down to bankruptcy, and ruin unspeakable haunts of sin. If we can do such an immense work for Jesus with scarcely any trouble to ourselves, can we think to love him if we are not doing it?—F. W. Faber, D. D.

THE DEMAND FOR CANARIES.—The canary-bird season is, at present, at its height. The "crop" of birds raised in the Hartz Mountains is an abundant one this year, and it is expected that the peasants will raise fewer birds next year, in order to put up the price. This week ordinary birds are selling here at $18 a dozen. A little later the price will be raised to $24, and perhaps higher, as the season advances and the expense of keeping the birds accumulates. Mr. Reiche, who has catered to the public taste for tigers, elephants, and the like, and who has 40,000 canaries in his shop now, claims the credit of having educated the people to an appreciation of the canary bird. When he began business, in 1847, only 1,500 or 1,800 birds could be sold a year. Now his annual sales reach 80,000, and other dealers sell 25,000. It is estimated that at least one person in fifty throughout the country has a canary bird. Mr. Reiche also says that when he came here flowers were rarely seen in houses, while now they are frequently found; and he thinks that this love of flowers has been inculcated to some extent by the taste for canary birds, for which he claims credit. About five per cent. of the birds shipped from Germany are expected to prove a loss. There is hardly any demand here for the finer birds, which sell in Europe for $25 each or thereabouts.—New York Tribune.

SILENCE ABOUT OURSELVES.—Think as little as possibly about any good in yourself; turn your eyes resolutely from any view of your acquirements, your influence, your plan, your success, your following above all, speak as little as possible about yourself. The inordinateness of our self love makes speech about ourselves like the putting of a lighted torch to the dry wood which has been laid in order for burning. Nothing but duty should open our lips upon this dangerous theme, except it be in humble confession of our sinfulness before God.

Again, be specially upon the watch against those little tricks by which the vain mind seeks to bring round the conversation to himself, and gain the praise or notice which his thirsty ears drink in so greedily. Even if praise comes unsought, it is well, while men are uttering it, to guard yourself by thinking of some secret cause for humbling yourself inwardly to God, thinking into what those pleasant accents would be changed if all that is known to God, and even to yourself, stood revealed to man.

Place yourself often beneath the cross of Calvary; see that sight of love and sorrow; hear those words of wonder; look at the Eternal Son humbling himself there for you, and ask yourself, as you gaze fixedly on him, whether he, whose only hope is in that cross of absolute self-sacrifice and self-abasement, can dare to cherish in himself one self-complacent action. Let the Master's words ring even in your ears: "How can ye believe, who receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?"—Bishop Wilberforce.

A young man just entering business who wrote to the New York Tribune asking advice about books most likely to help him, received the following answer: "The best single treatise is the New Testament; next to this is the Book of Proverbs of Solomon. The best business man we have ever known memorized the entire Book of Proverbs "at twenty-two—carrying the American Tract Society's ten-cents edition in his vest pocket, and committing a half-dozen verses daily; and when he became an employer gave a copy of the book to every employe, with a friendly inscription commending it as an admirable business guide."—Central Christian Advocate.

—A business house in Hamburg has sent out an agent to attempt the culture of coffee in the region of the Ogové. A clearing has been made near Corisco Bay, where several thousand coffee trees have been planted, promising an abundant harvest this year. The American Presbyterians have a mission some hundreds of miles up the Ogove River, and the project is on foot to open a route this way to Stanley Pool, on the Congo.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. S. PFISTER,

Millinery and Dressmaking,

539 Magazine Street,

Bet. St. Mary and Felicity. NEW ORLEANS.

Bonnets and Hats Cleaned, Dyed and Altered.

E. E. LELAND,

No. 185 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

IMPORTED

MILLINERY

French Flowers and Feathers,

ORNAMENTS

Fringes and Tassels, Dress Trimmings, Novelties in Buttons, Ribbons, Corsets, Novelties in Ladies' Neckwear, Veilings and Crapes, Velvets, Lace Goods, Etc., Etc., Etc.

Special attention paid to Country Orders.

CRESCENT INSURANCE COMPANY,

Incorporated as a Mutual Company in 1849—Re-organized as a Stock Company in 1880.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - - $100,000.

Has paid nearly NINE MILLIONS for losses Since 1849.

Annual and Term Policies Issued on Desirab Fire Business.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.
CHAS. H. DOLSEN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

TRUSTEES:

Samll H. Kennedy, Victor Mayer, W. B. Couger, George W. Semell, Alf. Moulton, Charles Newman, C. Marinoni, Lucien Delery, Charles H. Dolsen, Reuben G. Rush, John Calder, S. C. Coulon, W. A. Phelps, M. Gillis, Paul E. Mortimer, Joseph Bowling, S. Hernsheim, Edwd. Naile, J. J. Reiss, Louis Prados, W. W. Swan, Harry L. Flash, John Brunaso, A. H. Sleverd, E. H. Adams, Sigmund Katz, N. D. Wallace, W. R. Lyman.

See our Agents throughout Louisiana Texas, Mississippi and Arkansas.

Factors' and Traders'

INSURANCE COMPANY,

43 CARONDELET STREET.

Paid Up Capital.....$1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President,
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President,
THOS. F. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

TRUSTEES:

John I. Nolde, Richard Milliken, R. M. Walmsley, T. Lyll. Lyon, Wm. J. Behan, Chas. Chaffe, Wm. Hartwell, A. T. Jahn, Henry Abraham, A. Britih, Wm. Cunningham, R. T. Buckner, John Chaffe, Sam'l Friedlander, A. H. May, Samuel H. Boyd, B. F. Eshleman, L. C. Jurey, C. J. Leeds, A. McBickham, Louis Bush, G. W. Sentell, John I. Adams, Wm. A. Gwyn, Chas. E. Black.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S

MAMMOTH

QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 160 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $19.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3.50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5.50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF

CROCKERY

Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods

OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS

JOHN CAUCHE,

AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,

109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,

Branch House, Nos. 508 and 510 Chartres Street.

HOW TO PAINT.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain, common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture, cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures,

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations whenever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

TRADE MARK — QUALITY P PURITY — NOT QUANTITY — REGISTERED

A TRUE TONIC.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS are a certain cure for all diseases requiring a complete tonic; especially Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Intermittent Fevers, Want of Appetite, Loss of Strength, Lack of Energy, etc. Enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. Acts like a charm on the digestive organs, removing all dyspeptic symptoms, such as tasting the food, Belching, Heat in the Stomach, Heartburn, etc. The only Iron Preparation that will not blacken the teeth or give headache. Sold by all Druggist at $1.00 a Bottle.

BROWN CHEMICAL CO.
Baltimore, Md.

Sole Proprietors. All Iron Bitters are made by Brown Chemical Co. Baltimore. Stamped or printed Trade and Crossed Red Lines and Name on wrapper. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.

SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Wt. with yoke & frame	Cost of Bell & Hang's.
No. 6, 25in.	230 lbs.	$ 25 00
No. 6½, 27in.	240 lbs.	36 00
No. 7, 30in.	490 lbs.	50 00
No. 8, 34in.	730 lbs.	75 00
No. 9, 38in.	925 lbs.	130 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A

H. D. McCOWN,

DEALER IN FINE

CLOTHING,

SHIRTS

AND

Mens' Furnishing Goods,

Cor. Common and St. Charles Sts.

NEW ORLEANS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S

—MANUAL—

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, JR.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages--Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

NEW HOME!

SEWING MACHINE.

Durable, and made of Finer Material than any other Machine, and Is More Perfect, Costlier to Make, More Durable.

SOLD FOR LESS MONEY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: If you do not wish to buy the New Home, I advise you to wait until other machine companies make a machine equal to it.

HEADQUARTERS, 170 CANAL ST.,

GUSTAV SEEGER,

Sole Agent.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ORDERS

—FOR—

Fresh, First-Class Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Etc.,

—SENT TO—

E. H. ADAMS & BROTHER,

WILL RECEIVE THE

PROMPTEST AND MOST CAREFUL ATTENTION.

AS THEY DO NOT DEAL IN

"Damaged Goods," "Auction Goods," or "Job Lots,"

THEIR PATRONS ARE SURE TO GET GOOD VALUE.

No. 594 Magazine Street, New Orleans.

D. H. HOLMES,

155 Canal Street, - - - 15 Bourbon Street

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in

Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.

HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.

D. H. HOLMES,

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE. 155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,

(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,

Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40 — Business Suits, $12 to $25

6 Shirts for $9 — Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.

Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.

Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.

U. S. BONDS.

Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.

Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

58 CAMP STREET.

JAMES COBBS,

Attorney at Law,

41 ST. FRANCIS STREET,

MOBILE, ALA.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,

112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

I have decided to distribute the remainder of

My Stock of Pictures

Among my customers, rather than sacrifice them. Any person buying $5 and upwards of other goods, will be entitled to select from a class of Pictures ranging in price according to the size of full cost purchase. No additional price will be put upon the goods, as this is entirely a bonus to induce sales during the dull Summer months.

My stock is comprised in part of Carpets, Oil Cloths, Upholstery Goods, Mattings, Wall Paper, Widow Shades, Cornices, Chinaby Goods, Wire screens Frames, Mouldings and Mirrors.

E. HEATH,

97 and 99 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The Shortest and Quickest Route to all Eastern Cities.

THROUGH WITHOUT CHANGE TO

Nashville, Louisville, Lynchburg, Washington, Cincinnati, Columbus, O., and St. Louis.

ENTIRE TRAINS THROUGH FROM NEW ORLEANS TO LOUISVILLE.

	Leave.	Arrive.
Express	7.02 A. M.	10.02 P. M.
Coast Accommodation	5.45 P. M.	9.12 A. M.
Fast Mail	5.00 P. M.	10.02 A. M.

ONLY ONE CHANGE OF CARS TO NORTHERN AND EASTERN CITIES.

Ticket office corner St. Charles and Common sts. where Sleeping Car accommodations can be secured.

C. P. ATMORE,
General Passenger Agent.
J. H. SMITH,
Ticket Agent.
J. T. HARAHAN,
Superintendent.

FURNITURE.

W. C. TEBAULT

47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. C. TEBAULT,

47 Royal Street,

New Orlans.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!

Personal experiences in the

UNITED STATES and

CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES.

BY J. B. HOOD,

Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army.

Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund, by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.

Price in cloth binding, $3; in leather, $3 50.

Mailed, post paid, on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street.

Liverpool and London and Globe

INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT.

Office, Cor. Carondelet and Gravier Streets.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

STATEMENT OF THE COMPANY.
JANUARY 1, 1881.

Gross fire assets	$12,187,658 44
Fire liabilities, including paid up capital	5,875,967 54
Net surplus	$ 6,201,690 90

STATEMENT OF THE U. S. BRANCH.
JULY 1, 1881.

Assets	$4,592,248 18
Liabilities	2,550,198 52
Surplus	$2,042,049 66

The risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors, fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, and placing the Company on such even footing with the local companies that it is not under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

J. F. SCHROEDER, Esq., Chairman, of L. Christ & Co.
NEWTON BICKNELL, Esq., of Bicknell & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson & Simpson.

HENRY W. OGDEN,
Resident Secretary.

JULES P. ROUX, Assistant Resident Secretary.
CLARENCE E. LOW, Deputy Ass't Resident Secty.

New Orleans, October 20, 1881. novem10

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward.
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $35 and upward.
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward

All guaranteed.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

New Orleans Pacific Railroad.

TRAINS WEST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
New Orleans, leave		8.00 A. M.
Algiers	7.00 A. M.	8.20
Gretna	7.17	8.37
Company Canal	7.40	8.40
St. Charles	10.35	9.34
St. John	11.15	10.16
Vacherie	1.00 P. M.	10.57
St. James	1.43	11.56
Donaldsonville	2.50	11.57
Bayou Goula	4.13	12.21 P. M.
Plaquemine	5.15	12.46
West Baton Rouge, arrive	7.00	1.30

TRAINS EAST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
West Baton Rouge, leave	7.00 A. M.	2.30 P. M.
Plaquemine	8.25	3.41
Bayou Goula	9.14	3.25
Donaldsonville	10.11	4.20
St. James	12.10 M.	4.59
Vacherie	1.00 P. M.	5.17
St. John	2.06	5.43
St. Charles	3.14	6.47
Company Canal	6.12	7.11
Gretna	6.35	7.30
Algiers	6.45	7.35
New Orleans, arrive		8.00

For rates and full information address

H. S. MORSE, Superintendent. M. R. SPELMAN, G. P. and T. Agt.

New Orleans, October 15, 1881.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.

By A. J. COOK.

Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.

THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being new it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SULLIVAN & BULGER,

97 CAMP STREET.

Plumbers and Gas Fitters,

DEALERS IN

Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all kinds, Iron, Lead and Terracotta Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges, also, different kinds of Gas Machines, for country use.

All Orders Promptly Attended to.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. JONES & Co., Nassau, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, Jan. 9, 1882.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Sat.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	8⅝	8⅝
Ordinary	9⅜	9⅜
Good ordinary	10⅛	10⅛
Low middling	11⅛	11
Middling	11⅝	11⅝
Good middling	11⅞	11⅞
Middling fair	12⅛	12
Sales to-day	10,250 bales.
Receipts since our last	14,736 bales.
Receipts previously	915,340 bales
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	6⅜ @	7
Fully fair	7⅛	7⅛
Prime	7⅝	7⅝
Choice	—	8
Yellow clarified	8¼	8⅝
White clarified	8⅝	8⅞
Powdered	—	—
Crushed	—	—
Molasses, in bbls., ₱ gallon:
Common	35	40
Fair	45	48
Prime	50	52
Choice	57	60
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	4½	4⅝
Fair	5¼	5⅜
Prime	6⅛	6⅝
Choice		6¾

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	12½	15
New York	—	—
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio ordinary	9	9¼
Rio fair	10⅝	10¾
Rio prime	11¾	12
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	15
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best adamantine	11½	15
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.:
Choice N. Y.		3 90
Flour, ₱ bbl.:
Superfine	4 50	4 75
XX	5 25	5 50
XXX	5 75	6 00
Choice	—	—
Choice	—	—
Fish:
Mackerel No. 1 bbls	8 25	9 00
Half bbls	4 50	5 00
Kits	75	82
Mackerel No. 1 bbls	7 50	8 00
Half bbls	4 50	4 50
Kits	70	75
Mackerel No. 1 bbls	7 00	7 25
Half bbls	4 00	4 00
Kits	70	75
Codfish	11	12
Herring, ₱ box	—	—
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Cod, ₱ bbls	—	—
Cod, ₱ bbls	—	—
Linseed, raw	67	68
Linseed, boiled	69	71
Cotton seed	45	47
Lard	80	1 00
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia	—	2 40
Olive	—	2 85
Palm	—	—
Castile	—	2 75
Soda, ₱ lb	—	—
Starch, ₱ lb	—	5½
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse	80	85
Fine	1 10	1 20

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	—	81
White	—	82
Mixed	—	—
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	54	56
Red rust-proof	55	57
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs:
Choice	—	1 20
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	23 00	24 00
Choice	—	26 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed	—	—
Clay	—	—

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb.:
Breakfast	—	11
Shoulders	—	9½
Sides, clear city	—	10⅝
Sides, clear	—	10⅝
Hams, sugar-cured	11¾	12¾
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	17 62½	18 00
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb:
Clear ribsides	—	9¾
Clear sides	—	9¾
Shoulders	6	6¾
Lard, ₱ lb:
Choice, in tierces	—	12½
Choice, in kegs	11¾	11¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl
Irish	3 75	4 00
Sweet	2 25	2 50
Onions, ₱ bbl	3 00	3 25
Apples, ₱ bbl	2 00	4 50
Cabbages, ₱ bag	—	—
Sour Krout, ₱ bbl	—	10 00

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
India	—	—
Jute	—	—
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	—	15
Ties, ₱ hundred:
3½ thousand to bales	—	1 50

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen:
Ground chickens	—	3 50
Young do	—	2 00
Ducks	—	3 00
Geese	—	5 00
Turkeys	9 00	11 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen:
Western	17	20
Southern	22	25
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon	—	—
Comb, ₱ lb	—	—
Pecans, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	11	13
Texas	6	7
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl		8 00
Florida, ₱ box	—	—
Wool, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	22	23
Texas	—	—
Feathers, ₱ lb:
Geese	—	—
Hides, ₱ lb:
Country green	—	7
Dry salted	—	10
Dry flint	—	12
Ox Horns, each	—	6
Tallow, ₱ lb	6	7½
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton:
Bleached	—	14 00
Meal	24 50	25 00
Oil cake	27 00	27 50
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	2 50	2 75
Molasses barrels	—	1 35
Half barrels	—	1 05
Kegs	—	70
Oak Staves, per 1200:
Kegs	—	60 00
Barrels	70 00	75 00
Extra claret	100 00	105 00
Extra hogshead	130 00	145 00
Extra pipes	80 00	185 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs	—	6
Medium	—	7½
Good to fine	—	—
Low leaf	—	8
Medium	—	9½
Good	—	10
Fine	—	12½
Selections	—	—

GENERAL DEBILITY CURED.

CHESTERVILLE, KENT CO., MD., Jan. 31, 1881.

Feeling broken down and generally debilitated, I was induced by our druggist to try a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters. From the third dose, I began to feel the good effects of your medicine, and I really think it did me more good than any medicine I ever took.

H. D'QUIMBY.

—A SINGULAR FACT.—It is a singular and as yet unexplained fact, that animals brought up from what may be called in these days of deep sea dredging soundings, moderate depths, are invariably found to be dead.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Dr. Jas. R. Cabell, president, and Dr. Thos. J. Turner, secretary of the National Board of Health, and Dr. P. H. Ballhache, of the United States Marine Hospital service, had a short conference with the President this afternoon, in reference to the best methods to be employed in guarding against an epidemic from small-pox, which contagion has shown itself in different parts of the country.

They presented an address urging some action by the President and Congress, if necessary, to enforce the recommendations of the National Health Congress, which met here several months ago, touching that subject. The main recommendations of that Congress were that all immigrants not recently vaccinated be compelled to undergo that process, and that quarantine regulations be strictly enforced.

The President said he would consider the matter and would probably make it the subject of a special message to Congress, calling attention to the advancing prevalence of small-pox and the necessity for immediate legislation to its suppression.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Postmaster General James surrendered the postoffice department to Mr. Howe to-day. Mr. James says he is gratified with the outlook for next year in the postoffice department. The receipts for the quarter ended September 30, 1880, amounted to $8,351,587 76, and the expenditures to $8,737,554 23, making the excess of expenditures for the quarter $1,385,966 41. Receipts for the corresponding quarter of this year were $8,-240,706 45, and the expenditures $9,057,-183 67, making the excess of expenditures only $816,402 72. From this showing the Postmaster General expresses the opinion that the department will certainly be self-sustaining for the next quarter of the present fiscal year, and perhaps for the entire ensuing year.

CHATTANOOGA, Jan. 4.—A Telegram announces the death of the Hon. C. C. Clay, at his country residence, near Huntsville, Ala., Tuesday. He was buried at Huntsville yesterday with great pomp. Deceased was United States Senator of Alabama before the war, and a Confederate States Senator during the war.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—Dr. John W. Draper died this morning at the age of 71 years.

JACKSON, Jan. 5.—The Legislature is settling down to business in earnest, and to-day quite a large amount of work was dispatched. A joint convention of the two houses went through the form of counting the vote for Governor and declared the result. The war on the code of 1880 was begun by the introduction of several bills to amend and repeal some of its provisions.

In the Senate Mr. Noland gave notice of the introduction of a bill to establish a State college for the education of females. A bill prohibiting the purchase and sale of futures in the State was introduced in the House and referred; also a bill to restrain the issue of county bonds to aid railroads and other corporations. The election of commissioners of immigration was by resolution postponed till after the passage of the contemplated immigration bill.

Hon. Jefferson Davis was in the city for a few hours last night, en route to New Orleans from Vicksburg. He addressed an immense crowd from the Edwards Hotel, and was treated with marks of esteem nearly approaching idolatry. He appears to be in perfect health, and his voice is clear and ringing. Col. Lamar responded in a short speech.

KEOKUK, Jan. 5.—The president of the Keokuk Board of Health, in a letter answering an inquiry of the health authorities of neighboring towns concerning the spread of small-pox here, says: "There is a limited number of cases, confined entirely to medical students, and there is as yet no assured tendency to spread to citizens outside. It originated from an infected cadaver within the medical college. There have been nine cases in all; two fatal. The medical colleges have been closed by order of the health officers."

JERSEY CITY, Jan. 5.—Eleven new cases of small-pox were reported in this city and Hoboken within the past 24 hours.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 5.—The Alabama Great Southern Railroad has reduced the passenger rate from four cents per mile to three cents. All the roads out of Chattanooga, the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia, Memphis and Charleston, Cincinnati and Louisville, Western and Atlantic, Nashville and Chattanooga and the Alabama Great Southern, now have the three cent rate, and they report that travel has increased to such a degree in consequence, that the aggregate receipts have not diminished.

SHREVEPORT, Jan. 7.—The special train, which started from New Orleans yesterday morning at 8 o'clock, over the Morgan and New Orleans Pacific railways, arrived here this morning at 8 o'clock, making the trip in about 20 hours' running time, the quickest time yet recorded between here and New Orleans, and the first time New Orleans papers were ever received in Shreveport the day after publication. The train had on board Mrs. Gen. G. M. Dodge and two daughters, Mrs. Gen. Chetlain and daughter, of Chicago, Chief-Engineer D. W. Washburn, of the Texas and Pacific Railway, Chief-Engineer D. H. Green, Superintendents H. S. Morse and Dunsmore, Engineer C. C. Barr, of the New Orleans Pacific Railway, the two latter accompanied by their wives, and about 20 members of the Legislature, who were returning home from the extra session.

RICHMOND, Jan. 7.—Dr. J. H. Cabell, president of the Board of Health, of Richmond, this evening makes an official report relative to the small-pox, by which it appears that there are 72 cases of small-pox and variloid in the city hospital and 26 in the city proper. Of those 78 are colored and 22 white. Two new cases of small-pox and three of variloid are reported to-day.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—Forty-three cases of small-pox were found last week in this city, and 300 persons a day were vaccinated at the vaccination bureaus.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Small-pox has been spreading in Jersey City in a most alarming manner during the past few days. The Board of Health has made a number of appeals to the Board of Finance to have the streets cleaned.

In this city several new cases were reported to-day, and several of a virulent character were found in thickly settled tenement-house districts, which had been concealed from the authorities.

Dispatches from various parts of the country speak of the growing alarm and excitement over the spread of the dread malady.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—When court opened its ninth week of the Guiteau trial this morning the crowd filled every nook and cranny of the chilly room, and ladies were decidedly in the majority.

The prisoner arrived at the courthouse at 9:30, and was taken to his waiting room. He appeared rather nervous and his countenance indicated anxiety.

When he had taken his seat in the dock he glanced around stealthily over the audience, and immediately began a harangue, evidently intended for the jury.

"I received," he said, "some eight hundred letters, a majority of them from ladies. When I get time, I shall attend to them. I want to send my greeting to the ladies of America, and thank them for their sympathy. They don't want me to be hanged; public opinion is fast changing.

"I received Saturday a check for $1,000 from the Stalwarts of Brooklyn, and another for $500 from the Stalwarts of New York. I want this jury to understand how public opinion is on this case.

The bailiff here tried to silence him, when Guiteau turned upon him in a most vicious manner and sneered out: "You keep quiet and mind your business; don't interfere with me when I am talking; if you had any sense you would understand your place."

With this opening breeze the proceedings in due form were begun, and Mr. Scoville resumed his argument.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—The Cardinal Archbishop of Rouen, who recently returned from Rome, has published a letter describing the position of the Pope. He urges the Italians to choose another capital and leave Rome to the Pope, in order to avert the necessity of his departure from that city.

ST. PETERSBURG, January 8.—M Saulkowski, who went in search of the Jeannette on board the Chassour, met the United States steamer Rodgers, engaged in the same mission, telegraphs from Irkoutsk, under date of December 26, as follows: We parted on August 2 from the Rodgers, which steered for Herald Island. The Streelook, with the Breinau expedition on board, then returned to Chinese ports, having previously accompanied the Rodgers in the search. An American schooner, having on board the captain of a steamboat whaler, had joined them in Providence Bay. The captain stated that he had seen the boat containing corpses, and also silver spoons, and other articles marked "Jeannette." The boat had been cast upon Herald Islands. The commander of the Rodgers therefore resolved to proceed thither. He anticipated wintering there, and aided by dogs purchased at Kamchatka, organizing parties to make a thorough search of the land.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—The scope of the decision lately pronounced by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Eliza Davis vs. Myra Clark Gaines, seems to have been misapprehended in New Orleans. The decision is confined to the single case appealed to the Supreme Court, and does not touch, even inferentially, the other defendants named in the bill in equity filed by Mrs. Gaines, and which cases, it is here understood, were compromised. These other cases were not before this court, and it is not known how far they are similar to the cases now adjudged.

The Supreme Court in this decision does not reverse or modify any of its former decisions in which Mrs. Gaines was a party, but carefully distinguishes the present case from them. It says in the cases heretofore decided by this court in favor of appellee, except the case of Gaines vs. DeLacroix, from Relf, or Relf and Chew, executors of the will of 1811, under private sale made by them as agents of Mary Clark, devised under that will, and in their pretended capacity as executors, after their term of office had expired, and without any order of court, see Gaines vs. New Orleans, sixth Wall 642. In the case of Gaines vs. DeLacroix, sixth Wall 719, the court decided and on most satisfactory proof, that DeLacroix was a purchaser in bad faith, and upon that ground his title was declared invalid.

In conclusion the court cites all the cases in which this litigation has been before it in various forms, and says that the facts of this case distinguish it from all the cases above mentioned, and upon the averments made in the bill and the evidence adduced to support it, Mrs. Gaines is not entitled to a decree. So much therefore of the decree of the Circuit Court as relates to the property bought by Michel Fortier, and now claimed by the widow and heirs of Minor Kenner, deceased, must be reversed and the cause remanded with directions to dismiss the bill, so far as it concerns the appellant.

BIG LAND SALE.—News has been received in this city of the purchase by Messrs. Phillips, Marshall & Co., of London, of 1,300,000 acres of land from the State of Mississippi; 750,000 are known as the "Levee Lands," and are located mostly in the Yazoo valley, comprising some of the richest cotton and timber land in the South. The intention of the purchasers is to improve, cultivate and colonize these lands, and their action will be of great benefit to that section. Col. Evans is now in Mississippi concluding the arrangements.

CONSUMPTION.

Thousands who had long suffered from weak lungs, short breath, asthma, and consumption, have found relief in Brown's Iron Bitters, a true tonic.

Quarterly Conferences.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

DELHI DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Waterproof, at Waterproof	Jan. 21, 22
Tensas, at Jordan Chapel	28, 29
Monroe, at Monroe	Feb. 4, 5
Trenton, at Trenton	11, 12
Lake Providence, at Lake Providence	18, 19
Wilmsboro, at Wilmsboro	25, 26
Delhi, at Delhi	Mar. 4, 5
Bayville, at Bayville	11, 12
Oak Ridge, at Prairie	18, 19
Lind Grove, at Bartholomew	25, 26
Bastrop, at Bastrop	Apr. 1, 2
Floyd, at Floyd	8, 9

The District Stewards' meeting is to be held at Monroe, February 6. The district Stewards are: Dr. A. S. Heinlick, J. R. Edwards, D. S. Travis, P. A. H. Williams, G. H. Johnson, Joseph Gorton, A. J. Dibson, B. C. Currie, F. E. Bowman, J. M. Stafford, T. C. Standifer and Dr. J. W. Baker.

2 S. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

ALEXANDRIA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Bayou Beouf and Evergreen	Feb. 4, 5
Bayou de Glaise and Avoyelles Prairie	11, 12
Spring Creek	18, 19
Alexandria	25, 26
Pineville	Mar. 4, 5
Colfax	11, 12
Winnfield	18, 19
Jena	25, 26
Dalton	29
Columbia	Apr. 1, 2
Harrisonburg and Shelly Island	8, 9
Little River	15, 16
Sunsport	22, 23
Bell Chaney	29, 30

T. O. MOUTT, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

JACKSON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Canton	Jan. 1, 2
Jackson	7, 8
Edwards	14, 15
Hind's mission	17, 18
Bolton	21, 22
Madison, at Wesley	28, 29
Soule Chapel	Feb. 4, 5
Sharon, at Union	11, 12
Benton	18, 19
Silver City	25, 26
Yazoo City	Mar. 4, 5
Dover	11, 12
Mt. Carmel	18, 19

1 W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, P. E.

BRANDON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Marvin circuit, at Wesleyana	Jan. 7, 8
Caio circuit, at Clear Creek	14, 15
Trenton circuit, at Pokeville	21, 22
Raleigh circuit, at Raleigh	28, 29
Brandon station	Feb. 4, 5
Fannin circuit, at Holly Bush	11, 12
Lake circuit, at Lake	18, 19
Walnut Grove circuit, at Hillsboro	25, 26
Carthage circuit, at Goshen	Mar. 4, 5
Newton circuit, at Newton	11, 12
Forest circuit, at Grange Hall	18, 19
Beech Springs mission, at Mill Dale	25
Decatur mission, at Mt. Hebron	Apr. 1,
Philadelphia mission, at Philadelphia
Ludlow mission, at Contrell	18

District Stewards will meet at Morton, on 1 day, February 3.

1 J. M. GANN, P. E.

WOODVILLE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Amite City	Jan. 7, 8
Clinton	14, 15
East Feliciana	21, 22
Pontchitoula, at Pontchitoula	28, 29
St. Helena	Feb. 1, 2
Amite	11, 12
Jackson	18, 19
Pipkins and Port Hudson	25, 26
Baton Rouge	Mar. 4, 5
Livingstone	11, 12
East Baton Rouge	18, 19
Wilkinson	25, 26
Woodville	Apr. 1, 2
North Wilkinson	8

Address, Greenside, La. Pastors, by card, inform Presiding Elder of place for First Quarterly Meeting.

35 D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Crystal Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Wesson and Beauregard, at Wesson
Hazlehurst	14, 15
Brandywine, at Rehoboth	21, 22
Summit, at Summit	28, 29
McComb and Magnolia, at Magnolia	Feb. 4, 5
Providence, at Bahala	11, 12
Baron Pierre, at Pleasant Ridge	18, 19
Adams and Copperhatto, at Adams	25, 26
Scotland at Bethesda	Mar. 1,
Spring Ridge, at Forrest Hill	11, 12
Terry, at Pleasant Grove	18, 19
Brookhaven	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in Hazlehurst, January 14, 1882.

52 J. A. E. JONES, P. E.

VICKSBURG DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Natchez	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Vicksburg	Jan. 7, 8
Warren circuit, at Rocinia	14, 15
Port Gibson	28, 29
Rocky Springs, at Grand Gulf	Feb. 4, 5
Cayuga, at Utica	11, 12
Fayette circuit, at Fayette	18, 19
Meadville, at Oak Grove	25, 26
Kingston	Mar. 4, 5
Clover Hill, at Mayersville	11, 12
Rolling Fork, at Rolling Fork	18, 19
Mt. Olivet, at Satartia	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in the Methodist Church at Port Gibson, January 2d, at 10 o'clock A.M.

52 R. S. WOODWARD, P. E.

SEASHORE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Ocean Springs circuit, at Ocean Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
East Pascagoula, at Zion	Jan. 6
Moss Point, at Moss Point	7, 8
West Pascagoula, at Oak Grove	14, 15
Handsboro, at Sun's Station	20
Pearlington, at Pearlington	21, 22
Franklington, at Franklington	26
Covington, at Covington	28, 29
Whittington, at Whittington	Feb. 4, 5
Spring College, at Stewarts	11, 12
Chinn Grove, at Waterhodes	18, 19
Mt. Carmel, at Mt. Zion	25, 26
Westville, at Pleasant Hill	Mar. 4
Bethel, at Hebron	11, 12
Enon, at Soule Chapel	18, 19

52 L. S. WEST, P. E.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

PENSACOLA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Pensacola	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Warrington	Jan. 1, 2
Millview and Ross Point, at Millview	7, 8
Pewetton, at Pewetton	11, 12
Milton	21, 22
Stockton, at Stockton	28, 29
Perdido mission, at High Pine	Feb. 4
Pollard, at Pollard	11, 12
Evergreen, at Bethesda	11, 12
Gopher, at Bethesda	11, 12
Monroeville, at Liberty	18, 19
Morrell mission, at Cold Spring Ground	25, 26
Georgiana, at Wesley Chapel	Mar. 1,
Sojaula, at Bethel	4, 5
Monterey, at Monterey	18, 19

Yellow River mission. We have appropriated of seventy-five dollars for this work, and wish to employ a local preacher. Address me at Evergreen, Alabama.

Pastors will please urge their official members to be present at their first quarterly conferences.

52 W. H. FOX, P. E.

GREENSBORO DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Greensboro station	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Newberne circuit, at Newberne Wesley	Jan. 1
Greensboro circ., at Union Chapel, Friday	6
Havana circuit, at Havana	7, 8
Green circuit, at Salem, Wednesday	11
Gainesville circuit, at Gainesville	14, 15
Belmont circuit, at Wesley Chapel, Friday	20
Livingstone and Sumter, at Livingstone	21, 22
Cibb circuit, at York, Tuesday	24
Gaston circuit, at Sharon, Thursday	26
Shelby and Mt. Sterling	28, 29
Choctaw circuit, at Oak Grove, Tuesday	31
Forkland circuit, at Forkland	Feb. 4, 5
Demopolis station, Wednesday	8

DEAR BRETHREN: In order that we may get all to work as soon as possible, I have put in many of the above appointments in the week. I do and expect, in the end, to do you and the less service. Let us put everything into working order at once.

51 H. FRAUNBART, P. E.

MONTGOMERY DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Hurtsville circuit, at Scale	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Elmore circuit, at Oak Valley	7, 8
Tallassee station	9
Tuskegee circuit at Warrior Stand	14, 15
Tuskegee station	16
Salem circuit, at Pierce Chapel	21, 22
Auburn station	23
Crawford circuit, at Mt. Zion	28, 29
Montgomery station	Feb. 1, 2
Tallapoosa mission, at Rock Springs	6
Loachapoka circuit, at Sand Mine	10, 11
Opelika station	18, 19
Franklin mission, at St. John	25, 26

51 J. F. MANGUM, P. E.

PRATTVILLE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Wetumpka	31, Jan. 1
Clanton and Verbena	Jan 7, 8
Lowndesboro	14, 15
Camden and Oak Lawn	21, 22
Bell's Landing	28, 29
Autaugaville	Feb. 4, 5
Prattville	11, 12
Pine Apple	18, 19
Randolph	25, 26
Benson mission	Mar. 4, 5
Pleasant Hill	11, 12
Plantersville	18, 19
Coosa mission	25, 26
Huntsville	Apr. 1, 2

50 A. H. MITCHELL, P. E.

MOBILE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

St. Francis street	Dec. 18
Eastern Shore, at Bay Minette	21
Whistler	25
Tumlinville, at Four Mile Post	28
Franklin Street, Mobile	Jan. 1
Citronelle	7, 8
Grove Hill, at Union	12
Suggsville, at Suggsville	14, 15
St. Paul's	22
Bladon and St. Stephens, at St. Stevens	28, 29
Laney, at Laney	Feb. 4, 5
Escambia	11, 12

50 G. R. BLUE, P. E.

SELMA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

East Selma	Dec. 10, 11
Selma	17, 18
Summerfield	24, 25
Orrville circuit, at Orrville	31, Jan. 1
Rhode Creek circuit, at Providence	Jan. 7, 8
Marion	14, 15
Uniontown mission, at Brown's station	18
Spring Hill circuit, at Dayton	21, 22
Unionlown station	28, 29
Clifton circuit, at Arlington	Feb. 4, 5
Hembree Hills, at Sweetwater	11, 12
Choctaw Corner, at Bahal	14
Lower Peach Tree circuit, at Peach Tree	18, 19
McKinly mission, at Prairie Bluff	21
Perryville mission, at Mt. Pleasant	Mar. 7

The District Stewards will please meet in the basement of the Methodist Church, Selma, January 4 1882, at eleven o'clock, A. M.

50 J. M. ROLAND, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SINGER — OBELISK

$40 BORROWED BY I. M. SINGER TO BUILD THE FIRST SUCCESSFUL SEWING MACHINE AUGUST 1850

THE GENUINE SINGER MACHINE HAS BEEN AWARDED THE FIRST PRIZE OVER ALL COMPETITORS MORE THAN 200 TIMES

HIEROGLYPHICS THAT EVERY ONE CAN UNDERSTAND

SALES OF THE GENUINE SINGER FAMILY SEWING MACHINE

1862	12,489
1872	219,758
1873	232,444
1874	241,679
1875	249,852
1876	262,316
1877	282,812
1878	356,432
1879	431,167
1880	538,609

TRADE MARK

EVERY REAL SINGER HAS THIS TRADE MARK

BEING OVER THREE QUARTERS OF ALL THE SEWING MACHINES SOLD THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

BUY NONE BUT THE GENUINE

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

85 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

$5 to $20 per day at Home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

PHILIP WERLEIN,

135 CANAL STREET,

The Leading Southern Piano House.

Every Instrument Warranted

SEND FOR CATALOGUES.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

PIANOS.
CHICKERING,
MATHUSHEK,
HALE.

ORGANS.
ESTEY,
MASON & HAMLIN,
STERLING.

Lowest Prices, Most Liberal Terms.

No. 56 USE THE GLASS St. Charles St.

A WONDERFUL and SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, and possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, so that first-class use them. They have been carefully examined and highly recommended by American and European oculists claim that the MEDICATED GLASSES have restored, and even, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that intense sensation that is painfully experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.

2. The chemicals make the glasses last, they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first.

3. The chemicals keep the glasses cool; and the result, is that the optic nerves always cool, so doing away with any irritation to the eye.

4. With these glasses you can read, write or sew all night the light having no effect on the eye, with no distressing or tiresome sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS. NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED.

The MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the face H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED.

Dealers Supplied Wholesale at Liberal Discount.

ALL EYES SUITED. Persons residing at a distance who may wish to procure these spectacles can send for a circular containing description, prices, etc., and directions for insuring a perfect fit, and have them sent by mail, by addressing

HERC. HOUSAH,

CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,

56 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing mention this paper.

DIUTURNITY:

A COSMICAL ESSAY,

By REV. B. ABBEY.

Concerning the World's Present Infirmity, Its Immense Fatigue, Its Undiscovered Treasures, Its Indestructibility, The Wisdom of Providence, The Office of Science, The Scope of Christianity, The Folly of a Millennium, The Non-Immanent Second Coming of Christ, and The Glorious Destiny of Mankind.

"No ordinary ability is displayed. We have read the whole book with unflagging interest. It is suitable, readable and remarkable." N. Y. Methodist.

"One of the most remarkable books we ever read." Christian Advocate, Nashville.

"The author is a man of mature and scholarly mind." American Christian Review.

"An entirely original argument. Readable and remarkable." Missouri Presbyterian Herald.

"Diuturnity is the name of the book of the age." Gospel Herald.

"Clear thinking, wonderful originality. Vast amount of information." Home Monthly.

Highly commended by more than a hundred writers. Price, $1 50.

Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville,
T. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS.

Dealers in all kinds of

LUMBER, SHINGLES, &C.

AND IN

ALABAMA COAL.

Shipments made from either Mobile or New Orleans or from Mills or Mines direct.

WANTED.—White Oak Staves, Red Cedar and Black Walnut logs, received at either New Orleans or Mobile. Highest cash price paid.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

TUERK'S
POSITIVE ROTARY
HYDRAULIC MOTOR,

For running all kinds of Machinery by

Water Power.

Send for Circular and Price List to

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

KNABE

PIANOFORTES.

UNEQUALED IN

Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

Nos. 204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore
No. 112 Fifth Avenue New York.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by F. FREDERICKSON, Wholesale and Retail Druggist, New Orleans. Orders by mail at regular price.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 28.—NO. 3. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 19, 1882. WHOLE NO. 1389

PUBLISHED FOR THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE---112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, ... $2 per annum.
Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. FELIX R. HILL.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

THE STORKS OF DELFT.

BY AUGUSTA LARNED.

The bells changed dread in every spire,
The watchman cried: "Fire! fire! fire!
The men of Delft, the city flames,
Run from your labors and your games.
The rich and poor, haste for your lives,
Snatch your dear children and your wives,
The lewd, aged, sick and blind,
The idiot and insane of mind,
Then think of household goods and gear,
Bird cages, tries and dragons dear,
And place wherewith your town makes cheer.
Run, burghers, for the flames are red!
They leap and crackle overhead,
And high above each lane and street
Hangs our brave city's whistling sheet."
And thus it chanced in Delft of fame
Lived many storks, that went and came,
Free from all harm, protected, blessed,
Because they cleared the city's pest—
Toads, frogs and noisome creatures foul,
So wise a bird some gave a soul,
And scarce a man but reared a thatch
Whereon the little storks might hatch.
Now, on that fatal third of May,
When lurid clouds obscured the day,
With nestling birds just out of shell,
A strange and piteous thing befell.
Soft, downy, formless wing and head
They lay within the natal bed.
The parent birds quick saw their doom,
Mid stifling smoke and sullen boom
Of falling roof and splintering wall,
And groan, and curse, and anguish call,
Mid swaying crowds and rushing feet,
And furnace-blasts of withering heat,
And flying sparks like living things,
That bore destruction on their wings.
And first they sought in haste to bear
Their nurslings through the heated air.
But no, their strength may not suffice;
They struggle, but they can not rise.
And, panting back upon the nest,
They hide their young with wing and breast,
And calmly wait the fiery wave
To lay them in a common grave.
The flying crowds with wonder saw
A sight to fill the soul with awe.
Those birds that chose not life, but death,
To shield their young with fateful breath;
Mounting in love their funeral-pyre
They gave their bosoms to the fire.
And thus perchance the storks that day
Taught some poor craven heart the way
To stay his feet for those to need,
To help the weak, the sick to feed,
Remembering those old words, how writ:
"Who saves his life shall forfeit it."
Amid the records of the town
This tale is truly written down,
In letters of the purest gold
Such noble story well were told,
Of birds heroic in their death
Teaching Christ's truth with failing breath,
And glazing eye and fluttering wing
Those storks of Delft whereof I sing.

From Virginia.

MR. EDITOR: You are doubtless familiar with the fact that a promise easily made is easily broken. It is now a little over a year since I agreed to write an occasional letter for the ADVOCATE; and, yet, unless my memory fails me, I have never sent you a single scratch. My conscience has not been entirely at ease on the subject; but, still, when it has been disposed to twit me, I have given it a soporific dose in the shape of the suggestion that, after all, nobody was loser by my neglect. As the new year is now opening, I have concluded to follow "a far more excellent way," and to acquit myself of my obligations, whether anybody is to be benefitted by the process or not.

Enclosed you will find a small draft, which you will please hand to Mr. Lathrop. It is to pay for advertising Emory and Henry College. I take pleasure in saying that the advertisement has paid. In fact, no twenty dollars that we have spent in this way has been more remunerative.

There is scant material for letter-writing in this "hill country." We are far removed from the busy centers of life, and our days go on without unusual events to vary their monotony. Little by little, however, the tides are beginning to sweep in upon us from without, and, in less than twenty-five years our mountain Arcadia will be a part of the world. I confess that I do not contemplate the result with unmixed pleasure. There ought to be one place in America where everything is still, not with the stillness of death, but of rest and peace; where people are not always in a hurry; where neighbors have time to be neighborly; and where the amenities of social life are regarded as of more worth than the products of the field, the forge, or the loom. Say you not so?

The summer and autumn just past have been very remarkable. The former was dry—so much so as to cut short all our crops, especially the grass. It was feared that the farmers would have difficulty in getting their stock through the winter; but September brought copious showers and started the grass. The weather since has been simply delightful. In fact, we have had no winter until the past ten days. Only one week ago, my short-horn cow was getting good pasturage in the meadow and showing no relish for fodder or hay. This open fall has been a great blessing, as you can well see. Our trust of Providence is always too narrow. We try to measure God's way with the two-foot rule of our own intelligence, and we fail. Shall we ever learn that sweet and comforting lesson which bids us free ourselves from carking care concerning those things which constitute the sum of material good? But the winter has come at last, and in goodearnest. Four days ago, after heavy rains, it began to freeze and to snow; and ever since, it has been stinging cold. The earth is wrapped in a mantle of purest white. Along all the valleys, over the sloping hills, on the lofty mountains which encircle us and look down upon us, the fair covering is spread. O, it is a grand sight to see! I wish that you could look out upon it to-night. Lying clear and cold under the moon, it is lovely and enchanting as any dream of fairy land. Perhaps, you shrug your shoulders and say to yourself: "I prefer a climate where one is in no danger of losing one's nose or toes from frost-bite." I have known good people to indulge in Sybaritic reflections of that sort. But if you could muffle up yourself in good flannels; enshroud your whole body in a huge overcoat; encase your feet in stout Arties, and go forth to snuff the life-giving air that sweeps in rapid eutrents over this lofty plateau, you would call it grand.

How the boys do enjoy it, those from the far South more than others. They have worn their coasting-place as smooth as glass, and their light-running sleds fly like the wind. Such exuberance of animal life as they have! How they run and shout for very joy! To me the noise which they make is most unsied, and I trust that the day will never come when the gleeful shout, or even the lusty yell, of a full-chested and broad-shouldered young man will have any other than a pleasant sound. Here, at Emory, we have 600 acres to ourselves, and are not near enough to anybody else to be a disturbance.

I see that the Alabama Conference has withdrawn its support from your paper, to join with the North Alabama in maintaining one of their own. This is a free country, and the church has a right to as many papers as it wants; but I must doubt the propriety of multiplication. Here, in Holston, we are beginning to agitate the question of consolidation; not, it is true, in regard to papers, but in regard to colleges. We are convinced that it would be the part of wisdom for the Baltimore, Virginia, and Holston Conferences to unite and keep up one first-class school; and we have asked the brethren of these Conferences to consider the propriety of a movement looking in that direction. Whereunto it will grow, can not be told. There are many interests involved; and everything that is done will have to be done in the spirit of self-restraint and mutual concession. The Northern Methodist Church, with all its wealth and numbers, has only four colleges and universities east of the Alleghany mountains; but every one of them is well endowed, and one or two of them are positively rich. In respect to the whole question of education, we need a method, broad and liberal. What we have done hitherto has been "by main strength and awkwardness." Is it not possible to organize a scheme, which shall be as comprehensive as the wants of the whole church? Let doubters stand aside. We need men of faith to give an affirmative answer, and then proceed to do the work.

Emory and Henry has had a good year—the best since 1877, and the prospect for an increased attendance is constantly brightening. Our spring session will open on January 25, and no pains will be spared to secure proper classification for students who may enter at that time. Any letters of inquiry will receive prompt attention. We think we are in position to do good work, and we hope for a continuance and enlargement of the patronage which we have hitherto had from the Southern States.

The editor is no novice. He knows how to put communications of this sort "where they will do the most good," and is at perfect liberty to make such a disposition of this particular one as may seem to him best.

E. E. ROSS.

EMORY, VA., Jan. 3, 1882.

A Dreadful Throat Trouble.

Did you ever hear what a trouble Wilkins had with his throat? It was a sad and singular case as sure as you are born. I can't see why the doctor did not make a report of it through the medical journals. The world ought to have had the benefit of this case. I am not a doctor, nor the son of a doctor; but I feel inclined to report this case in the language of the common people, hoping it may help some other poor sufferer from a similar throat trouble. Poor Wilkins suffered untold agonies from his throat, and lost all he had, before he consulted a doctor about it, and then it was too late. The doctor could do nothing in the world for him. I suppose it was his extreme modesty that kept him from consulting a physician earlier than he did. When he concluded to call in a doctor, he chose Dr. Smith, a well-educated and thoroughly competent physician, whose skill in throat and stomach troubles was known all over the land. Before this terrible affliction came upon Mr. Wilkins he owned one of the finest farms in the State where he lived, and he was one of the most enterprising, thrifty farmers in the country. He had a fine residence, elegantly furnished, and a highly-accomplished Christian wife and four lovely children, two boys and two girls. He also had about ten thousand dollars at interest, well secured. After his throat became affected, he lost all interest in his farm, his home and his family. His property was soon squandered, his money all gone, and his wife, sad and broken-hearted, took her children and returned to her father. Fortunately, the old gentleman was able to provide for them. This loss of property and destruction of his home was one of the strongest features in Wilkins' throat trouble. Wilkins' throat grew rapidly worse. At last, he determined to seek medical aid. He went to see Dr. Smith, and found him in his office among his books and bones. Wilkins sat, or rather fell down, in a large cushioned chair and said: "Dr. Smith, I want you to examine my throat and tell me what is the trouble with it." The doctor took a tongue-depressor and wheeled a chair near the window, and asked Wilkins to take a seat. The doctor examined his throat carefully, and said: "Mr. Wilkins, I can't discover any trouble in your throat, save a slight inflammation of the tonsils." "Well," said Wilkins, "that is strange. My throat has ruined me, and now you report no trouble beyond a slight inflammation of the tonsils. Doctor, you must be mistaken!" "Let me examine again," said Dr. Smith; but he found nothing, and so reported. Wilkins said: "Well, doctor, that is strange. Twenty-five negroes, a square section of fine land, a good home and elegant furniture, fifteen fine mules, three good horses, seventy head of hogs, fifty head of cattle, two fine wagons, a fine carriage, a buggy, and one thousand dollars in cash have all gone down that throat, and now you report no trouble in my throat. It is strange, doctor, it is strange." "Oh! oh! yes! yes! I see! I see!" said Dr. Smith: "Whisky, yes, whisky, has been the trouble with your throat."

This is a strange case, and ought to have been reported long ago.

GILDEROY.

The Law as Regards Conference Claimants.

MR. EDITOR: As the law now stands, "the financial board has the power of discrimination to subtract from amount of the less needy and add to amount of the most necessitous." But it is "modestly" suggested, that "the General Conference remove the authority for discrimination and then give us a just and equitable gage, regulated and controlled by the number of years in actual itinerant service." I think the law as it now stands is holy, just and good; but having seen this suggested change recommended in the ADVOCATE, at least once before, and having heard the chairman of a Board of Finance, at a recent Annual Conference, propose the same policy, I really fear that it is possible for the General Conference to abolish the equitable law now in the Discipline.

I dislike the proposed amendment because it would not be an "equitable gage." It is true that we justly honor our aged veterans in the ministry for their long and devoted services, and if the Board of Finance could always amply supply the wants of the most dependent and then have a surplus left, it might not be wrong to appropriate it, by way of honor, according to "the number of years in actual itinerant service." Even then justice might not be met; for has not a person a right to compensation according to the amount of work he does, regardless of the length of time he is at it? But, I imagine it is rarely the case that our financial boards have money to apply this way. The most necessitous are nearly always left somewhat necessitous, and none have their wants fully met. To see that such a law would not be equitable, let us test it by an illustration. Here are two superannuated ministers. A. has served thirty years, B., twenty. A. has served on good salaries most of his time, and now has a good home to which he has returned. He has some property which brings him a handsome income, and his necessities are not very great. B. has served on starvation salaries, is now worn out and feeble with age, has no home and is entirely dependent. Does equity say, give A. one-third more than is given to B.? Never, never; no never. Equity, when not misnamed, says, Don't base your appropriations upon the length of time the recipient has served; nor upon his "standing" in the Conference; but upon his actual necessities. The law, as we now have it, is right. The financial boards can discriminate and thus be just to all claimants. I think, if the General Conference see fit to adopt this change, we shall find it much more difficult to raise our Conference collections, for while many are willing to help the needy, comparatively few are willing to give money to honor men.

MINGO.

Report of Committee on Church Publications.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Committee on Church Publications beg leave to report: First, that they have read with interest and satisfaction the exhibit of the publishing agent at Nashville. Your committee recognize the divine blessing on the wisdom which devised, and the zeal which has worked the plans for the payment of our Publishing House debt, and the establishing of that great interest upon a better and more solid basis than ever before.

Four years ago, the indebtedness of the Publishing House was near $300,000, at an interest of $60 per day—nearly $20,000 annually. During this quadrennial, the debt has been so reduced and modified in its interest, that the interest account is not more than half what it was four year ago. During the past year the patronage of the church has enabled the agent and Book Committee to spare and apply $31,000 from the cash receipts of the house to payment on debts contracted prior to June 1, 1878.

Our connectional property is all in a good state of preservation and secured by insurance. If the present management is continued with the prosperity of the past four years, our Publishing House will in a few years be free from debt. All our own publications, and the standard religious publications of other houses can be had at Nashville on the best commercial terms.

Your committee is pleased to learn that our central organ, the Nashville Christian Advocate has a circulation of between 16 and 17,000 subscribers, and that its cash receipts for the past year were $25,000. Our excellent Sunday school publications are meeting with some of the success they deserve. These publications have yielded last year $49,443. Upon a review of the situation, we think we have cause to thank God and take courage.

Before leaving the consideration of the agent's report, we beg leave to call attention to the latter part of the report touching the New Orleans Depository. Rather by general implication than by direct statement, the impression seems to exist that New Orleans Methodism and Louisiana Annual Conference Methodism sustained closer connectional and more controlling relations to the New Orleans Depository than to the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, located at Nashville. Your committee deem it a proper time to say that the Louisiana Annual Conference and New Orleans Methodism are in no sense responsible for the management of the business of the New Orleans Depository, wisely, or otherwise, more than they are for the management of the business of the Publishing House in Nashville. We had nothing to do with it save furnishing a house free of any other rent, save expense of maintenance. We always understood, and thought that the Church, South, generally understood, that our brother, the Rev. R. J. Harp, was the properly appointed agent and representative of the general book agent, and that he was legally responsible to the agent and Book Committee at Nashville, and never in any commercial sense to us.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Your committee would call special attention to the claims of our own excellent and indispensable NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. In all the elements which conspire to make a first-class religious and family newspaper, it yields the palm to none. Its editorials are models of religious journalistic writing. It has an able corps of contributors, and its selections contain the latest, the most important public news, foreign and domestic, secular and religious. If a subscriber can take but one paper, we know of none that will meet all a family's newspaper needs better than the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Your committee is gratified to learn through the report to the Conference that the permanent success of the paper is assured, and that it has so large a circulation. Southern and Southwestern Louisiana is, for the most part, populated with the descendants of nationalities who but slightly sympathize with our religious views and plans; but, doubtless, a diligent and systematic canvassing of the field would largely increase the list of subscribers.

Your committee can not but deplore the increase of local Methodist papers, for though we regard them but as temporary experiments, still the experiments will divide and partially waste our strength. But as this tendency can not now be arrested, we must, by increased diligence and devotion, see to it that the hurt and harm be as little as may be. We should all regard our paper as one of the most effective arms of our spiritual warfare, both conservative and aggressive. No agency that we can wield is better adapted to promote the connectional spirit among our people than a good Methodist paper. The importance of this connectional bond can scarcely be overstated; let us foster it then by heartily sustaining our Conference organ.

In conclusion, we submit the following resolutions for adoption:

Resolved, That the Louisiana Annual Conference reads with satisfaction the encouraging and hopeful report of the agent of our Publishing House at Nashville.

Resolved, That we pledge our continued support of our connectional publications issued from our Publishing House.

Resolved, That the Methodists and ministers of the Louisiana Annual Conference recognize no responsibility in the commercial results of the management of the New Orleans Depository.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Resolved, That our publisher, Mr. G. T. Lathrop, deserves well of the patrons of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for the excellent paper, superior typography, and prompt weekly publication of the same.

Resolved, That the Louisiana Annual Conference most heartily endorse the editorial management and conduct of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Resolved, That in view of the claims of our paper, and the increase of Methodist papers, we feel the necessity of pledging ourselves to make increased exertions to extend its circulation within our bounds.

Resolved, That the Publishing Committee for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be, Linus Parker, F. R. Hill and Christian Keener.

J. H. WALKER, Chairman.

Report on Temperance.

Adopted by the Louisiana Conference, January 9, 1882:

Having been appointed by the last Conference as a delegate to a National Temperance Convention to be held on June 21, 1881, at Saratoga Springs, New York, we offer the following as our report of said convention.

There were some 380 delegates in attendance at the convention from all parts of the United States and Canada.

They consisted of men and women, many of them of the first order of talent, and occupying high positions in the Church and State.

These delegates coming as they did from all parts of this broad land, it afforded them an opportunity of adapting a uniform sentiment upon the subject of temperance, and of setting forth a uniform method of labor and concert of action. The universal sentiment of the convention was, total abstinence from all intoxicants for self-security and legal prohibition as the only security for a commonwealth. To these ends they resolved to work. We believe the convention gave new impetus to the cause of temperance generally, and thereby effected good.

We were also requested, as chairman of the standing committee on temperance, to prepare a petition or memorial, to the Legislature of the State, to provide for a legal prohibition of intoxicating liquors in the State. Accordingly, we have prepared the following form of petition, viz:

To the Honorable, the Senate and House of Representatives, of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly Convened:

We, the undersigned citizens, respectfully memorialize and petition your honorable body to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the State to be voted for at the next general election, prohibiting the manufacture and traffic of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal, mechanical or scientific purposes.

Resolved, By the Louisiana Annual Conference that the manufacture and traffic of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited by constitutional amendment.

Resolved, That each preacher of the Conference shall be furnished with a copy of the aforesaid form of petition, which petition he shall have signed by as many citizens as may be willing, and forward the same on the first day of May, 1882, to the Representative from his parish at Baton Rouge, La.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN PIRÉS, Chairman.

The Sabbath.

The Louisiana Conference, at its late session, adopted the following:

Whereas, We believe the Sabbath to be of divine institution and of perpetual obligation. And whereas, The Sabbath is a great sanitary, social, domestic and religious good. And whereas, The growing forgetfulness of the sanctity of the Lord's day, and its frequent and flagrant violations call for our most serious consideration as Christians and citizens; therefore,

Resolved, That we will, from the pulpit and the press, give increased and special prominence to the claims and obligations of the Lord's day; setting forth its divine institution, its perpetuity and manifold benefits to men in all relations.

THE DANGER OF SUCCESSFUL SERVICE.—When the apostles came back to Jesus, to make report of their ministry—to "tell him all things," as St. Mark so simply and strikingly expresses it, "both what they had done and what they had taught"—he receives them with an invitation into solitude: "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile," as though he saw that the excitement of a successful service needed its counteraction; that there was something in them of a spiritual elation, akin to self-complacency if not to self-glorying, requiring therefore that discipline—not always for the present joyous—of a wilderness sojourn, literal or figurative, by which the soul recovers its juster, healthier estimate of greatness and littleness, of itself and God.

Ministry is a gift—it is also a peril. Just in proportion to its prominence, to its efficiency and to its success, is its danger to the human being, man or woman, entrusted with it. It is easy to say that of course we are nothing, God is all. It is easy to call one's selfish humble instrument, and to bid men to look from us to him whose we are. It is easy to speak thus, easy, in general intention, to mean thus. But, in fact—constituted as we are, circumstanced as we are—the remembrance, the realization, are not easy. Even he who comes back to tell Jesus what he has done and what he has taught—it is no common grace to do this—may make his report in a tone which the Heart Searcher reads as self-satisfaction or self-sufficiency, and to which he will apply that divine medicine of which we have in the text the label and the superscription, "Come thou thyself apart into a desert place, and rest awhile."—Vaughan.

Good Words.

There's bonds binding me very round my way,
I can not see,
But through the darkness I believe
God watcheth me.
He sweeps to keep my hand in his,
While all is dim;
So trusty, nothing eyes
And follow him.

Through many a thorny path he leads
My tired feet;
Though many a path of pain I go
Still it is sweet
To know that he is close to me,
My God, my guide,
He taught me, and so I walk
Quite satisfied.

—Christian at Work.

—Wherever a man would and can not, there is servitude. He may be unable to control his expenditure, to rouse his indolence, to check his imagination. Well, he is not free. He may boast, as the Jews did, that he is Abraham's son, or any other great man's son; that he belongs to a free country; that he never was in bondage to any man; but free in the freedom of the Son he is not.—Robertson.

—The Christian may shine by example. "That they may see your good works," says the Saviour. Good works and those only can be properly expected from those who have been illuminated from above and become the children of light.—Rev. L. Bailey.

—Remove Christian churches from the world, and how deep would be the moral gloom which would overspread the earth. With all the human imperfections which enter into them, they are indeed the light of the world and the hope of humanity.

—In the character of Christ, everything good, true, righteous, holy and lovely is conspicuous by its presence; while all opposite qualities are conspicuous by their absence, so far as their remoteness permits them to be conspicuous.

To think we are able is almost to be so; to determine upon attainment is frequently attainment itself. This earnest resolution has often seemed to have about it almost a savor of omnipotence.—Samuel Smiles.

—The life and power of godliness in the heart will give that affection, warmth and pathos to the pulpit addresses which the learning and rhetoric of the schools may glisten and direct, but can not excite.

—God loves to give; and he loves to have his people give. He does not like to have them covetous, he does not like to see them hoard; so, when we learn to give and love to give, we become like him.

—Education alone can secure social peace, an orderly, progressive government and true liberty—not the false liberty which was a mere sophism for extinguishing all enlightenment.—Gambetta.

—Church quarrels and dissensions between church members are what the enemy of souls delights in; thus those who engage in them serve him in the most effectual way.

—During his last illness, Andrew Jackson said, pointing to the family Bible on the stand: "That book, sir, is the rock on which our republic rests."

—How often do we look upon God as our last and feeblest resource. We go to him because we have nowhere else to go.—George Macdonald.

—Beware of detraction, and cultivate a spirit of Christian kindness; guilt, darkness and pain always attend scandal.

—Absence destroys trifling infirmities, but it invigorates strong ones.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19, 1882.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

A SONG.

BY MISS MAGGIE R. BEALE (INVALID.)

Air—"Juanita."

Dark o'er life's ocean
Clouds of grief and billows roll;
Saddest emotion
Fills my anguished soul.
While the waves dash o'er me,
And the tempest's voice is shrill,
Sweetest calm comes o'er me,
Jesus speaks—"be still."
Jesus! O Jesus! sweetest words of cheer to me.
Jesus! O Jesus! Let me fly to thee.

In life's dark hours,
Saviour, be the lilings cheer;
Break thou the powers
That would hinder me.
Thro' life's march so dreary—
In the conflict strengthen me—
When my heart grows weary,
Thou my refuge be!
Saviour! O Saviour! Thou art "all in all" to me!
Saviour! O Saviour! Whom have I but thee?

Thou art life's Fountain,
In my weary spirit give,
To Calvary's mountain
Let me look and live.
What is all earth's treasure?
What to me is pain and loss!
Sweet to me the pleasure,
Bearing thy dear cross.
Saviour! O Saviour! Thou didst bleed and die for me!
Saviour! O Saviour! Let me live for thee!

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

First Quarter—Lesson IV.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 22, 1882.—MARK 2, 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins."—Isaiah xliii, 25.

POWER TO FORGIVE.

1. And again he entered into Capernaum, after some days, and it was noised that he was in the house.

2. And straightway many were gathered together, insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no, not so much as about the door: and he preached the word unto them.

3. And they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four.

4. And when they could not come nigh unto him for the press, they uncovered the roof where he was: and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay.

5. When Jesus saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee.

6. But there were certain of the scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts,

7. Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies? who can forgive sins but God only?

8. And immediately, when Jesus perceived in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, he said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?

9. Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?

10. But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (he saith to the sick of the palsy,)

11. I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house.

12. And immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all; insomuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion.

13. And he went forth again by the seaside; and all the multitude resorted unto him, and he taught them.

14. And as he passed by, he saw Levi, the son of Alphæus, sitting at the receipt of custom, and said unto him, Follow me. And he arose, and followed him.

15. And it came to pass, that as Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans and sinners sat also together with Jesus and his disciples: for there were many, and they followed him.

16. And when the scribes and Pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?

17. When Jesus heard it, he saith unto them, They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance.

Jesus returned from his first round on the Galilee circuit to Capernaum, his home, the only one he could claim, a fisher's hut, occupied by Peter and his family, maybe a hired house. By this time the excitement and rush, caused by his last visit, had subsided enough for him to work. The news of his arrival soon gathered a crowd in the house and about the door, and he preached the word unto them. What a grand expositor of the word; himself the embodiment of that word. His preaching was not as a herald delivers his message: he was till an embassador with a positive message furnished him, but he opened his mouth and taught them. The word was with God, and the word was God; all of God's wisdom was in each word; it flowed from the abundance of his heart. What need had he to know letters when in his heart was the genesis of gospel. But this second sermon in Capernaum was broken in upon just as the one in the synagogue.

His cottage services in his own house could not hide him from the people. They came unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four. When they could not come nigh unto him for the press they uncovered the roof over where Christ was, and let down the bed wherein the sick of palsy lay. In this incident of pardon we have this lesson taught us: That some of our friends, if they are ever to be saved, must be borne in the arms of our faith; our faith is the condition upon which their faith depends, and must put them in the presence of the Saviour. This is all that intercessary prayer can do. We can surround them by the Spirit, and put them in such relation to the Spirit that the least faith on their part will save them. The press of the multitude shows us the expediency of Christ going away that the Comforter might come. The thronging of the multitude, crowding after the bodily presence of Christ, was a hindrance to his work. The Lord honored the united faith of these friends by giving them more than they asked for. Evidently they came expecting nothing more than the healing of the man, but Christ pronounces pardon upon the man's soul. The paralysis of the soul is infinitely worse than paralysis of body. A sick body and a well soul is to be accepted as infinitely preferable to a well body and sick soul. Paralysis of soul results in eternal death; paralysis of body finds its relief in the grave. The cure of the soul was first; it was quick, and complete as the cure of his body. Just a word. Thy sins be forgiven thee, a gracious pardon, full of pity. Son, be of good cheer. How much encouragement the poor, despairing sinner needs. He must be first saved by hope before he can exercise any saving faith. Pity is the starting point of our Lord's work, and our desperate condition is our most eloquent appeal to "him who knoweth our frame and remembereth that we are dust." This poor dejected sufferer had lost all heart and hope, but the Lord knew just how to administer pardon unto him. He begins by calling him son; be of good cheer: thy sins are forgiven thee.

It is not wonderful that this gracious work of mercy should have astounded any of those who witnessed it. Yet it did. There were some present who looked upon the words of pardon as blasphemy. Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies? who can forgive sins but God only? was the unuttered question in the minds of some of the scribes sitting there. But Christ heard their thoughts. Abstractly speaking, these objectors affirmed one of the first principles of all true religious beliefs; all sins are primarily offenses against God, and, therefore, though men may forgive trespasses, so far as they themselves are concerned, yet the ultimate act of forgiveness belongs to God alone, and consequently for a mere man to claim the right of thus forgiving absolutely was to claim a divine attribute, and therefore to blaspheme; it was to utter words disparaging to the majesty of God. These men forgot to take into account the possibility that God may have delegated his pardoning power to his chosen servant, and that this teacher might himself be, as he had asserted already, one with God, and so share his perfection as well as his prerogatives. Either of these assumptions would have cleared him of blasphemy, and Christ had given sufficient proof of both. The sin of the scribes lay in the fact that they ignored these proofs of his delegated power as Son of man to forgive sins and execute judgment, and as Son of God, of his inherent right to claim an honor equal to that which was rightly paid to God, as well as the right to exercise all the prerogatives of his Father. This obstinate rejecting of the evidence that he was Son of man, the representative of humanity, and Son of God, the representative of Deity, was the evil in their thought. Matthew puts the words thus: "Why think ye evil?"

Christ then gave a summary answer to their thoughts by healing the man's body. He heals a body to prove that he can heal a soul. Man, in his short-sighted unbelief, thought that healing a paralyzed body was more difficult than to heal a paralyzed soul. They had eyes to see the first, and no way of testing the second; so the Lord accommodates his argument to their ignorance; reverses the order of truth, and does the easier to prove that he could do the most difficult. That you may know that the Son of man hath power on earth (no one doubts that he has power in heaven to forgive sins, seated, as he is, at the right hand of God,) I say unto thee, arise, take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house. See the paralytic carrying his bed, walking along in his restored strength, and know that I can do the same for the dead and paralyzed souls of sinners. This was an a fortiori argument to men, but to God it was doing a little thing to prove his power to do a great thing. The lesson closes with the call of Matthew. The call was "Follow me," and the response was his leaving his desk, his money; maybe his share was not much; only a small per cent. of the revenue; but it was all he had, and no man can leave more than that.

Colportage Sketches—No. 19.

BY A. M. JONES.

A MORMON WOMAN.

My colportage work, extending over twenty-one counties in Alabama, brought me in contact, from time to time, with almost every religious sect in the State. The members of the various Christian denominations profess a profound faith in the Bible, and have great respect for the oracles of God, but many impressed me as possessing much more of the spirit of bigotry and sectarianism than that of simple and self-denying godliness. While in every community, from the gulf to the mountains, in the fertile valleys, or among the vine-clad hills, I found holy, devout, consecrated men and women, with whom it was not only a privilege, but a pleasure to commune on sacred subjects, yet there were also talkative, loquacious bores, always ready to discuss what they termed doctrine, and advocate the peculiar tenets and dogmas of their own particular church. Though in the midst of the longest days of summer, and I had traveled from early morning without rest or dinner, yet the ignorant old brother with whom the night was spent continued his harangue on the subject of apostacy until eleven o'clock, the mother and children long since asleep, and then retired without reading the Scriptures, family or private devotion. Unfortunately for me, we occupied the same room, and so much concerned was he as to a religious state, in his opinion impossible to exist, that the clock gave the signal of midnight before I had the opportunity to compose myself to sleep. This extremely bigoted brother may have been a pious, good man. God knows: I do not. But before leaving him at church the next day I was sadly impressed that he was "In the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity." "By their fruits ye shall know them." On another evening, though exceedingly tired, I was annoyed most unmercifully, and until a late hour, by an old man and two younger, endeavoring to teach me the great mysteries of the foreknowledge, the foreordination and the decrees of God. They finally became very indignant, and charged a round bill the next morning simply because I innocently asserted that God holds every man personally responsible for his actions; that whisky drinking is incompatible with the teachings of the Bible, and that the drunkard, whether a member of any church or not, who dies without repentance, and in his sins, will be sure to go to hell.

I stood at a man's gate who had just returned from town, and smelled the offensive odor, the mingled perfumes of whisky and tobacco upon his breath. Having answered his questions as to my business and church relations, he at once became eloquent on the subject of baptism, even quoted Greek; but, alas! poor fellow, the sequel revealed the sad fact that he could not read the English language, and never owned a Bible in his life. Ignorance and bigotry are twin brothers, always going hand in hand, and it is amazing the influence they exert in the land. Upon disputed points, and nonessentials scarcely ever alluded to by pious, intelligent people, those chronic babblers are always babbling.

BUT TO MY MORMON WOMAN.

It was the hour of noon, and a hot, sultry day late in August, or early in September, 1878. Since the rising of the sun I had been traveling, at least four miles an hour, and now my jaded, panting horses stood near a residence, in the shade of an ancient oak, eagerly devouring their corn and fodder. The house was old-fashioned, somewhat dilapidated, rather of a ghostly appearance, and evidently had seen better days. Soon the landlord, having discovered my presence, a loan, swarthy man of thirty, came out, entered freely into conversation, and on learning my mission invited me in to dinner. By long experience I had learned that a warm dinner is better than a cold lunch, therefore gladly accepted. On entering the room, and taking my seat, I almost unconsciously cast about for a Bible. It was no where to be seen, not one on the place. In answer to my question, don't you want a Bible? he said, "No; this is our Bible," as he triumphantly placed in my hand a pamphlet of seventy-five or a hundred pages. It proved to be a Mormon production, and revealed the fact that I was in the house of a saint. Reminding him that the author of the book apostatized, and renounced Mormonism after its publication, he said: "I know that; but when the book was written he was an apostle, a good saint, and in the faith. His apostacy, in after years, does not affect its authenticity. We receive it as divine." This excited a little controversy, but he, being a weak brother, was easily put to silence. In the midst of the conversation we were summoned to dinner; and in the lady, a keen, shrewd woman, who, as if by an understanding, took her husband's place, he holding himself in reserve to laugh, I found a much more formidable antagonist. I do not suppose she had ever read or ever seen the Book of Mormon. Like the Roman Catholics, the Latter Day Saints seem to pay but little attention to their divine oracles. But as to the literature of her church, papers, pamphlets, tracts and books, published in support of the degrading system, she was certainly well posted. No Sunday-school pupil, perhaps, ever studied his catechism more closely. The questions she propounded were evidently studied; they were pointed, and came in rapid succession, while her answers, to mine, were all withering and sarcastic in the extreme. She being a woman of more than ordinary culture and superior mind, I became disgusted at such treatment of a stranger, an invited guest at her own table, and intending to turn the whole discussion into ridicule, said: Madam, by your permission I will offer you a little advice. "Well, sir, I will take pleasure in hearing you. If good it may prove beneficial; Otherwise I need not heed it." My advice is never go to Salt Lake. "The distance to Salt Lake, and trouble and expense of getting there, are considerable, but why offer such advice? Why should I or any other saint stay away from the holy city?" I expected a storm, but meekly said, while glancing toward her lean, delicate husband, who seemed scarcely able to support one, in less than twelve months, perhaps, Mr. —— would have a half dozen wives. Before I was done speaking her face became scarlet, and she trembled from head to foot. Laying down her knife and fork, and pushing back her chair, she inclined forward, her eyes in the meantime flashing with pent-up indignation, while her lip curled with scorn. After a moment's hesitation, as if collecting her thoughts, she raised her piercing eyes to mine, with her finger gesticulating near my face, and through her clinched teeth, in a low, trembling, earnest, animated tone, said: "Sir, we do not believe in such stuff as that; it is slander on the church. I know many of the saints at Salt Lake have apostatized, and become as wicked as Gentiles. We have missionaries there now trying to reform them. But if we did believe it, sir, you would all join us." Having no reply to make, and dinner being over, we left the table in good order. Within a few minutes, having bid them adieu, and presented the gentleman a Bible, I was in my buggy, rolling forward. I am inclined to the opinion that this woman is deceived as to the practice of plurality of wives among the Mormons. The name has passed from my memory; I have never seen nor heard of them since.

Four Bishops.

MR. EDITOR: Certainly the approaching General Conference will make at least four Bishops. Our present incumbents are almost worked down, and need help. And the Conferences need help as well. Nearly all the sessions of Annual Conferences have been held this year under a straining pressure of time. Many important matters have merely been touched and passed. In several Conferences submission was accepted under protest. Therefore, it will be one of the main features of business to make Bishops.

It will now be in order, I suppose, for everybody to speak or write his views upon this vital question. It will, no doubt, save the General Conference a great deal of talking and planning, and will help to shorten the session in Nashville, save large expenses, and send all the members home in good time to attend to their charges, especially presiding elders. There seems to be no necessity for holding a session of one month, and do almost nothing, except move "nem concurrence."

Now to the point in hand. Not being a member elect to the General Conference, but having constituent rights, and having believed, I therefore speak. My speech is based upon the twenty-first verse, first chapter of the Acts, which reads thus: "Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us." The phrase, companied with us all the time, has a very to determine the case of election to strong meaning, and was regarded by the apostles as a sufficient sine qua non the sacred office in question. "Companied with" has the following meanings, in part: to meet, engage, agree with, assemble, live with, marry. All of which express the idea of chief regard for and unfaltering devotion to, and must cover the entire life and work of the man. In other words, a man, to be qualified for the office and work of a Bishop, should be a man of one calling and work; and that the work of the ministry—preaching the gospel and saving souls. It further includes the idea of fellowship, or fellow-feeling, in the work of the ministry, with all the laborers thereof in the fields of hard work and hard living. Such a man of God is not a commander simply, but a leader of the Israel of God. Now, that brings out my Scriptural idea of a New Testament Bishop. Such an idea as was unfolded and illustrated in the life and labors of Wesley, Asbury and others.

To be a little more specific. My New Testament idea of a Scriptural Bishop would rule out every aspirant to that office whose whole life work has not been in the pastoral ministry. And I would much prefer one who knows what missionary work means by actual service in the field, as preacher in charge, and all through the gradations of circuit, station and district work. My idea would rule out every man whose ministerial life has been broken into, sections by other callings and offices in the church, or otherwise or elsewhere.

These are my views set forth in my speech in advance of the session of the General Conference. I speak now that I may be heard. Soon voices and forces will be so abundant and well toned that an ordinary speaker will not be heard. And, after all, it may be that I am moved in this direction by Providence. Who knows to the contrary?

Now, then, dearly beloved brethren, I leave the subject with you, only asking that you be governed by the New Testament in so great and weighty a matter as making Bishops.

ANGUS DOWLING.

VILLULA, ALA., Dec. 13, 1881.

A Voice from the Pew.

We claim to have a republican form of government, which is confined altogether to civil rights. Our State officers are representatives of our people, being elected by the voice of the people.

It seems our beloved Methodism is rapidly assuming a monarchial form of government. A private member has no voice whatever in church government. But one privilege is yet extended unto him; the privilege of delving and working day by day to make money to meet the unceasing demands made upon him.

There is a wrong somewhere, and most persons are disposed to think the wrong to be in the hearts of the church membership. If it be, then let something be done to remove the wrong, and then all things will move on harmoniously.

This change of work every year is great inconvenience to the preachers and families themselves, and an immense (unnecessary) expense to the people. For, of course, the people pay the preachers the money expended in moving from place to place.

Last year our pastor (whom we learned to love very much) came with no furniture, no money to buy provisions. We all became interested in his welfare and comfort, gave what money we could, fitted up the parsonage with all necessary furniture and crockery. We now have a minister to come with the demand for beds, and money, too, I suppose. Our people say they feel somewhat imposed upon that they can not do as much this as last year for our church.

I can ascertain the feelings and sentiments of the people more fully than the preacher in charge or presiding elder possibly can. We are an honest, industrious but poor people; try to do all we can to support the ministry. We do appreciate the embassadors of Christ, but there must be something done to prevent the people feeling oppressed on account of constant demands for money. Every preacher in health should cultivate his own garden and chop his own wood. We love and revere the messengers of truth, but do think they ought to teach habits of industry by example as well as by precept.

There seems an increasing tendency to make our preachers "gentlemen of leisure." Something must be done to bring about a better state of feeling, and the cause of Christ would advance accordingly. I desire the prosperity of Zion, therefore deem it advisable to speak in behalf of the people, whose eternal salvation is at stake.

JUSTITIA.

A Word from Jasper County, Texas.

MR. EDITOR: For the past year I have been a reader of your paper, and am very well pleased with it. I have been greatly interested in your correspondence from ministers attending the Ecumenical Conference. The ADVOCATE ought to be found in every Methodist family. Times are pretty hard in this portion of Texas, though there is a great deal of work going on here in getting out cross-ties, lumber and logs, which are rafted down the Neches river to Beaumont.

Provisions are high here, as they have to be hauled from Weiss' Bluff, twenty miles below, to which point they are brought by small steamboats from Beaumont. I hope our farmer friends will plant plenty of corn, potatoes, peas, oats, rye, millet, and not so much cotton, the present year, and see if times will not improve.

Truly yours,

ALEXANDER KINH.

CAIRO, Jasper county, Texas.

Marriages.

CULLEY—RAY.—December 7, 1881, at the residence of the bride's father, Rev. W. A. Ray, Madison county, Mississippi, December 7, 1881, by Rev. P. A. Johnston, Mr. E. C. Culley to Miss Lizzie Ray, all of Madison county, Miss.

LILES—PICKELS.—December 11, 1881, at the residence of the bride's father, by the Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, Mr. William Liles to Miss S. E. Pickels.

HARPER—FOX.—December 27, 1881, at the residence of Col. N. L. McGinis, by Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, Rev. J. D. Harper to Miss Jenie Fox, all of Alexandria, La.

EMERSON—BILLINGSLEY.—December, 1881, at the residence of the bride's mother, by Rev. T. A. S. Adams, Mr. G. W. Emerson and Miss Mollie Billingsley, all of Kosciusko, Miss.

HANNA—TURNAGE.—December 27, 1881, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. T. A. S. Adams, Mr. A. M. Hanna and Miss Lizzie Turnage, all of Kosciusko, Miss.

PEEBLES—JACKSON.—January 3, 1882, at the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at 7:30 P. M., by Rev. T. A. S. Adams, Mr. S. G. Peebles and Miss Tende V. Jackson, all of Kosciusko, Miss.

Obituaries.

UNDERWOOD.—THOMAS UNDERWOOD was born in Autauga county, Alabama July, 1824, and died at his residence, near Mulberry, in said county, November 10, 1881. In his death not only his family but the country and the church have sustained a great loss. No one ever more fully and satisfactorily met all the responsibilities and performed the duties growing out of the relations that he sustained. The noblest type of the tender, affectionate and worthy husband characterized his life. His warm love and unceasing paternal watchfulness and care showed that his children had a father fully entitled to the highest reverence and affection. Never did a family have a keener realization of their loss or more sensibly feel the heavy bereavement that death brings.

As a citizen he was the peer of the worthiest and best. In the community where he was born, reared and died, he was held in the highest esteem by all. Possessed of fine intelligence, and occupying a very excellent social standing, he might have secured positions of public responsibility and trust, but he choose to move in the sphere of a private citizen, yet he took a commendable interest in everything that looked to the public good, and was ever ready to do all he could for the country. He was a consistent, devoted, exemplary Christian. Although he did not connect himself with the church until middle life, yet he was a regular attendant upon public worship, upright in his life, and evinced the warmest interest in the cause of Christianity, contributing cheerfully to its support. When he came in as the church he was at once entrusted with official responsibility. As a steward he was a model. He not only contributed to the support of the ministry, but sought diligently and earnestly to have others do so. He would manage to find out the necessities of his pastor and have them met.

His health had been precarious for some time, and he had expressed himself as conscious that he would not live long. He seemed to be making special preparation for the hour. There was evident growth in grace and a ripening for the dissolution, for he talked freely on this subject to his pastor and his beloved wife. Although confined to his bed but a very short time, and died rather suddenly, yet with the tenderest affection he gave his dying counsel to his family, assuring them of his perfect readiness to pass away. Not a cloud dimmed his spiritual vision, but the brightest prospect of entering into the rest of the blessed, and of rejoining loved ones who had preceded him, irradiated his last moments. He leaves a wife and five children, who are overwhelmed with grief and sorrow, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

J. W. SIMMS.

FOX.—THOMAS B. FOX died at Fair Mount, Smith county, Miss., November 21, 1880; was born in South Carolina, about the year 1800, time of his birth not exactly known, as his parents died when he was very young, and left him to the charity of the world. He was bound by his guardian to serve in the humble position of a tinker, but his aspirations were of a higher nature, evinced by his love and reverence for religious society, and his aversion to every thing of an ungodly nature. Soon after he arrived at maturity he married and emigrated to Mississippi, where he embraced religion, but was not united in full connection to the Methodist Episcopal Church till about the thirty-first year of his age. During his religious life he drank freely of the swelling waters of eternal life, which was demonstrated by his promptness at the family altar, private prayer, attendance to his church, and his Godly walk and conversation. In his latter years he was constantly heard singing and shouting the praises of his Master. Though a great laborer he evinced no desire to lay up earthly treasure, but for the administering to the wants of the poor and needy; and for the support of the Gospel he denied himself many of the common comforts and luxuries of life, while he enjoyed the luxury of doing good. Thanks be to the ever living God, to him it will never be said, "I was an hungered and ye fed me not, naked and ye clothed me not, thirsty and ye gave me no drink." When his head was silvered over by the frost of many winters, his ardent zeal grew stronger and his sanctification more nearly complete. A few weeks before his death he had the pleasure of meeting and hearing a sermon by his son, his joy being full he praised and thanked the living God that the seeds which he had sown thirty and forty long years ago, in the heart of his son, were springing up into life eternal. He who then sowed in tears now reap in joy.

When he found that he must lay his care-worn body down to rise no more till the blessed morn when he should flourish in the full bloom of eternal youth, he committed his spirit to the hands of him who had taken out the sting of death, who was with him and whose rod and staff was his comfort through the valley and shadow of death. His only regret was parting with his family, whom he had so fondly cherished for so many years, but rested in the full assurance that he and they should soon awake from sorrow's dreams to meet beside a pure and living stream.

HIS GRANDSON.

YARBROUGH.—WALTON LEITWICH YARBROUGH was born June 21, 1850, and died, of typhoid fever, in Loachapoka, Ala., October 28, 1881. He was converted when quite young, and the church register shows his admission to full connection in the church, to be October 20, 1873. Here are three important epochs in a most beautiful life—given to earth, born of God, transferred to heaven.

Oh what a bright light was extinguished at sun-set of that October evening! And on the morrow, all nature wept. It was well for the saddest requiem to be sung, for the village had lost its brightest and purest and noblest young man, and every one felt his loss as a personal grief. But although dead, he lives to the memories, in the affections, in the characters of all who knew him.

The writer knew and loved him as he has known and loved but few. His cheerful face and words of welcome were the first to greet his pastor, when two years ago, he entered the village a stranger among strangers. Then he came into his pastor's heart, and nothing ever occurred to mar the sacred friendship. He possessed many of the elements of true greatness, perhaps as can be easily found in human life. Generous yet just; brave yet modest; zealous yet prudent; the world at a glance, marked out for him a most beautiful, useful life. Possibly but few came so near to living up to this divine requirement, "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Religion was to him a supreme power that he carried with him in all circles—paramount to all claims; and he was the same fervent, consistent Christian in mercantile affairs, that he was in his favorite places—the Sabbath school or the prayer meeting. The soul of truth and honor, he could not compromise with wrong; but kindly yet firmly rebuked evil in any of its phases. His last work was for the church, and faithfully was it done. Eternity alone can tell the actual good accomplished. How his loss is felt in the home circle! It completes a Roman fame; prided herself justly upon her jewels—her affectionate children—what comfort may the grief-stricken parents derive from the assurance that their darling boy is a jewel in the crystal casket of "mansions in the skies."

His end was more than peaceful; his triumph was glorious. Conscious of approaching death, he rejoiced in the strength of his Saviour, and told his mother that she and his father had led him to the pearly gates, and that soon he would meet them and to part no more.

Thus passed away one of the purest, noblest spirits of earth. The life and death of Walton L. Yarbrough were a benediction to all who knew him.

WALTER P. DOBINSON.

DAVIS.—My grand-father, JOSEPH W. DAVIS, was born in Marion district, S. C., August 21, 1804. At the age of eighteen years he united with the Methodist church in Marion district. Leaving South Carolina he came to Baldwin county, Ala., in the year 1828, and on the first day of September, 1831, he was married to Miss R. A. McDavid. After residing thirty two years in Baldwin county, he removed to Escambia county, Ala., and thence, in a few years, to Santa Rosa county, Fla., at which place on December 21, 1881, after a week's severe illness, he died of heart disease in the seventy-eighth year of his age, having been a Methodist more than sixty years.

A good man sometimes accomplishes more in his death than even in life, he being dead, yet speaketh. After over sixty years a member of the Methodist church, he leaves a Christian character which was never doubted by any but himself. And his own doubts were few, owing, perhaps, to the fact that his conversion, as I have heard him tell, was one of those bright changes which make all nature seem alive with gladness and every sound full of praise to God. His consistent life was one living witness for Jesus. He loved to talk of personal religion, and delighted to have the scriptures made plain to him by the ministers of Christ, whom he always welcomed. Though a man full of energy and perseverance, yet he labored not to accumulate worldly treasures, but seemed ever to act in view of the life to come and that he might lay up treasures in heaven. He was a willing contributor to the support of the gospel at home and in the regions beyond. The writer remembers to have been deeply impressed two years ago with a prominent characteristic of the life of the deceased. It is that which is set forth as a Christian duty in the words, "Speak not evil one of another." When others would utter words of evil against a neighbor, friend or enemy he joined them not, but evaded, and spoke something commendable if it could be found. As a husband, he was kind and affectionate; as a father, he was positive yet gentle and as a neighbor, he was always ready to lend a helping hand; as a Christian, his life has been characterized by that consistency which leaves us no room to doubt in the least that grand-father has gone home to heaven. We now have a father, grand-father and a brother in heaven. We know and we should rejoice that he let us labor to enter into that rest, that as we are called away one by one, and finally the last broken household earth, we so unbroken family to sing the praises of our Heavenly Father in the beautiful beyond.

W. W. J.

OHOM.—THOMAS ALLEN OHOM was born in Augusta, Georgia, November 12, 1825, and departed this life in Grenada county, October 25, 1881.

He removed to Grenada about the close of the year 1865. In 1871 he united himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, during a camp meeting held near Grenada, since which time he has led the life of an earnest, consistent Christian. How sad it will be indeed to all that country! for he was always keenly alive not only to the interests of the church, but the needy and distressed, he never turned away. Being wise in the adaptation of means calculated to produce the happiest results, he often succeeded in overcoming what would seem to most of us insurmountable difficulties.

He would not, wittingly, wrong a fellow being. His benevolence to churches, preachers, widows and orphans was known far and wide. Few men could excel Mr. Ohom in excellent civil character. A good husband, a kind affectionate father, a faithful friend and brother. Since he has passed from our midst it is a sad pleasure to testify to his nobleness of heart and soul.

What wonder that the stricken ones of his devoted family bitterly deplore the loss of one so true and trusted. Those who knew him best loved him most, and may the all wise Father, who has seen fit to take this beloved one to himself, comfort the bereaved ones as only he can. Surely we are selfish to desire our friend a longer sojourn in a world of trouble, but human nature weeps over even a brief separation, the while reason assures God doeth all things well in the "beautiful beyond," "where the wicked cease from troubling," the immortal soul rests through a blissful eternity.

A FRIEND.

MELLOWN.—WALTER, son of David E. Mellown, was born June 9, 1873, and died near Gaston, Ala., October 27, 1881.

Only three short years and a few days, were the fond parents permitted to keep this borrowed treasure and how their hearts did entwine about this little boy! And no wonder, for even this early in life traits of noble character began to be seen, and they often pictured in their minds his future and useful career. But while we weep on earth, there is joy in heaven, for on the glad wings of angel brothers and sisters, this little child is "borne to heaven, where secure from pain and death, and in the arms of him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," he will be watching and waiting at the beautiful gate, for mamma and papa, and grand-pa and ma.

G. HAWKINS.

FORDHAM.—Died near Brookline, Jackson parish, Louisiana, November 15, 1881, MRS. LAURA J. FORDHAM, in the twenty-third year of her age. Born and raised of religious parentage, she early in life remembered her Creator by assuming the vows and obligations of religion under the ministry of Rev. C. W. Hodge. Thenceforward walking in the ways of the Lord, she filled the place of a modest, unassuming Christian. She died a triumphant death. Calling her friends about her, she bade them farewell, and asked them to meet her in heaven. Thus our friends are passing over.

D. T. PADDOCK.

MCCALL.—Died, at Yellow Bluff, Wilcox county, Ala., of pneumonia, on the night of December 9, 1881, WILLIAM, infant son of Bro. James P. and Sister Belle Davis McCall, aged six months and seventeen days.

A. C.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19, 1882.

STRIKE NOW.

There's nothing more that canst command,
The past has gone beyond thy hand,
With many a broken vow.
The coming moment is not thine;
Life's sands between, a narrow line,
Stand while the lion's hot—strike now.

Now is the time to do the deed,
Now the time to uproot the weed,
Act, not-praise to acquire how;
Each passing moment chills the glow,
Good forging twins the thought and blow,
Strike while the iron's hot—strike now.

Plan as he will, strike as we may,
All power, hope, growth from day to day,
To the crushing now must bow.
Results of reason, feeling, fact,
All are surprise, the now but fact,
Strike while the iron's hot—strike now.

Greatness the new has always won,
Will signed, that this is all the sum
Of life who can disavow?
Work in the now from first to last,
It's always with you, never past,
Strike while the iron's hot—strike now.

A Strange Death-Warrant.

New Year's sermon, by Rev. W. R. Stos, preached at Bluffdale, Miss., January 1, 1882; afterward written out from pulpit analysis and published by request.

"Thou, nor they shall die."—Jeremiah xxvi. 16.

All death is, in one sense, the result of sin. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." (Rom. v, 12.)

Yet, occasionally, sin has been even more directly the cause of death. Aggravated forms of sin have drawn down the special chastisement of God, and the offenders have died by the hand of his out-leaping wrath. They have not been left to perish by the slow processes of disease, the natural wear and tear upon the physical system, nor by the apparently accidental calamities of flood, fire, field or famine; but some swift and special messenger of retributive justice has overtaken them in their iniquity, and, like the cities of the plain under the awful rain of fire from heaven, they have been swept from the earth before the tempest of God's righteous indignation.

It is a peculiar coincidence that, within the scope of sacred history, two persons of the same name should, at an interval of nearly seven hundred years, thus suffer under special sentence of death for sin. Yet Hananiah—Greek forms of the New Testament and Hananiah of the Old, both had their sinful course of life cut short by the instant declarative punishment of God. The history of the latter, whose death-sentence constitutes my text, is of thrilling interest and importance. It occurred during an eventful period of Jewish history, nearly six hundred years before Christ. In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, King of Judah, the prophet Jeremiah received a communication from God revealing to him the speedy ascendency of the Babylonish sceptre. He was also commanded to give a yoke to each of the neighboring kings of Moab, Ammon, Tyre and Sidon, in token of their approaching subjection to Nebuchadnezzar. These emblems Jeremiah sent through the ambassadors attendant upon the court at Jerusalem to their respective sovereigns, and, also, as Judah was to suffer in the general downfall, put one upon his own neck. Standing this one day in the courts of the temple, which was so soon to be desecrated by unholy feet, clad in his rough prophetic garb with this degrading emblem of this people's woe suspended from his neck, he was addressed by Hananiah, who proclaimed to him openly before all the people that the yoke of subjection to Babylon was broken, and that within two years, even the vessels, which had been carried off by Nebuchadnezzar's former depredations, should be restored to the sanctuary.

Whether under real conviction that this was an authentic and later message from Jehovah, or whether under a unsanctified impulse of selfish interest and the partiality of popular favoritism, the people seem to have heard Hananiah with a great degree of credulous deference. Ah, brethren, are we not too ready to listen when the message is pleasant, and too reluctant when it is unwelcome? Jeremiah had already paid the forfeit of his faithfulness, when he had been put by Pashur in the public stocks in the gate of Benjamin, a laughing-stock for every passer-by; and his people had again and again rejected him. But this novice Hananiah comes, singing a siren song of pleasure and ease and freedom, and, lo, he stands unharmed and exalted "in the presence of the priests and in the presence of all the people." Jeremiah, however, from the very first, does not have much faith in the new prophet. Turning to him with a sad and sarcastic smile, he says, "Would that thy prophecy were true!" He then proposes to submit both prophecies to the simple test of time, and let the period of fulfillment verify or annul them. Meanwhile, his worst suspicions of Hananiah are confirmed; and, commissioned afresh of God, he charges the pseudo prophet with the fearful sin he had practiced upon the people, and, in the name of God, pronounces against him the sentence recorded in the text: "This year thou shalt die."

I. The Sin of Hananiah. At the table to-day, a gentleman present wondered at the daring impudence of a certain ministerial imposter, and expressed astonishment that sin should thus be made to mingle with the peculiar things of God. But it is no marvel that satan, yawing with envy and malicious lust the pure sanctuary of the Lord, should seek a deceptive entrance there, disguised, if need be, as an angel of light. We read in Job that "when the sons of God came to present themselves before Jehovah, the adversary came also among them." The late Bishop Hamline, on one occasion in his early life when an avowed atheist, visited a church where he was a stranger; and accidentally learning that the assembled congregation were expecting a "new" preacher who had yet failed to come, presented himself in the role of belated minister and boldly took possession of the pulpit which he occupied to the entire satisfaction of his congregation who were just congratulating themselves on their new pastor, when, instead of the formulated benediction, the speaker repeated one of Mother Goose's nursery jingles. The sin of Hananiah, however, is far removed from this species of jocular blasphemy. His is no eccentric prank of idiosyncrasy like that of Hamline whom many of his friends, at the period alluded to, thought insane. There is method in the madness of the son of Azur. He goes at his task in a serious way.

His is a peculiar sin. No one can fathom the dark motives which led to its commission. He could gain at best a short-lived personal aggrandizement. Sin, however, is short-sighted and mysterious—darkly mysterious in its purposes and plans, and reasons it has none.

It is a specious sin. How fair to look upon! It promises far more than the gloomy prophecy of Jeremiah. It holds out before the eyes of the people the very things for which they are longing. Such to the carnal eye is always the contrast between the truth of God and the devices of Satan. But our cunning deceiver here goes further than the mere boast of fair promises. He renders these promises plausible indeed by an appeal to the very source of inspiration whence Jeremiah had just learned and proclaimed the doctrine of Judah's downfall. Beware, O, beware! We must "try the spirits."

It is a two-fold sin. Like the fabled viper's brood, sin multiplies itself. One sin leads to another. Aye, one sin often involves another. Hypocrisy, in this instance to men, is also blasphemy to God.

It is a great sin. Every sin is a great one of itself. Still sins are comparative. There are degrees. Evil is graded in character, and sins in magnitude. And this is a great sin. It rises out of the ordinary level like Milton's Satan,

"By merit raised
To that bad eminence."

Not only is it great in its gross degree of guilt, already noticed, but great in its extent. It passes beyond the boundary of individual life and consequences, and menaces the moral and national life of a people.

Great, too, in its tendency to prevail. Observing the whole situation, one can not avoid thinking that if extraneous interference does not come, this devil will have things his own way. This, however, is not to be. Above the wild, bold career of sin, mark the controlling and avenging hand of God, and note

II. The Punishment of Hananiah's Sin.—The punishment followed the sin as a necessary consequence. Detection was inevitable. Sooner or later his guilty presence must have become public. His own guilty conscience would have betrayed him. Like Jones, the fiend who committed the atrocious murder near Aberdeen, in this State, last month, his victims would have haunted him day and night till they drove him to confession. Besides, Jeremiah was watching him with that suspicious and sleepless vigilance which the whole occasion demanded. And above all, the eye of God was on him. The same finger of fate that pointed with pitiless precision at David when Nathan cried out, "Thou art the man," would have singled him out and condemned him. The same Nemesis that dogged the carefully-covered tracks of Achan and uncovered his ill-gotten pelf, would have disclosed also the place of this iniquity and brought forth the hiding culprit to the execution of a righteous and inexorable law. Sinner, O, that God would give me power to warn you to flee the wrath to come! Be sure your sin will find you out. And when discovered, it must be punished. The nature of sin and the law, character and government of God demand the punishment of all sin, unrepented of and unpardoned. We acknowledge invariable sequence of cause and effect under the operations of Nature's resistless laws, and act on the knowledge. We pay due regard to the momentum of all tractable bodies within the range of gravitation. We anticipate progress from the law of growth. But moral cause and effect follow more inevitably than physical. My friend, your sin of to-day is bound by a chain that knows no breaking to an eternity of shame. And reasonably. Your sin is an absolute transgression of law. The law, as promulgated, supported by righteous penalties and awards. Sin, therefore, incurs penalty. No exemption, no repeal, no pardon, except through repentance and faith in Christ. A moment's reflection will convince us of the necessity of the punishment of sin. Consider the moral effect of God's justice on the human soul, on the individual soul, on your soul. Would you have God say what he does not mean? Would you have the clouds and smoke upon the frowning top of Sinai turn out mere tricks of the atmosphere? Consider, too, the various subjects of God's empire, scattered in distant habitations throughout the universe of physical and spiritual existence. They, also, are his "sheep," though "not of this earthly fold." God cares for them, and governs them. His government, based on unvarying principles of rectitude, is identical everywhere: The universe is watching God. Angelic beings, with advanced forms of knowledge, desire to look into his conduct of our earthly affairs. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth (world, in its largest sense) do right?" "As I live, saith the Lord God, the soul that sinneth it shall die." "Hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?"

What is the nature of this punishment? Here it is: death. To man in Eden, with the first positive command was given the penalty, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "The wages of sin is death." So in our text: Thou hast sinned, and, as a punishment, "this year thou shalt die."

III. Lessons from Hananiah's Sin.

1. An appeal to time is a safe vindication of the right, but a sure condemnation of the wrong. Jeremiah could well afford to await calmly and patiently the time of his prophecy; but to his opponent (for such he was) each day brought ruin nearer. Truth can afford to wait, but error can not. Washington, in a private letter to Lazac, professor of history at Leiden, wrote this unanswerable sentence: "The man who acts from principle, who never deviates from the path of truth, moderation and justice, must finally succeed." Magnes est veritas, et prævalebit. The triumph intimate of truth is assured from the beginning. It has within itself all the seeds of success. It will endure.

"Party and passion and the sins of men
May write their names in gaudy letters big
Upon the brick-wall by the stones of time;
But Truth and Right will stand forever graved
Upon the granite of Eternity."

The philosophy of it all is manly patent in that grand and accurate exposition of human character as moral, the first Psalm: "The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish."

This development of truth pre-recorded is a strong proof of the system in which it inheres. The historic, remote and minute fulfillment of prophecy is tangible evidence of divine inspiration. Many prophecies of Scripture are yet to be fulfilled. In regard to them, Christianity and infidelity occupy the respective attitudes of Jeremiah and the pseudo-prophet. Like Jeremiah, let us rest with confidence to the prophecies of the past (yes, and submit to the arbitrament of time as the only test of prophecy and the great vindicator of God's eternal truth.

2. God will not suffer wickedness to defeat the ends of righteousness. To the range of human vision, things may appear in a critical juncture, and even in a desperate condition. Sin may walk in high places; evil-doers may band together; the prophet's heart, not seeing the invisible thousands of God, may grow sick; Hananiah may have a large following among the people of God; but the Lord rules. The sentence of their death is already gone out to destroy them and all their works and all their influence.

3. A false Christian does not prove a false Christianity. The world is making a mistake, more pretended than real, on this subject. You, my people, are judging wrongfully. You are charging the principles of Christ with the faults of his followers. Suppose the people of Judah had said: Hananiah is false, therefore God is a liar. Nay, my brethren, let God be true, though every man a liar.

I hold in my hand the minutes of the Little Rock Conference, just printed in our ADVOCATE. Here I see the record, "R. T. Nukes, 'expelled from the ministry and from the church.'" Shall I condemn the ministry because of the unfaithfulness of the minister? I urge this question, brethren, because I feel that you are guilty before God in this matter. This were surely unwise. Because there are some few, grant even many, members of our church of whom I earnestly pray and am this day working that we may be either rid or cured, who are leading inconsistent lives, will you, my friends, condemn the living church of Christ and reject "the means of grace which it alone supplies?" Because a few evil spirits fell from the world of glory, think you that all the angelic host are foul with the ambitious lust of power, and heaven a place of vile stode and warring wrangle? Because there was a Judas, must all the apostles be traitors?

4. God gives even condemned sinners space to repent. "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." Two months were given Hananiah, not as indifferent blank waste of time, but for wise purposes of Providence. Doubtless, it was that he might "account the long-suffering of our Lord salvation."

What an important period was this reprieve to him! How much was crowded into this final extention of grace! A Christian woman, a member of this church, said to me this morning: "I went into my closet depressed. In prayer God visited me. I rejoiced greatly in secret. I came out into the room, and looked at the clock. Only five minutes had passed; but, O, how much there was in those five minutes!"

Two months to Hananiah. How long has God given you? However long, "the day of the Lord will come." This leads us to our last lesson:

5. The possibilities and dangers this year has in store for you.

One year ago, I stood in this pulpit and preached to this congregation a New Year's sermon. Do you remember my text? "Lord, let it alone this year also." Mercifully indeed, God has spared many of us to meet here again in this hallowed spot, and to look back together over the folded record of another year, during which he has graciously "let us alone."

How different my theme to-day! Last year, a hopeful intercessory prayer to God to spare our unprofitable lives; to-day, a sentence of divine wrath against sin, and man through sin. A sentence of death. It is written of some who hear these words. It may be you. "This year thou shalt die." Some who were here last New-Year's day are not here to-day. The summons came to their last year, and they have passed over the flood. Who will go next, we can not tell. Speculation is painful and uncertain. It may be you.

Pugh, in his "Warning," lays down several reasons for serious thought in view of a probably speedy death. Hear some of them:

This year you may die; for you must at some time, and why not this year as likely as any other?

This year you may die; for many during the past year have been cut off, and many will die during this year; and why not you?

This year you may die; for you will surely be exposed to many circumstances that render death liable to occur.

Are you ready to die this year? If not, how short the time in which you have to make the requisite preparation. God grant that, in full view of an open grave, you may, by grace, give him your heart for this year and for eternity.

To you, brethren, who are ready and awaiting the Master's summons, the sentence in the text should hold no terrors, but many joys.

Even in the dark valley, sorrowing friends around you and torturing pains within, Jesus is there to dry every tear, soothe every pain and give you conquest over the dominion of death.

"Oh, believer! lift up thy head; for thy redemption draweth nigh. What, though ye go soon to shed thy last tear over sin or sorrow? This year to feel the last corruption, and to be agitated by the last anxiety? This year to win eternal redemption? This year to pass over the river, and stand on the banks of deliverance? This year to draw near the jasper walls? This year to pass abundantly through the pearly gates, to enter the New Jerusalem, to worship in the heavenly temple? This year to meet the loved ones gone before? This year to see Jesus? This year to be in the very presence of God? This year to die; and yet to die "just outside the gates of heaven!"

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

The Jewish Mission Committee of the Established Church of Scotland reports of its last year's work: "Last year our schools were attended by 2,101 pupils (937 boys and 1,172 girls,) of whom 1,038 (291 boys and 837 girls) were Jews. These are the largest numbers ever yet returned, being 318 more than in 1878, hitherto our most prosperous year in this department of our work. More Jews attended our meetings than ever before. Ten Jews were baptized. Large numbers of native children, other than Jews and British, including some Moslem children, are receiving an excellent general education, including always a very thorough Christian training. Provision is made for the pastoral superintendence of our country men at the various stations, including the sailors visiting the ports of Alexandria, Salonica, and Smyrna."

The report of the Russian Holy Synod for 1878 shows that its missionary service in Siberia and in the Volga region has been very successful. The Missionary Society has branches in twenty-nine dioceses. Its capital amounts to 660,000 roubles, of which 121,000 was spent in 1878. The number of pagans reported as converted during the year was 5,000. The missionaries have to work in a primitive country, amid many difficulties and against the active antagonism of the Shamans and Lamas from Mongolia. The chief triumph of the year's work is considered to have been the conversion of the great Manchu Lama Tapchin, who attended Episcopal celebrations in 1878 and was profoundly impressed by them.

—An effort is being made in New York city to form a Hungarian Presbyterian Church, where there are about one hundred and fifty acknowledging this faith. November 13, services were held in the Hungarian language in a room at No. 9 University Place, and it is proposed to form an organization soon. Rev. Francis Kecskemeti, a young Hungarian minister, arrived in New York a few weeks ago, having been sent there by the Hungarian presbytery, and will have charge of the enterprise.

—The Executive Committee of the City Mission reports that an interesting work among the Italians of New York city has been carried on during the past summer, under the principal direction of the Rev. A. Arrighi, of the free Italian Church. In the DeWitt Memorial Church, opened in May last, a good degree of interest has been maintained, the congregation has increased steadily, and several conversions are reported.

—The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church has two schools in Montevideo, one free, the other only for students who pay, both carried on by Miss Cecelia Gnelli, a convert of the mission. These schools supply a long and sadly-felt want. They are well inaugurated. Miss G. has two assistants, and the Society has made increased appropriations to her this year.

—When the news of the massacre of twelve native missionaries in New Guinea arrived in the other islands of the Pacific and request was made in the island of Tahiti that three men should be sent to supply the place of those who had fallen, all the students in the college volunteered, so that they had actually to cast lots who should be the three to go.

—Seventy-four British missionary and benevolent societies raised $5,544,750 in 1880. Of this there was contributed to Church of England foreign missions, £165,816; joint societies of Churchmen and Nonconformists, £161,-64; English and Welsh Nonconformist societies, £391,313; Scotch and Irish Presbyterian societies, £170,355; Roman Catholic societies, £6,772.

—A good movement is on foot, set in motion by the Woman's Executive Committee of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church, to raise a subscription among the women and children of America for the purpose of establishing mission churches in Utah in memory of President Garfield.

—Secretary Evarts.—Secretary Roberts said lately that "the Presbyterian Church last year spent $195,000 in Home Mission work, and of this amount two men contributed $85,000, and left an average contribution of fifty cents, the price of two good cigars, to each member for the year."

—The death has occurred of a notable Presbyterian Missionary in Africa, a woman, Mrs. Southerland,—who had seen thirty-two years' service in Calabar. She saved many lives of heathens sentenced to death by the barbarous customs of the land, and was almost worshipped for her kindness by the poor of Duke Town.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The General Synod of the Church of England in Australia has been held in Sydney. The primate, the Bishop of Sydney, was absent on account of sickness. The Synod made provisions for the organization of a provincial system and spent much time in perfecting a form for the trial of bishops. A resolution was introduced conveying thanks to the revisers of the New Testament and declaring that, satisfied with the "faithfulness of the revised translation to the authentic Greek manuscripts," the General Synod "approves the use of the Revised Version in churches, provided the consent of the bishop of the diocese" be first given. After some discussion, the latter part of the resolution was withdrawn and the former passed. Upon a resolution being introduced to the effect that the services provided in the prayer-book ought to be carried out, Mr. Shepherd Smith expressed the hope that the prayer-book would be purged of some portions which it was disgraceful to make compulsory. Some of the Psalms of David should be relegated to the position of Solomon's Song and some were opposed to Christianity. The Psalms of David taught us to hate those whom our Saviour taught us to forgive. The Dean of Melbourne rose to a point of order, and said it was "perfectly horrible" to hear the word of God spoken of in such a way, and the presiding bishop said the language was irreverent and unfit to be heard in the Synod. Mr. Smith thereupon said he was perfectly conscious of the force of the language he used, and the censure of the president just passed made it impossible for him to retain his seat in the Synod. He, therefore, retired, against the earnest solicitation of the Bishop of Melbourne, who said Mr. Smith had not committed an unpardonable crime, but he thought he could convince him that he had spoken too strongly. New York Independent.

It is proposed that the Free Church Assembly be asked to make a deliverance on the subject of disestablishment, taking new ground. It is thought more can be accomplished by working directly for the disestablishment of the Church of Scotland, on the ground that it does not represent the majority and has abolished lay patronage. Hitherto the attacks against Established Churches have been put on abstract grounds, and the Church of England was assailed as much as the Church of Scotland. Many believe that much is to be gained politically by disentangling the question in Scotland from that in England.

The Evangelical Protestant Union is an association of English Evangelicals, whose purpose it is to oppose all tendencies to deprive the church of its Protestant name and character. It has just held its third annual meeting. One of the speakers warned the Union of the danger of replacing the black gown with the surplice. The change invariably prepared the way for the introduction of Ritualism.

Edward Kimball, the "church-debt extinguisher," was with the third Presbyterian Church, Elizabeth, N. J., on a recent Sunday, and secured pledges sufficient to clear the debt of $11,500, which the church has been for years trying to remove.

—A decree has been issued exempting Chinese converts to Christianity from all levies for idolatrous worship, processions or theatrical performances.

—It is said that in the last twenty years more than 15,000 Indians in British America have been received into the Church of England.

Our Young People.

BOYS' RIGHTS.

I wonder now if anyone
In this broad land has heard
In favor of down-trodden boys
One solitary word?
We hear enough of "woman's rights,"
And "rights of working men,"
Of "equal rights" and "nation's rights,"
But pray just tell us when
Boys' rights were ever spoken of?
Why we've become so used
To being snubbed by everyone,
And slighted and abused,
That when one is polite enough
We open wide our eyes,
And stretch them in astonishment
To twenty times their size;
Boys seldom dare to ask their friends
To venture in the house
It don't come natural at all
To creep round like a mouse.
And if we should forget ourselves
And make a little noise,
Then ma or auntie sure would say,
"Oh, my! those dreadful boys."
The girls hang on the piano
To peace, but if the boys
Attempt a tune with fife and drum
It's "Stop that horrid noise!"
"That horrid noise," just think of it,
When sister never fails
To make a noise three times as bad
With everlasting "scales."
Unskilled at this, we lose no time
In beating a retreat;
So off we go to romp and tear,
And scamper in the street.
No wonder that so many boys
Such wicked men become,
There better far to let them have
Their games and plays at home;
Perhaps that text the teacher quotes
Some times—"Train up a child"—
Means only train the little girls,
And let the boys run wild.
But patience, and the time will come
When we will all be heard,
And when it comes, I rather think
Wrongs will be righted then.

Tim's New Suit.

BY MRS. A. HALL.

There is not one of us, young or old, rich or poor, who can not do some good thing for somebody. Our blessed Master taught us this lesson continually. Shall I tell you of a solitary instance where even a new suit of clothes worked a reformation such as few who live in comfortable homes, without want, could readily imagine?

In a narrow lane at the rear of the house where we lived, and out of a wretchedly squalid place,—for it could not be called a home,—there came often to play with the children a bright-eyed little fellow with very ragged and soiled garments. I had not the heart to prevent it, or forbid the naturally joyous spirit, in its effort to leap up to the glad sunshine it found there.

One day I called Tim to me for that was the boy's name and asked him if he had ever been to Sunday-school. Opening his large dark eyes in astonishment, he replied: "I don't know what it is, ma'am." I explained to him as simply as I could, and then asked him if he would like to go. His whole face brightened for a moment and then grew very sad, as, looking down at his rags and soiled bare feet, he answered: "Yes, ma'am, but I have no good clothes."

"But suppose you could have clothes fit to wear, how would it be then?"

"I'd be so glad, ma'am," he replied.

I told him to come to me the next day, and we would see what could be done.

Early on that next Sabbath morning the lad was at my door. I shall never forget the look of new and strange delight upon his face when arrayed in the clothes we had procured for him. A little cut away jacket, and pants; in the pocket a snow-white handkerchief the very first he had ever owned; his linen collar tied with a neat black ribbon, and shoes and stockings upon the poor callous feet. It would have done your heart good to have seen him. What an outburst of wonder and admiration came from the other children! How he stood on tiptoe before the glass, wanting "to see himself,"—for he was a little boy, and had no such thing as a looking-glass where he lived. I think I never saw so radiant a face! He hardly knew himself, and his mother really did take him for one of the other boys!

To Sunday-school we went. The lesson was opened to and read aloud, although the usual plan was to commit the verses to memory. My new scholar sat with starting eyes and gaping mouth, and I really think did not hear a word. I could not have told whether he was in the body or out, so ecstatic was his joy!

We were in the habit in our school of distributing cards, with pictures upon them, for good behavior. I passed one to him. It was that of Christ blessing the children.

"Who is that man with a glory on his head and his arm around a little girl? Is he their father?" he inquired.

"Why, that is Jesus, my boy. Did you never hear of Jesus?"

"No, ma'am, I never heard tell about him."

Drawing him to me, I went over the old, old story of Jesus and his love, how he spent all his time after he grew up, in going about doing good, and, above all, how kind he was to the poor and the sick.

"Well, I wish he was here now, teacher; don't you?"

"He is here, Tim, always ready to help us, too, in every hour and any trial; and before he went to heaven he taught us how to pray to him whenever we wanted anything or were in any trouble, and promised he would hear and send us relief."

"How I wish I had known that before," said the child, earnestly. "Why didn't somebody tell me? for then I could have saved my mother many a beating, and perhaps Jesus would have sent us some bread when Susie and I used to cry ourselves to sleep, we were so hungry. I am so glad you have told me about him, and I must go on my knees now, if you will only tell me what he wanted me to say;" and down upon his knees Tim went before I could remonstrate; but not alone; one after another of the seven boys of the class following his example, all with clasped hands and upturned faces, waiting for the teaching I was to give this poor boy, who, for the first time, was looking for help from the Saviour whom he had known but one short hour! And so, with those little heads clustering about me, I led them in that most beautiful of all prayers; that Jesus himself taught when upon earth, "Our Father which art in heaven."

As the boys rose from their knees, I saw how deeply impressed Tim was with that first service for Christ. Never was there a happier company of boys, but the very happiest of them all was the poor outcast, who, though made in God's image, had been left to the surroundings of vice and misery, and knew not until this day that there was anything else for him in all this world!

Thus from the lowest state of degradation that young soul was lifted to a higher, holier life by so small a benefaction. And, more than all, as the result of that prayer, heard by one who never turns a deaf ear to even the humblest child who comes to him for help, everyone of that little class, as they grew up, became earnest followers of the Lord Jesus, and Tim himself a faithful minister of the gospel.

Those helps, though trifling in themselves, to God are no trifles. They are a great deal more beautiful in his sight than we can ever think. Good works God loves. The encouragement we give others will be a record in our own pilgrimage never to be forgotten by the Father of us all. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me," said the Master.—New York Observer.

Under the Water.

BY MRS. A. MITCHELL.

The way that fish live, their structure and motion, are exceedingly curious, and only afford fresh proofs of the wisdom and power of God; for all must know that in order to live in water the bodies of creatures must be very differently made from those which live only upon land, and this is the first peculiarity we find in both the exterior and interior structure of fish.

"Why," you will ask, "have most fish a slender, thin body, flattened on the sides and pointed toward the head?" and the question, on a moment's reflection, answers itself. Why but to enable them to swim and move easily through the water?

Why are they generally covered with scales, if not that their bodies may be defended from the pressure of the water, so entirely surrounding them?

Why are many fish, particularly those which have no scales, enveloped with a smooth, oily covering, but to preserve them from injury and keep them warm?

Their bones are peculiarly light and flexible, and the construction of the eyes of fish are both curious and wonderfully adapted. Being in an element so much more dense than our air, they could see nothing, and, indeed, would be blinded by the strong reflection of the rays of light were it not for the spherical or globe-like form of the portion of the eye known as the crystalline humor, by which the rays of light are so much better collected.

Although they have no eyelids, and can not even draw back their eyes, the intense hardness or horn-like nature of the cornea preserves them from all danger. Their fins are, then, only limbs, and by these they perform all the different motions.

By means of the tail-fin, they move forward; the back-fin directs the motion of their bodies; the breast-fin enables them to rise to the surface of the water, while the fins under the body preserve their balance.

The gills are their organs of breathing. They are placed, as you will always notice, behind the head, and are mostly four on each side, the uppermost being the largest. They constantly take in water by their mouths, and evacuate it through these gills. Then the blood, which comes from the heart and passes through the veins of the gills, does not return through the lungs to the heart again as in all land animals, but is distributed directly to every part of their bodies.

But the great organ most essential to fish in swimming is the air-bladder, enclosed in the body, and connected with the stomach. By means of this bladder they make themselves more or less heavy, as when it is inflated they become lighter, rise and swim near the top of the water, and when it is contracted and the air in it compressed, they become heavy and sink in the water.

The innumerous number of fish, and their great variety of shape and size, also merit our attention. In the waters of Germany alone there are known to exist almost five hundred different species of fish, and of the smallest as well as the largest. Some are long and fine as a thread; others are flat, round, triangular, etc. Some are armed as it were with a horn, some with a species of sword, and others with a kind of a saw. Some have regular nostrils, through which they drive out the extra amount of water they may have swallowed. And many more wonderful things can be written about these dwellers of the mighty deep. But from even this little outline we may learn of the wisdom of the great Creator in adapting each and every living thing to its uses and its element, and truly appreciate the words of the royal Psalmist, when he tells us, "They who go to sea in ships, who do business in the mighty waters, these see the works of the Lord and his wonders in the deep."—Golden Days.

ONE STEP AT A TIME. George Manning had almost decided to become a Christian. One doubt held him back.

"How can I know," he said to himself, "that even if I do begin a religious life, I shall continue faithful, and finally reach heaven?"

He wanted to see the whole way there before taking the first step. While in this state of indecision and unhappiness, he one evening sought the home of his favorite professor, for he was a college-student at the time, and they talked for several hours upon the difficulties of the case. But the conversation ended without dispelling his fears of bringing him any nearer the point of decision.

When he was about to go home the professor accompanied him to the door, and observing how dark the night was, prepared a lantern, and handing it to his young friend, said,

"George, this little light may not show you the whole way to your room, but only one step at a time; but take that step, and you will reach your home in safety."

It proved the word in season. As George walked scarcely along in the path brightened by the little lantern, the truth flashed through his mind, dispelling the last shadow of doubt.

"Why can I not trust my heavenly Father," he said to himself, "even if I can't see my way clear to the end, if he gives me light to take one step? I will trust him, I do trust him."

He could hardly wait till he reached his room to fall on his knees and thank God for the peace and joy that filled his soul.

Early next morning the professor was summoned to his door. There he found George Manning. With beaming face he looked up to his teacher, and as he handed him the lantern, said significantly,

"Doctor, your little lamp lighted me all the way home last night."—Early Dew.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

Rev. J. W. Rush. Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt
Rev. C. B. Galloway, Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19, 1882.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.—The regular annual meeting of the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will be held at the office of the ADVOCATE, Wednesday, January 25, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

The Fragments.

Our recent Conference feast came to an end with many precious fragments scattered about. They will be gathered up, some by one and some by another, so that not much will be lost.

At the missionary meeting Bishop Keener reminded us that the Mexican mission was inaugurated in that house—Carondelet Street Church—eight years ago, and that it was the most notable event connected with its history—the one event that would make the spot forever memorable. A thousand dollars in gold was then given for Mexico, and letters of credit for five thousand more. The movement was sprung upon the assembly as a fresh inspiration, and from this beginning, truly, "What hath God wrought?" If there are some places on our earth more interesting than others to the angels they are the localities where souls have been born into the gospel kingdom; but with what wonder and reverence, may we not imagine, they regard the spot where a great missionary movement was born? It was more than a local revival of religion in the wide and permanent results.

When Dr. Wilson had concluded his address, a brother at our elbow exclaimed: "I wonder if anybody will be saved?" It did seem, indeed, to be a logical inference. Our Christian people are in danger of the judgment because they neglect the heathen and the unconverted world, and the unconverted world perish for lack of knowledge, and for the abuse of the light they have. For some degree of comfort we fell back upon the conviction that infants, both pagan and Christian, are saved. Somebody will be saved; though we tremble to think of the fearful responsibility of the people called Christians, and of those Christians called Methodists.

The poor widow who cast into the treasury her two mites will certainly rise up in the judgment to condemn us. This case has done service in many missionary meetings, but is it expected that a well-dressed and well-to-do congregation should cast in all their living? Methodist preachers sometimes do this at these Conference anniversaries. On this occasion one brother emptied his pocket of every nickel. Among the people such instances are rare. Ought they literally to cast all they have of money and property into the collection baskets? Does anybody expect it? What then? All should be consecrated, and the giving should be, in a measure, such as a consecrated spirit prompts. It is not often, however, that the brakes need to be put on, even in a congregation of Methodist preachers. When the tabernacle and the temple were built, and on one occasion when the temple was repaired, the giving was in excess of the need; and the people had to be restrained. We have never known of such a thing, however, in Christian times; not, at any rate, in this section. With our prosperous people where one dollar goes into the Lord's treasury a hundred dollars are spent for silks, jewelry and style. What is the meaning of the poor widow and her two mites? Looking upon the audience, and upon a larger audience not present, as the speaker enlarged upon the case, we were ready to ask, with our friend, "Who then can be saved?"

We were recalled to the "old paths," and the very marrow of Methodism was expounded to us. Some weakly ones were toned up wonderfully. "Methodism is a power in the world, but we must hold fast to its graud and wonder-working system as it is—itinerancy, class-meetings, love-feasts, doctrines. Experience is to be felt, and then our people must keep up the habit of telling it. That compact which is the soul of the itinerancy—the preachers giving up their privilege to choose their own appointments, and the people surrendering their right to select their own preachers—this received due emphasis. In these days there is occasion for such admonition wherever the people would dictate and coerce, and the preachers would bargain by stealth. Not much of this sort of breach of the itinerant compact in these parts, but the drift is sometimes manifest.

A Methodist Conference is remarkable for variety. As yet but few of the preachers have been moulded and stamped by theological seminaries, and our colleges and theological schools, thus far, have educated without crushing out the personality and peculiar gifts and characteristics of their students. The school of schools for freshness and power, and diversified gifts, is the itinerant curriculum. A Conference is rich in the personality of its members. Nature is converted and adorned, but not destroyed. "Having gifts differing," and an average of the best gifts, describes the make-up of a Methodist Conference.

The melding power of a Conference exerted upon a community in a single session is something to be considered. Its proceedings are a most practical and clear exposition of our polity, and a Methodist is ever a more intelligent and loyal Methodist for having witnessed them. He gets ideas, impressions, convictions, and an inspiration that he can find nowhere else. The concentrated moral and spiritual power of a Conference, poured upon a single community, is long felt. We counted it a good sign that large congregations were present at the daily sessions, and that among them were many men and women from different parts of the State.

The announcement of the appointments is an occasion that has not its like or equal in the world for impressiveness and moral sublimity. The system has other striking features, but this is Methodism in its supremest aspect. A hundred ministers, and as many pastoral charges, have committed to one man, aided by six advisers, the determination of their pastoral relations and service for another year. This is the annual test and the annual renewal of Methodism. It is at this fountain, as to polity, that its youth is constantly invigorated and perpetuated. There is much suspense, and yet those who know not whither they are to go feel that the best possible, when all things are considered, will be done for them, and the churches have learned to trust the judgment of the appointing power. The greatest good, taking all the preachers and all the charges into account, is the aim. The lessons involved are of the noblest, such as miselfishness, self-sacrifice, moral heroism, and devotion to Christ and his church. There may be some mistakes, but these may be repaired by faith and zeal and love. At any rate, every church has pastoral oversight even to the remotest outlying missions, and every preacher has a work. A system of change by rule, and yet not more frequent than in other churches on an average, and with much less friction. Along with the sacrifices and the inconveniences, there is movement and life, and the gospel is given to the people. Whether by an angel or a Bishop, at this certain season the pool is mightily stirred, and there is healing and saving power.

Divine Companionship.

There is a personal intimacy with God which is consistent with the deepest reverence. Enoch, Abraham and Moses, in their career, exhibit this habitual companionship. They adored, worshiped, and were filled with awe, and yet they walked with God. To them there were theophanies—extraordinary manifestations to the senses—but apart from these was the habitual consciousness of God as ever about them. They communed with him in spirit and in thought. They endured, as seeing him who is invisible. God was not only near to them, but they were near to God. There was companionship. They were the friends of God, and enjoyed the privileges of a personal intimacy with the infinite Jehovah. This was the most considerable fact in their history, and the one thing most descriptive of their character and lives. These names point us to the higher altitudes of faith and godliness, but they also exhibit an experience common to all devout souls.

There is a type of religion which occupies itself exclusively with the worship of a far-off God. It is not wanting in reverence, in fear, in the sense of divine authority, and in sublime conceptions of the attributes of the living God. But God is distant, awful, and even appalling. To such worshipers the thought of walking with God, as a child with his father, or as a friend with a friend, would be rejected as impertinent and irreverent.

Still further from the temper and ideas of natural men—the unbelieving world—is this association of the human with the infinite and ineffable Spirit. What a vast chasm yawns between Enoch and Abraham and Mr. Spencer's conception of the unknowable first cause! To the ordinary worldly-minded, whether philosophical or thoughtless and sensual, God is the remotest and most unreal of all objects. To Moses he was the nearest and most real. To him the material world was a mere shadow, transitory and changeful. Personality, spirit, intelligence were to him the substance and basis of all things.

We do not know that these ancient worthies speculated much, if at all, whether knowledge is possible with man, or whether God could be known. They simply sat upon the sun-crowned heights, ever dwelling near the sky, and were filled with the light of God. God came to them through the open avenues of their spiritual nature, and they came to God through that faith which is "the evidence of things not seen." Walking with God, they did not walk with a shadow; the friends of God, they were not the companions of a vapor; seeing him who is invisible, they saw God more clearly than the eye beholds the sun. God somehow took these spiritual souls up into himself, permitting them even to share his counsels, and manifesting himself by an inward glory which surpassed the splendors of the outward world.

In Christ this divine companionship is distinctly and vividly realized. Walking with God "as dear children" is one of Paul's declarations. Union with Christ brings us to the experience. In him God is brought inexpressibly near, and through him we reach that companionship with God which dispels the last shadow of doubt. The far-off "are made nigh by the blood of Christ," and God is declared to us by "the only begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father."

Always the privilege and the characteristic of God's people, this divine companionship, in the gospel, stands out in peculiar brightness. "As Enoch, Abraham and Moses exhibit it in the dispensation of types and shadows, John, the eagle-eyed and eagle-pinioned, is its most conspicuous representative in the latest manifestation of truth. "And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." It is a companionship of light. This light broke upon the path of the most spiritual of the patriarchs, its flashes gleamed along their toilsome pilgrimage. But under the gospel, and in the heart of John, it swells into the warmth and brightness of the vernal day. As his pen tells the story, walking with God is walking in the light, because "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." This is the substance of all: "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

Alabama Notes.

A man consumes so much less fuel and food, and his clothing is so much less expensive, and he can do so much more work with comfort in a mild winter than in a severe one that we ought to be very grateful to our heavenly Father if he causes the south winds to prevail from November till March. Thus far the season has been a very pleasant one, and, as compared with last winter, it has been positively delightful. The time has been a good one for preachers moving. Among the painful things of an itinerant's life is the unavoidable necessity of frequently moving into strange communities, where critical eyes are the first eyes that fall upon himself and family; and one of the facts in this process, most painful to the sensibilities of the parents, is the introduction of themselves and their larger children, all dishevelled with travel, and the little ones all scrazed up and pinched with cold. The prettiest people and best behaved look ugly and common in such a condition, and it takes a good while for impressions made by such aspects to be erased from the minds of the new parishoners. Then, too, when their entrance is in nice weather the neighbors can call to see the new Mrs. Preacher so much sooner, and can hear a sermon from the new Mr. Preacher so much earlier, and the boys and girls of the neighborhood can get a good look at the parsonic progeny of Mr. and Mrs. Preacher so much more satisfactorily, and good Mrs. Preacher can fix the parsonage to suit herself so much more easily (for you know she is bound to change things around some way or other,) and Mr. Preacher can start off on his ministerial work so much more pleasantly. I never want to move again in the snow.

The mildness of the winter has been an unspeakable blessing to the negroes also. Had it been severe, they would certainly have suffered very much, for they are poorer, at least in these parts, than they have ever been before. When one thinks of the actual cost of their living, and remembers that they seldom have any luxuries, he would wonder—did he not know their character—why they have not got rich by the labor of the last fifteen years. But extreme wastefulness and utter improvidence seem to be inwrought into the very woof and woof of their nature. Their poverty is due to this, and not to the fact, as many falsely and slanderously allege, that their employers swindle them of their rights. If they do well for a year or so, and get a little ahead, the first thing you know they are away behind again, dead broke, and poor as ever. These peculiar traits in them, constituting, as they do, the majority of the laboring class in large sections of our country, will keep the whole population in those sections poor, and struggling and dissatisfied, unless there shall be a transfer of their labor, in a very large measure, from the farm to the factory. A people is happy only when it is prosperous, and it is prosperous only when there is a surplus. More must be made than is consumed. But experience shows there can be no surplus from negro labor unless it is closely overseed. Experience also shows that it can not be closely overseed on large plantations, but that it can be on small farms, and in factories large or small.

When our people come to realize all this—and it is very strange they have not done it long ago—and turn their attention more to manufacturing, then, and not till then, will the negro be an element of wealth to those regions where his race largely outnumbers the whites. As things now go, all parties, Republican and Democrat, the negroes themselves generally agreeing, pronounce him a failure in politics and planting, and in every other pursuit where he has things his own way, and, consequently, where his true inner nature can express itself fully and without outside guidance.

The farmers in these parts are in a great bother about the incoming year. The merchants say they will not run them, and they say they are unable to run themselves. Most of them have as yet made no arrangements. Maybe the money lending agencies on mortgages, now established in Selma and Montgomery, will solve the problem, not only for the present year, but for many years to come. But, however great the present perplexity, doubtless the problem will be solved in some way, and the summer's sun will again smile warmly on the sweet old companionship of the negro, the mule and the cotton stalk.

Lately a new spring has been put into the mining interests of Alabama by the sale and transfer of the Pratt Coal Mines, near Birmingham, to a Tennessee company, by Mr. DeBardeleben, for $1,000,000. Everybody now wants a coal mine, and there is plenty of room for a great many more holes in the ground in that coal country. The same gentleman last week sold his interest in the cotton mill of this place (which was the majority of the stock,) and also his woolen mill here, of which he was sole owner. On the coal mines he made a very large profit on the investment. For the property here he only got par value, but was really entitled to more, for it is in good condition, and is making a very fine percentage of profits. Let factories of all sorts be built, and let them be built everywhere they can be. For in this direction largely lies our hope of the permanent prosperity and peace of the South. If "Uncle Sam's" partiality for his New England kin, which originally made him adopt the policy of high tariffs, does not now make him change that policy it will not be many decades before we will show the Yankees a thing or two in the way of manufactured goods, and this sunny land will indeed become the garden of the Republic.

The churches, many of them, held Christmas festivals for the Sunday-school children. The coincidence of days was very happy, and so appropriate to Christmas sermons and addresses that we could hardly have helped celebrating the day even if we had wished to do so. It was a bright, bracing Sunday. The children were happy; the congregation good. We had a delightful time at this place. Then New Year's day coming on Sunday also, and being also a beautiful day, how could a preacher avoid the theme of "renewed consecration," so opportunely suggested in the programme of the "week of prayer" for 1882. In church matters we have had a much better start than we had last year, and pray that the entire year may be a brighter, happier one, and that the results of all the work and prayer of the church and its ministers may be glorious for the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

J. W. R.

PRATTVILLE, Alabama.

Bound Feet of Chinese Women.

On this subject Mrs. S. L. Baldwin, Missionary in Fuhchau, writes a very interesting article to the New York Independent. We give an extract as follows:

Iron shoes are neither used nor known in China. The method is simply to use a strong muslin bandage. I have never heard of the bindings being put on a child under four years of age, and I think they often wait until she is two or three years older. In one school that I had all the girls were in the first year of binding. The youngest was six years old and the eldest eight. Of course, the later the binding is begun the greater the pain. The bandage of muslin usually is three or four feet long and from five to seven inches wide. They commence at the middle of its length, passing it under the toes and crossing the two halves over the top, pulling each part tightly, and so on over and under until the foot is covered very tightly. As the bandage approaches the heel, a fold is thrown around it, with a pull forward toward the toes, to shorten the foot. This pulling forward of the heel in time forces the instep up in a most painful and ugly manner, and just here they often find the greatest trouble in this cruel custom, for the pressure is sometimes so great upon the instep that the skin bursts, inflammation and ulceration sets in, and the child may die. I have heard of but few fatal cases, however, though there might be many and we not know of them.

The first year the foot is simply bandaged tightly, to suppress the growth. The second year all the small toes are folded down under the foot, leaving only the larger toes in their natural position. The pulling of the heel forward and forcing the instep up has made a little hollow under the foot, where the poor folded-down toes find a place. I am told that the tight bandaging stops the growth of the nails, so that they do not give trouble. The same sort of bandage is used, and the binding done as in the first year, only this time with added torture, from the unnatural position of the toes. This process of binding is kept up for years, from eight to eleven, and even longer in some cases, before the greatly desired tiny shoe worn at Fuhchau and further south can be put on. This shoe measures from two and one-half to three inches in length, and a babe a week old of medium size can not wear it. Of course, all this bandaging is accompanied with the greatest pain. I have many times seen these little victims of custom kicking and screaming while the mother or some one else was binding up the poor little feet. And yet so strong is the admiration for such feet and so great the respect for those who have them that little girls often ask to have their feet bound, and bravely try to suppress the cry of pain; but the larger number are not of such heroic spirit, and relief vigorously under the torture, sometimes going aside and slyly loosening the bandages for a little relief to the tortured feet, only to be punished and to have the bandages again tightened. As the process goes on the muscles shrink away, the bones are bent or broken, and finally the foot looks like nothing human, but is an unsightly bunch of bones, covered with a dry, yellow-looking skin, with just circulation enough to preserve life. There would seem to be real destruction of muscle, from the fact that the feet become very offensive during a part of the time. Frequent bathing in hot water is resorted to, and, if the skin breaks and sores appear, certain remedies are used. A medical friend of mine had an elaborate scroll presented to him by the father of a girl whose ulcerated feet he had cured. The inscription on the scroll eulogized him as a great and skillful physician. When the feet have been reduced to the desired size and the bandages need no longer be used to lessen the feet, they must still always be worn to give strength and firmness to the crushed feet. I examined carefully one pair of such feet (I could never bring myself to look at a second pair.) The woman was thirty years old and weighed about one hundred and fifteen pounds. She was quite unwilling at first to show me her feet uncovered. They are generally loth to do this, for they know very well that the feet are most unsightly. Very willing and proud are they to exhibit them encased in the exquisitely embroidered tiny satin shoe, but do not like to remove the covering and show the hideous deformity within. The woman whose feet I saw told me that hers were bound eleven years, before they became "dead feet"—that is, ceased to pain her; but that even yet, if she stood long, walked much, or her feet became heated, or she wore new shoes, they often gave her much pain. The little toes were pressed into the hollow under the foot, the heel was lengthened considerably, and she passed the large toe and heel toward each other under the foot, so that they touched. My heart was sick as I looked at this ruin of God's handiwork, and thought of the thousands enduring that torture at that moment. These are the real lady feet, the "golden lilies" of South China, and greatly do they wonder at our full-grown feet. When traveling to our distant mission stations, where foreign ladies are rarely seen, men have accidentally, on purpose, pushed my dress aside, to catch a glimpse of my feet; and oh! how did I fall in their estimation when they found them unbound. Then they have put the question: "Have you any real ladies in the Flowery Flag Kingdom?" (U. S.) But so great is their regard for education that I could always silence them and secure their respect by answering: "No. We have no bound footed women; but we can all read and write." But not all bind their feet to the extent of the Fuhchau and Southern women. Localities differ, and even at Foochow we have every size between the full-grown, unbound feet of the field-woman, servant, and concubine, down to the two and one-half-inch foot of the shut up lady. I have never known of this smallest size being found north of Shanghai. It seems that in North China all respectable women must have bandaged feet, and, as two or three-inch feet could not go into the fields, on the highways and streets, in the work of the laboring class, the result is that there is more of a retarding of the growth than a crushing of the feet in the North, while many do not even lessen the feet at all, only bandaging when they go out and removing the bandages when at home; but at Fuhchau we have a respectable large-footed working class, which gives full opportunity for the ladies to have the genuine "lilies," and the admiration for them is unbounded.

The Stone Balance.

We never saw a man going to mill with a stone in one end of the bag to balance the corn in the other. But we have seen many things as wise. If we should meet a man going to mill in such a fashion what would he likely say in vindication of his method? This: "Father did this way." This question we raise concerning our supposed mill-man: How much experience has he? Perhaps he is forty years old and has been going to mill with his stone balance for thirty years, but he has not, in any true sense, thirty years' experience. In fact he has no experience, seeing that he has learned nothing. He has the experience of the man who invented the stone balance; he does what he did, nothing more. Illustrations abound, but it is hardly worth while to parade them.

But the instruction we should get out of the instance referred to is not confined to the business of carrying corn to mill. Applications are as easy as illustrations are abundant.

We were led to think of the old parable of bourbonish conservatism by some facts that have lately come under our observation. For example: A certain community preferred as teacher a certain man who claimed "an experience of twenty years" to a young man who had been teaching only two or three years. Knowing something of both men we were of the opinion that the older man had less experience than the younger. The older is thoroughly "set in his ways;" his ruts are axle-deep; he does things just as he did the first year. The younger is trying hard to learn the best methods; he is not in the ruts of a long traveled way. The older is satisfied with the way he first learned; he does not believe that there is any other; if it were shown to him he could not see it—being blinded by what he calls his twenty years' experience. What he does he does easily, just as the horse in the bark-mill goes round and round. Our friend of blessed memory, the late Rev. Dr. Green, of Tennessee, once told us of a mule that had served in a bark mill so long that when, in extreme old age, he was turned out upon the commons, he went round and round—one side of him being shorter than the other.)

The lamented Bishop Marvin told us a good story in Atlanta, at the session of the North Georgia Conference, that land, as an old friend of ours was wont to say, "pith, point, power and edge." And it connects with Dr. Green's mule story. The Bishop was passing through a circuit and wished to know how a certain pastor was getting on. He found the steward with whom he stopped disposed be to reticence about the pastor. Being pressed a little by the Bishop he said this only. "Well, Bishop, he is going round."

Are not a good many preachers in this case? Have they any real experience beyond what they learned during their first few years? In "sermonizing," in pastoral work, in all manner of church business, do they not walk so closely in the "old paths" as never to even see a new one? Some do not appear to know it, but it is true, nevertheless, that there are new paths. Providence opens them and for men to walk in. Happy is he who, having an eye to see an opportunity is not so hampered by what he calls "experience" as to be afraid or unable to walk in it.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

The anniversary of the Southwestern Bible Society was held at the Carondelet Street Methodist Church on Sunday night last, January 15. There was a large audience, and the exercises were of a most interesting character. The report of the corresponding secretary was very clear and complete. We quote a paragraph:

At the close of another year our colporteurs report that they have completed the canvass of the parishes of Franklin, Grant, Lincoln, Washington, West Carroll, Richland, St. Landry and Avoyolles in the State of Louisiana, leaving only Cameron, St. Mary and Tangipahoa, in this State, and Lawrence county, in the State of Mississippi, to be visited during the coming year.

Since we commenced the canvass our colporteurs have visited and thoroughly canvassed 53 parishes in Louisiana and 36 counties in Mississippi with a full supply of Bibles and Testaments, and we have reason to believe that they have done everything, within human power, to supply the word, freely, to all who were either anxious or willing to receive it. The accompanying statement shows that, during the year 1881, seven colporteurs were employed in this work; that they visited 15,837 families 6,311 of whom were without a copy of the Holy Scriptures; 4,607 families and 1,318 individuals were supplied with the Blessed Book; 1,690 volumes were donated and 8,820 sold. The cost of the books thus distributed was $2,833; 1,055 days were consumed in the canvass, and 10,236 miles were traveled by the colporteurs, at an expense of $1,691 25.

As the field was more extensive in 1880, we employed 17 colporteurs, and, consequently, a much larger work was done; but the work accomplished by our seven colporteurs in 1881 was proportionately greater than the labor performed by more than double their number during the previous year.

The address was delivered by Dr. C. W. Carter—admirable in every respect. The society has probably never been favored by a more masterly discourse. It was all that the friends of the cause could desire, and the impression made by it must have been of a profound and lasting character.

We regret to learn, from the secretary's report, that the contributions to the society during 1881 were something less than during 1880, amounting to the comparatively small sum of $520.

The Southern University.

A late number of the Alabama Christian Advocate has a strong editorial in which the claims of this institution are set forth, and the necessity of united effort by the Methodists of Alabama is forcibly presented. Most truly the editor says:

The claims of this institution of learning can not be too often or too earnestly presented to the Methodists of Alabama. This is the only school of high grade, for young men, now owned by the church in the State. Years ago we had two others—the college at Auburn and the Wesleyan University at Florence. These have passed out of our hands, and the Southern University, at Greensboro, is all that is left us. Even this has been for years under the burden of a debt. But it is gratifying to know that this has been paid, and that no embarrassment of the kind now rests upon it.

Still the university is in a strait. It is without an endowment, and has not the patronage that ought to be given it by its friends in Alabama. Its noble and self-sacrificing faculty are doing their work without just compensation. Such an institution, if it has no endowment, must have a large patronage if it gives an adequate support to its faculty.

The question for Alabama Methodists to consider is not whether the Southern University shall live or die, but what are the best methods to advance it to that degree of prosperity and usefulness which it deserves. It matters not by what name it is called, whether university or college, but what the Methodist Church in Alabama needs is the perpetuation of just such a school as the Southern University has been and is now. On this subject there should be but one thought among the Methodists of Alabama. Every friend of Christian education, and the higher religious culture, should rally to the support of our own time-honored institution.

Death of Rev. J. G. Krauter.

Rev. J. G. Krauter, pastor of Craps street German Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of New Orleans, died Tuesday, January 17, at eleven A. M. Bro. Krauter's disease was typhoid-pneumonia. He was taken sick January 1, the watch-night services at his church being the last public services at which he officiated. The editor of the ADVOCATE saw him and talked and prayed with him the night before he died. His mind was then wandering, but he seemed clear in his thoughts of Christ, and expressed a confident hope and a strong assurance of heaven. He has been pastor, at different times, of all our German charges in this city, and had also been presiding elder of the district. He has been for years a faithful, laborious and useful preacher. In 1878 he suffered much from an attack of yellow fever while ministering to his people in the fearful epidemic of that year. He was in the prime of life, a young, strong and growing man. His death is a great loss to the German work, and he will be deeply mourned by his people.

Death of William S. Power.

We deeply regret to learn of the death of Mr. William S. Power, son of one of the publishers of the Clarion, Jackson, Miss. We extend our condolence to the bereaved. The Daily Clarion, of January 12, says:

We are deeply pained to announce the sudden death of Mr. William S., eldest son of our associate, Col. J. L. Power. Yesterday in all the vigor and promise of a splendid young manhood, this morning he is voiceless and still in death. He had just attained his majority, and, to all human prophecy, had before him a career of usefulness and prosperity. With a good education, a sprightly intellect, and an aptness for the profession of journalism, he had already contributed much to the interest of our columns. His heart was warm and generous, and his friendships tender and true. Many sorrowing tears will be wept over his fresh young grave. In his once bright but to-day shadowed home there is grief beyond power of utterance. To each we extend the kindly sympathy of a friend, and commend them to the care of him who alone can bind up the broken heart, and wipe all tears from our eyes.

Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, writing from Meridian, Miss., January 9, says: "It may be of interest to some of the brethren, likely very many of your readers, to read a few notes from Meridian and its Methodism. At this time I write simply about our first quarterly meeting, our prospects, etc. Our new presiding elder, Rev. James A. Godfrey, with his estimable family, reached our city last week, his family by rail on Thursday morning, the fifth, and he by buggy, after a journey of two hundred and forty miles, on Friday, the sixth. On Saturday morning our quarterly meeting commenced, with preaching at eleven o'clock. At seven P. M. we had an interesting Quarterly Conference. Sunday, at eleven A. M. and seven P. M. we had good sermons from our elder. At three P. M. love-feast after the old sort. We had about fifty persons present. We had a precious time. We are moving off well. We are hopeful of a good and prosperous year. More in future."

MARRIED.—At the close of the eleven o'clock service at the Morenu Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on Sunday last, January 15, the pastor, Rev. J. M. Beard, was united in marriage with Miss Sallie A. Schroeder, a young lady of his charge. It was the privilege of the editor of the ADVOCATE to officiate on the occasion, and, we are sure, the happy couple received our most hearty blessing. There was present a large congregation of friends to witness the ceremony, and to congratulate the groom and his fair young bride on the consummation of their wedded bliss. May heaven's richest benedictions rest upon the pastor and his wife.

—Married, at the residence of Col. N. L. McGinnis, Alexandria, La., December 27, by Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, Rev. J. D. Harper, of the Louisiana Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to Miss Virginia Fox, of Rapides parish, La. We were glad to meet Bro. Harper and his bride at our recent Conference session, and to have the opportunity of congratulating them upon their nuptials. We are obliged for photographs, which we shall cherish with care. A finer looking couple can hardly be found in any Conference. May their itinerant life be attended with every blessing.

REV. L. PATTERSON.—The following resolutions were adopted by the Methodist Church in Autangaville, Alabama Conference, January 1, 1882:

Resolved, That it is with sorrow that we have received the intelligence of the death of the Rev. Lafayette Patterson, who had been assigned to the charge of this work for the present year, and that we bow submissively to the stroke that has thus bereft us.

Resolved, That we extend our kindest sympathies to his stricken family in the sore and heavy bereavement which has come upon them.

WESTERN METHODIST.—We noticed in these columns, some weeks ago, that the Western Methodist was about to be removed from Little Rock to Memphis, and that the first number for 1882 would be issued from Memphis. We learn that the necessity of ordering new type has delayed the issue, and that the first number of this year will come out January 26. We wish our excellent cotemporary a prosperous career in his old home. Dr. Johnson is faithful to the doctrines and polity of Methodism, and has done long and valuable service in Methodist journalism.

—The trial of Guiteau is nearly at its close. We suppose the case will be given to the jury this week, and possibly a verdict will be rendered within the next three or four days. Public opinion seems to be in favor of hanging the assassin. It is not certain that the jury will be unanimous in this conclusion. We have not followed the proceedings of the trial with much care, and are not prepared to give an opinion as to the weight of evidence. It is certain that a crazy man ought not to be hung if his mental condition was such as to destroy responsibility. The position and character of the man whose life was taken can have no bearing upon this question.

On the other hand, there should be no leniency shown without a clear and strong ground for its exercise. The plea of insanity has been greatly abused, and through this abuse many criminals have escaped the punishment which they have justly merited.

—We have met with the statement, in a city paper, that Mrs. Ellis, wife of Rev. John A. Ellis, died at Meridian, Miss., a few days ago. We have no other information at this writing, Tuesday, January 17, but we fear that the report is true. Sister Ellis had been in infirm health for some time, and her condition was such that at the late session of the Mississippi Conference Bro. Ellis declined being returned to the Vicksburg district. She was a noble and gifted Christian woman, devoted to Christ, and active in his service. With solicitude we await further tidings.

—We have received a copy of the minutes of the recent session of the Alabama Conference, held at Selma, November 30 to December 5, 1881. The work is brought out in good style, and, so far as we have examined it, free from typographical errors.

—We are indebted to Rev. Dr. Ahrens for a copy of the minutes of the recent session of the German Mission Conference, held at Houston, Texas, November 30 to December 4, 1881.

Louisiana Conference Assessments, 1882.

Foreign Missions.—New Orleans district, $1,350; Delhi district, $600; Homer district, $650; Shreveport district, $650; Alexandria district, $300; Opelousas district, $450; total, $4,000.

Domestic Missions.—New Orleans district, $350; Delhi district, $150; Homer district, $200; Shreveport district, $200; Alexandria district, $125; Opelousas district, $150; total, $1,175.

Conference Claimants.—New Orleans district, $1,400; Delhi district, $600; Homer district, $700; Shreveport district, $700; Alexandria district, $260; Opelousas district, $500; total, $4,160.

For Bishops.—New Orleans district, $300; Delhi district, $75; Opelousas district, $100; Shreveport district, $125; Alexandria district, $60; Homer district, $140; total, $800.

For Education.—New Orleans district, $300; Delhi district, $75; Opelousas district, $100; Shreveport district, $125; Alexandria district, $60; Homer district, $140; total, $800.

A NEW MISSION TO AFRICA.—A very interesting movement, says the Southwestern Presbyterian, is now occupying the attention of French Protestants. The Vaudois of the Upper Alps, those historic heroes of the faith, are being starved and frozen out by the increasing rigors of the climate, and the poverty of the soil. The movement in question is a project to colonize the Vaudois of Dormilhouse among the uplands of Algeria. Funds are solicited for that purpose. This would result in the establishment of an active centre of Christian influence among the native Arabs and African tribes. It would necessarily be a missionary colony of the most effective kind. We are glad to learn from a French journal now before us, that the scheme meets with general favor, and that a considerable sum has already been subscribed towards it.

Indications are coming from all quarters, says the Southern Christian Advocate, how delighted the people are with their new preachers, and how delighted the preachers are with their new charges. The year opens most auspiciously in the South Carolina Conference.

Bishop Simpson, in an address before a Methodist meeting in Philadelphia, said that abroad he had not found a single Protestant on the side of the Land Leaguers.

Robert A. Barnes, of St. Louis, has given $25,000 to the Methodist Central College of Fayette, Mo. It is understood that a Barnes professorship will be established at the college.

The "Vanderbilt Observer" is a new journalistic venture by the two literary societies of our great central University.

Personal and Other.

—Queen Victoria is generally supposed to have saved a great deal of money, and, acting on this supposition, it is asked why she can not provide for her family. As a matter of fact, she has not. When Prince Albert died, many of the State departments were in debt. These debts have been paid off. Some of them—such as that of the Master of the Horse, for which £10,000 per annum is allowed—always have to borrow from the other departments or from the privy purse. Although the court does not entertain largely, the mise-en-scene is pretty much the same as it did. The Queen really does not put by as much as £20,000 per annum on an average of years. Her savings have been considerably drained by gifts of £100,000 which she has always made to her daughters at their marriage.

—M. Gambetta's ministry is young in years. The average age is about fifty-one. Half a century ago the average age of a minister in a French cabinet was sixty-five years. Twenty-five years ago it fell to sixty. The new cabinet is the youngest that has been known in France. Its oldest member is sixty-five, its youngest thirty-five. The average in England is much higher. Mr. Gladstone, to begin with, being twenty-nine years older than M. Gambetta, and Mr. Chamberlain, the youngest member of the cabinet, ten years older than the youngest holder of a portfolio in France and two years older than the prime minister of France.

Dr. Isaac I. Hayes, the Arctic explorer, died at his residence in this city, on December 17, of heart disease. Dr. Hayes was in his fiftieth year, having been born in Pennsylvania, in 1832. He accompanied Dr. Kane in the polar search of 1853, and wrote several works descriptive of the expedition. During the war Dr. Hayes served as a medical officer and commanded the army hospital at West Philadelphia. In 1876 he was elected as a Republican to the New York Assembly and continued to be a member of that body until his death.

—Dispatches from Melbourne confirm the rumored loss of the Australian mail steamer Tararua, together with over one hundred lives, including four New Zealand delegates to the Wesleyan General Conference, which meets at Adelaide. The names of these four ministers were Connoly, Armitage, Witchell, and Richardson. The steamer was making her regular voyage from Dunedin to Melbourne when the disaster took place. This unfortunate occurrence has no doubt cast a gloom over the Methodist Churches in Australia and New Zealand.

—According to official returns just published the total capital embarked in railways in India at the close of last year was upwards of £124,000,000. The net receipts were £1 11s. per cent. upon the capital, as compared with £1 7s. in 1879. The guaranteed lines, including the East India, yielded 2·43 and the State lines 2 per cent. The gross receipts derived from the railways of all kinds amounted to £12,099,593, while the gross expenses were £5,192,171.

A return just issued from the War-office shows that the total effective strength of the regular forces in the British army on January 1 last was 188,953. This is the smallest number of men we have had under arms for several years.

—An American, writing from St. Petersburg, says that Sir Edward Thornton has made himself as popular and as thoroughly at home at the Russian capital as he was formerly at Washington. He is a type of Englishmen born to the civil service, living nearly all his life abroad, but remaining true to the habits of his country. Portugal, Mexico, Central America, and South America were formerly his places of residence, as the United States and Russia have more recently been.

—Victor Hugo was recently visited by a number of Parisian councillors, entrusted with the duty of requesting the poet to be a candidate for the French Senate. He peremptorily declined the honor, but insisted that his visitors should remain his guests for a number of days, and he afterward entertained them as few men could.

—Father Vaudry, who for a time last year preached with Father O'Connor in the Independent Catholic Church in New York city, and who has since been the assistant of Father Hyacinthe, in Paris, intends to return to this country and establish a church in New Orleans, similar to that of Father Hyacinthe's in Paris.

—The Empress of Russia is said to be an admirable manager, both of her time and of everything that pertains to the household duties. Her great intelligence and sweetness of manner have given her an extraordinary influence over her husband and all other persons who are brought in contact with her.

—The efforts of the French to find tracing for the railroad across the Sahara to Timbuctoo have met with disaster. The great expedition under Colonel Flanders, when nearly across the desert, was, according to most reliable reports, attacked by the hostile natives and destroyed.

—A road has been constructed around the cataracts on the Shire, and steamboats are above and below, giving free access to Lake Nyassa. Two railroads are planned here, one fifty miles on the Shire River, and the other eighty miles from the confluence up the Zambesi.

—The Congregational Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Protestant Episcopal Church were all destroyed in a disastrous conflagration which swept away almost the entire business portion of the village of Ludington, Michigan, on the eleventh instant.

—On the issue of the Revised New Testament in London, the dense crowds at the distribution offices were so eager that traffic in the streets was almost stopped. At the close of the week over 3,000,000 copies had been sold.

—At a collection for a mission church, taken at St. Jude's Church, Southsea, England, a check for £10,000 put upon the plate, added not only to the respectability of the sum raised but also to the astonishment of the deacons.

—Rev. John F. Adams, of the New Hampshire Conference, is thought to be the oldest Methodist minister in the world. He will be ninety-one years old this month, and has been sixty-nine years in the ministry.

—Dr. Rieback has undertaken a journey round the world, the first station of which will be the island of Socotora, 170 kilometers to the east of Cape Guardafui. Schweinfurth accompanies him thither to study especially the plants and animals.

—Alexander H. Stephens passed his twenty-fifth Christmas in Washington on Sunday. He occupies rooms in the National Hotel in which Henry Clay roomed during the closing years of his congressional career and in which he died.

—The project to establish a church in New Orleans by the Old Catholics is viewed with considerable alarm at Rome. Pere Hyacinthe is expected here from Paris in a few weeks to inaugurate the enterprise.

—In seven years the new edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica has only reached the letter I and the twelfth volume. At the present rate, therefore, the edition will not be complete before 1890.

—Sir Moses Montefiore is the oldest member of the English baronetage. He is a Hebrew and widely known as a man of great benevolence and blameless record.

—Prof. Huxley has, in consequence of the pressure of other duties, resigned the office of secretary of the British Royal Society, which he has held since 1872.

—Rev. George G. Bradley, successor to Dean Stanley, received his Deanery before his title of D. D., which has since been conferred on him by Oxford.

—Dr. Holland is succeeded by Mr. Richard Watson Gilder as editor of the Century magazine, and Mr. Robert U. Johnson becomes associate editor.

—Ex-President Hayes is setting for a full-length portrait, which will be hung in the Memorial Hall of Harvard University.

—Florence Nightingale is in her sixty-second year, and, despite her tedious confinement to an invalid's sofa, bears her age wonderfully well.

—A church is to be erected in Philadelphia as a memorial of the late Thomas A. Scott. The pews are to be free.

—The cotton States consume 42,252,244 bushels more wheat than they raise, and pay to the North for wheat, corn, oats, and hay, $150,000,000 annually.

—The late Jacob Jacobs of Troy, N. Y., bequeathed about $25,000 to the Episcopal Church in that city.

Periodicals.

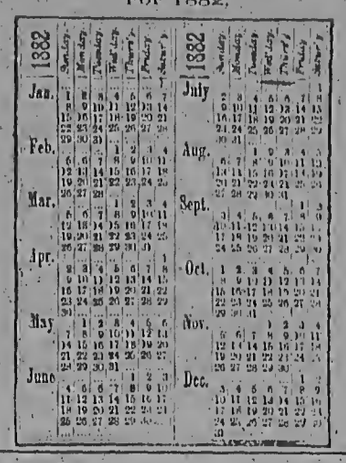
—The Southern Pulpit opens the new year with a sterling number. The sermon preached before the Synod of Virginia by Dr. White heads the list. The discourse before the Conference of Mississippi Methodists by Dr. Steel follows, and the third sermon, by Rev. Mr. Williams, of the Charlottesville Baptist Church, is a strong one. There are also four shorter discourses, by Porter, of Mississippi; Gordon, of Virginia; Tyler, of Richmond, Va.; and Bishop, of Virginia. The suggestions on texts (Editorial) are: I. Two Ways of planning a Life. II. No need of an Intercessor. The Gospel is the subject for Homiletical Illustrations, of which there are twenty-eight choice extracts.

A specimen copy will be furnished free to any one desiring it with a view to subscription. Price $1 50 a year. Address Jackson & Lafferty, Richmond, Va.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.—The number of The Living Age for the week ending January 14, contains the following notable articles: Carlyle's Ethics; Cornhill Magazine; Two Studies in Dante, Contemporary Review; English Satire in the Nineteenth Century, Frazer's Magazine; Kioto, Fortnightly Review; Furies, Review; together with the conclusion of Mademoiselle Angelo, and the usual amount of choice poetry. This is the second number of the new volume. Now subscribers can begin with the volume.

Advocate Calendar,

For 1882.



Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

A tom-cat sits upon a shed,
And warbles sweetly to his mate;
"Oh, when the world has gone to bed,
I love to sit and mew till late."

But while this tom cat sits and sings,
Up springs the student, mad with hate
He shoots that cat to fiddle strings—
He also loves to mu-si-late.

"Oh! yes," said Mrs. B., as she surveyed with evident pleasure her little parlor sideboard, covered with old china and decorated with highly-colored tiles; "Mr. B. remarked last night that I was becoming quite an atheist," and the old lady's countenance fairly beamed with delight as her eyes rested on a sixteen cent Japanese tea-pot.

Baille McScrow (to Smith, who is on a short visit to the North): "An' what are ye daein' to-morrow nicht, Mester Smeth?" Smith: "To-morrow? Oh! nothing particular. I've no engagement." Baille: "And the next nicht?" Smith: "Ah! on Friday I've promised to dine with the Brown's——" Baille: "Man, that's a pity! Aw was gaun t' ask ye to take yer denner wi' us o' Friday!"

The only bitters and the only preparation of iron that gives complete satisfaction is Brown's Iron Bitters. It contains no alcohol. It does not blacken the teeth. It gives real strength.

There never was a better example of the witty and concise form of expression common to the real Western American than the answer of the grim man of the Sierras, who, when asked about the character of a neighbor, sententiously replied: "Mister, I don't know very much about him; but my impression is that he'd make a first-class stranger."

"You can't add different things together," said an Austin school teacher. "If you add a sheep and a cow together, it does not make two sheep or two cows." A little boy, the son of a Texas milkman, held up his hand and said: "That may do with sheep and cows, but if you add a quart of water and a quart of milk together, it makes two quarts of milk. I've seen it tried."

The great music house of P. Werlein continues to supply the world with musical instruments, and thousands of homes have been made happy by the possession of a piano or an organ through his low prices and astonishingly liberal terms. The name Werlein has become so identified with pianos that you hardly can think of pianos without thinking of Werlein. Go and try him, and our word for it, you will be pleased.

The best sermon in the world never yet reconciled the proud man, trying to curl his feet up and out of sight under the pew, to the painfully obtrusive and evident fact that the wife of his bosom had used his blacking brush to polish the kitchen stove.

A member of the rhetorical class in a certain college had just finished his declamation, when the professor said: "Mr. ——, do you suppose a general would address his soldiers in the manner you spoke that piece?" "Yes, sir, I do," was the reply, "if he was half scared to death and as nervous as a cat."

An exchange makes this touching appeal to delinquent subscribers: "Gentlemen, we must have wealth. The nights are growing cold, and this thing of forcing a ten cent mustard plaster to do the work of an all-wool undershirt is growing monotonous."

Beneficent nature seems to have planted in every clime the proper remedies for the diseases incidental to it. Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm is made of an herb which grows all over the Gulf region, and it has never failed yet to cure all kinds of coughs and colds.

John was building a chicken coop, while little Budge stood by looking on. John bruised his thumb, and exclaimed, "Oh, gracious!" "What makes you say that?" "What should I say?" retorted John, for his thumb ached. "Well," said Budge, after reflecting a little, "you might say the 'unmentionables.'"

An Illinois man, with a foresight worthy of a better cause, popped the question on a railroad train, and now the maiden is at a loss to decide as to which county she had better commence proceedings in for a breach of promise.

Thomas Schofield, aged ninety-one years, walked nine miles to renew his subscription to a New London paper. It is the general impression among publishers that there are a number of subscribers who are waiting until they are ninety-one years old to come in and pay for their paper.

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

"What is the connection between heresy and immorality?" asks the Chicago Times. The following example is given by the Commercial Advertiser: "Immorality is stealing a ham, and heresy is believing that the ham and not the man will be fried."

In Arkansas, when a couple of ten-year-old boys are not at home for supper, their mother looks troubled and observes: "Now, where in the world are them children? If they're out robbing trains again, I'll take the hide off o' them when they come home."

Queen Victoria does not approve of carpets. Probably her promising son has had a way of coming into the best parlor with his muddy boots on, covering the carpet with the foot Prince of Wales.

An advertisement reads: "Wanted—A young man to be partly out-door and partly behind the counter." What will be the result when the door slams?

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend for the next year and you will not regret it.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Farm, Garden and Flower Seeds!

DIRECT FROM THE FARM.

Warranted Fresh, Pure and Good, or money refunded.

Catalogue for 1882 free. Please send for it.
Address JOSEPH HARRIS,
Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y.

FOR ONE DOLLAR!

I will mail you, post paid, a package containing five quires (120 sheets) of very nice note paper, and five packages (120) of white or colored envelopes to your address. If ordered in quantity by express or freight, will make a reduction of twenty per cent. Postage stamps may be sent when preferred.
Address G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans, La.
Send for a dollar package and try it.

CHAPEL HILL ACADEMY,

MARSHALL COUNTY, TENN.

Opens the next session, the Sixteenth, under present principle, January 2, 1882. Course: English Classics, Mathematics and Sciences. Thoroughness, Cheapness and Progress are all combined here. Efficient teachers employed, such as know how to teach, and are up with the spirit and progress of this age of Education. Entire expense, $70 to $80 per session of twenty weeks. Music by skillful teachers for $25 per session.

O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., editor Christian Advocate, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., of this school says: "Unsolicited, we speak a word in behalf of this school. The Chapel Hill community is one of the best in the country, the location is beautiful and healthful, and Prof. S. V. Wall is a teacher whose skill as an educator is only equaled by his qualities as a Christian gentleman. All of which we say because we know it is so."

Pupils can enter at any time and will be charged only from time of entrance. Tri-weekly stage from Nashville to this place, distance forty miles south.

Address S. V. WALL, Principal,
Chapel Hill, Tenn.

FOR $2.50!

Mailed Postage Paid.

I have nineteen copies left of the

Complete Church Register;

Historical and statistical, comprising: A General Index; An Alphabetical Register for Church Members; Register of Official Members, of Baptisms, Marriages and Deaths; Register of Annual, Quarterly and Church Conferences; Tables for Church Collections; and an Annual Summary of the Yearly Work and condition of the Church.

It is substantially bound in cloth, leather back; ruled and printed, size about 10x15 inches, over 200 pages, and no more can be had when this lot is disposed of. Original price $5. All in perfect order.
Address G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

W. F. MELLEN,

Attorney at Law,

12 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,

RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,
220 Jackson St., bet. Chestnut and Colliseu
NEW ORLEANS.
Office Hours—Eight A. M., and three to four P. M.

SEND 25 CENTS

For a copy of the new

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Mailed post-paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,

MONUMENTS.

Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,

MARBLE, SLATE,

And Iron Mantels and Grates.

111, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans

CHURCH'S

MUSICAL VISITOR,

AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF MUSIC.

Every number contains 32 large pages filled with Musical Sketches, Original Articles, Criticisms, Poetry, Notes, Musical News, and Five to ten pages of New Music. Every subscriber receives free, the choice of 10 Elegant Premium Volumes!

Each premium contains 832 pages of Sheet Music. Full particulars and list of contents of premiums sent on application.

Subscription only $1.50 a Year!

Agents Wanted in every Town and City, to whom a liberal commission will be paid.

Circulars, blanks, etc., supplied free.

☞ Send Stamp for Sample Copy.

PUBLISHED BY

JOHN CHURCH & CO.,

New York Office, 5 Union Square. | CINCINNATI, O.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL

UNION

DEPOSITORY.

With a full line of Question Books, Catechisms, Hymn Books, Class Books, Library Books, Rewards, and everything needed in the Sunday-school. Send for catalogue.

Also Sankey & Bliss' Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs, Teachers' Bibles, Concordances, Bible Dictionaries, Commentaries, etc., at the Depository.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

Indian Turnip

COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by
H. LAPLACE, Druggist,
23 and 25 Elysian Fields street,
And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co. Augusta, Maine.

Agricultural.

BAD MANAGEMENT.—The Rural Messenger says there is many a hard-working, striving farmer, who toils early and late, year in and year out, and who accumulates a good deal of property around him, perhaps, but who does not seem to get on well in his financial matters. His purse is ever depleted, or his resources and crops never meet expectations. In other words, the calls for money are always greater than his ability to satisfy them; he is ever behind hand, and ten to one if the poor man does not have to sell out at last, to meet the demands of his creditors and the wants of a growing family.

Wherever this is the case there is something radically wrong in the man's management. Evidently there are leaks, and he does not stop them. It is the little leaks that sink the great ships, and it is the small wastes that ruin the farmer. A leaky cask will not stay full; and constant waste will deplete the resources of any farm. This is the reason so many men do not get on in the world.

And one of these leaks is, having poor shelter for crops, implements, and stock. It is a losing business to shelter a crop out of doors, as many do; and is equally a poor business to put crops away in a leaky house, or in a place where the fowls or the cattle are ever encroaching upon it. The farmer could make no better investment of a few dollars, than to provide water-proof shelter for all his forage and crops, and warm dry sheds for all his stock in winter. Enough is frequently lost by not having them to pay for extensive buildings, which would afford ample room for all the crops of the farm.

Another leak that often amounts to a great deal in the aggregate, is the careless and hasty way in which crops are gathered in. Idle hands and boys will be apt to waste a good deal here and there, if not strictly looked after. Or it may be things are not removed from the field in time to escape damaging rains, and thus a good is lost. Or stock is fed on muddy ground, where much of the forage is trampled under feet and wasted. Or crops are not housed in proper condition, and much of it is ruined. Or meat is slaughtered in weather to warm, and it spoils. Or dogs destroy the raw hides before they are dried; or the eggs before they are gathered. Or may be harness is pulled off and thrown upon the ground to remain and get injured.

Another very big leak is failing to utilize the manural resources of the farm. Almost any farm of any extent has about it the material for necessary recuperation of the soil. Most farms have it in abundance. The trouble is the material is not used, but lies idle in the forests or the swamps to waste its strength on briers. Compost heaps are not often enough seen. The wastes of the kitchen too often remains about the premises to poison the air, instead of going to pig-pen, the poultry yard, or the compost. Where there are no chips the fire goes out, and where manure is gathered not, the crops are sure to fail. It does not pay to buy fertilizers oh a llen, and neglect home manures.

One more reason why some men do not get on better in the world we are constrained to mention here—namely, going in debt. This is the great error of the age—the mighty leak that is bound to sink the ship sooner or later. Argument here is needless. All admit that habitual going in debt will ruin them. All see the danger, yet thousands pass on and are ruined. Perhaps some who run in debt intend to evade an honest or full settlement, if it is possible to do so. Since readjustment has become so popular, it were no wonder if it should effect more or less the settlement of private claims. Yet doubtless most men really intend to pay all they owe—but if they continue to go in debt, they will have to make a great effort if ever they do so. These are some of the reasons why so many are ever behind in worldly matters.

KEEPING SWEET POTATOES.—To keep well sweet potatoes should be selected that have been raised in a light soil. They should be dug and put away before the ground is saturated with water from heavy, cold autumnal storms. A heavy rain of short duration need not be regarded as a sufficient reason for concluding that the potatoes will not keep. A light soil dries very soon when the rain is past and sunshine succeeds. Potatoes to keep well should be dug before frost kills the vines. A light frost, however, that merely kills or blackens the leaves, will not prevent the potatoes from keeping. It is better to pick up the potatoes as dug than to have them exposed to a mid-day sun on a warm day. Only four or five enough for the dirt to dry so that it will not stick to the potatoes is sufficient. After carefully selecting such as have not been cut or bruised put them in barrels or boxes soon after being dug, without anything among them—no cut straw, no paper, no shavings, no dry leaves, no sand, wet or dry, except the little that may stick to them in picking them up. The barrels or boxes containing the potatoes may be placed in any room where the temperature is moderately uniform and somewhere between forty and fifty degrees. By using a fire in the rooms where the potatoes are stored is considered essential even in moderate weather to dry up "the sweat" as it is called, produced from potatoes heating, which they will in about ten days after being put away. The most critical time, however, is in severe cold weather. If the thermometer falls below forty degrees the keeping properties of the potatoes are destroyed and loss is sure to follow.—Western Homestead.

CHICKEN CHOLERA.—Breeder's Gazette, gives the following rules for the prompt suppression of the above named disease: First, recognize the disease on its first appearance; second, remove sick and dead fowls beyond the reach of healthy ones; third, disinfect the droppings of the sick ones. If cholera is in a locality every farmer should be on his guard, and if he loses a bird, or has one sick, he should suspect this disease. After a little experience the droppings may be relied upon to determine if the affection is really cholera. The droppings of fowls consist of the kidney and bowel excretions, mixed; the former in health, are white and are easily recognized. In cholera the droppings are almost entirely the excretion of the kidneys; they are semi-liquid, and have a yellowish or greenish color. This is characteristic of the disease. Many people, I find, are very careless in regard to their fowls, and if one of their flock by some chance happens to take a particle of contagion into its stomach and contracts the disease this first bird, when it dies, is allowed to remain where its fellows can feed upon its flesh. There is no more certain method of communicating the disease than this, and it is not surprising that within the next week or two three-fourths of the flock are either sick or dead. When taken at the beginning of an outbreak, the disinfection is a very easy matter. Three ounces of commercial sulphuric acid are added to four gallons of water, and all droppings of the sick fowls are thoroughly saturated with the mixture by sprinkling from a common watering pot. If this is properly done it almost invariably stops the disease; but if other cases occur the disinfection must be repeated. If many fowls have died the well ones of the flock must be placed by themselves on a fresh run, or in case none is at hand the old one may be safely disinfected with the same solution. The solution of sulphuric acid, first recommended by Pasteur, is absolutely certain in its effect; it destroys the germs of the disease, and accomplishes this within an hour or two after coming into contact with them. It should not be forgotten, of course, that sulphuric acid should on no account be allowed to touch the hands or clothes; but when diluted to the extent recommended above, it is perfectly safe. If enough water is added by the druggist to the three ounces of acid to make the whole measure a pint or a quart, it may be carried with much less danger of accident. Fowl cholera is, then, a very manageable disease, easily and cheaply suppressed; and if our farmers continue to allow it to rage unchecked, it is their own fault, and there can be no excuse for them. The points which I have stated are founded on many experiments and long and close observation—they are not theories but facts,—and I hope they may in the future enable our poultry raisers to materially diminish the losses from this plague."

Loss of cud is a myth and so are all attempts at making one. A cow when sick ceases to chew her cud, and such an omission is one of the best evidences that she is sick. In fevers, and not unfrequently when injured by accidents, the cow will stop chewing her cud. Any derangement of the stomach stops the chewing of the cud, and the best evidence we have of convalescence in a sick cow is when she resumes ruminating. It is not necessary that a cow should chew its cud in order that life may be sustained. Young calves do not chew their cud. Frequently the practice does not begin with young animals until they commence to eat coarser foods, rarely making a cud when fed exclusively on milk. Cows fed entirely on short meal will not chew their cud. Probably the cow described as ill is suffering from indigestion caused by over feeding. It might be well to keep her feed from her and give her a dose of Epsom salts, say about a pound. Then obtain four ounces of essence of gentian and the same quantity of sweet nitre; divide this into two doses and give it in about a pint of warm water. Also give the cow scalded bran in her drink. In a few days your cow will probably resume the chewing of her cud.—American Cultivator.

JOHNSON GRASS.—A well-informed stockman of Mobile, told us, a few days ago, that he had tested Johnson grass thoroughly, both as a green feed, and as cured hay; and, that the results had satisfied him that nothing could be better in either case. It made the best hay if cut when at the height of about three feet. He thought its culture ought to be encouraged in Mobile county as much as possible. Once a fair showing was given it there was strong probability that it would "take the country," but this probability should not be paraded against it, for, all things considered, it was certainly a good thing for the country to be taken by.

Some dispute has arisen as to the nativity of Johnson grass, and also to when it was first cultivated in this country. Our venerable friend, Dr. M. W. Phillips, of Mississippi, writes that it is of Turkish origin, and that the first of it was brought to this country in 1835 by Gov. Means, of South Carolina.—Mobile Register.

VALUE OF A COW.—A writer of live stock literature says the real value of a cow or any other animal is in proportion to the property derived from its product. A cow that will produce 200 pounds of butter a year may be actually worth $50. One that will produce 300 pounds in the year would be well worth twice this sum, because the extra product costs nothing in feed or care, and at the same rate a cow that will produce 600 can not be worth more than $150, and in addition to this a certain summon account of the value of her calves. A thousand dollars is more than any cow can reasonably be worth, excepting so far as the owner may derive pleasure from the possession, and value this at about $800. Two hundred is, perhaps the extreme limit to the actual value of any cow as a butter producer. For her bull calves to be used for breeding, some still further additional value might be set upon the cow.

HOW TO MEASURE THE HEIGHT OF TREES.—When a tree stands so that the shadow can be measured, its height can be readily ascertained as follows: Set a stick upright—let it be perpendicular by the plumb line. Measure the length of the shadow of the stick. As the length of its shadow is to the height of the stick, so is the length of the shadow of a tree to its height. For instance: If the stick is four feet above the ground, and its shadow is six feet in length, and the shadow of the tree is ninety feet, its height will be sixty feet. 6:4::90:60. In other words, multiply the length of the shadow of the tree by the length of the stick, and divide by the length of the shadow of the stick.

TRAINING A COLT.—Bad horses are more frequently made than born. It is very much in the bringing up—in the way a colt is cared for, and the manner in which it is broken. Firmness with kindness goes very far in making a valuable horse. The colt should early learn that it is never to be deceived; that it is to be encouraged and rewarded when obedient, and punished by the withholding of caresses when disobedient. The same natural qualities that make a vicious, will, with proper treatment, make one of those intelligent and spirited horses that all desire to possess. The true trainer of colts is gentle, loving, firm and thoughtful; and the young animals of his charge partake of the same qualities.

CABBAGE WORMS.—Cabbage worms are destroyed by sprinkling the cabbage with strong lime water, tobacco water, or whale oil soapsuds. Either of these may be used hot, as the cabbage will stand more heat than the worms. Dust will drive them away. There are three kinds of worms which prey upon the cabbage, but all are similar, the same means will destroy them all. The small light, yellow butterfly with spotted wings, and which is numerous at the present time, is the parent of one of the more numerous kinds.

Household.

HARICOT BEANS.—Put the beans in plenty of cold water; when they boil throw in a little salt, let them boil about two hours, and then the skin begins to crack; strain away all the water, which put aside to help make soup, and put a thick cloth over the beans. Put the saucepan on the hob for one hour for the beans to steam; by this time the little water left with them will have dried up, and the beans will be thoroughly cooked and mealy. Perhaps, after a joint of meat the best thing is a beefsteak pie or a pork and kidney pudding.

COOKING CABBAGE.—We all know how disagreeable is the odor of cabbage or turnips when cooking; so disagreeable, in fact, that many housekeepers dispense with their use rather than make the house so uncomfortable. But the evil can be remedied almost entirely by dropping a lump of charcoal in the water in which these vegetables are boiled. When boiling greens, tie a lump of bread (the size of a hen's egg) up in a clean cloth, and put into the kettle. It will absorb all offensive odor.

CURE FOR CHILLS.—Take green mullen leaves and pound or beat them and bruise them up to a perfect pulp; then add a little milk-warm water to extract the juice. For a grown person, give one tablespoonful of this juice before breakfast, one before dinner and one before supper, daily, for three or four days, and the chills will be cured. The juice may be flavored with anything simple, to make it palatable, if desired, as it is very bitter. It can not injure, it costs little, and will effect a sure cure.

OATMEAL PUDDING—Nice.—Take four tablespoonfuls of oatmeal, one-half teaspoonful of salt, and one of cinnamon. Mix and place in pudding-pan. Now beat up one egg and three tablespoonfuls of sugar together, and add one quart of sweet milk, and pour over the oatmeal. Place in the oven to bake one hour. When about half done, stir up from the bottom with a fork, and finish baking. Mix with cream or sweet sauce; or good alone, or with butter, as you please.

CAKE MAKING.—In making cakes, be careful to observe the following simple rules: Beat them up with your hand, not with a spoon; always dry your flour; always clean your currants and sultana raisins in flour, not in water; beat up eggs for ten minutes before adding them to the other ingredients; when the cakes are taken from the oven, turn them out of the tin, and stand them outside the warm tin.

SALMON CROQUETTES.—Those are nice for tea or for breakfast, and are not at all difficult to prepare. Canned salmon may be used when it is impossible to get the fresh fish. Mix the salmon with fine bread or cracker crumbs, roll in flour and fry in butter; or use part butter and part lard. If when using lobster for salad you have some left, it may be mixed with bread crumbs and fried in butter. This is an inviting breakfast dish.

A French paper gives the following old recipe for testing the age of eggs, which it thinks seems to have been forgotten: Dissolve three and three-quarter ounces of common salt in one and three-quarter pints of water. An egg put in this solution on the day it is laid will sink to the bottom; one a day old will not reach quite to the bottom of the vessel; an egg three days old will swim in the liquid, while one more than three days old will swim on the surface.

GINGER ALE.—Ginger, three ounces; cream of tartar, three ounces; brown sugar, three pounds; rind and juice of four lemons; boiling water, four quarts. Let all the ingredients mix well together, stir it well while boiling and cover it till cooled to blood heat. Add three tablespoonsful of barm if summer, four and a half if winter. Stir well again and let it lie till next day. Bottle and cork securely. May be used in four or five days, or six days in winter.

HOREHOUND CANDY.—Prepare a strong decoction by boiling two ounces of the dried herb in a pint and a half of water about half an hour; strain this and add three and one-half pounds of brown sugar; boil over a hot fire until it reaches the requisite degree of hardness, when it may be poured out in flat tin trays, previously well greased and marked into sticks or squares with a knife as it becomes cool enough to retain its shape.

GINGERBREAD.—Mix in a large basin one and a half pounds of flour, six ounces of sugar, three ounces of butter, one teaspoonful each of black pepper, cinnamon, and cloves, and Jamaica pepper; heat one pound of treacle and beat up three eggs; if they do not moisten the mixture enough, add some sweet or butter milk. Mix at night and bake the next morning.

LEMON MERINGUE PIE.—One large lemon or two small ones with the juice and grated rind, one and one-half cups white sugar, yolks of four eggs, scant quart of water, three tablespoonfuls cornstarch mixed with a little of a quart of water. Set the water to boil with juice and rind, also sugar and one teaspoonful salt. When boiling add cornstarch; when cool add yolks of eggs.

CURRANT JAM.—Take equal weights of currants and sugar, put them together in an earthen dish and wash them thoroughly. Cook slowly for thirty minutes in a porcelain-lined kettle. Black and red currants together, two quarts black to one quart of red, make a nicer jam that either alone. White currant jam is not only very nice, but very pretty.

STEWED CORN.—Scald the corn just enough to harden; slice off the ear so as to divide the kernel three or four times; scrape the chits (the sweetest part) from the cob, add sweet milk, a little water, a little butter and salt, simmer ten minutes. Beat one egg and add, stirring in evenly just before taking off the fire. A very little sugar improves it for the taste of most people.

NEW CARROTS WITH CREAM.—Trim a quantity of the smallest new carrots that can be obtained and boil them in salt water; when done drain off the water. Melt one ounce of butter in a saucepan, add to it a dessertspoonful of flour, pepper, salt, grated nutmeg, a pinch of powdered sugar and a little cream. Put in the carrots, simmer gently a few minutes, and serve.

Educational.

—Committees were appointed in Pittsburg to establish, in connection with the Western University of Pennsylvania, a college of law and political science, in memory of President Garfield. They will immediately begin to collect funds for the purpose. The sum of $1,500 is to be applied to the maintenance of an oratorical foundation, which shall provide each year, on the birthday of Garfield, an oration from some eminent American. It is proposed that the Pittsburg College of Physicians be connected with the Western University as its medical department; thus making Pittsburg a second center for medical instruction in Pennsylvania.

—The summer school of biology of the Peabody Academy of Science, at Salem, will open July 21, and will continue in session for four weeks. This school is intended expressly for teachers of the public and private schools, and the class is limited to twenty-four. Courses in physiological botany, analytical botany, anatomy and physiology of vertebrates, embryology, colenterades, entomology and invertebrate animals will be given.

—Girton and Newnham, the young women's colleges at Cambridge, England, are full of pupils, and the authorities have more applications for admission than they can accept. The students go in carriages to the university lectures. There is not the slightest opposition to the colleges among the professors and students of the university. The majority of the ladies who had been educated at the Cambridge Colleges have become successful teachers.

—Provost Pepper's statement that the admission of women to the University of Pennsylvania can not be considered, owing to a lack of room, leads the Tribune to remark, pertinently: "It would be interesting to know if the Provost would refuse an addition of fifty or a hundred young men to his freshman class on the ground that there was not room for them."

—Four ladies have just been admitted "with every mark of friendly approval" to the B. A. degree of London University at the annual presentation of degrees. At a meeting of convocation next January, the question of admitting ladies of the requisite standing to its deliberations and to a share in its functions will be discussed.

—The executive committee of the board of trustees of the University of Wooster last week deposed seven members of the faculty of the medical department at Cleveland and declared their chairs vacant. These professors had undertaken to consolidate their medical school with that of the Western Reserve College. The trouble may lead to litigation.

—A training school for young lads, where they may be taught the art of good farming, is to be established at Hartford Ct. A fund was devised for the purpose twenty-four years ago by David Watkinson with the condition that it lie at interest until it should amount to $100,000. This amount is now credited to the fund.

—The Sandwich Island alphabet has 13 letters; the Burmese, 21; the Hebrew, Syriac, Chaldee, and Samaritan, 22 each; the French, 23; the Greek, 23 the Latin, 25; the German, Dutch, and English, 26 each; the Spanish, 27; the Arabic, 28; the Persian, 32; the Russian, 41; the Sanscrit, 50; the Ethiopic, 202.

—In the public schools of Galt, Ontario, the younger children to the number of about two hundred are kept at their studies half the time, the remaining hours spent in play, under the direction of a teacher who gives attention to physical exercise, and guides the scholars in their amusements.

—Professor W. T. Harris, lately superintendent of the St. Louis schools, is mentioned as the probable chancellor of the Texas State University. An endowment fund of $700,000 is now in the State treasury, and this will be increased, it is thought, to $2,000,000. Professor Harris' salary will be $5,000.

—The Philadelphia School Board, in obedience to the recent action of the Pennsylvania Legislature, has arranged for the admission of colored pupils to the schools. On and after September 1, sewing is to be taught in the Girls' Normal School by a skilled instructor, who is to be paid $675 a year.

—Adelbert College, the institution which the generosity of Mr. Amasa Stone is giving to Cleveland, is to stand on a height near Lake Erie in the midst of a beautiful park. It is to be built of Amherst stone, and will be three stories high, with attic and basement.

—A writer in one of our exchanges denounces a gift of the late Matthew Vassar of $80,000 to found two chairs in Vassar which are never to be occupied by women as "a $80,000 sneer," and calls upon the women of the country to contribute $80,000, to enable Vassar to reject the gift with proper womanly scorn.

—Harvard University replied to the request of Miss Kate E. Morris, a graduate of Smith College, for admission to candidacy for the degree of doctor of philosophy that "the corporation are not prepared to admit women as candidates for a degree."

—The formal opening of the new College of Music, connected with the Wellesley College, Massachussets, recently took place, when a concert was given, composed exclusively of works by native Americans.

—Georgia furnishes school funds for its juvenile population to the amount of 88 cents per capita. This provides about three months' instruction. Various bills to increase these funds by taxation are pending in the Legislature.

—Trinity College, Dublin, has for the first time conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on a Presbyterian. The recipient is Professor Murphy, the commentator.

—The University of Sydney recently opened its classes and degrees to women, and has just received a gift of $25,000 for the endowment of scholarships tenable by either young men or women.

—The public schools of Providence, R. I., have for two years not practiced corporal punishment, and the result is highly satisfactory.

—About one hundred new students are expected at the University of California next term. That institution has been generally reorganized.

—Bowdoin College has received gifts during the last few months, for endowments and other uses amounting to $110,000.

—The rule forbidding the employment of married women in the Chicago public schools has been rescinded.

—Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby has resigned the chancellorship of the University of New York.

EDUCATIONAL.

East Mississippi Female College.

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.

One of the most accessible and prosperous schools in the South. Its facilities, course of study, system and faculty are superior. It is a growing and popular institution under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"It has developed into great usefulness, and has established itself in the hearts and confidence of the people."—Mississippi Conference.

"The college is finely located to command a large patronage, and its management has been such as to secure the confidence of the people. It is an institution that deserves the liberal support and patronage of the Methodists of Mississippi."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Send for catalogue and examine terms.

Whitworth Female College,

BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.

Will re-open September 21, 1881. Number of pupils last term, 291. Number of teachers 18. Board per half academic year, $80. Tuition from $15 to $25; Incidental Fees from $1 to $1.

The languages, ancient and modern, mathematics, the sciences, music, drawing and painting thoroughly taught.

The continued success of this school is its best indorsement. There has not been a death in the college for years past. Send for a catalogue.

H. F. JOHNSON, A. M., D. D., President.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Session 1881-82.

THE Academic, Biblical and Law Departments open September 1. The Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Departments open October 1.

The fees are as follows: Academic Department, $65; Biblical $15; Law, $100; Medical, $65; Dental, $90; Pharmaceutical, $65.

Ten scholarships, worth $100 each, were awarded to meritorious students at the close of the last session. Four Graduate Fellowships, worth $300 each, and two Post-graduate Fellowships, worth $500, each, were likewise conferred.

The various Chairs of the University are filled by forty Professors and Instructors. Six hundred and thirty-two students, from twenty-one States, were matriculated last year.

For the ANNUAL REGISTER, or further information, address J. M. Leech, Secretary of the Faculty, or L. C. GARLAND, Chancellor.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Knerinjer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good; and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

The Fall Session will begin September 15, 1881.

Send for catalogue to

REV. E. E. WILEY, D.D., President.

Millwood Female Institute,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Founded 1860. Chartered 1870.

This school opens the first Monday of September last with efficient accomplished teachers in every department.

Expenses, per session of five months, including Tuition, Board and Washing, $75.

Music on Piano or Guitar, with use of instrument, and class singing, $25.

For further particulars send for catalogue.

MISS McCALMONT, Principal.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin October 5, 1881.

This is a family Boarding School for Boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. B. N. MAGRUDER, Principal.

J. B. MAGRUDER A. M. Assistant.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Session 1880-81 had 127 students, six professors and teachers and three A. B. graduates. The entire expenses for board and tuition for scholastic year need not exceed $144 in Preparatory department, nor $164 in College classes. Next session begins September 6, 1881. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,

HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

The thirty-second year begins August 31. A more healthy location can not be found. The College was never in a more prosperous condition. A full Faculty of thorough teachers, splendid buildings and a complete outfit for all departments, literary, music, languages and art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Prices reduced to suit the times. Special advantages offered. For terms and new catalogues address

REV. A. B. JONES, A. M., President.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Next session opens September 21, 1881. The services of experienced and successful teachers secured. Buildings undergoing necessary repairs. Every room being thoroughly remodeled, and neatly and handsomely furnished. No pains will be spared to give entire satisfaction. For further information address, Rev. T. C. BRADFORD, President, Port Gibson, Miss.

READ VILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

Will open on the first Monday, in October. For terms and circulars, address,

MRS. MARY W. READ, Principal.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,

GREENSBORO, ALA.

The next session will open on the first Wednesday in October next with a full corps of able, experienced instructors. Courses of study extensive and thorough. Expenses moderate. $175 in advance will pay Board and Tuition in University classes for the entire scholastic year; $125 in Preparatory Department. Health record almost unrivaled. Situated fifty miles from Selma, on the Selma and Greensboro railroad. For catalogue and further information, address

REV. J. LEWIS, D. D., Chancellor.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE

Female College,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The next session of this school will open on Monday, September 19, 1881. We ask attention to the following points:

I. Our curriculum embraces a good course of study which we teach thoroughly.

II. We are prepared to satisfy the most cultivated taste in the departments of Music and Art.

III. We employ the best teaching talent within the range of our knowledge.

IV. We keep a good table in the College Boarding Department.

V. This school has a health record which is unsurpassed.

VI. Our charges are as moderate as they can be made without marring the best results in culture.

For full information, send for catalogue.

JOHN MASSEY, President, Tuskegee, Ala.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded in 1849, offers superior advantages and healthy retreat.

The MALE DEPARTMENT is located in a quiet farming community, seven miles from Sweetwater East Tenn., Va. and Ga. R. R.

The FEMALE DEPARTMENT is located in the quiet town of Sweetwater, in a lovely section.

Experienced teachers, good work and low charges in both departments. Patronage merited.

For particulars address

REV. J. H. BRUNNER, D. D., Hiwassee College, Tenn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

In the South-west is now in stock and ready to fill all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at sho notice, and prices guaranteed as low as they can b had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application. Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

ndergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

G. W. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. O. L. RAYNE

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

NEW GOODS.
GREAT REDUCTION IN

CARPETS,

Tapestry Brussels,

Seventy Cents a yard up to $1 05.

Wiltons, Axminsters, Velvets, Moquettes, Brussels, Ingrains, Tapestries, Window Shades, Lace Curtains, Cocoa, Needle and China Matting, Turkish Rugs, Crumb Cloths, Rugs and Mats in great variety.

A. BROUSSEAU'S SON,
17 Chartres St.

Call and see for yourself.

S. K. RUSS,

—WITH—

Ayers, Richard & Co.,

WHOLESALE GROCERS

—AND—

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

74, 76 Magazine, 88, 90, 92 Poydras St.

NEW ORLEANS.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box, 598, New York.

Christian Advocate.

The Echternach Procession.

The London Standard gives the following account of a queer custom which is observed at Echternach, in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, which has descended from mediæval times:

From fifteen to twenty thousand pilgrims assemble on the adjacent meadows. The inhabitants of different villages—men and women apart—collect behind their clergymen, and a band of musicians is placed in front. As the clock strikes five on Tuesday morning in Whitsuntide a priest walks up the steps of a rude wooden pulpit, and thence addresses the multitude, then already swollen in an incredible extent by sightseers, who come by special trains and every imaginable vehicle to be present at the performances. The community which happens to be nearest the road stands forth preceded by their priest, who, however, does not dance. Two men or two women hop away first two steps in advance, and then hop backward, the band playing a most monotonous tune. "Abraham had seven sons, seven sons; seven sons had Abraham," are the words to this terrible melody, which each successive set, as they join the procession, take up with increasing vigor. Hour after hour passes away before the last people have started on their miles of way to the foot of the church of St. Willibrod, where they go up fifty steps, round and around the altar, and finally descend the fifty steps. Nothing can exceed the excitement and exhaustion among the dancers, old and young, except the numbers of those who, in spite of an occasional draught of water offered by charitable bystanders, sink down on the grass or on the dusty road, not to rise for hours. The question is naturally asked, What does all this mean? The answer is, it is intended to perpetuate the remembrance of a frightful epidemic of St. Vitus' dance, which carried off hundreds of victims in the neighborhood referred to some time during the fifteenth century; to offer up prayers and vows to the patron saint; to recognize a miraculous cessation of the epidemic; and it is a fulfilment of vows then made that, in gratitude, there should be yearly dances performed—two hops forward and one backward, as closely resembling the visitation from which heaven has delivered them as rhythm and good taste would allow. During the French occupation in 1793, the procession was forbidden, but the easy-going Dutch Government of Luxembourg have allowed it to be revived. To judge from what could be seen this year of the drunkenness and debauchery in the numberless public houses frequented by the pilgrims after their long fasting and exertions, it would have been better to have continued the prohibition.

Satan's Devices.

Sin often leads men into a most inconsistent easiness in regard to one particular sin, while the heart is rebellion manifest rebellion against God. It is not difficult for this false peace to appeal to the conscience, and cause it, self-righteously, against some form of wickedness. The Jews ease themselves credit for their rigid observance of the Sabbath; while their hearts were full of murderous hatred to Christ. There are thousands who accept the false light which comes from a development of the conscience to some form of, almost any form of, external righteousness, while their hearts are full of selfishness, and all wrong in the sight of God. On the other hand, Satan as the angel of light by insisting upon a "religion of the heart—a spiritual religion," works are nothing in the sight of God, who looks upon the heart, only believe, and all will be well." Thus the adversary would satisfy men with an imitation of religion—the heart—with a spurious faith which does not involve obedience—that they may lack common honesty in their dealings with their fellow-men. Prayer is good; praise to God, well sung, is beautiful; but false and empty words, unaccompanied with works of obedience, reveal a kind of spirituality which is but the mockery of fools.

This false angel has a way of deluding men by inducing them to accept and contend for a "religion of principle." When our religion is one of true moral principles reigning over us, it is indeed beautiful, effective, and well-pleasing to God. But the game of satan is to lead the soul into the mere holding of truthful principle in the intellect, while he rules the heart in his service. He is none willing men should "hold the truth in unrighteousness," as a theory of the understanding, while, as a law of life and duty, it is practically rejected; and this is an ungodliness against which the wrath of God is revealed from heaven—a wrath all the more terrible because, knowing the truth, he obeys it not, and contemning for it, the soul refuses to obey it.

A very common method of the angel of light with timid disciples, whom the Spirit would especially draw into closer fellowship with the Father, as well as with nine-tenths of those who desire to know what they shall do to be saved, is to present something short of Christ himself, as the soul's support and life. The Jews were not different from other men in wishing to see a sign. Every mind wants a resting-place, and necessarily desires to have it revealed, or signified. The Jews only sought the wrong thing. Christ himself was the proper sign unto them, but them they would not receive. Not unfrequently Satan does himself dispense "signs" to those who seek them, and satisfies them with a most false security.—Rev. Dr. Parsons, in "The Believer's Victory."

The genius of spakling conversation, which distinguished the ladies of the eighteenth century has died out among their fair decendants. In most drawing-rooms ladies and gentlemen have ceased to converse with each other. The former go to considerable expense for evening toilets, in the display of which they alone find pleasure at the soirees they attend. At these jealous assemblies they sit in a somi circle round the mistress of the house and keep silence, when they do not fall in with persons of their sex with whom they are already acquainted. Their chit-chat, if the occasion arises for them to talk, is carried on in a low tone, and is vapid and conventional. They deal in a cold sort of gush about trifles that had, butter be treated as trifles in a touch-and-go manner. The words "ravissante," "charmante," "exquise," "adorable," "magnifique," "spaduque," are unmistakably brought into play, and applied indifferently to Sarah Bernhardt, Croizette's parure of diamonds, a lap dog, a bit of old lace, an artificial flower, a piece of embroidery or an operatic ballet. Any human being whose brain is in a wholesome state, would have a surfeit of the superlatives in a few moments. No hospitable feeling animates the hostess. She forgets that if people minister at their inconvenience and expense to her vanity by attending her soirees, it is her business to make them pass the evening pleasantly. As each lady guest walks up to her, she greets her with a pretty little complimentary speech, which from constant use is worn threadbare, gently presses the tips of her fingers, and with a graceful minuet action, leads her to a chair at one of the extremities of the semi-circle, where she plants her for the rest of the evening. A bright array of toilets, if not of beauty, is disposed in a wide crescent, which face toward gentlemen congregated in groups, talking to each other. Demoiselles stand or sit behind their mothers, and do not open their lips at all, unless they fall in with school friends belonging to their own set. In pursuance of a social fiction it is taken for granted that you are acquainted with every one in the monde in which you appear. This works agreeably enough in the Faubourg St. Germain, where all have the same king, creed, political passions, prejudices, rococo tastes, and do really know each other. In the modern variegated salon, the fiction, however, condemns to dullness and ennui. It is very rare in Parisian society for strangers to fall into conversation unless introduced. The thing might be done in a railway carriage, but not well in a drawing-room. I often wonder how French women contrive to secure the attendance of ladies at such entertainments as they provide for them in the evening. There are some houses at which weariness of spirit is not the rule, but they are governed by women emancipated from the fashionable theology and the political credo.—London Truth.

A BATTLE ROYAL.—A gentleman from Stone county, who has just reached the city, gave the Globe-Democrat correspondent the particulars of a remarkable incident which he witnessed while crossing White river on the ferry just above the mouth of Sycamore creek. When nearly half way across the stream an enormous eagle swooped down on a flock of geese which were swimming in the river some eighty rods below the boat. The fowls upon observing the eagle approaching instinctively dived under the water just as the bird struck the waves. Balked in the first assault the eagle flew slowly upward, and when the goose came to the surface darted downward again and burying its talons in one of them, attempted to bear it away. The goose struggled violently, while its companions swam around it uttering shrill cries and the persons on the ferry-boat watched the strange scene with keen interest. Once the eagle lifted its prey clear out of the water and seemed on the point of conveying it to the mountain cliff that rose grandly in the air on the other side of the stream, but the struggles of the goose forced the captor downward. When water was again reached the goose made a supreme effort and plunged below the surface, dragging the eagle after it, and causing the latter to loosen its hold and rise upward with a fierce scream. The eagle next attacked another goose, but with the same result, being compelled to relinquish its hold when its intended victim plunged beneath the waves. This strange contest lasted fully thirty minutes, at the end of which time the eagle gave up the fight, and, rising, soared away to the mountains westward, while the flock of geese swam further down the stream. None of the flock were killed, but the water in the vicinity was dyed with blood, and the surface of the stream was covered with feathers for a considerable distance.—Globe-Democrat.

THE FLIGHT OF BIRDS.—The speed of birds offers great variety. When the flight does not exceed thirty miles an hour they are considered slow flyers. The speed of the swallow is computed at ninety miles, the hawk one hundred and fifty miles, while that of the swift is said to attain the astounding velocity of one hundred and eighty miles an hour. The endurance displayed by birds upon the wing is wonderful, and many instances are recorded which almost exceed belief. In the time of Henry IV. of France, there was a falcon which became famous in Europe by flying from Fontainebleau to Malta, 1,350 miles, in twenty-four hours. But without going so far back we may do a summer's afternoon watch a flock of swallows for an hour without detecting the slightest interval of rest. Their skimming, busy, rapid wings never seem to tire. What strength of flight, too, must be required in those annual migrations which bring the winter water fowl across the North Sea to England from Scandinavia, and the summer visitors, the nightingales and swallows, from Southern Europe or Africa. Long feats of flight are performed by some others, such as the frigate or man-of-war bird, which is sometimes found hunting for food in the Atlantic more than a thousand miles from shore. Yet it never seems to tire or to seek rest either on the surface of the sea or in the rigging of a ship, and it is not known to visit the land except at the return of the breeding season.—G. Chaplin Child.

HAVE AN IDEAL.—As far as an ideal possesses a nation, it will make its history. Has the Christian Church anything? Judaism was local and national because it was a process, a development, and yet at times the sweet singer entreated that the whole earth should be filled with God's glory. Christianity rejoices that the Son of Man is the Redeemer and the Light of the world, that the volume of revelation is complete. The remedial mission of the Master is to find a feeble parallel in the mission of the church. In the Christian campaign the supremest imperialism is to obtain. The earth is to be a holy land and its inhabitants a royal priesthood. When the church grows dull and heavy-hearted, begins to settle down inactive and supinely content, a vision of its lofty mission disturbs its carnal repose. And the Master's voice arouses with the command, "Go ye into all the world." When the church feels the heart-sickness of hope deferred, the weary centuries have come and gone, why are his chariots so long in coming? "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." He will use the mighty sweep of the centuries to manifest that the worm Jacob shall thresh the mountains, and the stone cut out of the mountains without hands shall fill the whole earth. How much of the vitality and vigor, the internal purity and outward aggressiveness of the church we owe to the lofty ideal with which the mission cause has stirred it, it is difficult accurately to say.—Rev. W. Anderson.

Press the ADVOCATE circulation now.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. S. PFISTER,

Millinery and Dressmaking,

539 Magazine Street,

Bet. St. Mary and Felicity. NEW ORLEANS.

Bonnets and Hats Cleaned, Dyed and Altered.

E. E. LELAND,

No. 185 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

IMPORTED

MILLINERY

French Flowers and Feathers,

ORNAMENTS

Fringes and Tassels, Dress Trimmings, Novelties in Buttons, Ribbons, Corsets, Novelties in Ladies' Neckwear, Veilings and Crapes, Velvets, Lace Goods, Etc., Etc., Etc.

Special attention paid to Country Orders.

CRESCENT INSURANCE COMPANY.

Incorporated as a Mutual Company in 1849—Re-organized as a Stock Company in 1850.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - - $100,000.

Has paid nearly NINE MILLIONS for losses Since 1849.

Annual and Term Policies Issued on Desirable Fire Business.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.
CHAS. H. DOLSEN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

TRUSTEES

Sam'l H. Kennedy,	Paul E. Mortimer,
Victor Mayer,	Joseph Bowling,
W. B. Conger,	S. Hernsheim,
George W. Seibell,	Ed. J. Gay,
Alf. Moulton,	Edwd. Nalle,
Charles Newman,	J. J. Reiss,
U. Marmoud,	Louis Prados,
Lucien Delery,	W. W. Swalo,
Charles H. Dolsen,	Harry L. Flash,
Reuben G. Bush,	John Brunaso,
John Calder,	A. H. Steward,
S. C. Coulon,	E. H. Adams,
W. A. Phelps,	Sigmund Katz,
M. Gillis,	N. D. Wallace,
W. R. Lyman.

See our Agents throughout Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi and Arkansas.

Factors' and Traders'

INSURANCE COMPANY.

49 CARONDELET STREET.

Paid Up Capital ..... $1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President.
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President.
THOS. F. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

TRUSTEES

John I. Noble,	John Chaffe,
Richard Milliken,	Sam'l Friedlander,
R. M. Walmsley,	A. H. May,
T. Lyle Lyon,	Samuel H. Boyd,
Wm. J. Behan,	H. F. Eshleman,
Chas. Cholle,	L. C. Jurey,
Wm. Hartwell,	C. J. Leeds,
A. T. Janin,	A. M. Blackham,
Henry Abrahams,	Louis Roth,
A. Brindle,	G. W. Seibell,
Wm. Cunningham,	John I. Adams,
R. T. Barkner,	Wm. A. Gwyn,
Chas. E. Black.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S

MAMMOTH

QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 100 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF

CROCKERY

Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods

OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS

JOHN GAUCHE,

AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,

109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street.

Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

H-O-W T-O P-A-I-N-T.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures.

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations, whenever they can serve to make the subject plainer and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BROWN'S

IRON

TRADE MARK — PURITY — QUALITY NOT QUANTITY

BITTERS

A TRUE TONIC.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS are a certain cure for all diseases requiring a complete tonic; especially Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Intermittent Fevers, Want of Appetite, Loss of Strength, Lack of Energy, etc. Enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. Acts like a charm on the digestive organs, removing all dyspeptic symptoms, such as tasting the food, Belching, Heat in the Stomach, Heartburn, etc. The only Iron Preparation that will not blacken the teeth or give headache. Sold by all Druggists at $1.00 a bottle.

BROWN CHEMICAL CO.
Baltimore, Md.

CAUTION.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.

SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Wt. with yoke & frame	Cast o Bell A Hang
No 6,	25in.....250 lbs.....	$ 25 00
No. 6,	27in.....340 lbs.....	30 00
No. 7,	30in.....490 lbs.....	50 00
No. 8,	34in.....750 lbs.....	75 00
No. 9,	38in.....925 lbs.....	100 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

H. D. McCOWN,

DEALER IN FINE

CLOTHING,

SHIRTS

AND

Mens' Furnishing Goods,

Cor. Common and St. Charles Sts.

NEW ORLEANS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S

—MANUAL—

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, Jr.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is in the most part a work of facts and figures—a record analyses and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, In Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

NEW HOME!

SEWING MACHINE

Is More Perfect, Quicker to Make, More Durable, and made of Finer Material than any other Machine, and

SOLD FOR LESS MONEY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: If you do not wish to buy the New Home, I advise you to wait until other machine companies make a machine equal to it.

HEADQUARTERS, 170 CANAL ST.,

GUSTAV SEEGER,

Sole Agent.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ORDERS

—FOR—

Fresh, First-Class Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Etc.,

—SENT TO—

E. H. ADAMS & BROTHER,

WILL RECEIVE THE

PROMPTEST AND MOST CAREFUL ATTENTION.

AS THEY DO NOT DEAL IN

"Damaged Goods," "Auction Goods," or "Job Lots,"

THEIR PATRONS ARE SURE TO GET GOOD VALUE.

No. 594 Magazine Street, New Orleans.

D. H. HOLMES,

155 Canal Street, - - - - 15 Bourbon Street.

Our Stock of Staple Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in

Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.

HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.

D. H. HOLMES,

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE. 155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,

(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Howes.)

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,

Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. Business Suits, $12 to $25.
6 Shirts for $9. Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.

U. S. BONDS.

Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.
Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

58 CAMP STREET.

JAMES COBBS,

Attorney at Law,

46 ST. FRANCIS STREET,

MOBILE, ALA.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,

112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

I have decided to distribute the remainder of

My Stock of Pictures

among my customers, rather than sacrifice them. Any person buying $5 and upwards of other goods, will be entitled to select from a class of pictures ranging in price according to the size of bill purchased. No additional price will be put upon the goods, as this is entirely a bonus to induce sales during the dull Summer months.

My stock is comprised in part of Carpets, Oil Cloths, Upholstery Goods, Mattings, Wall Paper, Window Shades, Cornices, Curtain Goods, Wire Screens, Frames, Mouldings and Mirrors.

E. HEATH,

97 and 99 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The Shortest and Quickest Route to all Eastern Cities.

THROUGH WITHOUT CHANGE TO

Nashville, Louisville, Lynchburg, Washington, Cincinnati, Columbus, O., and St. Louis.

ENTIRE TRAINS THROUGH FROM NEW ORLEANS TO LOUISVILLE.

	Leave.	Arrive
Express.....	7.02 A. M.	10.02 P. M
Coast Accommodation.....	3.22 P. M.	9.12 A. M
Fast Mail.....	5.00 P. M.	10.02 A. M

ONLY ONE CHANGE OF CARS TO NORTHERN AND EASTERN CITIES.

Ticket office, corner D. Charles and Common sts where Sleeping Car accommodations can be secured

C. P. ATMORE,
General Passenger Agent.
J. H. SMITH,
Ticket Agent.
J. T. HARAHAN,
Superintendent.

FURNITURE.

W. C. TEBAULT

47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His Stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. C. TEBAULT,

47 Royal Street,

New Orleans.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!

Personal experiences in the

UNITED STATES and CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES.

By J. B. HOOD

Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army.

Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.

Price in cloth binding, $3; in leather $3 50. Mailed, post paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp Street.

Liverpool and London and Globe

INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT.

Office, Cor. Carondelet and Gravier Streets.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

STATEMENT OF THE COMPANY.

JANUARY 1, 1881.

Gross fire assets	$12,167,538 41
Fire liabilities, including paid up capital	5,875,057 51
Net surplus	$6,201,480 90

STATEMENT OF THE U. S. BRANCH.

JULY 1, 1881.

Assets	$1,592,219 18
Liabilities	2,550,160 52
Surplus	$2,042,051 66

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:

L. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of L. Christ & Co.
NEWTON BICKNELL, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NICHOLSON, Esq., of Nicholson & Labatide.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson & Simpson.

HENRY V. CRUDEN,
President Secretary.

JULES P. ROUX, Assistant Resident Secretary.
CLARENCE F. LOW, Deputy Asst Resident Sec'y.

New Orleans, October 20, 1881. 60v6m

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward.
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $15 and upward
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
All guaranteed.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

New Orleans Pacific Railroad.

TRAINS WEST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
New Orleans, leave		8.00 A. M.
Algiers	7.00 A. M.	8.20
Gretna	7.35	8.55
Company's Canal	7.50	9.10
St. Charles	10.36	9.54
St. Johns	10.43	10.06
Vacherie	1.00 P. M.	10.55
St. James	1.15	10.56
Donaldsonville	2.50	11.25
Bayou Goula	4.13	12.21 P. M.
Plaquemine	5.15	12.56
West Baton Rouge, arrive	7.30	1.30

TRAINS EAST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
West Baton Rouge, leave	7.00 A. M.	2.30 P. M.
Plaquemine	8.07	3.14
Bayou Goula	9.10	3.57
Donaldsonville	10.11	4.20
St. James	12.16 M.	4.59
Vacherie	1.00 P. M.	5.37
St. John	2.16	6.47
St. Charles	2.43	6.57
Company's Canal	3.02	7.11
Gretna	6.42	7.26
Algiers	6.45	7.30
New Orleans, arrive		8.00

For Rates and information address

H. S. MORSE, Superintendent. M. R. SPELMAN, G. P. and T. Agt.

New Orleans, October 25, 1881.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.

By A. J. COOK,

Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.

THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being new it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on the best paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SULLIVAN & BULGER,

97 CAMP STREET.

Plumbers and Gas Fitters,

DEALERS IN

Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all kinds. Iron, Lead and Tarred Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges; also, different kinds of Gas Machines, for country use.

All Orders Promptly Attended to.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. JONES & Co., Nassau, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2000 "RECIPE BOOK." Sells at Sight. You can make your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House Ann Arbor, Mich.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, Jan. 16, 1882.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Sat.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	8¾	8¾
Ordinary	9¾	9¾
Good ordinary	10⅝	10⅝
Low middling	11⅛	11⅛
Middling	11⅝	11⅝
Good middling	11⅞	11⅞
Middling fair	12⅝	12⅝
Sales to-day	4,550 bales.
Receipts since our last	12,151 bales.
Receipts previously	1,959,868 bales
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	6¾ @	6⅞
Fully fair	7⅛	7⅛
Prime	7⅜	7⅜
Choice	7¾	7¾
Yellow clarified	8¼	8¼
White clarified	8¾	8¾
Powdered	—	—
Crushed	—	—
Molasses, in bbls, ₱ gallon:
Common	43	45
Fair	44	51
Prime	48	52
Choice	59	61
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	4¼	4¾
Fair	5¼	5⅝
Prime	6¼	6⅝
Choice	6¾	7

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	13	45
New York	—	—
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio, ordinary	9¾	9
Rio, fair	10¾	10¾
Rio, prime	11⅜	11¾
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	—
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands	14	14⅝
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl:
Choice K. D	4 35	4 50
Flour, ₱ bbl:
Superfine	4 50	4 75
XX	5 25	5 50
XXX	5 75	6 00
Choice XX	—	—
Choice fan	—	—
Fish:
Mackerel, No 1 in bbls	8 50	9 00
Half barrels	4 50	5 00
Kits	2	2 25
Mackerel, No 2 in bbls	7 50	8 00
Half bbls	4 00	4 50
Kits	70	77
Mackerel, No 3 in bbls	7 00	7 50
Half bbls	3 85	4 10
Kits	64	73
Codfish, ₱ lb	—	—
Herring, ₱ box	—	—
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Cod, straits	—	—
Cod, N F	—	—
Linseed, raw	57	58
Linseed, boiled	60	61
Cotton seed	50	54
Lard	85	97
	80	1 00
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia	—	—
Olive	—	2 25
Palm	—	70
Castile	—	2 60
Soda, ₱ lb	—	—
Starch, ₱ lb	—	8¼
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse	80	85
Fine	1 00	1 20

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	—	82
White	—	86
Mixed	—	81
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	—	57
Red rust-proof	—	80
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs:
Choice	—	1 25
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	—	26 00
Choice	—	27 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed	—	—
Clay	—	—

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	—	11
Shoulders	—	7¾
Sides, clear rib	—	10¾
Sides, clear	10¾	10¾
Hams, sugar-cured	11	12¾
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	19 00	20 00
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.:
Clear rib sides	9¾	9¾
Clear sides	9¾	9¾
Shoulders	6	6¾
Lard, ₱ lb.:
Choice, in kegs	—	12
Choice, in tierces	—	11¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl.:
Irish	3 35	4 15
Sweet	—	2 00
Onions, ₱ bbl	3 00	3 25
Apples, ₱ bbl	2 00	4 50
Cabbages, ₱ box	—	—
Sour Krout, ₱ bbl	—	10 00

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
India	—	—
Jute	—	—
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	—	15
Ties, ₱ bundle:
20 ties and buckles	—	1 50

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen:
Grown chickens	—	4 50
Young do	2 00	3 00
Ducks	—	2 50
Geese	—	4 00
Turkeys	12 00	13 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen:
Western	22	23
Southern	25	27
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon	—	—
Comb, ₱ lb	—	—
Pecans, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	9	17
Texas	—	—
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	—	—
Foreign, ₱ box	3 00	5 50
Wool, ₱ lb.:
Louisiana	22	23
Texas	—	—
Feathers, ₱ lb.:
Geese	—	—
Hides, ₱ lb.:
Country green	6	7
Dry salted	—	10
Dry flint	11½	12
Ox Horns, each	—	6
Tallow, ₱ lb	6	7
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton
In sacks	—	14 00
Meal	25 50	26 00
Oil cake	26 00	26 50
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	2 50	2 75
Molasses barrels	—	1 85
Half barrels	—	1 05
Kegs	—	70
Oak Staves, per 1000:
Kegs	—	60 00
Barrels	70 00	75 00
Extra claret	100 00	105 00
Extra hogshead	140 00	145 00
Extra pipes	190 00	195 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs	—	6
Medium	—	7¾
Good to fine	—	—
Low leaf	—	8
Medium	—	9¾
Good	—	10
Fine	—	12½
Selections	—	—

DYSPEPSIA CURED.

BALTIMORE, MD., Feb. 14, 1881.

I tried your valuable medicine Brown's Iron Bitters, for dyspepsia, indigestion, &c., and was cured by its use after three leading physicians of this city failed by their prescriptions to give me relief. After eating, before taking the Iron Bitters, I suffered with a full feeling about the breast, with headache all the time, bowels very irregular, and generally used up. At night, when I got home from work, I thought I could not last until the next morning. I now feel like a new man.

J. V. HOWSER.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 16.—The State Board of Health is kept unusually busy at present, wrestling with the small pox epidemic prevailing in Illinois. Cases have been reported to the board within six weeks from sixty-one points in the State, about forty of which are still infected, although the disease is fairly under control at most of the places. At Bradwood the authorities have refused to co-operate with the health officer. This disease appears at present to be spreading along the Mississippi river from Dubuque down, points of infection having been reported from twelve out of eighteen Mississippi river counties. A circular will at once be issued to steamboat officers requesting them to enforce the vaccination of all their hands. If this is not complied with, river towns will be directed to prevent those boats from landing which have not properly protected their crews by vaccination.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The purser of the steamship Andes, which arrived to-day from the West Indies, reports that small-pox is raging in Hayti.

The recent attempt at revolution proved a fiasco, Port-au-Prince, Jacmel and St. Marc still remain in a state of siege.

About sixty persons are imprisoned in these towns for revolutionary causes. In St. Marc two prisoners were shot by order of the President, both being relatives of the aspiring President, who is at present in Jamaica.

BOSTON, Jan. 11.—Harvard Overseers to-day voted to accept a fund, the income of which is to be devoted to the medical education of females in Harvard University.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 12.—A dispatch from Dallas, Texas, says: The largest single sale of cotton made in the United States was made to-day by M. D. Cleveland. It consisted of 5726 bales. The consideration, in round figures was $290,000. Major A. Ruttkay purchased it for cash.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Jan. 12.—The Langley cotton factory has declared a semi-annual dividend of $12 50 per share, making over 20 per cent. for the year.

GALVESTON, Jan. 13.—At 2 o'clock this afternoon a fire broke out in the cotton rooms of W. S. Moody & Co., at the northwest corner of Strand and Twenty-Second streets. The building was occupied by the Supreme Court rooms on the upper floor, Moody & Jemison, Grace & Co., J. P. Kindred and others on the second floor, and C. M. Pearce & Co., wholesale grocers, on the ground floor.

The flames spread rapidly, and at 3 P. M. the large wholesale dry goods establishment of Greenlove, Block & Co. was wrapped in flames. The fire crossed the street to the wholesale hardware establishment of E. S. Wood & Son, and everything indicated a repetition of the fire of 1875.

Moody & Jemison's building is valued at $120,000.

Greenlove, Block & Co. are reported to be insured for $400,000, and C. M. Pearce & Co. for the same amount.

The county library, valued at $25,000 is a total loss. The Supreme and Appellate court-room is a total loss. About one-third of the records were luckily not in the room at the time of the breaking out of the fire, and they are safe.

The fire at 3:30 P. M. was under control, J. M. Brown & Co.'s establishment was saved. The fire in Asterman's building was extinguished with slight loss. Moody & Jemison's building and two large buildings adjoining were burned to the ground.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 13.—It has been raining for the past week, and the Cumberland river is rising rapidly. It has risen five feet within the last 24 hours. The back water has driven 200 families from their houses, and 100 acres of ground within the city are under water. Mills and factories have been compelled to close. It is still raining and more damage is expected.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—The express from Chicago to New York reached Albany twenty-three minutes late, yesterday afternoon.

Owing to the great crowd of legislators and others who desired to leave the Capitol, fifteen additional cars were put on, eight of them being palace coaches. Two extra engines were also attached and the train got under way.

It was filled with men of note and prominence of both the Republican and Democratic parties, including almost the entire New York City, Brooklyn, Long Island and Staten Island delegations in both houses of the Legislature, which had adjourned over till Monday.

At Spuyten Duyvil the train became disabled, and owing apparently to failure on the part of the rear flagman, the engineer of the Tarrytown special, which followed at an interval of a few minutes, knew nothing of the danger until he was almost upon the disabled train, and running at high speed.

The two rear drawing-room cars were telescoped and immediately caught fire from overturned stoves and lamps. Some of the passengers were caught in the wreck and burned to death.

The wounded were promptly cared for and scattered among the houses in the vicinity and hospitals. About forty were more or less injured. Accounts vary as to the number of killed. The recognized dead are Senator Webster Wagner, E. L. Ransom, of the Hoffman House; Park Valentine, of Bennington, Vt., and wife; Oliver B. Kelly, of Pennsylvania; a man supposed to be Rev. F. Marchall—a book of sermons bearing this name being found in his effects; Miss Maud Brown, of New York.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 14.—River rising slowly and now stands 49 feet on gauge. Steamer Fillo arrived from Upper Cumberland at 6 P. M., and reports a rise of 2 feet at midnight. So far but little lumber has floated away from Nashville mills, yet it is feared the greatest damage will be to the lumber interests. About 300 families so far have been forced to abandon their homes in the lower portions of Nashville. The race course is completely submerged.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—Secretary Hunt sent the following cablegram this evening to Lieut. Danenhover and Chief Melville, of the Jeannette at Irkutsk, through Mr. Hoffman, at St. Petersburg:

"Remain on the ground until the remainder of the expedition is found. Help the search by every means in your power."

EL PASO, Texas, Jan. 14.—Reports of small-pox in this place have been greatly exagerated. The truth is that three cases have been imported for treatment by leading physicians who have located here.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 14.—Col. Wm. H. Sparks, one of the most widely known men in Georgia, died suddenly at Marietta last night of paralysis of the heart.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 16.—A joint resolution passed the House of Delegates to-day providing for the appointment of a committee to arrange for a private hospital for the members of the General Assembly and attachees thereof, within the city limits, in case of attack from small-pox.

The Senate refused to concur by a close vote, whereupon Delegate Frazier declared his intention to offer to-morrow a resolution removing the session of the General assembly from this city to Norfolk city.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The postmaster at Wilmington, Ohio, writes to the Postoffice Department that a child died at that place, a few days ago, from what was supposed at the time to be chicken-pox. The funeral was largely attended, and, a consequence, there are over fifty cases of virulent small-pox in the town.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 16.—Pittsburg and Alleghany City, report thirty new cases of small-pox in the past forty-eight hours—fifteen in each city. There was one death.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—Court opened at 10:10 this morning. Mr. Scoville began his address to the jury by confessing his unfamiliarity with the modes of practice in criminal cases, which had resulted in his making numerous mistakes which had undoubtedly militated against the prisoner. He desired, however, publicly to acknowledge and return thanks for the assistance he had received from members of the bar here and in other parts of the country—assistance cheerfully and voluntarily rendered—and which had very materially aided him in conducting the defense.

FOREIGN.

BRIDGETOWN, Dec. 26.—Weather and crops continue favorable. The health of the island is improving. Ten cases of yellow fever are reported in the interior, and one in the city.

SANTO DOMINGO, Dec. 27.—An American war steamer is quietly surveying Samana Bay.

Nearly 4,000 hogshead of sugar are ready and awaiting shipment.

PUERTO PLATA, Dec. 28.—The revolutionary movement at Santiago is reported to have been quelled. President Merino continues at Puerto Plata.

According to reliable estimates the tobacco crop will reach 125,000 seroons.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Dec. 20.—The President has declared Port-au-Prince, St. Marlo and Jacmel in a state of seige. The previously-reported rising is represented as quelled, but there is resistance brooding in secret.

Incendiary fires have destroyed three houses at Puerto Plata, two at Gonaives, one at Aux Cayos and three at Saltron.

DUBLIN, Jan. 10.—The gross total of outrages committed in Ireland in December is 574. The largest number occurred in Munster county.

Kings county has been proclaimed.

The seizure of arms in Cork to-day is but the beginning of more extensive captures.

CORK, Jan. 10.—A large party of police proceeded to-day to the north side of the city where they discovered a case, buried six feet under the ground, which contained a large number of Snyder rifles, a quantity of dynamite, gun cotton and ammunition.

ROME, Jan. 11.—At a banquet given in honor of veteran soldiers, the Mayor of this city declared that the people of Rome would rather see the city laid in ashes than again be subjected to papal domination.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The St. Petersburg Navoevremyea says: The imperial ukase in regard to peasants' lands provides that after the end of 1882 the crown will transfer to the peasants that portion of their emancipation, and in consideration of annual payments which they have been unable to redeem or compromise, the crown will pay to the land owners eighty per cent. of the taxable value of the land so transferred.

DUBLIN, Jan. 12.—A force of 200 military and constabulary have gone to Edinberry county Kings, to protect persons engaged in carting oats bought at sheriffs' sale. A mob there broke up the roads, threw trees across them and destroyed four bridges. A force of 350 police and military have evicted six families at Teeonacreen, near Ballyghadereen.

ROME, Jan. 10.—A dispatch pated from Reme to the Standard says: The Pope declined to comply with the law requiring him to fill up a census paper, but Monsigneret filled up the return, showing that there are 500 persons living in the Vatican, one-third of whom are females.

TRIPOLI, Jan. 13.—Three French missionaries have been murdered near Oasis of Ghadames, in the Desert of Sahara. The chief of the assassins is said to be the Caid of Ghadames, who was concerned in the massacre of the French exploring expedition under Col. Flatters, near Assimu, in February last year.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—The Temps states that Gambetta's bill, revising the constitution, includes an article providing for the discontinuance of public prayers at the opening of the Legislature.

PETERSBURG, Jan. 16.—A special meeting of the City Council was held this afternoon to take steps looking to the protection of the city from small-pox. In the adjacent county a short distance from Petersburg, there are two or three cases of the disease.

—Every adult in one of the Micronesian Islands, where a few years ago all were idolsters, is, by profession, a Christian.

OH ISN'T SHE A BEAUTY!

She is the personification of all that's lovely. Her disposition is amiable; her mind cultured; her heart kind and pure—all because her health was restored from using Brown's Iron Bitters.—Comments of a leading physician on a patient he prescribed Brown's Iron Bitters for. All ladies should use it.—Journal.

Quarterly Conferences.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WINONA DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Zilpha	Feb. 18, 19
French Camps	25, 26
Kosciusko circuit	Mar. 3
Kosciusko and Durant	4, 5
Newport	11, 12
Attala	18, 19
Richland	25, 26
Lexington	30
Winona and Valden	Apr. 1, 2
West	8, 9
Whitna circuit	13
Walthall	15, 16
Carrollton	22, 23
Black Hawk	29, 30
Minter City	May 6, 7

Preachers on French Camp and Zilpha will please inform me where their Quarterly Conferences will be held. My address is Durant, Miss.

3 THOS. Y. RAMSEY, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

OPELOUSAS DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Washington	Jan. 21, 22
Plaquemine Brulee and Kimball's chapel	28, 29
Lake Charles	Feb. 4, 5
Abbeville	11, 12
Sugartown	18, 19
Opelousas	25, 26
Pattersonville and Morgan City	Mar. 4, 5
New Iberia	11, 12
Franklin	18, 19
Vermillionville	25, 26
Calcasieu mission	Apr. 1, 2
Grand Chenier	8, 9

3 LEWIS A. REED, P. E.

SHREVEPORT DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Coushatta, at Coushatta	Jan. 21, 22
Springville, at Armistead chapel	28, 29
Logansport	Feb. 4, 5
Caddo, at Liberty	11, 12
Mouringsport	18, 19
North Bossier, at Concord	25, 26
South Bossier, at Bellvue	Mar. 4, 5
Shreveport	11, 12
Mansfield	18, 19
Natchitoches, at Natchitoches	25, 26
Many, at New Hope	Apr. 1, 2
Anacoco, at Holy Grove	8, 9
Sabine, Bayou Sen	15, 16
Pleasant Hill	22, 23

District Stewards' meeting will be held at Shreveport, March 11, A. D. 1882.

3 T. H. M'LENDON, P. E.

DELHI DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Waterproof, at Waterproof	Jan. 21, 22
Tensas, at Jordan Chapel	28, 29
Monroe, at Monroe	Feb. 4, 5
Trenton, at Trenton	11, 12
Lake Providence, at Lake Providence	18, 19
Wilmsboro, at Wilmsboro	25, 26
Delhi, at Delhi	Mar. 4, 5
Rayville, at Rayville	11, 12
Oak Ridge, at Prairie	18, 19
Lind Grove, at Bartholomew	25, 26
Bastrop, at Bastrop	Apr. 1, 2
Floyd, at Floyd	8, 9

The District Stewards' meeting is to be held at Monroe, February 4. The District Stewards are Dr. A. S. Helmick, J. R. Edwards, D. S. Travis, P. A. E. Williams, G. H. Johnson, Joseph Gorton, A. J. Gibson, H. C Cuerle, F. E. Bateman, J. M. Stafford, I. C. Standifer and Dr. J. W. Baker.

2 B. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

JACKSON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Canton	Jan. 21, 22
Jackson	28, 29
Edwards	11, 15
Rhd's mission	17, 18
Bolton	21, 22
Madison, at Wesley	25, 26
Soule Chapel	Feb. 4, 5
Sharon, at Union	11, 12
Benton	18, 19
Silver City	25, 26
Yazoo City	Mar. 4, 5
Hoover	11, 12
Mt. Carmel	18, 19

1 W. B. C. BUNNICUTT, P. E.

BRANDON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Marvin circuit, at Wesleyand	Jan. 7, 8
Cato circuit, at Clear Creek	14, 15
Terry circuit, at Pokeville	21, 22
Raleigh circuit, at Raleigh	28, 29
Brandon station	Feb. 4, 5
Pisgah circuit, at Holly Basle	11, 12
Lake circuit, at Lake	18, 19
Walnut Grove circuit, at Hillsboro	25, 26
Carthage circuit, at Goshen	Mar. 4, 5
Newton circuit, at Newton	11, 12
Forest circuit, at Grange Hall	18, 19
Beech Springs mission, at Mill Dale	25, 26
Decatur mission, at Mt. Hebron	Apr. 1, 2
Philadelphia mission, at Philadelphia	8, 9
Ludlow mission, at Contrell	15, 16

District Stewards will meet at Meridian, on Friday, February 3.

1 J. M. HANN, P. E.

WOODVILLE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Amite City	Jan. 7, 8
Clinton	14, 15
East Feliciana	21, 22
Ponchitoula, at Ponchitoula	28, 29
St. Helena	Feb. 4, 5
Amite	11, 12
Jackson	18, 19
Elpkins and Port Hudson	25, 26
Bayou Sara	Mar. 4, 5
Livingstone	11, 12
East Baton Rauge	18, 19
Wilkinson	25, 26
Woodville	Apr. 1, 2
North Wilkinson	8, 9

Address, Greensboro, La. Pastors, by card, inform Presiding Elder of place for First Quarterly Meeting.

35 D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Crystal Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Wesson and Beauregard, at Wesson	7, 8
Hazlehurst	14, 15
Brandywine, at Beloheth	21, 22
Summit, at Summit	28, 29
McComb and Magnolia, at Magnolia	Feb. 4, 5
Providence, at Bahala	11, 12
Bayou Pierre, at Pleasant Ridge	18, 19
Adams and Bogue Chitto at Adams	25, 26
Scotland at Bethesda	Mar. 4, 5
Spring Ridge, at Forrest Hill	11, 12
Terry, at Pleasant Grove	18, 19
Brookhaven	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet on Hazlehurst, January 14, 1882.

52 J. A. B. JONES, P. E.

VICKSBURG DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Natchez	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Vicksburg	Jan. 7, 8
Warren circuit, at Bovina	14, 15
Port Gibson	21, 22
Rocky Springs, at Grand Gulf	28, 29
Cayoga, at Utica	Feb. 4, 5
Fayette circuit, at Fayette	11, 12
Meadville, at Oak Grove	18, 19
Kingston	25, 26
Clover Hill, at Mayerville	Mar. 4, 5
Rolling Fork, at Rolling Fork	11, 12
Mt. Olivet at Satartia	18, 19
	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in the Methodist Church at Port Gibson, January 28, at 10 o'clock A. M.

52 R. S. WOODWARD, P. E.

SEASHORE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Ocean Springs ct., at Ocean Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
East Pascagoulia, at Zino	Jan. 6
Moss Point, at Moss Point	7, 8
West Pascagoula, at Oak Grove	14, 15
Handsboro, at Scot's Station	20
Pearlington, at Pearlington	21, 22
Franklington, at Franklington	26
Covington, at Covington	28, 29
Whittington, at Whittington	Feb. 4, 5
Spring Cottage, at Stewarts	11, 12
China Grove, at Waterholes	18, 19
Mt. Carmel, at Mt. Zion	25, 26
Westville, at Pleasant Hill	Mar. 4, 5
Bethel, at Hebron	11, 12
Enon, at Soule Chapel	18, 19

52 T. S. WEST, P. E.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

PENSACOLA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Pensacola	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Warrington	Jan. 1, 2
Millview and Ross Point, at Millview	7, 8
Powellton, at Powellton	14, 15
Milton	21, 22
Stockton, at Stockton	28, 29
Perdido mission, at High Pine	Feb. 1
Pollard, at Pollard	4, 5
Evergreen, at Belleville	11, 12
Repton, at Belleville	17, 12
Monroeville, at Liberty	18, 19
Herbert mission, at Union Camp Ground	25, 26
Georgiana, at Wesley Chapel	Mar. 4, 5
Sepulga, at Bethel	11, 12
Monterey, at Monterey	18, 19

Yellow River mission. We have an appropriation of seventy-five dollars for this work, and wish to employ a local preacher. Address me at Citronelle, Alabama.

Pastors will please urge their official members to be present at their first quarterly conferences.

52 S. H. COX, P. E.

GREENSBORO DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Greensboro station	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Newberne circuit, at Newberne, Wed'y	Jan. 4
Greensboro ct., at Union Chapel, Friday	6
Havana circuit, at Havana	7, 8
Green circuit, at Salem, Wednesday	11
Gainsville circuit, at Gainsville	11, 15
Belmont circuit, at Wesley Chapel, Friday	20
Livingstone and Knaw, at Livingstone	21, 22
Cuba circuit, at York, Tuesday	24
Gaston circuit, at Sharon, Thursday	26
Butler and Mt. Sterling	28, 29
Choctaw circuit, at Oak Grove, Tuesday	31
Forkland circuit, at Forkland	Feb. 4, 5
Demopolis station, Wednesday	8

DEAR BRETHREN: In order that we may get all to work as soon as possible, I have put many of the above appointments in the week. I do not expect, in the end, to do you any the less service. Let us put everything into working order at once.

51 H. URQUHART, P. E.

MONTGOMERY DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Hurtville circuit, at Seale	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Elmore circuit, at Oak Valley	7, 8
Tallassee station	9
Tuskegee circuit at Warrior Stand	14, 15
Tuskegee station	16
Salem circuit, at Pierce Chapel	21, 22
Auburn station	23
Crawford circuit, at Mt. Zion	28, 29
Montgomery station	30
Tallapoosa mission, at Rock Springs	Feb. 4, 5
Lanchatooka circuit, at Notasulga	9
Opelika station	10, 11
Franklin mission, at St. John	18, 19
	25, 26

51 T. F. MANGUM, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SINGER — OBELISK

THE GENUINE SINGER MACHINE HAS BEEN AWARDED THE FIRST PRIZE OVER ALL COMPETITORS MORE THAN 200 TIMES

HIEROGLYPHICS THAT EVERY ONE CAN UNDERSTAND

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

85 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

$5 to $20 per day at Home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co. Portland, Maine.

PHILIP WERLEIN,

135 CANAL STREET,

The Leading Southern Piano House.

SEND FOR CATALOGUES. Every Instrument Warranted MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

PIANOS.
CHICKERING,
MATHUSHEK,
HALE.

ORGANS.
ESTEY,
MASON & HAMLIN,
STERLING.

Lowest Prices, Most Liberal Terms.

No. 56 USE St. Charles St.

A WONDERFUL and SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, AND possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, as when first you use them. They have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European oculists claim that the MEDICATED GLASSES have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that is usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.
2. The chemicals make the glasses hard; they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first.
3. The chemicals keep the glasses cold, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.
4. With these glasses you can read, write or sew all night, the light having no effect on the eye, with no distressing or tiresome sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS—NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED.

The MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the frame H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED.

Dealers Supplied Wholesale at Liberal Discount.

ALL EYES SUITED. Persons residing at a distance who may wish to procure these spectacles can send for a circular containing description, prices, etc., and directions for insuring a perfect fit, and have them sent by mail, by addressing

HERC. HOUSAH,

CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,

56 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing mention this paper.

DIUTURNITY:

A COSMICAL ESSAY,

By REV. R. ABBEY.

Concerning the World's Present Infancy, Its Immense Future, Its Undiscovered Treasures, Its Indestructibility, The Wisdom of Providence, The Office of Science, The Scope of Christianity, The Folly of a Millenium, The Non-human Second Coming of Christ, and The Glorious Destiny of Mankind.

"No ordinary ability is displayed. We have read the whole book with unflagging interest. It is salable, readable and remarkable."—N. Y. Methodist.

"One of the most remarkable books we ever read."—Christian Advocate, Nashville.

"The author is a man of mature and scholarly mind."—American Christian Review.

"An entirely original argument. Readable and remarkable."—Missouri Presbyterian Herald.

"Diuturnity is the name of the book of the age."—Gospel Herald.

"Clear thinking, wonderful originality. Vast amount of information."—Home Monthly.

Highly commended by more than a hundred writers. Price, $1 50.

Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville,
" G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS.

Dealers in all kinds of

LUMBER, SHINGLES, &C.

AND IN

ALABAMA COAL.

Shipments made from either Mobile or New Orleans or from Mills or Mines direct.

WANTED.—White Oak Staves, Red Cedar and Black Walnut logs, received at either New Orleans or Mobile. Highest cash price paid.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

TUERK'S
POSITIVE ROTARY
HYDRAULIC MOTOR.

For running all kinds of Machinery by

Water Power.

Send for Circular and Price List to
G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

KNABE

PIANOFORTES.
UNEQUALED IN
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability.
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
Nos. 204 and 300 West Baltimore St., Baltimore
No. 112 Fifth Avenue New York.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary, Nightmare, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by F. FREDERICKSON, Wholesale and Retail Druggist, New Orleans. Orders by mail at regular price.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 28.—NO. 4. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, 1882. WHOLE NO. 1390.

PUBLISHED FOR THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.
Ministers and widows of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. JAMES A. GODBEREY.
REV. W. L. B. BUSNICETT.
REV. G. B. CALLOWAY.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. FELIX R. HILL.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

EVENTIDE.

"Still, O heart"

Make the sunset fires
Weave all the west with red and gold,
And underfoot heath the purple glow
Fade to dull gray, whose color told
Nought, save the quivering wish we felt there.

O aching heart!

Soft is the air
And a light breeze rustles to the ground
To fan the calm around
The gentle wakeful heart, into thy nest:
The world is full of flowers even yet;
Let not thy dewy eyes, and the sad rest
Of all the plaints at day it could not get;
Day is for care.

Now, calm thy God,
Thy fearful forms of thing
Thy silly sorrowing;
Century the grass is ever green
Above the graves of dead men, friendships changed, or known, a wisp
Of hope, and all the soul's dark wings
Lie still in the sod.

The thought of night,
Like to us like a peach of primrose tone,
Not confused, like the sweet O'Rune
Of pure thought expressed, but is all of fears.
Before the forest there is no night,
But a stream by the sun that bears
Thanks for the light.

Chamber's Journal.

Kentucky Correspondence.

For the past few weeks there has been quite a sensation in this State, on account of the Blackburn-Burbridge imbroglio. Capt. Blackburn—the gallant and gifted Kentuckian who represents Mr. Clay's old district in the Federal Congress; Gen. Burbridge, before the war, resided in Southern Kentucky and within a few miles of this place. He is well known here. As a private citizen he seemed to be a gentleman; but, when military Governor of Kentucky, he caused the State to be dotted with the graves of her own sons, both citizens and soldiers, who were shot by his order in retaliation for the crimes of guerrillas. For this butchery he is exceedingly odious to the people of all parties and of both sides during the war, and not because he is a Federal general, as he would make it appear; and it is for this cause that Capt. Blackburn rejected him and his applicant for office recommended by him. This general statement embodies the facts in the case. Gen. Burbridge has not made his home among us since the war. There is a righteous retribution that often overtakes transgressors in this world. "Some men's sins are open beforehand and go to judgment."

In looking over your Conference reports I was pleased to see that our B. F. Alexander is still in the field with the harness on, and is honored according to his high standing among you. He is of noble lineage, and his family is historic in Methodism. I was once in charge of the circuit where the old Alexander homestead is located, and knew his father and mother and brothers and sisters all excellent people. His brother, W. F. Alexander, a devout and useful minister, is a member of our Conference. James Asbury Ivey is another one of our men. I am sorry that you have him in a side pocket. There is so much fine work in him that it ought to be got out. Well, when I am Bishop, as Dr. McAnally says, "we shall see what we shall see."

Dr. Cottrell, the racy writer and corresponding editor of the Central Methodist, is a grandfather! He has an editorial on the subject in his paper. The funny part is, that he misconstrued the announcement and thought he had twin granddaughters, and, as his eye swept adown the pages and he saw his seed numerous as the sands of the sea, he was so much elated that he told every man and woman he met, both old and young. Bowling Green could scarcely hold him. Imagine his disgust when his wife discovered there was but one. He left the city immediately and sought for comfort in visiting the poor over in Deluded. Let your eye be single, my brother, and your whole body shall be full of light. We both sorrow and rejoice with him.

The other Louisville Conference editor of the same paper has fallen into a more serious error in gloryling. He says of his paper: "It's readers do not hesitate to pronounce it, as a religious family paper, superior to any published in this latitude." In what latitude, pray, is the Central Methodist located? I read the Central Methodist and like it. There is a place for it, and it fills its place. It is very generally believed that the Christian Advocate, published at Nashville, is a good religious paper. In the Central, of January 14, there is an extract from a letter of one C. McPherson, published in the Old Path Guide, a Campbellite periodical located in Louisville, Ky., in which our Bishop Kavanaugh is made the butt of ridicule for having related, in his own humorous way, a dream about catching two fish. Does not Mr. McPherson know that fish stories are not to be received as gospel truth? I once heard the Bishop relate the same dream, and thought he introduced it merely to spice his address by the humorous coincidence. In the heart of this "old man eloquent" there is a bubbling fountain of humor, but all men do not understand him. He is also a good fisherman—catching white and black fish, and, occasionally, a green one. The reply of editor Noland is justly scathing:

Some of our church papers have been very infelicitous in their notices of Dr. McFerrin's London speech concerning the multiplication of church papers. Whether the speech was judicious, or not, no good is likely to result to these papers from their attacks upon the Publishing House located at Nashville. Dr. McFerrin is only our agent; the house is ours. But the good doctor is a dangerous man to attack. He is usually in the right, and, on a square issue, has never been known to go under. It is, sometimes easier to lay hold of a man than it is afterward to loose him and let him go!

Our Legislature has made another effort to establish the whipping-post for petty larceny, but the bill has again failed. Bishop Kavanaugh says of that class of rascals, after presenting some cogent reasons: "I think we had better lick 'em a little."

A bill has just passed the lower house of our State Legislature to take from juries the alternative of hanging murderers, or sending them to the penitentiary for life. The discussion on the subject was able, and the expression of sentiment had the ring of the old time manhood. The Legislature now says that murderers shall be hung. That is right. Your correspondent has no sympathy with that worldly sentimentalism that lifts up its hands, in holy horror, at the thought of capital punishment. "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed." Let it be so, and murder will decrease. There has been a fearful increase of murder since the law allowing the alternative has been upon our statute books. Rev. Geo. C. Barnes, our eccentric Kentucky evangelist, is holding a series of meetings in Louisville. He is a nondescript. No one doubts his piety, but his methods and teachings are not generally endorsed by the orthodox. His pink cottage prayer-cure establishment has proven a failure. Crowds attend his ministry, and, no doubt, some are truly converted. But, whether he does more harm or good, it would be difficult to say.

The weather during the past month has been gloomy.

VERNON.

From Georgia.

MR. EDITOR: The fulfillment of my promise, made in November to send you a letter from the Empire State, has been long delayed. Did you ever have to provide for an Annual Conference, three hundred strong, including visitors from other Conferences, and the preachers' wives? If so, you know how to envy me the delightful duty which fell to my lot, last month, as the host of the North Georgia Conference at Athens. It is indeed a great luxury, rarely enjoyed, to have the pleasure of obliging five persons at once. One thing, however, ought to be said, and remembered in some directions: not one out of so large a number of brethren brought a complaint to our ears, nor made a request to be changed. Every man seemed to be satisfied that he had the best home in the city. If it was not so in fact, our brethren are certainly worthy the palm for gentlemanly politeness and true Christian courtesy. But is it not the nature of the religion of Christ to refine the feelings, to develop the graces of a gentleman, and to cause a man to be contented in whatever state he finds himself? Did you ever see a preacher who could out-growl a bear; who was always dissatisfied and constantly finding fault with everything which a kind and cheerful hospitality had provided for his comfort? Sometimes! Well, let us thank God, that for the good of the cause of Christ, it is not often.

Our Conference was opened by the election of Dr. Weyman H. Potter to preside over its deliberations in the absence of Bishop McTyeire, who had been detained by unavoidable schedules. This was the third time in which the Conference had so honored him. It was a choice in which eminent fitness for the position was the controlling influence, for have a number of older brethren who are held in honor and affection by the Conference. He also led the General Conference delegation by a majority of forty, the most flattering vote ever cast in our body. Whether this is a straw to "tell which way the wind blows" is not for me to say. Our session was a most delightful one, considering the great hurry with which the business was transacted. Bishop McTyeire has been with us three years out of four. At our Conference, three years ago, Bishop McTyeire moved more than two-thirds of the preachers; last winter almost as many; and at this session, to be exact, 111 out of 178. We are all loyal itinerants here; we do not take to the Virginia idea of "indefinite extention," nor to any extension beyond a man's usefulness; but the general impression, so far as I have been able to catch it from the preachers, prevails that the thing has been overdone. Some brethren, who have been poorly supported, have been moved entirely across the State, and seriously involved thereby, if not in debt, as the only other alternative, in suffering and privation. Much waste of money and suffering could be avoided by a more earnest attempt to shorten the distance of the moves of our brethren. Dissatisfaction and complaint in regard to appointments has greatly increased among us these last three years, and growing, we believe, not out of any intentional wrong on the part of the Bishops or the cabinet; but, inevitably, out of the great hurry with which our sessions have been held, for the accommodation of the Bishops, who are on double duty. The desire, therefore, among us here in Georgia is for a strong episcopal college. We desire the election of at least six new Bishops. Whatever may be the official opinion among us, this is the sentiment among the preachers. Owing to the necessity at our Conference, for two sessions a day, Bishop McTyeire was able to hold but three meetings of the cabinet, which was intrusted with the stationing of nearly 200 men. This is, of course, the most important business of an Annual Conference; and yet it received but a few hours' attention from the Bishop and presiding elders, all of whom were worn down with an almost continuous session of the Conference running through the entire day. It must have taken almost, if not quite, half the time of the cabinet to do its clerical work, leaving as the utmost limit not more than ten hours in which to discuss the appointments of 200 men, to say nothing of the time spent in prayer for divine direction. This would be three minutes to the man. It is nothing against the Christian consecration, or loyalty to the church of brethren, that they should be unwilling to have their wives and children thrown across a great State. They are perfectly willing to go wherever their chief officers in their "godly judgment" appoint; but they insist that time, both for careful consideration and prayer is necessary in order to "godly judgment." At least, two sessions a day, for a week is necessary to properly station the preachers of a large Conference. To do this we must have a strong episcopal college, giving the Bishops plenty of time. We need have no fears in regard to their support. Not only will the church meet every demand upon her in carrying out any advanced aggressive movement; but this matter is in the hands of the preachers who are personally to receive the benefit of the painstaking which requires more men, and they will see that every dollar of the assessment is met. I had intended to tell you something of our educational and industrial interests, but can not now. Let me say, however, a word in regard to our local church affairs here. This is one of the many beautiful little cities for which Georgia is noted, having a population of 2,600. We have a beautiful church, not quite finished, but which is in use, costing up to the present about $17,000. We have a membership of nearly 300, and the church allows and pays her pastor an adequate salary. There are signs of revival, and we confidently look for a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. How I should like to be at Seashore again. The memory of my visit is a constant source of pleasure. Nowhere, North or South, have I found a type of Methodism that pleased me more than that of your encampment upon the gulf, and of your Crescent City. It is Jesus Christ dwelling in the church, giving the grace of boldness unto bearing testimony to his saving strength, which constitutes the great element of religious power. Verily, not only your brethren, but also your Christian women know how to speak in the name of their Lord and King. May the great Head of the church increase this gift among us everywhere.

W. W. WADSWORTH.

NEWNAN, GA., Jan. 18, 1882.

The Tower of London—Spurgeon.

The Woman's Missionary Advocate, for January, is a capital number. Mrs. J. W. Lambuth, missionary to China, is contributing some excellent letters to this valuable monthly. We give below an extract from her letter, in the January number, in which we have a glimpse of the Tower of London and of a service at Mr. Spurgeon's tabernacle. It will be remembered that Bro. and Sister Lambuth visited London on their return to China:

We passed on and up an ancient stairway, under which the youthful sons of Edward IV. were thrown after being smothered. The doorway is no longer opened, but you can see the frame and size all the same. At the top of the stairs is St. John's Chapel, reported to have been one of the finest and most perfect specimens of Norman architecture found in England. It once had rare and beautiful furnishments, but they are all gone, and you see only the style of building, and sit for a few moments to gather breath for another climbing. Beyond this we wandered from one room to another, filled and overfilled with small arms enough to equip, it seemed to me, a world for battle. Away, almost out of sight in the darkness, was a Norman fireplace, only discovered a few years since, but so nearly like the large family fireplaces we used to see in our childhood days that some of us reckoned that we must have descended from the nation that invented them. The arrangement of the guns and pistols is truly artistic, and helps the visitor to think of stars and flowers more than of war and shedding blood. We went down into a long, dark passage, with light only from an upper window at the beginning, growing darker and darker to the end, where a guard sat in charge of a long room beyond him, into which we went—a dungeon—the very one where so many Jews were confined, after being thrown down twenty feet through an iron grating. "How dreadful it seemed just to look in; but, horror of horrors, to be thrown into the dark, damp, and then filthy place to die! No one loves to linger in such places, and we were soon retracing our steps, scarcely saying a word until quite out into the open air, with the blue heaven above us. We then went across to St. Peter's Church, in front of which Lady Jane Grey was beheaded. Her body is said to have been buried within the church where now at any rate it rests in quiet and in peace. In the Beauchamp Tower, near by, we saw the cells where many unfortunate persons were imprisoned, and in several places we traced the writing of some who suffered and died for small offenses. Lady Jane Grey here wrote on Latin:

"Married, to-day—to-morrow fate thy friend resigns.
My lot to-day to-morrow may be thine."

The officer in charge pointed out the cells wherein those condemned to die were kept, and told us that the cold, bare stone floor was bed by night as well as chair by day, and the victims, once in, never came out until ready for the block. The only spot free from signs of terror in the twelve acres is the tower where the crown-jewels are kept. It is not a cheerful, bright place, but you see no mark of horror; and under glass, protected by bars and guards, lie the crowns and scepters of the royal heads and hands of Britain. The crown of Queen Victoria is truly superb—a cap of purple, inclosed in hoops of silver, surmounted by a ball and cross of diamonds. In the center of the cross is the inestimable sapphire, and in front of the crown is the heart-shaped ruby said to have been worn by the Black Prince. There are several other crowns, each one beautiful. There are six scepters and three swords, all sparkling with beauty; also the coronation bracelets, anointing vessel and spoon, a gold salt-cellar, a baptismal font used at the baptism of the royal children, various dishes and gold articles used at the coronation; also a beautiful service of sacramental plate, used at the same ceremony; an elegant wine-fountain is also among this rare collection. We saw, admired, and came away, rejoicing that the occasion for such scenes as once were beheld here are now known only as of the past, and that to-day Great Britain's queen is a happy Christian mother, the loved and admired of all people and of every nation. May God be pleased to give her peace and harmony in all her domains, and save her at last, with all her loved and loving, in the mansions where we may all join in giving praise, and honor and glory to the Lamb!

The next point of interest to us in London was the tabernacle of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and thither we went—a long distance, and a little late. We found the preacher engaged in prayer, and the congregation seated. We went in very quietly, up to the street end of the second gallery, stood for a few moments looking and listening, and then took seats kindly offered by a stranger. There were several thousand people present, and as I looked upon them I wondered. The preacher read a hymn, the chorister stepped forward and began to sing, then the assembly stood, and as with one voice sang—O so beautifully that my next thought was, Shall we ever hear letter singing than this? The Scripture lesson was read, another hymn, and then the text—the subject being Noah's entering the ark, and the chief points were, "Shut in" and "Shut out." All eyes turned upon the speaker, who addressed his audience without manuscript. Every ear heard, many hearts beat with joy, many tears fell, some faces gave signs of pain, and not a few darts pierced the hearts of sinners. We were not yet satisfied, and returned for the night service; arrived one hour before the time, but found every foot of ground covered by waiting people. We wanted to be sure of a place near the preacher this time, and took a stand near one of the four doors, and, while waiting for them to be opened, had time to notice the people, and hear some of their conversation. One a soldier fell to talking with us, and asked how it was that the preacher knew him to be a soldier and a sinner. Said he: "The reverend gentleman looked right at me, told me how vile I was, and what my fate would be if I did not turn." He added, also: "My father was a good man, a Christian; he was taken, and I am left. How is that?" I have been so wicked that God will have nothing to do with me, but I mean to find out to-night if I can." This the poor man went on until the door opened, and the pressing crowd parted us. It may be he was shown the way to forgiveness that night. There must have been a thousand or more persons present that night all paying close attention—not a whisper, not a smile, not a sign of interest in anything but what the preacher was saying. We went once again to hear this great preacher, and this time found a way to enter the church before the crowd was admitted. A gate warden came to a side entrance, with his pockets filled with small envelopes. If you put a small contribution into one of these, and drop the same into an alms-box near by the church you can go quietly in, and be seated some time before the exercises begin. This we did, and, with friends from the South, whom we met unexpectedly that day, listened to a most profitable sermon, from John xiv. The house was crowded, and many more had to go away. After the sermon came the administration of the Lord's Supper to at least four thousand people. A long table was spread with snow-white linen cloth, and upon it were plates filled with sliced bread, goblets and tankards of wine. The Rev. Mr. Spurgeon sat at the center, surrounded by his elders. He gave thanks; then the elders assisted him in breaking the bread, after which they distributed it to the congregation, each communicant first exhibiting a ticket to show that application had been made to join in the service. The wife was likewise distributed. Then a collection for the poor was taken. While the congregation sang a hymn, the pastor gave the right hand of fellowship to fifty or more persons, who sat behind the elders on a raised platform, thus taking them into the circle and there were many more to come in on another Sabbath. It was good to be there on that occasion; and, as we shook hands with the preacher, and were gladly welcomed, it touched our hearts, and made us long for the glad time when all nations shall gather round the great white throne in heaven, and there rejoice in being welcomed home by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Talmage on Gambling.

On Sunday last, at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, Mr. Talmage resumed the series of sermons on the plagues of New York and Brooklyn, which were interrupted by the Christmas and New Year's celebrations. His subject was "Stock-gambling," and his remarks were based on Amos iii. 12: "As the shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs or a piece of an ear, so shall the children of Israel be taken out that dwell in Samaria."

The lion of stock gambling, said Mr. Talmage, is abroad to day, devouring the Lord's sheep. It takes either body, mind or soul, and in any case there are only fragments left. It is the business of every shepherd to smite back the blow, and if there is nothing but an ear of the victim left, to address that. There has not been, during my memory, any time when more morals and money were being devoured by stock-gambling than now. Never were there so many who would take trust funds and swamp them in Wall street. Widows and orphans, seamstresses, clerks on small salaries, and even clergymen, put their all into speculation and take out nothing. Seductive circulars are drawn, warning people against infamous schemes, and accompanied by a statement of a practical enterprise, conducted on righteous principles, with a combination by which you can never be swindled. Dupes are sent beautiful certificates of stock, so ornate in themselves that they look like marriage certificates. When a man sees one he thinks that he is married to good fortune. Statements of the result of the combination are promised in one month. The dupe waits for the coming of the first letter which is to announce his success. Meanwhile he looks at expensive furniture and fine houses. He dreams of fortunes like Vanderbilt's, and resolves that he will not be wrecked by success. A letter comes informing him that his investment has yielded one per cent. per month, and he again looks at expensive furniture and a big house. In good time comes another letter, which says that by an unfortunate turn in the money market the whole of his investment is swept away as well as the profits. That's what they call in New York "The royal bounce." Loud laughter. "I call it an infamous swindle. Every day thousands are swallowed up in the money market. I cry 'a plague, a plague.'"

What is the matter with the price of grain? The crops were plentiful, and the price ought to be cheap. But is it not the grain-gambler who controls the market. They do not call it gambling; they call it "option." An operator pays $500 for the option of 10,000 bushels of grain for February or March. No grain is delivered on this bargain. Certain sums of money are paid if the price goes up or down. I say that gambling with greasy cards in a rum shop is not worse than that. What right has a man to sell that which he has not? Let me not be misunderstood. I condemn the indiscriminate condemnation of all stock operations. A stock-broker may be a good Christian. He has as much right to his commission as a merchant has to his profits. There are men on the Stock Exchange who are examples of conscientiousness and integrity. But no overly-balanced man, or nervous man should enter into that business any more than he should become an engineer.

There are transactions every day in the stock markets into which members of churches are going, for which, at the last, God's judgment will thunder their promoters into the everlasting companionship of the lowest gamblers who ever pitched pennies for drinks. The man who is guilty of "cornering" the market knows that he is sinning against God. He sees a man who wants to put up the price of a certain stock. He goes around and "bears" it and says it is not worth much. When others sell he buys and pockets his profits, and kneels down and thanks the Lord for prosperity in business. You call it "cornering?" I call it gambling, highway robbery, felony aforesaid.

Swindling seems to be no disgrace if it be done on a large scale. We despise the petty thief, but we do not punish the man who steals $100,000 by stock swindle. People are not punished in this country because they steal, but because they do not steal enough. Laughter. We are impatient of small crimes, but gigantic villainy walks up and down with its hands behind it. There are in these two cities homes with women's costly wardrobes and splendid chandeliers, and palatial surroundings, all of which were made out of the distress of dying women, whose money went into stock swindling. There is human sweat in the golden tankards, human blood in the crimson plush. There is the indignation of an incensed God hovering over all the magnificence.

"Hi-storge." Come out in a circular and call upon your victims to repent and get restitution. Young men, beware of stock-gambling; beware of all doubtful speculation. If you can not earn a livelihood in a healthful way, die; death affords a healthful sepulchre. See the dying gambler in his delirium. He talks of options, percentages, buyers, sixty days, stocks, stocks up and down. He rises at midnight crying: "One thousand shares of Illinois Central at 128." Take it! He falls back dead. No more dividends; swindled out of heaven. Stocks down. Let us pray.

The English Baptist missionaries seem to have quite won the confidence and good will of the king and people of Congo. On their return from Stanley Pool, they were warmly received by the king, who begged them not to think of leaving San Salvador. They had intended to cross the river to establish a station. He said he did not like the Portuguese priests, who, it will be remembered, arrived after the Baptists had begun their work in San Salvador, with the object of reclaiming the king and re-establishing the Roman Catholic religion. His majesty told the Baptist missionaries that he had attended the service of the priests once; but that he did not like it, and would not go again. "Instead," he said to them, "of having meetings, as you do, and telling us every Sunday, different things out of God's word and telling us about the road to heaven, they talk a lot of things in a language (Latin) we do not at all understand." The priests were not liked by the people, because they conducted themselves in an arrogant, superior way. They flogged the boys who came to the school, and acted as if they thought the poor Congoes were fetiches, or worms, a term they applied to them in conversation with the Baptist missionaries. The priests called on the latter, on their return from Stanley Pool, and were invited to dine with them on Saturday. The next time they saw the king, he told them that he had received a letter from the priests on the following Sunday, warning him against the Baptists, and that he could not go to heaven if he attended their meetings. The king was disgusted with what he called their meanness. "After," he said to the missionaries, "that fine dinner you gave them, to write such a letter against you as this!" He subsequently attended the services held by the missionaries. The latest intelligence from the missionaries states that they have established stations at Isangila, above Yellala Falls, and at Mbo, about half way to Stanley Pool, and will open a station at Ifac, on the north shore of the Pool.—New York Independent.

Dr. Lenz has exploded the theory of converting a portion of the Sahara into an inland sea. He says the most depressed portion of El Juf is nearly five hundred feet above the level of the Atlantic Ocean.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, 1882.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

CONTENT.

BY ELLA.

To some methinks my life may well appear
Devoid of much that renders earth so dear,
Barren of all those scenes of worldly glee,
Seasons of feasting, nights of revelry.

Having no claim to beauty, wealth or grace,
No comeliness of either form or face,
No boast have I of famous pedigree,
For all my fine shows humble ancestry.

I know but little of the outer world,
Society, so-called, has ne'er unfurled
Her banner to my gaze, unformed, untaught,
I am, to worldly eyes, unloved, unsought.

But what cared for this? I am content,
Believing in the wisdom God has sent
What'er is best, and e'en my humble life,
When by him planned, may be with beauty rife.

I have no wish for aught than he has given,
For discontent has from my heart been driven;
No fond desire for what can ne'er be mine,
For I would have no will save Lord, but thine.

I only wish to lie at Jesus' feet,
A vessel for the Master's service meet,
Content with what his love withholds or sends,
Regarding that his care my steps attends.

JOHNSTON STATION, Mississippi.

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

First Quarter—Lesson V.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 29, 1882.—MARK II, 18-28; III, 1-5.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Remember the Sabbath-day, to keep it holy."—Exodus xx, 8.

THE PHARISEES ANSWERED.

18. And the disciples of John, and of the Pharisees, used to fast: and they come and say unto him, Why do the disciples of John, and of the Pharisees, fast, but thy disciples fast not?

19. And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber fast, while the bride-groom is with them? As long as they have the bride-groom with them, they can not fast.

20. But the days will come, when the bride-groom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days.

21. No man also seweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment: else the new piece that filled it up, taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse.

22. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles: else the new wine doth burst the bottles, and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred: but new wine must be put into new bottles.

23. And it came to pass, that he went through the corn-fields on the Sabbath day; and his disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn.

24. And the Pharisees said unto him, Behold, why do they on the Sabbath day that which is not lawful?

25. And he said unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungered, he and they that were with him?

26. How he went into the house of God, in the days of Abiathar the high priest, and did eat the shew-bread, which is not lawful to eat, but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him?

27. And he said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath:

28. Therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath.

1. And he entered again into the synagogue; and there was a man there which had a withered hand.

2. And they watched him, whether he would heal him on the Sabbath day; that they might accuse him.

3. And he saith unto the man which had the withered hand, Stand forth.

4. And he saith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the Sabbath days, or to do evil? to save life, or to kill? but they held their peace.

5. And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, he saith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it out: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

The storm of opposition was gathering against Jesus, even in the height of his popularity.

The new Teacher disappointed the false hopes of the Pharisees as to the Messiah. He smote their prejudices with his clear words of truth. He trampled on their rules and customs, under which they had well-nigh smothered their religion. He began by clearing away all the rubbish of their traditions in order that his pure religion might have free course, and that the field might be rid of all the weeds and wild growth which had sprung up under their careless tillage, and be replanted with good seed. He touched the consciences of these proud Pharisees with his word of life, and, as the awakened conscience that fails to produce repentance will always enkindle hate, he awoke a spirit of opposition which pursued him to his life's end. We are not surprised to find them watching him closely, and using every means for stopping his prosperous and successful career.

They found every fault possible; they searched for some error or mistake which would put him under the ban of Jewish or Roman law, or the passion of the mob, and thus put an end to his dangerous teachings. The various factions in Church and State forgot their differences and hatred to each other in their common hatred to this pure man. The lesson of to-day furnishes an example of this increasing opposition. The disciples of John and the Pharisees find fault with him and his disciples for not fasting. Why do you not instruct your disciples to fast? John and all the old teachers enjoined this duty. Surely you will not reflect upon this time-honored custom which John and many others taught and practiced. They paraded their own virtues, and reproved the Great Teacher for his want of conformity to the teachings of the past. We learn from this incident that not all the disciples of John accepted Jesus as the Lamb of God after he was pointed out to be such by their master. There are disciples yet who follow the preacher rather than the Lord he points out to them. We find every preacher has his followers, who stand by him with a loyalty that places the Lord whom he preaches in the shadow of their teacher. They ought to give up their name Christians, and take on the name of their preacher. One says I am of Paul, another I am of Apollo, I am of Cephas, I am of Wesley, I am of Campbell—Wesleyans, Baptists, etc.

I suppose the most spiritual of John's disciples left his standard and flocked to that of Jesus, while the narrow-minded and less intelligent held fast to their former leader, and clung to his teachings even though the One mightier and worthier was in their midst. They held on to John's prayers, John's baptism, John's fasts. They were the losers by it; if they had left the water baptism they might have had a baptism of the Holy Ghost. Paul came across a little devoted company of these in his travels, who had not even heard that there was a Holy Ghost. They would have escaped this dreadful ignorance had they heeded their teacher when he told them to behold the Lamb of God and the Son of God; if they had had little less enthusiasm in following their favorite leader, and a little more in following his teaching, they might have been among the one hundred and twenty who received the Holy Ghost, when he came in the upper room and sat in tongues of fire on every head. Christ's answer to their question does not for a moment imply that he discarded fasting as a means of grace, or as a profitable religious exercise, for after this and before this he enjoins fasting, and relates it to prayer so intimately that we can not do away with one without giving up the other. He only answers the question for this time, for this special occasion. The time of his full revealment was when the church was blessed with the bodily presence of the Lord; it was the period of our Lord's life when he was most popular, and when he asserted his claims to Messiahship in a most glorious way.

How inappropriate and out of place would fasting be at such a time. To understand the full significance of the words of Christ's answer we have but to connect them with John's announcement of him as the Bride-groom. When he comes my joy will be full, said the friend of the Bride-groom. Would John, had he been there, have restrained the outward expression of his joy? Would he have fasted in his presence? Had these disciples forgotten his teachings?

The Lord spoke of his presence in the world as of a nuptial feast; and was not his long-looked-for presence in the world like the betrothal? It was the Bride-groom's first meeting of the virgin church, and in those days mutual faith was plighted, and that glad day was but a type of that feast when the King's Son shall receive his bride. The disciples were the guests, and collectively they were the church.

Who could fast upon such an occasion when the Lord himself was revealing the full and beautiful proportions of his glorious manhood? This was no time for fasting, but the time was coming when the Bride-groom shall be taken away, and then they shall fast in those days. Oh! those days when the Groom was in the grave. Sad days when food was not tasted for grief, when hope died; those ten days of waiting for the promised Comforter, when the Saviour was taken up; ten days without the Lord, without the Holy Spirit; those were days when the church, as a bereaved widow, waited to be comforted.

Christ changes the similitude; the wedding feast suggested the wedding garment, and the wine which belonged to its joy. This, a wedding feast; this motley company is made up of wedding guests, notwithstanding their soiled and worn garments. How can these worn garments be made fit for wedding costumes? Can we cover the rents with new patches? No, that would not do; the old would not hold the new, and the new that filled the rent taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse. How, then? Let the King who gives the feast furnish these guests with robes. The allusion to new wine in old bottles is but the same lesson taught by another similitude. If we interpret the parable we see at once that the new wine represents the inner aspect of Christian life as the garments did the outer. The new energies and gifts of the Spirit were on the day of Pentecost, likened unto new wine by those who witnessed the effects of the Spirit upon those on whom he descended.

The joys of this feast of the betrothal of the King's Son and his bride called not for tears and fasting. To confine new truths in old forms only shatters the old. Christ said: "If these should hold their peace the stones would immediately cry out." The next occasion for the enemies of our Lord to vent their hatred was a case of Sabbath breaking. To have heard these watchers report the case you would have concluded that the Lord and his followers had been caught reaping and threshing a crop of wheat which did not belong to them, and that on the Sabbath day. To the eye of suspicion the most innocent things take on the semblance of hideous and glaring sins. When the story is sifted down we find the case to be nothing more nor less than this—the Master and his disciples passed through a field of ripened grain, and, being hungry, plucked, as they passed along, handfuls of the grain, and, rubbing them in their hands, ate them. The very thing that every man, before and since, would do under the same circumstances.

There was no law against it; but there was a law permitting this very thing. Even the ox was not to be muzzled as he treaded out the corn. The heinous crime was not in taking what they had not sown, but it was plucking it; rubbing it on the Sabbath day.

Christ answers them not because such a hypocritical and insidious charge was worthy of an answer, but because it involved a great interest—the Sabbath. He disclosed their falsity by referring them to what David had done, how on the Sabbath, because of his need, and that of those with him, had taken and eaten of the holy bread from off the tables of the sanctuary, a thing unlawful for any to do; and yet this unlawful thing, done on the Sabbath, was overlooked in his case. Have ye not read, ye who spend all your time in reading the Scriptures and posting yourselves upon the law, if David, for his necessities and the necessities of those with him, could be justified in doing an unlawful thing on the Sabbath, may not these hungry disciples be excused for doing a lawful thing? The necessity in this case was allowed to override the ceremonial ordinance, and the general principle is taught that when positive commands and necessities involving the life and well-being of man seem to collide, the latter, not the former, must prevail. To our short-sightedness there may appear to be conflict, but really there is none. God's laws are in harmony; they are made for man, and fix his relations and create his obligations, and these never clash, and our obligations are in distinct and separate places of truth. Sin comes in and destroys the harmony.

The Lord closes the argument by stating the very end for which the Sabbath was made. "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath;" therefore the Son of man is the Lord also of the Sabbath. The Son of man is Lord of men. The Sabbath is made for man, therefore he must be Lord of the Sabbath, being Lord of man, and all that man possesses. He is Lord of the Sabbath, not to abolish it, but to own it, to interpret it, to preside over it; Lord also of the Sabbath—the also proceeds upon the assumption of his lordship over the vast domain of humanity's highest interests, among which the Sabbath is one of the chiefest. The lesson closes with the healing of a withered hand on the Sabbath. They watched him to see if he would heal him on the Sabbath day, that they might accuse him. What would be the accusation? The casuistry of the rabbis allowed the healing art to be practiced on the Sabbath in case of life or death, but such a permanent infirmity did not come under this category. Christ answers their hypocrisy by healing the man by doing nothing, speaking a word. Our Lord points to the man; the scribes sit and gaze, and his pointed question teaches them that to not do good when there was power to do it is really to do evil.

From Dr. Cottrell.

MR. EDITOR: I see you have a Kentucky correspondent, "Vernon," and his facile pen may suffice for those parts, or from these parts, yet an old-time love prompts me occasionally, and, notwithstanding weekly ("spell it with a wee, Sammie,") contributions to the Central Methodist, it is a gratification to get off on an oblique line toward the old NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. This getting off on obliques in other matters is easy. To keep the perpendicular, I am told, is the safest, the surest way to happiness. In our Church Conference the other night, in a free and candid talk with the brotherhood, I told them of the importance of special prayer for their preacher in charge. Pastor? Ah! would it were. But——

Well, I told them that the devil was well practiced as a fisherman, and he fishes for game, fish, ever. There are people who seem too trifling to be sought by him. Is not the devil as often tempted as he tempts? Our temptations are most frequently just in exigencies where we might be powerful, and build up were we spiritual. I remarked to my brethren (brethren is generic, embracing both sexes,) that even when we refuse to bite at the choicest bait the devil comes at us with his gig. So dodging is to be practiced, as well as refrain from toothsome morsels. The word toothsome suggests. I've had one. It was isolated—insulated. There was not a rotten speck on it, and yet it was loose, and all around it was tender—sensitive. I called it a superannuate. It could not ache, in the best sense of that word, but it kept up a hurting. Another, that was not loose, and that is well wedged in with others, in front, did, through sympathy, the aching. "If one member suffer," etc. Now, it may be in a few years I'll be superannuate—tender, sensitive all around. Will I have any one or more effective who will do the aching through sympathy for the old man? It is sometimes tough on a preacher to have an old father in the Conference. They are liable to become tooth-sensitive.

That Alabama layman who wrote regarding the ADVOCATE, two weeks ago, and who made mention, justly, of the masterly editorials of your predecessors, forgot those of C. C. Gillespie. His conduct of the Texas Advocate inspired the General Conference to put him at New Orleans, and he was getting to himself a good degree.

A friend has sent me a copy of one of the New Orleans dailies, in which there is a synopsis of Bishop McTyeire's sermon before the Louisiana Conference on "The Old Paths." I perceive he quotes from a "Kentucky Methodist," in protest against the "clip theory of the Jew, the dip theory of the papists, and the dip theory of the Campbellites." The idea of the integrity of my religion, the completeness of my acceptance with the Infinite God, being conditional upon the manipulation of any poor mortal! As to who is to do me, and with what, and how much, and how and when! Establishment of a claim of that sort would give us a very lucrative toll gate heavenward. Spur F. M. Grace up in his promised history of the Alabama Conference.

BOWLING GREEN, KY., Jan. 13, 1882.

"I Will, Therefore, That Men Pray Everywhere."

The most wicked men, when prostrated by the hand of disease, overwhelmed with some mighty affliction, or surrounded with very great personal peril, involuntarily confess their own helplessness and betake themselves to prayer. Their self-conceit and self-sufficiency desert them when the hour of trial comes. But the Christian delights in prayer. To him it is no task-work—no irksome duty to be dispatched in a perfunctory manner. Very far from it. He esteems it a blessed privilege to go to God with all his troubles and wants, and to ask his help and guidance in truth and sincerity. Prayer restores peace to his troubled heart, disperses the fears and doubts that weigh down his spirits, lightens his sorrow and grief, banishes all evil and malignant feelings, and puts him in communion with God who is pure and holy. It is only through the medium of prayer that we can hold communion with God who is enthroned in heaven; that we can lay our wants, troubles and sorrows before him and implore his mercy; that we can draw near to him and experience the sweets of "heavenly mindedness." Prayer is the life and soul of the Christian; the source of all his strength; the foundation of all his virtuous impulses and good works; and it is also a barometer to indicate the condition of the Christian as regards his "growth in grace" and advance in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. The professor of religion, who does not pray frequently, is in peril of losing his immortal soul by backsliding and may be sure he is not serving God as he should do. There is no better test of a zealous, earnest, conscientious Christian than the relish which he shows for prayer in his household and the privacy of his closet. Pharisaism is an abomination in the sight of God; hypocrisy is hateful to him; mere lip service and homage is an insult to him, since he knoweth the most secret thoughts of the hearts of men. When we speak of the duties of prayer, we mean the fervent, sincere petition, mingled with praise and thanksgiving of hearts which are perfectly honest and truthful: for all prayer, to be pleasing to God, must flow from the heart as the stream flows from the fountain. Prayer, then, is not the mere utterance of a set of words, pro forma, but the outpouring of the heart. "My son, give me thy heart," is what God demands, and none are Christians who have not given their hearts to him and put off all self-righteousness and self-sufficiency at his footstool, and cast themselves unreservedly on his mercy. Uniting ourselves with the church, attending divine service punctually and forsaking immoral courses are duties incumbent on the Christian; but they do not in themselves constitute men Christians nor authorize them to expect to wear the crown of righteousness in the world to come. This error is but too common with professors of religion, many of whom conceive their salvation assured the moment they join the church. It is not meant that all professors fall into this grievous error. Thank God, there was one righteous man in Sodom, and there are numbers of true Christians who "work out their salvation with fear and trembling," and feel they never can do enough to glorify God. Heartfelt, earnest prayer is alone acceptable to God, and such prayer none but zealous, fervid Christians can offer. Half-hearted professors can not pray to God in sincerity and truth, since they have not given him their heart and turned their backs on the world and its fleeting scenes.

My friends, do you "pray everywhere?" Alas, many do not even pray morning and night; but, even were they to do this, it is not sufficient. God deserves to be praised continually by the recipients of his manifold mercies and bounties—sinful creatures need his pardon and grace every moment of the day. It need not be a long, formal prayer—"God be merciful to me a sinner," will answer. The Lord's Prayer embodies all we need put into a prayer. No form of words is essential; all that is necessary is, that it comes from the heart and is sincere and humble. Humility is well pleasing in the sight of God; but a proud and haughty spirit in a sinful and helpless creature, whose "life is but as a vapor," is offensive to him who created the universe. Friends, let us use the blessed privilege of prayer, of communion with God, more frequently and fervently. Its tranquillizing, purifying, elevating and comforting effects upon our hearts will soon teach us to set the proper value on this blessed privilege of prayer and induce us to use it more frequently. It will exert a most benign influence on our lives and actions, and prevent our being stumbling-blocks to the unconverted. The professor of religion who prays habitually, who breathes a silent ejaculatory prayer amid his business employments, as he travels a journey, as he walks out in the fields and along the streets is in no danger of backsliding and falling away from God. Prayer is what is needed to awaken sinners and to arrest the spread of vice and immorality. Just think what would be the effect if every professing Christian prayed in truth and sincerity, prayed "everywhere," as the apostle directs them to do? The work of salvation would go on briskly, for God answers the "fervent effectual prayer of the righteous." Whenever a sinner prays, he is drawing nearer to God and the work of grace is begun in his heart. God's Holy Spirit is working in such an one "to will and to do"—let him not grieve this Holy Spirit.

LONGNETTE.

ETTAW, ALA.

Wood Notes.

BY INVALID.

Another Saturday—the last day of the old year. The glory of the evening sun lights up my peaceful "bethel." It is typical of "the smiling face" of Providence, that seemed hidden behind the cloud that overshadowed our home. The Sun of Righteousness shines for me to-day, and has brought "healing in his wings." How long the week has been! What changes have been wrought! How much I have lost, and how much has been graciously given! During the first days of Christmas it seemed that God was willing and ready to accept my poor offering. For days and weary night I knew only suffering. "The sacrifice" seemed indeed "bound with cords," the flame kindled, the knife of pain applied. Fever burned almost to a consuming heat, pain, like a two-edged instrument, seemed thrusting me continually, and delirium threatened to dethrone reason. My dearest friends seemed cruel foes, and yet a Presence seemed over with me. The mercy of God was ever before me, while a cloud shut out the light of reason, and I lived in an unknown world. But the disease was rebuked, the fever left me, and I am yet weak and trembling, but I wish so much to say farewell to the old year, and to send this greeting to far-away loved ones. There are several letters and cards—"peace and good-will offerings"—tokens of regard from kind, beloved friends, whom I wish to thank for their kind, generous remembrance.

First, there is the box from a sick friend, who asked to be "remembered." While I enjoyed its contents, dear friend, I prayed that God might "remember" you, cheer, bless and restore you to health and usefulness; and I, too, will remember you with love and gratitude.

My sweet little friends, Mary Helen, Miriam, Hessie and Lizzie, your souvenirs are very precious to me, and I hope that you were all happy and richly rewarded during the Christmas, and that God may bless you for your kind remembrance of your friend "Invalid."

My unknown but beloved friend, gentle "Mollie darling," how shall I find words to thank you? Your greeting and your gift, as well as the "good evening kiss," together with your dear mother's and sister's gifts, gave me much pleasure, and were such substantial tokens of your Christian regard. It came from the hand of Heaven's own pure charity, and I pray that every blessing, with God's love, may be richly given you and yours.

My dear fairy godmother, true friend in adversity and woe, though this may not greet your eye, I must add your gifted name to my list of benefactors, for your gifts are doubly precious; for, in the midst of your sorrows, you never forget your invalid friend. God bless thee.

There are other tokens, but these are not needed to keep me in remembrance of the friends who have said "good-bye"—my dear pastor and his good wife. How my heart aches when I think of them, for they have left me, and I am "bereaved," like Israel, when he wept for Joseph and Benjamin, or rather like David, when mourning the death of his dearest friend, Jonathan. The sun has gone down, leaving me in tears, for it is a sore trial to bid adieu to the kind pastor who has been with us two years, until our hearts were so entwined that it seemed like tearing the vines from its trellis, when severing our connection as pastor and people. But, in bidding our long-tried friend adieu, we will extend a cordial welcome to the unknown stranger who comes to us with the new year, not forgetting the departed one, but giving our retried pastor a place in our hearts and a welcome to our humble fireside. God bless them all, and may he bless other dear friends who are ever remembered—Hope, Patience, Etta, Alma and Ethel. Sweet friends adieu, until a new and happier year shall dawn. May God bless you, one and all, is the best wish I can make for you, and the only return I can make for all your kindness to your ever-grateful friend,

CANTON, Mississippi.

Marriages.

NEWBERN—RUSHING.—December 22, 1881, at the residence of the bride's father, near Walnut Grove, Miss., by Rev. Irvin Miller, Mr. Daniel Newbern to Miss Sallie Rushing.

GRAVES—SUMERALE.—December 22, 1881, at the residence of Geo. Ellis, Esq., by Rev. A. B. Nicholson, Mr. Alonzo T. Graves, of Hazlehurst to Miss Lelia Somerale of Pine Bluff, all of Copiah county, Mississippi.

NORRIS—SCOTT.—November 27, 1881, by the Rev. W. H. Jennings, Mr. Charles Norris to Miss Lukenzie Scott.

MCDURMIT—COCKS.—January 4, 1882, at the residence of J. W. Triggs, Esq., by the Rev. J. F. Evans, Mr. L. A. McDurmit to Miss Perlee Cocks, all of Holmes county, Miss.

BAZOON—HERRIN.—January 5, 1882, in Saint Helena parish, La., by Rev. Inman W. Cooper, Simpson Bazoon to Celia Herrin.

CAMPBELL—HALL.—January 10, 1882, at the Presbyterian Church, in Carthage, Miss., by Rev. Irvin Miller, Mr. Joseph A. Campbell, of Lebanon, Tenn., (son of ex-Governor Campbell,) to Miss Alice S. Hall, of Carthage, Miss.

WHITTAKER—FANVER.—On Thursday, January 12, 1882, at the residence of Mr. Wm. N. Fanver, by Rev. J. S. Parker, of the Mississippi Conference, Mr. John Whittaker, of Wilkinson county, Miss., to Miss Lizzie Fanver, of East Feliciana parish, La.

PATTERSON—TURBEVILLE.—January 12, 1882 at the residence of Mr. John Roberts, by Rev. J. S. Parker, Mr. A. Cook Patterson to Miss Nettie Turbeville, all of East Feliciana parish, La.

Obituaries.

MCCONNELL.—Death is the great archer, from whose quiver goes forth the arrows of mortality to all hearts. He is no respecter of persons. The innocent babe, the blooming youth, vigorous man and womanhood, the hoary-headed, the good and bad are all alike marks for his fatal unerring. Death is a great and universal king, whose dismal scepter ought be swayed over universal man. But, thank God, there is a greater King than he, "The King of kings and Lord of lords," whose scepter shall extend over Death's dark domain and gather all his captives from their prison homes. Thank God there is a greater Archer, whose arrows will find the heart of the death king himself, and he shall die. How glorious the time, the state, when it shall be proclaimed and realized, "There shall be no more death," for "death is swallowed up of life." Into such a state all such pass who die the death of the righteous.

Such a death occurred in Lauderdale, Miss., on the eighteenth of November, 1881. The death of MARY L. MCCONNELL, daughter of the late Edmund and Louisa Gibbs, of Livingston, Ala.; wife of Mr. John A. McConnell, of York Station, Ala. Mrs. McConnell was born in Livingston, Ala., May [illegible], and was married to Mr. McConnell July [illegible]. Mrs. McConnell was a consistent, spiritual Christian woman, and a worthy member of the Presbyterian Church at York Station, Ala., where she lived [illegible] the most of her married and church life. Her religion seemed so completely the warp and woof of her life that it was seen and recognized in all the different responsibilities and relations of the circle where she moved. This a beautiful character was developed and so exhibited as to impress upon observers the beauty and excellence of true piety as a great essential factor in the formation of the highest type of character—Christian character. Such a character is as beautiful upon a dying corel, and is extremely trying ordeal of life's last and most trying conflict, as it is in the activities and amenities of life. Such was the character, and such the death of Mary L. McConnell.

Patient and resigned, calm and serene, she met the approach of the last great enemy, and as the sombre shades gathering about her, she pillowed her soul upon the precious promise, and addressed herself in its language, as her last distinct utterance, "Dear not, I am with thee," she passed, divinely escorted, to her crown and mansion, leaving a sweet radiance of her happy spirit impressed upon the lifeless face. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like hers."

[illegible] Southwestern Presbyterian please copy.

NICHOLS.—SISTER SARAH E. TODZWER, wife of Joseph H. Nichols, Esq., died at the residence of her mother, in Algiers, La., December 3, 1881, after a long and lingering spell of sickness and suffering aged thirty-one years. She was born of Louis and Sarah Todzwer in the city of Baltimore, Md., came to Algiers with her parents twenty years ago, with whom she lived until her death, with the exception of an interim of a few years she and her husband spent in Texas, where she was greatly beloved by all who had the pleasure of knowing her.

The writer received her into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while he was stationed in Algiers in 1874, and saw her happily converted to God, and he saw much of her consistent Christian living which she brought forth as a woman walking with God, in the manifold relations of life which she nobly sustained. The Holy Spirit evidently dwelt in her, bringing forth the peaceable fruit of righteousness in living, and in her death calmness and tranquility. No fear ever entered her heart, and fixed mind; she had too much the assurance and hope of heaven, and could speak of the death as of sleep, or taking a journey abroad. The moment of her death was sudden. She remarked to her mother, as the angels kissed her sweet soul away to the blessed Jesus, "You have done all you could."

How blessed is the privilege of visiting the chamber of such a saint in the moments of their [illegible] ness, and hear them speak of the power, excellence and glory of our Holy Christianity, its solace and adaptation to the pilgrim entering the dark vale and shadow of death! It repays him amply for the time spent in the itinerant service as an ambassador for the blessed Master. Our late brother, Bro. Todzwer, in his death left, as a legacy to the church of his choice, which he so much loved, his dear wife and children, and now, one by one, the precious ones are passing from the church militant to the church triumphant. How joyful will be the heavenly greetings! and may not one solitary member of the family be left out of the heavenly fold.

Her conjugal life was as felicitous one, in short; she was married to Mr. Nichols April [illegible], 1873, who, disconsolate, mourns deeply, feeling a great loss, and the loss of the eye and counsel of a pious mother to watch over their orphan boy, Joseph, who is too young to miss her.

LEWIS A. [illegible]

BLACK.—Tribute of respect by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Bolton, Mississippi:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Supreme Ruler of things in his infinite wisdom to remove from amidst our dear friend and sister, Mrs. S. C. [illegible] and her daughter NETTIE, just verging upon a beautiful womanhood—therefore, as a tribute of respect to their memory and a token of our love,

Resolved 1, That as Christians we have sustained a great loss in the death of this most consistent Christian and faithful worker in our church, who, though a member of the Baptist Church, identified herself with us, working in the Master's cause almost with zeal and devotion.

Resolved 2, That the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society at this place had no more faithful member than she, and while deeply mourning her loss, we yet bow to the dispensation of Providence, feeling that "our loss is her eternal gain."

Resolved 3, That in the death of Nettie the Foreign Missionary Society has lost one of its most active members, and the circle of girlhood in our community one of its brightest and loveliest ornaments.

Resolved 4, That we desire to express our sense of the excellence of these dear ones in all the relations of life, but more particularly as exemplified in their own family. The mother was indeed a model, training her children wisely and well, and of her it could be pre-eminently said, "she looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness." The daughter affectionate, gentle and amiable, her memory must ever be a beautiful halo, enshrined in the hearts of father, brothers and sister.

Resolved 5, That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved family in their irreparable loss, and pray that their great affliction may be sanctified to their eternal welfare, and that God's grace may comfort and sustain them, while they linger this side the river, and that finally they may join their loved ones in that land where "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying."

Resolved 6, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society at this place, and a copy of same furnished the sorrowing family; also, copies sent to the Nashville and New Orleans Christian Advocates for publication.

MRS. M. A. BALLIWIN,
For Committee.

TRAMMELL—LULA IRENE TRAMMELL, daughter of Reuben M. and Mary L. Chapman, was born in Macon county, Ala., January 24, 1861, and died near LaFayette, Ala., December, 1880. She was converted and joined the Methodist Protestant church when about fifteen years of age, and ever afterward lived a consistent Christian life. Deprived of both parents in childhood, her training devolved upon a relative who spared no pains to educate her, and develop the latent graces of girlhood until those virtues and graces should attest themselves in noble womanhood. And the work of the spirit was effected in her, and thus she became all that fond hearts expected of the good, gentle, unassuming, intelligent. She was happily married to Luther Trammell, December 24, 1879, whom, with a dear little babe, she has left in deep sorrow.

Her last illness was long and painful, yet she bore her sufferings with perfect resignation. The blessed word of God was to her a source of strength and comfort, in her painful illness. The twenty-third Psalm an especial favorite, she would often repeat, adding, "Yes, though I walk through the dark valley, he will guide me." Calling her loved ones around her and bidding them farewell, she urged them to meet her in heaven, and gently fell asleep in Jesus; never to weep, never to wake till he comes to make up his jewels.

W. P. MCKINNEY.

HENESAY.—THOMAS K. HENESAY was born July 9, 1830; married to Mary Ann Doyle August 12, 1858; died in Whistler, Ala., December 17, 1881. May his soul rest in God.

M. COOPER.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, 1882.

"ABIDE WITH ME!"

BY MRS. S. M. WALSH.

Sometimes I walk with him, I know,
With him, my patient guide and friend,
And say, "It shall be always so:
I will keep near him to the end.
Keep near him, though the way be steep,
And rough as Calvary's rugged side;
Though to his feet I can but creep,
And gaze on him, the Crucified."

Then what to me were scoffs and jeers,
And all the scorn his foes are exulting?
How "Ecce Homo" brings glad tears—
Yes, I behold my Lord and King!
Would I his thorny crown might share,
My heart grow faint beneath his pain!
Would I his very cross might bear,
My blood, to this its rough wood stain?"

Oh, patient Christ, abide with me!
And bless life's long and weary way,
The day far-spent, the night with thee
Shall be more blessed than the day.
I would walk always at thy side,
Beside, 'tis thou must keep me there!
Oh, let me close to thee abide
And find thee ever—everywhere!

—The Fellowship.

Bible Address.

Delivered before the Southwestern Bible Society, in Goodelet Street Methodist Church, New Orleans, January 15, 1882.

BY REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Pastor Felicity Street M. E. Church, South.

Christian Friends: Having been invited to make the annual address before the Southwestern Bible Society and its friends and supporters, I begin now to realize how unfortunate it was for you that I have consented to attempt such a hazardous undertaking. I find myself embarrassed by two considerations. This kind of work is a little out of the ordinary routine of my labors, and for this reason I may fail to interest you to the extent you are justified in expecting on an occasion like the present. The greater embarrassment arises from the exceeding richness of the subject which this anniversary naturally brings before the mind. It is very easy to say, "a Bible address;" but the lines of thought suggested by that phrase and going out from that center are so many, and so varied, and so beautiful, and so inviting, and so attractive, and so amazing, that the mind poises in a bewildered indecision as to which line to take. Is it to be an address about the Bible—the book which begins its marvelous record with the simple statement of an unfathomable mystery, and ends its long history with the simple prayer for an unfathomable blessing? Can I make an address about the book, whose first words break the everlasting silence and initiate an end to an eternal past, and whose last words close the record of all earthly existence and open up an eternal future? Can I make an address about the book whose first words close the dismal depths of darkness and build a barrier to the passage of thought in that direction, and whose last words open perennial fountains of light, in whose beauty souls may revel forever? Can I make an address about the book, whose first words paint the background of all earthly life, and whose last words sketch the endless perspective of an immortal existence? Can I make an address about the book, whose first words reveal God coming out of the space and darkness into the view of his creatures, and whose last words disclose his creatures walking upon the back plane of his awful presence? Can I make an address about this book—this simple, strange, wonderful book? How can I do this? I am speechless before its venerable wisdom! I tremble in presence of its unyielding authority! I stand in awe of its majestic truth! I am overwhelmed by its tremendous disclosures! What can I say? I glance at its first paragraph, and chaotic confusion careers into view, and God is seen brooding in awful majesty over the tumult! I hear a voice of command, and lo! primeval darkness retires before the advancing columns of created light! The day shades into night, and the night brightens into day, and an everlasting barrier is built up between the darkness and the light! The waters roll themselves to their appointed place, and the green earth starts upon her annual round! The sun and moon and stars flash their fires upon a new-made world and begin their work of marking the seasons and the times! Life, that subtle, indefinable thing, commences its wonderful history; and man, its highest earthly type, stands upon the earth, the sole sovereign of its wide domain! Shall I take my theme here? What can I say of all this? What do I know of all this? All I know of this is stated in the first five words of this book: "In the beginning God created." That is the mystery of mysteries! Back of that, who can go? Who can lift that curtain? Whose eye can penetrate the darkness that has settled behind that statement? All I know here is, that earthly existence emerges from a mystery that has remained a mystery to this day, and so I can not get my theme here.

But it is expected that I make a Bible address. I look at these first pages to find my theme, and I see human life beginning in a garden where beauty brightens every spot, and bliss reposes in tranquil peace under all its embowering shades. Birds and beasts, and fruit and flowers mingle their perfumes and gambols and plumes and fascinations with such an exquisite simplicity, and with such a delicate adaptation to each other, as to produce a picture which has been the archetype of every painter's pencil, the copy for every poet's pen, the model every orator's fancy has essayed to reach. In all this beauty, and, over it all, I see man, stamped with the image of God, holding quiet and loving communion with the Divine Spirit, and with all that the Divine Spirit created. That is the first view of human life, and what a heavenly beauty, what a peaceful grandeur, what a calm dignity touches and tinges and gives expression to the whole scene! Who, that has an emotion in him, can look upon it and not feel that the whole picture is worthy of him who exhibits it? Oh, sirs, it has ever been a garden of enchantment, outside of whose forbidden walls the human imagination has revelled in dreamy reveries upon its blessed memories, and the human heart gone out in loving longings for a restoration to its happy abodes! I look over the scene again, and there is a transforming power at work. The brightness begins to dull; the beauty begins to fade; the flowers droop their heads; vegetation withers as under the hot breath of a demon; the beasts rage with a fury before unknown; and man, the unrivalled sovereign, degraded from his position, his relations with God and nature broken, disrobed of his glory, shivering before the chilling blast which disobedience has raised, forfeits his right to the place ere the dews of the morning are shaken from his golden locks, and takes his "sad, slow, solitary," way out into a wilderness to farce subsistence from an unwilling earth by the sweat of his face! That is the second view of human life. When we hear those gates close behind man as he takes his departure from his first home and see the flashings of the sword of the cherubim, in justice, shutting him out to an existence of toil, and in mercy shutting him out from immediate and unending woe, we have the incipient revelation of the whole of human life! Shall I then take my theme from the first view of human life? I can not enter that garden! Those closed gates yield to no force of mine! I have no key to fit the intricate wards of the lock placed upon them by the Allwise Artificer! I dare not come within reach of the gleaming swords of those heaven-posted sentinels! Shall I then take my theme from the second view of human life? Ah, no, we are this evening bending under the burdens that were laid upon us there, and our hearts ache with the sorrowful remembrances of what might have been; and the keenness of the curse of Eden has cut its way through our thoughts and feelings down to the very center of life, and but for the blessed balm our existence would bleed itself away! Besides these considerations, which prohibit me taking my theme here, there is hanging over all this beauty and manifesting itself in all this gloom an unsolved mystery. In this beauty, in the presence of all possible good, in the very brightness of the glory of God, evil springs upon the earth and without a moment's warning fastens its poisonous fangs upon the first human life, and the deadly virus flows down through all human blood! The human mind is continually trying to get back to first facts and causes; and here we get back to one of the first facts—the fact of the existence of evil. This fact, so tremendous and appalling in itself, is made more tremendous and more appalling by the reverse fact, that God is there too, and "who by searching can find out the Almighty?" And so, with regrets that linger wistfully about the charmed spot where human life began, we turn away from a subject that will not open its secret passages to the fumbling manipulations of our clumsy fingers, nor disclose its magnificent vistas to the prying inquisitiveness of our irreverent eyes!

But I am to make a Bible address, and I look for my theme here. I look again, not simply at these first pages, but at these pages, beginning at the first and going through to the last and through the last; and I find that this book is a history of human life, from its beginning in the garden to its end in a glorious city or a gloomy Gehenna. Looking closely, I find two histories here. The individual history and the race history move along together, distinct yet inseparable. This great river, whose magnificent crescent encircles your city, takes its rise in a few drops that trickle down a hillside in the far Northwest. Those drops, urged on by a power which they can not resist, force their way along, and there and there are joined by other drops trickling down other hillsides, and this combination making them more powerful, they open wider passage-ways, and at various points little tributaries tumble over the rocks, and at other various points eager confluents pour in their volume, until a great river is sweeping in majesty toward the sea. Each drop has an influence of its own and a history of its own, and that influence can not be separated from the influence of the stream, and that history can not be eliminated from the general history of the river. So, human life is a stream—a mighty river with a double history. Each individual has an influence and a history of his own, and the race has an influence and a history. The individual history can not be separated from the race history, because the individual is an integral part of the race. The race history is the sum of the individual histories, because the race is the sum of the individuals. Now, this history of human life, in its individual aspect and in its race aspect is written in this book, and nowhere else is it recorded in its completeness. This book begins with the beginning of that history, and when that history is finished, this book has nothing more to say. When the last chapter is written, no other pen can add a word. It is a finished work. There are no supplements. There can be no appendix. As for revision, who can revise that which in itself presents a rounded and complete perfection? Wise men may comment on that history and try to explain it, but not one additional fact can they produce. They may investigate the causes which led to the actions which make up that history, but the actions themselves are a part of the record. Men may speculate and theorize and philosophize about human life in all its wonderful forms and varied modifications; yet, all their speculations and theories and philosophies are hemmed in on one side by the mysterious origin of life, and on the other side, by its equally mysterious end. The Bible is the simple history of events between these two points. It is the simple history of human life. Hence, the man who rejects it, throws away the key that unlocks the treasures of existence; and, of all the paupers in the world, he is the poorest who is endowed with life and ignorant of its meaning and value. The man who lets go the Bible, lets go the only clue by which he may be guided out of a labyrinth of difficulties, and his weary feet stumble along its perplexing mazes, and his mind loses itself amid its entangling bewilderments! The man who casts away the Bible, casts away the only explanation human life ever received, and, as one of this class has said, "He sees the spring-sun shine out of an empty heaven to light up a soulless earth, and he feels with utter loneliness that the Great Companion is dead," and there is nothing left to do but to repeat the question of utter hopelessness: "Is life worth living?" The Bible is the history of life. It leaves no important fact unmentioned; no truth, necessary to record, unrecorded; no relation, out of which an obligation may arise, unstated; no possibility, alluring effort to higher achievement, undisclosed. It begins its history with the feeble beat of one single pulse. It ends that history with millions upon millions of hearts throbbing and surging with the mighty tides of resurrection power. All along, from that feeble beginning to that astounding close, are afforded manifestations of two opposing principles striving for the mastery over human life. All through this history we see evil in man, and around him and above him. All through this history we see God in man, and around him and above him. Evil, having dislodged man from his high position and thrown him prone upon the ground, is eager and impatient to fetter him forever in the triple chain of ignorance and weakness and sin, God, having breathed into him an eternal existence, in long-suffering patience, endeavors to lift him to that plane where existence shall be all happy, because rid of evil. Man himself is stirred to earnest efforts to recover his high position by the memories of that bright spring-time when all nature stood aglow with the bloom of youth, and the human soul was as pure as the blushes that tinged nature's cheeks. And thus the histories run on. The individual history is nearly always the same. The race history deepens and broadens and rises higher as it flows along down the centuries. Individual history is ever beginning in weakness, is ever moving along through alternate lights and shades, with the shades creeping in deepening gloom over it all, until it goes out in the darkness of death. The race history had its one beginning under the shadows of evil, and it has ever been getting farther from the shadows out into the growing light. Now in all this, moving and governing the wonderful phantasma, is a strong, patient, loving yet unseen hand. We pry into the secret of all this movement, and back of it all the mystery of an over-ruling and an in-ruling Providence confronts us with its "ways past finding out." And so, we come again by a different route to the place whence we started, and we stand in speechless awe before a mystery that is ever attracting our search, and yet ever successfully eluding our most diligent and untiring investigation! And so I can not find my theme here.

But I am to make a Bible address, and I look again through these pages to find my subject. I find here a cabinet of biographies of the most absorbing interest. Here are biographies written out in minutest detail and biographies written in a single sentence. Here are biographies whose attractive charm is the simple statement, in simple words, of simple facts; and biographies dressed in all the gorgeous apparel with which the oriental imagination delighted to clothe its subjects. Here are biographies of magnificent kings and rustic shepherds; biographies of deepest philosophers and unpolished peasants; biographies of wisest statesmen and unlettered servants. Here are biographies of poets, whose lyric melodies are as fresh as the balmy breath of a May morning, whose clarion notes have stirred embattled hosts to deeds of heroism, and biographies of orators, whose moving eloquence swayed multitudes of people. Here are biographies of queens "in gold of Ophir," and stately matrons, ruling their quiet households with the rod of love. Here are biographies of aged widows spending their last days in pious devotions, and of little maidens captive in the land of the stranger. Here are biographies of men and women occupying every position in life; some reaching up to the loftiest peaks of honor; some sinking to the lowest depths of infamy. In this cabinet is every man's biography and every woman's. Hanging on one of these walls is a perfect portrait of every human being, drawn by a pencil that never errs and in colors that never fade, and with a delicacy and truth of expression that reveal touches of a masterhand. And whose pencil is this? Whose hand has done this inimitable work? Back of all these biographies, sketching and framing, and setting and hanging them before the view of the world, is the awful mystery of God in History which stops our way!

I look again through these pages to find my theme, and I see a person and a history which have influenced every other person and every other history. In these first pages this person appears at intervals and then heavily veiled. In the early dawn of the world's history, it is difficult to define the outlines of his character, and the intermittent appearances forbid anything like a continuous record. As time moves on, the appearances are more frequent, and the outlines of the character are more sharply defined. His appearances excite wonder that grows in intensity, and his developing character awakens attention that is ever alert with interest. Speculations in regard to him absorb many minds. Indefinable expectations, in respect to his relations with the human race, fill many hearts. Indescribable desires for a fuller and clearer revelation of his character and work take possession of many souls, when all at once, in the full flush of a vigorous manhood, he presents himself fully to view, standing in the midst of an uncounted multitude, and speaking with a voice of quiet authority that takes his hearers by complete surprise. From that very day the earth began to glow under the steady flow of the light of his life—human sorrow hushed its sobs under the benign look of his eye, heart-aches were eased by the loving tones of his voice; human want had its needs supplied from the free bounty of his hand; bereaved spirits felt the balm of his heavenly consolations, and burdened souls rejoiced in the help of his strong arm. And this life, so marvelous in its beginning, so beautiful in its development, and so true in its aims, moved on to its supreme culmination in an unexplained sorrow in a garden of olives. This life is so unlike every other life, and yet so like what every other life should be, that we unconsciously begin to ask, if this garden of sorrow has any connection with that garden where sorrow began, and we find that this life is itself the connection between these two gardens. It made its first earthly appearance in the garden of Eden. It took its final stand and achieved its final victory over the principles of evil in the garden of Gethsemane; for all the successes since then have been nothing more than the detailed results of that great victory. The more we ponder over this life the clearer do we see that it is an epitome of all true life, and the only illustrated history of man. One sentence in this book in regard to this life, throws light upon all life: "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." Taking our stand in that first garden, when the deepening shadows creep over the scene and hide its beauties, the future is all veiled in darkness. Taking our stand in this second garden, where evil concentrated all its mighty power, and centered the gathered experience of four thousand years to foil and crush the peasant of Galilee; we see the shadows lifting themselves from the past, and from the future, and the light of this life throwing its beams over the whole history of man. But this life is not only a light to explain man and his history, it won for him the possibility of a recovery of his lost position. He lost his position in a garden of bliss, and this life won it for him again in a garden of sorrows. But these statements do not quiet our minds. They rather stir the depths of our souls, for we want to know who is this, whose life explains all life, and who has won for man more than he ever lost? The mystery that has stopped our way at every point comes again to view, but the light of this life has shone upon it, and dissipated the darkness that intercepted our vision, and we stand with trembling joy before the bright and beautiful mystery of God in redemption. And now instead of being hedged in by impassable barriers, the obstructions have been removed, the avenues have all been thrown open, and the mind quickened into a restless activity by the possibilities thus laid before it, may range at will, swinging back over all the past, sweeping out into all the future. "The darkness is past and the true light now shineth." God in redemption is the light of history, the light of all the past ages, the light of all the future ages. This is the central fact of man's being and the controlling fact of man's destiny. Here God explains his dealings with the race. The clouds and darkness that were round about his throne have fled before the rising of the sun of righteousness and "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God" is reflected upon the world from the face of Jesus Christ. But still back of this is a mystery unexplained, not as in the other cases a dark mystery, but the radiant mystery of love. We indeed see the brightness gilding all the past and tinting all the future, but the reason for all this is so enwrapped in the divine glory that our searching eyes are blinded by the insufferable blaze! We turn away unsatisfied, and the only thing that compensates for the disappointment is, that the inquiring mind is directed to a time in the future when "we shall know even as we are known." And so it turns out that even here I fail to find my theme.

Now if we look back over the way we have come, though I have not found a theme, we see that there is one subject which has repeatedly presented itself. It has appeared here and there as we have come along. Your attention is called to the fact that whatever line of thought we have endeavored to follow has led directly to the great mystery of God. When we looked at nature it led us to God in creation. When we looked at human life, it led us to God in providence. When we looked at the human race, it led us to God in history. When we looked at human want, it led us to God in redemption. And so it is that whatever subject is presented or suggested by this book, if you take it in hand and follow it patiently, you will soon find yourself in the presence of God! Whether it is a book, or a chapter, or a verse, or a line, or a word, if you go to the bottom of it you find God is there. A book, whose words and thoughts, whose histories and biographies, whose poetry and philosophy, whose music and eloquence, all point to God must be the book of God. It is not always a complimentary criticism to say that a book is full of its author, but there never was a book so full of its author as this book. His hand and mind and love are seen all through it. The contents of a book make the book, and no man can read this book without seeing that it is full of God, and therefore properly named "the book of God." Another thing has appeared here and there as we have come along. The mind of man is attracted to God. Any mystery rivets attention, and the greatest of all mysteries attracts the most attention. God is a loving father to the humble and they adore him. God is a righteous ruler, whose righteousness attracts the fears of the wicked, and they can not rid themselves of those fears. God is an enveloping shadow of darkness out of which the atheist can not come, and he completely overturns his theory by the fact that he is continually thinking and talking and writing about the God he has banished from existence. The mystery of God attracts as nothing else attracts. Another point has come out very clearly. God shows himself everywhere in this book, and all his relations with man are explained by "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Now put these two things together, that the human mind is everywhere attracted to God, and is even trying to find out God, and that in this word God is manifested in his relations to man, and you have the one simple, cogent reason for circulating this book. The human mind wants to know God.

The history of the thought and efforts and struggles of the mind prove this. There is a sort of instinctive feeling in the human heart that knowledge of God is the explanation of all things. Hence Christians who love God study to find out more of God, and infidels who doubt the Divine existence doubt that anything can be explained satisfactorily, and atheists, who have "said in their hearts there is no God," have come squarely to the conclusion that nothing can be explained. The mistake of speculative thinking is that it seeks to know God absolutely. It strips him of his relations with man and nature, and endeavors to subject the Ineffable to the critical analysis of the finite. Here "the clouds and darkness" interpose, and shut out the unholy gaze and repress the fruitless experiment. Upon this point there is no revelation, nor can there be any. As man is the creature of God, and related to him as creature to Creator, he can only receive a revelation of the Creator as he is seen in his relations with the creature. Hence the Bible representation of God is the simplest that can be given, because it is a revelation of God in his relations with his works. I repeat then that a little reflection upon the thinking of the world shows clearly that the human mind is searching after knowledge of God. We see to-day that all the issues between Christianity and her foes are rapidly and surely converging to one point. The forces on both sides are moving with steady tread to that point, and the question involved is, "Is there a God?" The inspiration of the Scriptures, the miracles recorded, the prophecies uttered, the doctrines promulgated, the ethics taught have all been considered by the enemy as mere outposts, past which their fierce legions have swept in the furious assault upon the very citadel—the existence of God. This shows plainly that the enemy have come to the conclusion that the miracles and prophecies and doctrines and ethics recorded in this book can not be hooted away nor reasoned away as long as the divine existence is back of them. In other words, it means that if God is then these things are. It means that the faith that settles the first five words of the Bible settles all minor questions. It means that if you believe that "in the beginning God created," then sooner or later you must come to a firm faith in all that follows. "I believe in God" contains the whole Christian creed. The foes of religion see this, and hence their terrible attack upon the first article of the Christian faith. They know, and we know, and everybody knows, that if a breach is made here all is lost. Now, the attitude of this book, in regard to this fierce conflict which is raging at this point, is one of the most extraordinary and remarkable things about the book. Though every line of thought which this book suggests, and every doctrine which it promulgates, and every history which it records, lead directly to God—though it begins with God and ends with God—though God shines on every page, and works through every chapter, and directs its whole movement from beginning to end, yet no where does this book propose to prove the existence of God. It is simply the statement of the relations between God and man and nature, and the history of the results coming out of those relations. God has given this statement and history to men, and he seems willing to abide the results of their promulgation to the world. And of one thing we are sure—God makes no mistakes.

Then, it seems to me, gentlemen of the Bible Society, that your plans and purposes and arrangements and work are in harmony with this will of the Lord, for you are sending out this history of God and man "without note or comment," and that is just exactly as the Lord gave it to the world. When it goes out "without note or comment," it tells of God as he has disclosed himself, and it tells of man as the all wise One has described him, and it tells of the relations between God and man as they really are. These are the things that need to be known. In order to elevation of mind and refinement of soul and nobleness of character, man must know himself; and this knowledge he can not obtain until he gets a clear conception of all his relations, and this conception brings him to the knowledge of God as he has revealed himself. The human mind is hungering after knowledge of God. Beneath the troubled surface of care and labor and disaster and bereavement, the heart of humanity throbs with desire to know God. The plain soul that makes known its desires at a throne of grace, is seeking God. The heathen in his blindness bows down to wood and stone, seeking God. The Indian, dreaming of his happy hunting grounds, is groping after God. The philosophor who patiently traces effects back to causes that he may find the final and first cause, is seeking God. The scientist, who, with his subtle analysis, takes the human frame to pieces that he may find and locate that unfathomable thing called life, which ever shrinks from the touch of his coarse fingers, is unconsciously seeking after God. I am aware that some put forth the idea that the world does not want God, and that it has been said quite lately that the Bible is a dead book. In face of this assertion, I read the other day that the American Bible Society has just set up a press on which an entire Bible can be printed every minute. In face of this assertion, shrewd and enterprising and money-making book-makers are acting as if the Bible was the most popular book on the market, for they are publishing it by thousands and millions of copies. If the assertion is true that the Bible is a dead book, where is the man that can explain the reason for the immense editions of revisions and translations that have gone out during the past year? Why these innumbered libraries of commentaries and lexicons and grammars and maps and encyclopedias, that are duplicating themselves over and over continually? Why should theological seminaries with their professorships and scholarships and endowments continue to spring up all over the land? Why do Christian churches continue to rise and point their spires to heaven? Why are Christian men and women going out in every direction in constantly increasing numbers to proclaim the story that is found nowhere but in this book? What sort of a death is that which puts to active and energetic work so many and such tremendous agencies as these? To these things speak of death? Nay verily! They speak of life, harvest and intense life, life increasing in power and widening in volume continually. The calm study of the civilization of the past century brings out the undeniable fact that this book has been the preponderating factor in that civilization; for it has been "the fountain of laws and the model of legislation and the guide of jurisprudence and the sum of literature" in all countries, making any pretensions to civilization. And yet it is said to be a dead book! The real truth of the matter is, that it is the only book the world ever saw that has any life at all. The spirit of the living God is in it, working through it and with it, and God "has magnified it above all his name," and he that adds to it adds to his own woes, and he that takes from it takes from his own joys.

What the Bible has done for men is a part of the history of the race, known of all who have read that history aright. In regard to its future, I have this thought to offer for your meditation. It is the opinion of competent judges that the English language will be the language of the world before another century passes by. This judgment is based upon the fact that since the beginning of the present century, the English speaking people have increased in numbers from twenty-four millions to eighty-one millions. Now where the English language goes, the English Bible goes—for it is the fountain of the language. The providence of God stereotyped the language forever in his own immutable word at the time when that language had matured its strength and purity. Where the Bible goes, will go the hatred of oppression and the love of liberty and the minister of God and the church of Christ and the Sunday-school and the education of the masses and the newspaper and all the other appliances for a high civilization. Then let it take "the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth." Deal it out, gentlemen, not niggardly, but with a free hand and in a rich abundance. Here is what men want! Here is what the race needs! What is it? Tidings. What sort of tidings? Good tidings. Good tidings of what? Good tidings of great joy. For whom? Good tidings of great joy to all people. What are these good tidings of great joy for all people? "Unto you is born a Saviour which is Christ the Lord." All former dispensations of mercy reached the climax of fulfillment in that word. All the hopes of the future are concentrated in that utterance. Oh, then, send it out, this blessed knowledge of a personal Saviour. Saw it everywhere. Scatter it besides all waters. Strew it in all the valleys. Spread it along all the hillsides. Cover the mountain tops. Here are tidings to man of God's great love, and of his helpful hand and of his abundant grace and of his tender sympathy. Send it out in haste, for men are dwelling in the shadows, minds are groping in darkness, hearts are pining for the light. Deal it out with a liberal hand. Bring your "gold and frankincense and myrrh" and offer them with glad hearts upon this altar. Pile them high that the fire of God may reach the sacrifice. Let the perfume of devoted love to God and sincere benevolence to man diffuse itself through the earth, and help to bring on that blessed time when men everywhere will rejoice in the abounding and enlarging blessings which flow from an open Bible.

—The Missouri Baptist General Association reports in that State 88,915 members, of whom 9,915 are colored. Among the white churches there were no less than 1,542 exclusions; among the colored, 315. The former baptized 5,062; the latter, 929.

—M. N. Wyckoff and family, recently appointed by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Church, to take charge of the Preparatory School in Yokohama, sailed for their destination on August 18.

Our Young People.

THE WIND AND THE ROSE.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

An Ancient Apologue.

A little red rose bloomed all alone,
In a hedge by the highway side;
And the wind came by with a pitying moan,
And thus to the flower cried:

"You are choked with the dust from the sandy sledge,
Now see what a friend can do!
I will pierce a hole in the tangled hedge
And let the breeze come through!"

"Nay, let me be!" said the rose in deep disdain;
But the wind is always rude and rough;
And of course it blew not in the little red rose's way.

And the breeze blew soft in the little red rose—
But now she was sore afraid;
For the naughty boys, the ancient foes—
Came through where the gap was made.

"I see," said the wind, when he came again,
And looked at the trembling flower,
"You are out of place; it is very plain
You are meant for a lady's bower!"

"Nay, let me be!" said the slumbering rose,
"No sorrow I ever had known
Till you came here to break my repose.
Now, please to let me alone!"

But the will of the wind is strong as death;
And little he cared her cries,
He plucked her up with his mighty breath,
And away to the town he flies.

Oh, all too rough was the wind's ride,
For a rose so weak and small;
And soon her leaves on every side
Began to scatter and fall.

"Now, what is this?" said the wondering wind,
As the rose in fragments fell;
"This paltry scent is all of mine—
I am sure I meant it well!"

"It means just this, that a meddling friend,"
Said the dying stalk, "is sure
To mar the matter he aimed to mend,
And kill where he meant to cure."

Our Young People's Work.

This pleasant letter from Miss Lochie Rankin was written for the Sunday School Visitor, but a stanch friend of the Woman's Missionary Advocate begged it "for our little missionary workers:"

DEAR CHILDREN: I wonder if you ever think of little Chinese girls taking pleasure-trips, and enjoying life as other people do. Last week I took ten of my smallest pupils with me to Kading, a walled city about eight miles from Nantzing. We started at noon, and I was so tired and sleepy that the uneasy rocking of the boat lulled me into forgetfulness most of the way. However, I was wide-awake and much refreshed by the time we reached Kading. A motley crowd met us at the landing, and escorted us to the parsonage, increasing almost every step; for a school of girls in this country is almost as big a curiosity as a foreign woman. Once inside the mission compound, I left my children in care of the pastor's wife, while I looked after the Kading school, and settled accounts for the month. When business was dispatched, we hurried home, stopping once to buy some sugar-cane for the little ones, who felt very much slighted because no one had offered them a bowl of tea. One of them very consolingly said, "Never mind, when we go to Suchow Mr. Rood will meet us with plenty of tea." Nothing could have been more delightful than the row home. Once beyond the city limits, I went ashore and walked until the falling dew and barking dogs drove me aboard. The evening stars began to peep down upon us, and little Eliza Mays said, when she went to heaven she would live among the stars. A little girl by her side asked her how she expected to get to heaven. "O," said she, "God will let down a long rope for me to take hold of, and draw me up." Everyone had something to say, and sometimes it seemed as though everyone was speaking at once. Suddenly, when conversation was at its highest, a little one wailed out, "O I ant so-o-o-o sick, so sea-sick!" There was silence immediately, and her dark eyes sparkled with merriment as she explained that she was suffering from mal de mer. Don't you think that was cute for a little Celestial only six years old? Lovingly yours,

LOCHIE RANKIN.

LOUISE HOME, CHINKIANG, Oct. 5, 1881.

JESUS ALWAYS.—A little girl went with her mother, a woman in lowly circumstances, as she had occasion to call on a wealthy lady in a neighboring city. The lady felt quite an interest in the child, and took her all over the house to show her all the beauties and wonders of her comfortable home. Much surprised at all she saw, the little thing exclaimed:

"Why, how beautiful! I am sure Jesus must love to come here, it is so pleasant. Doesn't he come here very often? He comes to our house, and we have no carpet at home. O how Jesus must love to come here!"

The hostess made no reply, and her visitor asked again:

"Doesn't Jesus come here very often?"

Then, with much emotion, the lady replied:

"I am afraid not."

That was too much for the child. She hastened to her mother and begged to be taken home, for she was afraid to stay in a house where Jesus did not come. That night the lady related to her husband the whole circumstance, and the question of the child went to the hearts of both husband and wife, and it was not long before Jesus was made a guest in their home.

A SAGACIOUS BEAR.—The captain of a Greenland whaler, being anxious to procure a bear without damaging the skin, made trial of the stratagem of laying down the noose of a rope in the snow and placing a piece of meat within it. A bear was soon enticed to the spot by the smell of the meat. He saw the bait, approached and seized it in his mouth, but his foot at the same time, by a jerk of the rope, got entangled in the noose; he pushed it off his paw and retired. After having eaten the piece of meat, which he carried away with him, he returned. The noose, with another bait, had been replaced; he pushed the rope aside and again walked off. A third time the noose was laid, but, quoted to more caution by the evident observation of the bear, the sailors buried the rope beneath the snow and laid the meat in a deep hole in the centre. Once more the bear approached, and the sailors were hopeful of their success; but bruin, more sagacious than they expected, after snuffling about the place for a few moments, scraped the snow away with his paw, threw the rope aside, and again escaped with his prize.—Sunday-School Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

Rev. J. W. Rush. Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt
Rev. C. B. Galloway. Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 20, 1882.

Canvassing for the Advocate.

1. This means direct and earnest effort to obtain subscribers, and to see that the old subscribers renew. 2. It means to urge the claims of the paper upon every family and every individual in the church, and to exhibit and commend it to those who belong to no church. 3. It means occasionally to publicly call attention of the congregation to the duty of supporting their church paper. Eleven o'clock on Sunday morning, and on quarterly meeting Sundays, is not too good a time for this notice of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. 4. It means that pastors, presiding elders and friends of the paper keep the interests of the paper in mind on all occasions and at all times, and that they let no opportunity slip of getting a subscriber, or of making the effort to get one. 5. It means that the ADVOCATE depends entirely upon the preachers and friendly readers—chiefly and almost wholly upon presiding elders and pastors—for its success. If they do not work for it diligently this most important and useful agent for promoting good morals, spiritual religion, and the prosperity of our church must, in a measure, fail of its great mission.

We hope the brethren will give attention to this matter; on the circuits, in the stations, and everywhere. The editor of the New York Christian Advocate says:

Large city churches are not often canvassed as they should be. The pastors think they are too busy, and it is thought that the people can attend to the matter themselves, or some one else is intrusted with the duty. If the pastors in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and the other large cities, would give a little more personal attention to this work it would be a good thing for the Christian Advocate, but far better for city Methodism. The disintegrating forces surrounding Methodism in cities can not be resisted without the aid of a paper, which will correct the errors of the secular and often of the outside religious press about Methodism, explain and defend its peculiarities, and give connectional information to the churches.

There are not many large cities in our bounds, but there are a good many small ones in which a searching canvass would result in bringing in many subscribers.

Prize Fighting.

We regret to see so much space given by our city press to advertising a contemplated prize fight, and to particular descriptions of the men who are to engage in it. It is given out that the fight is to take place at some point near the sea coast in the State of Mississippi. We are surprized that respectable journals do not denounce this brutal relic of a most hideous barbarism.

Instead of being advertised and commended, it ought to be condemned by journalists, and they should aid, with all their power, in putting down a thing so utterly shameful, lawless, and injurious to the good name and morals of the country. Our leading secular papers, so far as they give countenance to this inhuman, vulgar and brutal contest, are allying themselves with the roughs and criminal classes of society, and bring upon themselves the censure of all good and virtuous men. We have seen notices of this expected fight in our city papers calculated to stimulate interest and to make heroes of the men who are to be pitted against each other in the ring. If any word of condemnation has been uttered by any of them it has escaped our attention.

To allow this proposed outrage upon our Christian civilization to pass unrebuked, is in itself a sad comment upon the times in which we live; and more in keeping with the cruel paganism which tolerated and enjoyed the gladiatorial combats, than with the purer morals and refinement of the present age.

We are glad to find in one of the leading secular papers of Mississippi, the Daily Clarion, of Jackson, the following manly and straightforward notice of the contemplated prize fight:

We are informed that pugilists from the North, or elsewhere, are training at Mississippi City for a coming prize fight. It would seem that the intention of the managers of the affair is to have the affair take place on Mississippi soil. On such occasions, there is always a gathering of roughs who respect no law. As the coming affair has been canvassed for months, sporting so-called circles are greatly agitated over it and much money has been bet on the occasion. The seacoast of Mississippi is sparsely settled. Many of the men are away most of the time pursuing their avocations as fish and oyster men, leaving their little ones and wives at home unprotected. The advent of such a company is very undesirable. If Mississippi has no law to prevent such a violation of peace and order, the Legislature is in session, and there is time to frame a bill and pass it for that purpose. Meantime the conservators of the peace thereabouts should be on the look-out.

We are glad to notice that the Mississippi Legislature has, within the past day or two, passed a law against the nefarious practice, and prescribing severe penalties.

Getting Along.

How rapidly time changes the sentiments of men and communities, is now being well illustrated by the fact, that Dr. Haygood, editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, Macon, Ga., and generally talked of for the bishopric, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is now lecturing to large and appreciative audiences in Boston and vicinity. The doctor is lecturing for the benefit of the People's Church of that city, where it is publicly announced that not only will colored people be welcomed in any pews, but white and colored people will be married at its altars, when they desire.—Central.

We clip the above, except the heading, from the Southwestern Christian Advocate, as credited to "Central." Whether the Central Christian Advocate, published at St. Louis, is intended we do not know. We suspect Dr. Haygood's doings are somewhat misrepresented. We hardly think he is in favor of miscegenation. The fact that he lectured for "the People's Church" does not, we hope, commit him to all the views and usages of that particular church.

Dr. Haygood seems to have gone to Boston to enlighten the Northern mind in regard to the South, and the true inwardness of the negro, and not to place himself upon the platform of Gilbert Haven and other fanatical extremists. Times may change the sentiments of men and communities, but not more in the South than in the North. In some things, at least, Dr. Haygood's mission will have given to Boston new and better views concerning the South.

Perishing Not Alone.

It is the testimony of inspired wisdom that "one sinner destroyeth much good." Of Achan it is written: "And that man perished not alone in his iniquity." It is not possible for one man to sin without, in some degree, affecting others. Achan involved his family and all Israel in trouble. This historical incident illustrates what may be the effects of a single great transgression upon a church, or upon a community and people, and also how the head of a house may bring sorrow, shame, poverty and even death upon his family.

Ordinarily we can connect temporal misfortunes in the community and in the family with the malice, dishonesty and vice of individuals. There is a process of judgment going on in this world, and companies, families and masses of people suffer along with those who are the leading and flagrant offenders. "Wrath fell on all the congregation of Israel" because of Achan. This led to the discovery of the transgressor, and to the exposure of his crime. The congregation must put away this evil, and the end of its suffering was largely reached, when the golden wedge and the Babylonish garment and the silver shekels were uncovered, and the criminal was punished.

There is a purpose of this sort in the necessary connection in society of general suffering with individual crime. It puts society on the alert to seek out the offenders, and to bring the lawless to justice. Society is at least thus far responsible—sometimes it may be for the crime, but always for the due punishment of crime. Gamblers, prostitutes, whisky dealers, and the perpetrators of great financial frauds, involve the entire community in the consequences of their sins. Society must arrest them, punish them, and put away these evils, or continue to suffer. These evil doers may fall by the sword of justice, but even then they do not perish alone. Multitudes are dragged down with them.

In the individual relations and influences of evil doers, it is true that no man perishes alone in his iniquity. He goes to hell for his own sin, and he draws down with him others. The good he destroys, the souls he ruins, depend upon the position he occupies, and the business he may be engaged in. Sinners in high places, as magistrates, legislators, presidents, Congressmen, or men of wealth, leading merchants, and those who shape the course of fashionable society, are specially responsible. A godless woman possessed of wealth and beauty, a man of brilliant talent and fortune without virtue, a highly gifted person, in literature, politics, science, and yet known as the enemy of Christ; what a wreck of goodness do they not leave in their paths, and what a vast companionship, have they not in their final destruction?

Are there any so obscure, and so utterly separated from others, that it is possible for them to live and die in their sins, and involve none else in their ruin? The path in which they move may be exceedingly narrow, but it touches some souls, and with sufficient force to bring upon them a moral blight. Our young people are being educated and confirmed in sin by the example of older persons, by their employers, and by those who are prominent in business, in public affairs and in society. In the family the parents can not be alone in sin, neither do they usually perish alone in their iniquity. The godless father and mother will generally have sad company in the awful shadows of perdition. They have not been criminal nor vicious, but they were not Christians. They never confessed Christ, they loved the world, raised their children for the world, and at last, after a brilliant course here perhaps, father, mother, sons and daughters go down together.

A death-bed repentance can not undo these terrible consequences of a Christless and sinful life. The old sinner has sent many victims down before him. His repentance comes too late to reach them, and those whom he may leave behind may shape their course by his living influence rather than by the cloudy profession of the final hour. We can not understand why the rich man in the parable should desire to keep his five brethren out of hell, unless it was the fact that their ruin would intensify his own torment. By his example and influence they were without God in the world, and in danger of the unquenchable fire. However true it may be, about misery loving company in this world; and sin loving company also, it can not be the case in hell. And yet it is this element of suffering that every impenitent sinner is adding to his own final sorrow. He can not, if he would, perish alone in his iniquity. He has been the means of bringing wrath upon others, and a company is swallowed up with him.

This inevitable influence for evil, the destruction of good, the ruin of other souls, ought to silence the voice of the procrastinator, and to confound all who would delay repentance. This single consideration should suffice to bring decision to every halting soul; and, especially, should it incite negligent and worldly professors to faithful service, and to come out strongly on the Lord's side. The sinner in the church does more harm than any other. He will carry down with him a larger company than any other sinner. The worldly-minded, pleasure-loving, mammon-worshiping professor will not perish alone in his iniquity. Souls in the church and out of it will be overthrown by his example. He is the most fatal of all stumbling blocks, and, of all sinners, the destroyer of the most good.

There can not be one lost soul by itself. There never is. Souls die in companies, they pull each other down, they perish in clusters. They are linked together in their ruin, and around each one is gathered a cloud of living woe, and an atmosphere filled with the breath and tongues and look of spirits lost. Of every man that dies in his sins, whatever his position in the world, it may be written as truthfully as of him who troubled Israel: "And that man perished not alone in his iniquity."

Save the Sabbath.

The perpetuity of the Sabbath depends upon its recognition as a divine institution, and that its observance is made obligatory by the will and appointment of God. Those who advocate the largest liberty in regard to its observance will not deny that we are indebted to the Bible, and to the revealed law of God, for the Sabbath. The most enlightened heathen have no such day, and never had. But if God has given us the Sabbath, he has also given the manner of its observance. It is a holy day, consecrated, hallowed, and must be kept holy. If we let go these positions in regard to the Sabbath the institution will soon perish. It will not be long before there will be no Sabbath in the world.

Some of the secular papers occasionally come out with oracular deliverances on the subject, claiming for the day the character of a day of recreation and pleasure. It is to be a play-day rather than a religious day. These writers are apparently willing to accept the Sabbath without acknowledging the Divine origin of it, and they utterly ignore the authority that has prescribed the manner of its observance. They take the Sabbath of the Bible, and of Christianity, and, with culpable ignorance and sacrilegious effrontery, pervert it from its divinely appointed end as a day of rest and religious worship, and turn it into a day of revelling, pleasure, or what you will. They seem to forget that God, by special revelation, has given us the day, and indicated the manner and objects of its observance; and they are strangely blind to the fact that when the Sabbath ceases to be a divine institution, and its observance morally obligatory, the institution itself ceases to exist.

If we may make it a day of pleasure, of excursions, of games, we may also make it a day of labor. Play-day for some necessarily makes it a work-day for others, and thus at length it may become a work-day for all. Unsettle and destroy the conviction that the Sabbath is a religious day, divinely instituted, and we undermine the foundations on which it stands. This seeming liberal view, advocated avowedly in the interests of the poor and the laboring classes, tends finally to deprive them of a day of rest. Of all men, the poor and the laboring classes are most interested in maintaining the sanctity of the Sabbath. It is their only hope of preserving a day of exemption from toil.

The encroachments upon the Sabbath as a day of rest, under this merely secular view of its character, are increasing at a fearful rate. The railroads, with their myriads of employees, pay no regard to the day. In the busier seasons of the year our great commercial ports are alive with the movement and transfer of freights. The Sabbath is shrewdly utilized in travel, and extra trains and extra steamers are brought into use to accommodate the demand of the multitudes bent on recreation or business. In law Sunday is a dies non, but the work done on this day is enormous, and increases fearfully. The drift is to strip the day of its Divine origin and sanction, and thus at length to deprive the laborer of his rest, and the world of its Sabbath. Those who advocate the appropriation of the day to mere amusements and play, and those who devote it to these purposes, are undermining the ground on which they stand, and are overthrowing the institution which they claim to liberalize and support. If the Sabbath is not a religious institution, and its religious observance morally binding upon us, the flood of secularism and human greed will soon swallow it up.

The recognition of the Christian Sabbath, in our civil constitutions and laws, may be based upon other than religious grounds. But the Christian must take his stand clearly, and without reservation, on the Sabbath as of Divine appointment and obligation. Its benefits to the mind and body, and to the business interests, are manifest. Working people need its rest, and are entitled to it. But these arguments of high expediency will at length be overridden by the tyranny of capital and sharp competition, and the maddening strife for riches. As Christians, and as Christian ministers, we must plant ourselves upon the solid rock of Divine authority. This is the only way in which the Sabbath can be rescued from the destroying hand of a secularizing vandalism, and saved to the world. It is easy to show that devoting the day to recreation makes it, for the most part, a day of exhausting dissipation, the farthest possible from a day of rest, and that it opens the way to deprive the laborer of his right to this one day of repose. But this argument will not be heeded until it is too late.

The Christian church must insist upon the Sabbath of the Bible, as the Lord's day, and as divinely hallowed, and set apart for religious purposes chiefly. It must take decided grounds against making it a day of pleasure or of business, and insist upon its observance as a matter of good morals and piety. The mind and conscience of religious people have lost much of their clearness and tenderness in regard to the obligations of the Sabbath. We are in favor of Sunday laws as promoting the general welfare, and as based upon the right of all men to a day of rest. But, as Christian teachers and believers, we must place our reverence and observance of the Sabbath upon the express warrant of God's word, and as commanded by the moral law. In church discipline Sabbath-breaking should rank with other immoralities, and be treated with the same severity. Before the world can be reformed, the church and Christian people must teach clearly, and set a consistent example.

Mississippi Notes.

Our Legislature now in session has enough bills on the calendar for a half year's constant and careful work. If one-tenth are passed there will scarcely be left a vestige of the code of 1880. We have only to fear too much legislation; but, with a good proportion of experienced and conservative men in both houses, the breaks will be whistled down at the proper time. The subject of immigration is uppermost. Strong effort will be made to secure a large appropriation and an aggressive commission. Here great care should be observed. Mere numbers do not bring prosperity. Population of the right sort—those who would readily assimilate—should be welcomed. But an indiscriminate, heterogeneous influx of peoples, from every nationality and every point of the compass, may prove to be a calamity and a curse.

The finances of the State are in good condition, but if half the suggested appropriations are made, instead of plethora, there will be "cleanness of teeth." Of one thing we are sure: taxes must be increased or these bills must be killed. Well, yes, there is another remedy—drive whisky out of the State.

The local-option bill, introduced in the early part of the session, is still in the hands of the special Committee on Temperance. Though we have strong friends in both houses, it is feared little will be done in response to the loud appeal of a large number, if not majority, of the citizens of Mississippi. Some are pro-whisky, pronounced and zealous. None, we hope, however, as in other days, hold their seats by the grace of the bar-rooms. Though we have known political slates made up in the back rooms of doggeries that swept on to victory like a whirlwind. The good Christian people seemed to be fully satisfied, and gave them hearty support. The distinguishing feature of the bill above mentioned is, that the question of license or no license shall be determined by a vote at the ballot-box in each municipality or supervisors district. Under our present law license to retail is granted to individuals on a petition signed by a majority of the legal voters in a town or district. This law works badly. Opportunities for fraud are so numerous that temperance people can do almost nothing. We have known license granted on fraudulent petitions containing the names of parties who had been long dead, of others who resided in distant States, of others who were not legal voters, and others who never had an existence. Indeed, it is doubted if one in a thousand is a strictly honest petition, complying fully with the letter and spirit of the law. But when a vote is taken, and the question decided at the ballot-box, the rights of all will be respected, and the wishes of the majority will be carried out.

Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, is now visiting the towns of Mississippi. She spent several days at the capital, and delivered two addresses in the Representatives' Hall. They were really extraordinary efforts of argument and eloquence. With a modesty, grace and beauty characteristic of the true woman she enchained her large audiences for nearly an hour each evening. Her work is especially among the ladies, which she is prosecuting most earnestly and successfully. Miss Willard is hereby commended to all communities who love the great cause of temperance reform. She is a lady of rare culture and sweet Christian character. This writer esteems it a distinguished privilege to have known her and heard her eloquent advocacy of our righteous cause. In style, manner, modesty, appearance and grace she resembles the highest type of a Southern woman.

CONFERENCE EDUCATIONAL BOARD.

At the last session of the Mississippi Conference the following were appointed a Board of Education: J. A. Ellis, W. L. C. Hunnicutt, W. C. Black, R. D. Norsworthy, C. B. Galloway, W. L. Nugent and George Wood. On the seventh of January the following, a majority being in the city of Jackson, were called together for permanent organization: J. A. Ellis, W. L. C. Hunnicutt, C. B. Galloway and W. L. Nugent. Col. W. L. Nugent was elected chairman, and C. B. Galloway secretary. The chairman and secretary were appointed a committee to prepare and issue a circular on the plans and work of the board. The secretary invites correspondence on all educational matters. It is hoped that this board will be able to provide teachers for our several communities establishing high schools, and do something in the direction of encouraging and unifying our educational systems. The preachers can largely aid in this good work by advising the secretary as to the condition and needs of their several communities.

The new pastor in charge of Warren circuit is our genial brother, W. W. Hurst, but, strange coincidence or paradox, at one appointment his name was thought to be Hush. The church and especially the children, were all anxiety to see for the first time their pastor of the silent name. It has not transpired, however, that they considered his, like the old Hebrew names, prophetic, or whether Hush indicated his unknown silence or the fact that all others must hush when Bro. Hush came into the neighborhood. So fixed was this provoking mistake that presiding elder Woodward had to spell over the name slowly and distinctly to a number of inquiring friends. There is something in a name therefore, and our special friend will pardon this bit of pleasantry. C. H. G.

About Shanghai.

The Richmond Christian Advocate has a valuable correspondent in Rev. W. W. Royall. Bro. Royall, as our readers know, is one of our missionaries in China. He has a fresh eye to see things, and a pen that can describe them. We quote from a late letter:

But let us turn awhile from these disagreeable things, and look at some of the really beautiful things that English and American enterprise has secured for Shanghai. In the first place you seldom see more beautifully cleaned and macadamized streets than are those here. By the way, they are all called "roads," except on the French side. Then, between the main drive along the river front and the river itself, there is a long plat of beautiful grass, and at one end of it—the northern end—there is a garden, beautifully laid off, well kept, and full of the loveliest flowers. In its center there is a pavilion, and in this pavilion a fine band discourses several times a week for the entertainment of the public.

Let us go in. There are plenty of seats, and we can be quite at our ease. There are a hundred or more children here with their amahs, or nurses, and the little ones are full of life and fun, playing about in groups, or walking around on the green grass. We sit here and watch the steamers, tugs and junks go past. Presently the band strikes up. They play well, do these little shriveled up fellows, whose hair is as straight as an Indian's, and whose yellow and thin faces look not unlike a monkey's. They are from Manilla, in the Philippine Islands, and they look a little like Japanese. Dear, dear, how many ugly people there are in the world, to be sure!

But shut your eyes and listen a moment, and you can almost fancy yourself back at Randolph Macon in the chapel, while the boys are promenading and talking to their sweethearts on commencement night. Yes, the tune is our old friend, the "Reiter Galop," and it certainly carries one back to old scenes at Ashland. You open your eyes and gaze away down the river to the northeast and say, Home is over there. Ah me!

But let us turn now and go up one of these beautifully-kept roads that leads westerly out of the city. This one is the "Mo Loo" or Horse Road, so named by the Chinese on account, perhaps, of the great number of vehicles constantly traversing it. This leads to the Bubbling Well Road, and that in its turn leads out to the most beautiful part of the city. Elegant residences, surrounded by pretty lawns and hurried in beautiful shrubbery, line this road for some two miles, nearly. At the end is the famous Bubbling Well, quite a curiosity in its way. Gas is constantly escaping from the water and creates a constant succession of bubbles on the surface. There is a temple on one side and a tea-shop on the other. It is a great resort for Chinese.

But let us retrace our steps and go in to the more business part of the city. We pass the race-course, then the Racquet Court, and get down into the city again. Let us go into this tea-hiring establishment. It is in a large Chinese house, which, like all Chinese houses, seems made up of a series of long, low buildings, one behind the other, with alleys and courts between. In this first one there are some score of girls and women who are picking the tea; that is, getting out the sticks and stems, and retaining only the leaf. How rapidly and how well they do it. Just see that little girl who can stare at the ngah-kwoh ngang and work at the same time. See how she dishes a handful of tea off of the pile by a little quick motion of the left hand, and then picks out the leaves and puts them into a pile. Next we go where they are sifting it. A man takes a few gallons of tea leaves and rolls them from side to side on a seive. The small rolls, such as you see them at home, fall through, and the large ones are put into another grade of tea. Now back there you see the uncolored and the colored tea. What a difference? The colored certainly looks prettier, but just see how it is done. Yonder are some twenty or thirty iron pots over a charcoal fire. A lot of tea is put in them while they are hot, and a man stands by and stirs it with his hands that it may dry evenly. The coloring matter is now put in, and when it comes out it will be beautiful green tea. But after all the groans of horror some have made over the adulteration of tea, I am bound to confess that I have drank at home what was to me equal as good tea as I have so far met here. The English who are always doing something cranky, are very fond of a kind of tea that reminds me forcibly of tar-water or juniper shingles. It is called the English Breakfast tea, I believe. De gustibus, however, which may be (very) freely translated, "Dont be suprised at anything people choose to eat!" The fact is, that if it were not for the dispepsia of it, a good cup of coffee is worth all the tea.

But what China would do without tea I am sure I can not tell. The people dare not drink the water, they can not afford to use milk and sugar, they have, happily, no great supply of drinkable wines, else that and opium might make a finish of this people; and so tea is universally drunk. In summer, especially, every one must have his pot of tea always at hand. Rice is cheap. And so these poor coolies get a few cash worth of rice and a cup of tea, followed by a pipe and a little gambling, and they are happy. Oh, how my heart bleeds for them sometimes! Poor souls, poor souls!

The Present Spell in Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Beyond all dispute, this is a very remarkable spell of weather. As man and beast live in and very largely by the weather it should not be regarded as a common-place topic for tongue or for pen. Railroads and steamboats, commerce and agriculture, preaching and praying, living and dying, depend largely on the weather. For sixteen days and nights, up to date, we have had clouds and rain, more or less, oftener more than otherwise. The drops from the eaves have pattered their drowsing lullaby into our ears, through gloomy nights and somber days, till we scarce know whether we be awake or asleep. To cross the streets in some towns is undertaking it diligently, and to walk the sidewalks even is a perilous feat of prolonged dexterity. The roads are endless belts not of mud, but of slop and slush, that a trotting horse will scatter for forty feet in every direction. Weatherwise people have been prophesying that it would clear off at the change of the moon. The moon changed day before yesterday, but the weather did not. Clouds and rain and smoky dimness linger around us still. Somebody is said to have demonstrated that all changes of the weather take place within three and a half days of the new, full or quartering moon. I do not question the fact. Water courses are getting very high. Well, I do not know a better time for such a rainy season than this; and doubtless this is the best kind of weather for January, 1882.

The Clarion, Jackson, Miss., of January 17, says:

Miss Francis E. Willard, President National Women's Christian Temperance Union, home at Evanston, Ill., was received very favorably in this and delivered one of the most earnest, eloquent and forcible addresses that was spoken in the representatives hall. Her voice is melody itself and the distinctness about it that is unrivaled. Her mission is one of religion and philanthropy, and no cause ever had a more worthy or efficient representative. She traveled through the South last spring, and by letters, addresses, etc., in the North, has done much to bring the section to a better understanding of the Southern people. At the conclusion of her address, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That this assemblage of the citizens of this Commonwealth, have listened with profound gratification to the eloquent address of Miss. Frances Willard on the theme of Temperance, and beg to tender to her our grateful thanks for the rare and inspiring tribute to the momentous subject.

Resolved, That we cheerfully commend her to the kindly sympathies and social hospitality of our fellow citizens of the South wherever her duties may direct her steps, and we bid her a hearty God speed in her noble mission.

Referring to the mission work of the Northern Methodists in Mexico, Zion's Herald says:

There is an evident growth of stability in our work at Mexico City. A recent account from the superintendent says: 'Our people are more constant in their attendance; they seem more earnest for the salvation of their friends and neighbors, and evince more regard for the influence of their daily life than I have ever seen in them before. I think this is largely due to the excellent work being done by Mrs. Butler among the women. Her Bible class in the Sabbath-school now averages over forty, while the attendance upon her prayer-meetings is about fifty, and the Women's Mutual Aid Society has now sixty-six active members.' In the three out-of-town congregations the people have suffered continual persecution, often of the severest form, but in the midst of it all they have shown a true martyr courage.

In Mexico at large, the number of citizens of our church is estimated, after careful inquiry, at from four to sometimes the average attendance is that is, at from four to five thousand, though the numbers reported through various church agencies are many times greater.

DEATH OF MRS. JOHN A. ELLIS.—Last week we noticed the reported death of this estimable lady. The following note from Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, Meridian, Miss., January 24, confirms the sad tidings. May God support the bereaved husband and other kindred. An obituary just received, written by Rev. R. J. Jones, will appear in the ADVOCATE of next week.

Mrs. S. M. Ellis, wife of our brother, Rev. John A. Ellis, of the Mississippi Conference, died, at the residence of her son, J. M. T. Hamilton, one mile east of Meridian, on Monday, December 26, 1881. She had suffered long and greatly, but patiently. Sister Ellis was a useful Christian woman, and has done much good in life. I suppose in due time an obituary will be furnished by one selected for the work.

Rev. R. P. Mitchell, writing from Aberdeen, Miss., January 20, says:

My charge, Aberdeen station, is doing very well, considering the bad weather. The rain interferes materially with congregations, etc. I have only been here about two months, have a good Sunday-school, and have organized a class meeting that is doing well. We are looking for a revival. Bishop Paine is very feeble indeed; has not left his room since our Conference.

We regret to learn from the note of Bro. Mitchell that Bishop Paine, the venerable and the beloved, is in such feeble health. We are sure that the thoughts of the church are turned toward him, and that prayer is made continually for him. May his soul be graciously sustained and refreshed by the presence and comfort of the Holy Spirit. It is the earnest desire and cherished hope of all that our senior Bishop may be able to attend the General Conference in May next.

Rev. Inman W. Cooper, writing from Greensburg, La., January 19, says: "On my return my people gave me a most cordial reception, and, in a few days after, the stewards met and made a most liberal assessment. The parsonage has been thoroughly repaired since my return. Bro. Little, our elder, will live in our town. We are delighted to have him. The Colored Methodist Church has a parsonage here, and in sight of my home. Our Baptist friends are building their pastor a home."

A Wesleyan Methodist minister, writing from Sheffield, England, enclosing subscription for two years, says: "We all look out so eagerly for your paper that we could not do without it now. The children are immensely fond of it, and I like them to grow up with some sort of knowledge of the best people on the other side of the 'Herring Pond.'"

—Last Sunday morning it was our privilege to worship with the Carondelet Street congregation of this city.

The Sunday school seems to be prospering under its experienced and devoted superintendent, Bro. R. M. Walmsley. In the room devoted to the adult Bible class we found the veteran teacher, Bro. Wm. Sherry, in the midst of a large class, expounding the lesson of the day. For forty years Bro. Sherry has been in charge of the Bible class, and, although verging on four score years, his eye is not dimmed, and his natural force—certainly his mental and spiritual force—not abated.

The congregation was large, reminding us of palmy days twenty years ago. After the sermon by the pastor, Rev. Felix R. Hill, three young men, who had been converted in the prayer meeting on the previous Wednesday night, were received into the church in due form. We were gratified to notice that the question, "Will you be subject to the discipline of the church, attend upon its ordinances and support its institutions?" was emphasized, and explained in its bearings upon popular amusements forbidden by our rules.

Bro. Hill informed us that there were conversions at nearly every prayer meeting, and a goodly number of seekers at the altar. This charge seems to be prospering spiritually and in every good way.

—Rev. J. Lane Borden, President of Mansfield Female College, arrived in New Orleans on the second day of the late Conference session. He was taken ill on his way, and was very sick during the Conference and for some time after the adjournment. Last Saturday, January 21, he was so far convalescent as to be able to leave on the Maria Louise for Shreveport. Bro. Borden's illness was greatly regretted by the members of the Conference and his friends in New Orleans. We hope to hear of his safe arrival at home, and of his rapid and complete recovery.

His position as President of the College at Mansfield is very important, and attended with much care and hard work. The Conference very heartily approved of his administration, and resolved to sustain him in his arduous duties. He should have the earnest co-operation and help of the Methodists of Louisiana in the way of patronage, and also of financial aid. He was authorized to raise funds for improving and repairing the College buildings. Let the friends of female education rally to him with enthusiasm.

The railroad now gives access to Mansfield, and the College has before it a very prosperous future. If our people will do their duty towards it, it will be an honor to the church and a blessing to the country.

—We learn by telegram that Mrs. J. M. Jordan, of Shreveport, La., died on Sunday morning, January 22. Sister Jordan was for many years a consistent and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. During the Editor's pastorate in Shreveport thirty years ago, and also during the war, she was a most devoted and efficient helper in church work. Last Winter, at Conference in Shreveport, we were among her guests. She was still a very devoted Christian, and greatly interested in all our church affairs. We have no doubt that the final summons found her ready. Her pastor will no doubt furnish an obituary notice soon. We tender our sympathy to the bereaved kindred.

—Our Sunday school periodicals for February are out in good time. We would urge our Sunday schools to lay in a liberal supply. The first thing for a hibernating school to do, on thawing out, should be to order a supply of the Magazine, Visitor, Quarterly, and Little People. Willresloves, and a supply of our Southern Methodist Sunday school literature, no school would be likely to go into Winter quarters.

—The Bible address of Dr. C. W. Carter, delivered at the recent anniversary of the Southwestern Bible Society, will be found on our third page. We do not often publish anything as long as this address, but its merits fully justify a departure, in this instance, from our customary rule.

—Vaccination is the order of the day. Small-pox appears to be spreading in the North and West. All should, without delay, be vaccinated. If all were vaccinated the dreaded and loathsome disease would never reach an epidemic form. No matter how many times you have been vaccinated; have it done again and again.

—We are sorry to learn that Rev. G. T. Vickers, of the Mississippi Conference, is sick at his home in Covington, La., with small-pox. There are a few cases in that town, but the disease seems to be confined to one house—the Wilson House.

—Rev. Dr. T. S. West, presiding elder of Senshare district, Mississippi Conference, gave us a brief call this week. His large district keeps him busy. Its affairs are opening well.

—Bishop Wightman at last accounts was no better. He is very feeble.

DUELING IN VIRGINIA.—There is a bill before the Legislature of Virginia, says the Southern Christian Advocate, for the relief of certain office holders of the Old Dominion, who have violated the law against dueling. The bill will pass and those trespassers will be relieved accordingly. Each party—Funder or Readjuster—can rely on the other for help in this matter. The leaders of both parties are criminal, and the Legislature must become so for the sake of the cause. And so they will; but not without the remonstrance of a number of citizens of Richmond, who show what manner of men they are by their brave and honorable protest. We put it on record in justice to the public opinion of the better class of our Virginia fellow citizens, on the simple ground of common intelligence, it is difficult to justify a code which permits a man to denounce his neighbor as a scoundrel and then to accept a challenge from him because it is a satisfaction which one gentleman may not withhold from another. But we rest the case on much higher grounds. Dueling, as every one knows, is a palpable violation of the great moral law which the Most High has ordained for the government of his intelligent creatures, and which furnishes the basis for the civil institutions. It is a plain infraction of a Virginia statute which visits with heavy penalties the sending or accepting of a challenge, or any participation whatever in a duel, and is condemned by the Constitution of the State. If any of our citizens have been placed at a disadvantage by this enactment it is because they have knowingly and deliberately set it at defiance. The difficulties now standing in the way of enforcing anti-dueling laws make it all the more important that persons contending them should not be relieved from political disabilities, which at present afford to the State her only means of teaching the evil-disposed to respect her authority. Dueling is a relic of a bygone and semi-enlightened age, and is repugnant to the advanced moral sentiment of the present day. We verily believe the practice is held in reprobation by a vast majority of the Virginia public, but should your honorable bodies relieve offenders from their disabilities the act would give resemblance to the reproach sometimes cast upon us from abroad, that dueling is not condemned by public opinion in our State. It is to be presumed that the statute against dueling was enacted for the purpose of preventing the practice; but it is clear that no such object can be obtained if those violating the law are relieved from all the penalties attached to the injunction.

The Natchez Democrat says that sixty miles of the N. J. & C. Railroad are now open for traffic, and trains running thereon. This takes the road within six miles of Utica, in Hinds county. From the present terminus of the road, to Jackson, the distance is thirty-eight miles, and most of the road bed is already graded and ready for the rails. As soon as the road reaches Utica, which will be soon after the completion of the Big Bayou Pierre bridge, two trains will be run daily between Natchez and Utica.—Jackson Clarion.

—Dr. Schliemann, who is now in Berlin superintending his collections, has received the very unusual honor of "Honorary citizenship." Bismarck and Von Moltke are the only other persons living who share the distinction with him.

Books and Periodicals.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE METHODIST ECUMENICAL CONFERENCE, held in City Road Chapel, London, September 1881. Introduction by Rev. William Arthur, M. A. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House.

An Octavo of 432 pages, printed in excellent style, and substantially bound in cloth. Price $1 50 sent by mail to any address. Those desiring to purchase in quantities will be supplied at special rates. Our Publishing House at Nashville is now ready to fill orders for the work. It is not necessary for us to commend the book. The proceedings are here in full, and free from those many typographical errors which disfigured them as first published by the press. Of course the Methodists generally will want the work. It contains many essays, speeches and discussions of great merit. It is the record of a most notable event in Methodist history.

We have received the January number of the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, the oldest, as it is the best, agricultural journal in the Southern States. It is now published by Jas. P. Harrison & Co., of Atlanta. Dr. W. L. Jones, for years the editor of this popular journal, retains his position; Dr. J. S. Lawton is the associate. Under this management, the Southern Cultivator will not only maintain its former high standard, but, with the assistance of ample capital and increased facilities, and contributions from the most eminent and popular writers on Agriculture in this country, will attain a higher standing than ever.

The number before us is a gem. No journal of its kind can excel it in the value of its reading matter, the beauty of its illustrations, and its adaption to the demands of progressive Southern agriculture. The illustrated title page is the finest of the kind we have ever seen. The Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer should be read and studied by every farmer and planter in the South. The terms, $1 50 a year, with special rates for clubs, are remarkably low. We advise our farmer friends to subscribe for it.

—The Century for February 1882—mid winter number—is a very fine number of this splendid monthly. For frontispiece we have an excellent portrait of our handsome and gifted friend, George W. Cable. The articles are: The Tile Club Ashore, illustrated; Bro. Stolz's Beat, illustrated; To A Dead Woman—Emorado—A Play in Four Parts; Hermes Trismegistus; The Superlative, Daniel Webster; Lovers in the Tropics; The Phidian Age of Sculpture, illustrated; Frederick W. Robertson, with portrait and autograph; The Night Wind; Significant Aspects of the Atlanta Exposition; In Exile; A Modern Instance, No. 3; Invocation; The Proposed National Library Building; Regret; Through One Administration, 4; George W. Cable; Euphemia Among the Pelicans; Editorial Departments, including Topics of the Time, Communications, Home, and Society, The World's Work, Bric-a-Brac.

—The Magazine of Art, February 1882, is a very fine number of this splendid monthly. The engravings are numerous, many of them full-page and very beautiful. The Winter scenes are specially excellent. Among the illustrated articles are: The Mountain of the Holy Cross, Colorado; A Pioneer of the Palette, Thomas Moran; A Chat about Bells; The Grandfather's Blessing; The Decoration of a Yacht; Ford Castle; The Manchester Rural Paintings; The Hill Collections; The Palmer Exhibition; Canossa, 1077; Winter. Besides these illustrated articles are: The Beauty of the Fields; Memories of the Year's Art; Art Notes; American Art Notes.

Published by Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co., London, Paris and New York. Yearly subscription $3 50.

—The North American Review, February, 1882, has the following articles. 1. Do the spoils belong to the Victors, President Andrew D. White. 2. A Remedy for Railway Abuses, Isaac I. Rice. 3. Repudiation in Virginia, Senator John W. Johnston. 4. The Lancet and the Law, Henry Bergh. 5. The Christian Religion, part 3, Prof. George P. Fisher.

—The forthcoming number of Christian Philosophy Quarterly will contain a brilliant lecture by Prof. Young, of Princeton, on "Astronomical facts and fancies," delivered before the American Institute of Christian Philosophy.

—American Agriculturist for February is splendidly illustrated, and filled with useful information.

NOTICE.—The district stewards of the New Orleans district, of the Louisiana Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will convene January 30, at seven P. M., in the pastor's office at Carondelet Street Church. Let the district steward be present from each charge. The following apportionments are to be distributed to the several charges in the district, viz.: For foreign missions, $1,350; for domestic missions, $350; for Conference claimants, $1,400; for Bishops, $300; for education, $300; for presiding elder, [illegible].

CHRISTIAN KEENER, P. E.

East Texas Conference.

APPOINTMENTS.

MARSHALL DISTRICT.—S. M. Turner, P. E. Marshall station, J. R. Wages, J. B. Tullis, supernumerary; Harrison circuit, F. J. Browning, D. Morse, supernumerary; Hallville, H. M. Booth; Elysian Fields, W. H. Ardis; Longview circuit, D. P. Cullen; Mineola and Harris Chapel, J. A. Stafford; Bellview, G. A. Loclere, W. H. Crawford, Jr.; Henderson station, J. M. Truitt; Overton and Troupe circuit, A. Little; Starrville circuit, C. H. Smith; Carden Valley circuit, J. F. Henderson; Canton circuit, J. R. D. Taylor; Prairieville, P. O. Tunnell; Alexander Institute, Isaac Alexander.

PALESTINE DISTRICT.—John Adams, P. E. Tyler, U. B. Phillips, W. N. Bonner, supernumerary; Trinity circuit, M. E. Blocker; Athens, J. T. Murrish; Kickapoo circuit, T. T. Booth; Palestine station, R. S. Finley; West Palestine circuit, J. C. Woolam; Palestine circuit, J. P. Rogers; Crockett circuit, L. C. Crouse; Crockett and Augusta station, J. W. Johnson; Lovelady circuit, H. R. Holton; Mount Vernon circuit, E. T. Hrashier; Rusk circuit, E. F. Boone; Jacksonville circuit, L. M. Fowler, E. P. Rogers, supernumerary; Larissa circuit, T. P. Smith; Bible Agent, J. C. Huckaboo.

SAN AUGUSTINE DISTRICT.—H. A. Swaney, P. E. San Augustine and Nacodoches station, J. L. Dawson, A. D. Parks, supernumerary; San Augustine mission, I. N. Bridges; Melrose, J. M. Mills; Douglas mission, R. Monofee; Linn Flat, J. B. Hall; Pleasant Grove, G. D. Wilson; Pine Hill, J. S. Mathis; Carthage station, W. B. Patterson; Carthage circuit, J. M. Carter; Concord, to be supplied by Haston Twomey; Buena Vista, D. S. Watkins; Shelby, J. T. Smith; D. W. Towns, supernumerary; Milam, J. M. Smith; Bible Agent, J. M. Bond.

BEAUMONT DISTRICT.—R. H. Thompson, P. E. Beaumont and Orange station, F. M. Stovall; Liberty, R. M. Sprotule; Grand Cane mission, to be supplied (by J. T. Browning); Livingston, Lacy Hoone; Moscow, to be supplied (by Charles H. Martin); Barsola, D. M. Stovall; Homer, H. A. Thomason; Woodville, H. H. Vaughan; Spurgerville mission, R. M. Kirby; Jasper, W. W. Bridwell; Newton, M. Monogan; Sabine Pass and Honble Bayou mission, Thomas Wilson.

TRANSFERRED.—E. C. Finley, to Texas Conference, and appointed to Winchester circuit; W. T. Burk, to West Texas Conference; Samuel Weaver, to Northwest Texas Conference, and appointed to Mount Calm circuit.

The next session of the Conference will be held at Henderson.

DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.—Clerical: S. W. Turner, John Adams.—Alternates: R. W. Thompson, W. A. Snuipey.—Lay: Col. T. R. Homner, W. W. Davis.—Alternates: Haston Twomey, W. M. Shumatte.

Advocate Calendar,

For 1882.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

A Maine paper says that a very worthy old gentleman in a neighboring town is very absent-minded, and has a short memory. It is a common habit with him in the pulpit to forget something, and then, after sitting down, to rise up again and begin his supplementary remarks with the expression, "By the way." A few Sundays ago he got half-way through a prayer, when he hesitated, forgot what he was about, and sat down promptly without closing. In a moment or two he arose, and pointing his forefinger at the congregation, he said, "Oh, by the way—Amen!"

"What do you think of my article on the political situation?" inquired Fendergon. "Everybody I have heard speak of it," replied Fogg. "praises it very highly." "Is they" said Fendergon, eagerly. "Whom have you heard speak of it?" "Nobody but yourself," said Fogg, carelessly. Fendergon says he has learned one thing—namely, when he gets a compliment again, he shall be satisfied to take it as it is given. Hereafter he shall not ask for a bill of particulars.

CONSUMPTION CURED.—Since 1870 Dr. Sheran has each year sent from this office the means of relief and cure to thousands afflicted with disease. The correspondence necessitated by this work becoming too heavy for him, Calne to his aid. He now feels constrained to relinquish it entirely, and has placed in my hands the formula of that simple vegetable remedy discovered by an East India missionary, and found so effective for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Diseases, also all Nervous Complaints. Its remarkable curative powers have been proven in many thousand cases, and actuated by the desire to relieve suffering humanity, I gladly assume the duty of making it known to others. Address me, with stamp, naming this paper and I will mail you, free of charge, the recipe of this wonderful remedy, with full directions for its preparation and use, printed in German, French or English. W. A. Noyes, 149 Power Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Two Germans met in San Francisco. After an affectionate greeting the following conversation was held: "Ven you said you vas arrived?" "Yesterday." "You come dot Isthmus across?" "No." "Oh! I see; you come dot Isthmus across?" "No." "Oh! den you come dot land over?" "No." "Den you vas not arrived." "Oh! yes, I vas arrived. I come dot Mexico through."

Herr Professor to young Warbleton Peacocke, who has just sung Beethoven's "Adelaide": "Ach! vat a beautiful song zat is! I haf herrt it sung by Carioni. I haf herrt it sung by Zbins Beefs. Zey sung it ferry well! But I haf better quite known how beautiful it vas till I haf herrt it sung by you! Young W. P. Blushes.) Vy, my young vrent, efen you gan not make it ridiculous.

The great music house of P. Werlein continues to supply the world with musical instruments, and thousands of homes have been made happy by the possession of a piano or an organ through his low prices and astonishingly liberal terms. The name Werlein has become so identified with pianos that you hardly can think of pianos without thinking of Werlein. Go and try him, and our word for it, you will be pleased.

It is hard to tell which is the more ridiculous, the young fool or the old fool; but the old fool has this advantage—he will never be a young fool whereas the young fool may some day be an old fool.

"Mary says you can't come to see her any more," said a boy to his sister's admirer. "Why not?" "Because you come to see her every evening now, and how could you come any more?"

Strengthen brain and muscle, cultivate nerves of iron, make labor easy and work a pleasure, by using Brown's Iron Bitters.

A skeptical hearer once said to a Baptist minister: "How do you reconcile the teachings of the Bible with the latest conclusions of science?" "I haven't seen this morning's papers," naively replied the minister. "What are the latest conclusions of modern science?"

There is but one thing needed to make the oyster soup at a railroad restaurant perfect, and that is oysters.

Beneficent nature seems to have planted in every clime the proper remedies for the diseases incidental to it. Laphee's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm is made of an herb which grows all over the Gulf region, and it has never failed yet to cure all kinds of coughs and colds.

The man who stepped out of bed, and put his foot upon a piece of oil-cloth, says the occurrence is worth a fortune to him. He's going to freeze ice-cream by merely wrapping a piece of the material round the freezer.

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

'Tis easier to build two chimneys than to keep one in fuel.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

W. F. MELLEN,

Attorney at Law,

12 CARONDELET ST.,

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,

RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,

220 Jackson St., Bet. Chestnut and Coliseu

NEW ORLEANS.

Office Hours—Eight A. M. and three to four P. M.

ROSES We give more and better plants for the money than any other house in the country. Catalogues for 1882 now ready, free to all. Send for one and see for yourself the beautiful plants we offer. MILLER & HUNT, Wrights Grove, Chicago.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR THE

GENUINE AND ORIGINAL

"ESTERBROOK"

"Falcon Pen, No. 048."

Beware of Imitations!

The Genuine Falcon Pens are stamped "ESTERBROOK."

TAKE NO  OTHER

Every Box bears our Signature, thus:

R. Esterbrook & Co.

Esterbrook Steel Pen Co., 26 John St., New York

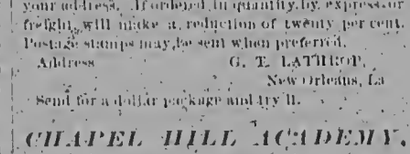
Farm, Garden and Flower Seeds!

DIRECT FROM THE FARM.

Warranted Fresh, Pure and Good, or money refunded.

Catalogue for 1882 free. Please send for it.

Address JOSEPH HARRIS, Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y.



Will be mailed free to all applicants, and to customers without ordering it. It contains five colored plates, 150 engravings, about 200 pages, and full descriptions, prices and directions for planting three varieties of Vegetable and Flower Seeds, Plants, and Choice Roses. Don't fail to send. Michigan grown seed will be found more reliable for planting in the South than seed grown in a warmer climate. We have a specialty of supplying Planters, Truckers and Market Gardeners. Address,

D. M. FERRY & CO., Detroit, Mich.

DR. BLY'S PATENT ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.—The Best and Cheapest. Satisfaction guaranteed. I keep on hand a large assortment of Trusses, Shoulder Braces, Abdominal supporters, Elastic Stockings, etc., at moderate prices. Send for pamphlet and price list.

A. McDERMOTT, Manufacturer, 151 Camp St., New Orleans

CANCERS ARE CURED.

Without Knife or pain. Patients pay no fee until cure is effected. Treatment, but improved from the beginning. ALL DISEASES OF FEMALES, no matter how long standing, are speedily and happily cured. Irregularities, Leucorrhœa, Ulcers, displacements, tumors, etc. by

T. G. BRACKING, M. D., 151 Canal street, New Orleans, La.

This specialty for last fifteen years all at one place.

FOR ONE DOLLAR!

I will mail you, post paid, a package containing five quires, 120 sheets, of very nice note paper, and five packages (125) of white or colored envelopes to your address. If ordered in quantity, by express or freight, will make a reduction of twenty per cent. Postage stamps may be sent when preferred.

Address G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans, La.

Send for a dollar package and try it.

CHAPEL HILL ACADEMY,

MARSHALL COUNTY, TENN.

Opens the next session, the Sixteenth, under present principle, January 2, 1882. Course: English, Classics, Mathematics and Sciences. Thoroughness, Cheapness and Progress are all combined here. Efficient teachers employed; such as know how to teach and are up with the spirit and progress of this age of Education. Entire expense, $70 to $80 per session of twenty weeks. Music by skillful teachers for $25 per session.

O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., editor Christian Advocate, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., of this school says: "I visited it, we speak a word in behalf of this school. The Chapel Hill community is one of the best in the country, the location is beautiful and healthful, and Prof. S. V. Wall is a teacher whose skill as an educator is only equaled by his qualities as a Christian gentleman. All of which we say because we know it is so."

Pupils can enter at any time and will be charged only from time of entrance. Tri-weekly stage from Nashville to this place, distance forty miles south.

Address S. V. WALL, Principal, Chapel Hill, Tenn.

FOR $2.50!

Mailed Postage Paid.

I have nineteen copies left of the

Complete Church Register,

Historical and statistical, comprising, A General Index; An Alphabetical Register for Church Members; Register of Official Members, of Baptisms, Marriages and Deaths; Register of Annual, Quarterly and Church Conferences; Tables for Church Collections, and an Annual Summary of the Yearly Work and Condition of the Church.

It is substantially bound in cloth, leather back, ruled and printed, size about 16x15 inches, over one hundred pages, and no more can be had when this lot is disposed of. Original price $5. All in perfect order.

Address G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

CHURCH'S MUSICAL VISITOR,

AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF MUSIC.

Every number contains 32 large pages filled with Musical Sketches, Original Articles, Criticisms, Poetry, Notes, Musical News, and five to ten pages of New Music. Every subscriber receives free, the choice of 10 Elegant Premium Volumes!

Each premium contains 32 pages of Sheet Music. Full particulars and list of contents of premiums sent on application.

Subscription only $1.50 a Year!

Agents Wanted in every Town and City, to whom a liberal commission will be paid.

Circulars, blanks, etc., supplied free.

Send Stamp for Sample Copy.

PUBLISHED BY

JOHN CHURCH & CO.,

New York Office, 5 Union Square. | CINCINNATI, O.

Indian Turnip

COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle 50. Prepared and for sale by B. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street. And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co. Augusta, Maine.

Agricultural.

CABBAGE-WORMS.—They first came among us about eight years ago. The first four years they appeared in moderated numbers, doing but little damage. Since that period they have been rapidly increasing, until their ravages have become terrible, and many have given up the attempt at raising cabbages. In the early part of the season millers were but seldom seen, which led us to think we might escape their ravages this fall. To our astonishment, they came down on us suddenly in numbers equaling some of the plagues of Egypt.

The density of the millers over the cabbage-fields was described by one man as a rising fog in the distance. Newspapers report similar increase all over the country.

I have experimented with them from time to time, carrying them through all of their different stages, from the eggs to the millers. There my investigation ended, as I was unable to produce eggs from them; consequently, can not give the number of eggs they lay. It is possible they may keep on continuously through the season, like the "potato-bug," or, like some kindred insect, die after finishing one brood.

Some writer has said the early severe frost had killed them all. It was, undoubtedly, severe on them, killing exposed miller's eggs, and probably some worms; but I am sorry to say there are plenty left for re-cruiting an army for another season, if they manage to get into the pupa in good order for the winter.

A neighbor brought from the field, the last week in November, some small, worm-riddled heads, that were left in an open shed and were nearly frozen through. On examining them, found plenty of worms in a torpid condition, which, after being in a warm room in a short time, began to show life and were soon searching for food. It being provided for them, they began devouring it eagerly, with a keen relish. The fourth day after they were brought in two went into the pupa state, the rest have since followed their example.

There are two distinct species in the lot, though to a casual observer it would never be noticed. The true Pieris rapæ Linnæus is of a dark green color, with a narrow gold-colored stripe down the back, with a row of spots on each side, of the same color, and is covered all over with minute black dots. The logus kind is longer and lighter color, with three pale lines, without other visible markings.

They are very unlike in their manner of propelling. The Rapæ crawls smoothly along; while the other variety moves like the canker or measure-worm, and are short two pairs of legs of the genuine. They differ widely, too, in the way of preparing for the transforming change. The latter, when near that period, are very uneasy and are continually on the move, and, finally settling down to their work, commence to weave themselves into a cocoon, which nearly hides them from view. The others weave a carpet on some hard substance and take their final stand on it, fastening the body, about midway its length, on the under side, occupying a spot about the size of a pin's head, which is charged with a sort of gluey substance, that exudes from the body, which holds it firmly, leaving it in an elevated posture from this point at both ends. The change then goes on very rapidly. What would appear to be wing-cases are formed at once, the whole process occupying but a few hours.

December 1 I brought from the field specimens, some of which were in the act of feeding; and again December 7 added to my stock, finding but few live ones.

Few vegetable-eating insects known to science are so hard to subdue as these filthy creatures. They are completely walled in, stockaded, so to speak, bidding defiance to the outside world, and all attempts to dislodge them, in the main, have proved futile. Nothing I have tried short of "rank poison" has fectually destroyed them. That, of course, must never be thought of for a moment. The new remedy, "Pyrethrum," recommended by Prof. Riley and others, I have never tried. Judging from its effect as an insect exterminator, if frequently applied, it would, at least, check their progress, so that a crop might be secured.

The millers, being out of harm's way, are continually laying. Consequently, new broods are daily coming on and must be met. May it not require too much to keep them in check for the safety of consumers? The writer thought the hot-water method could be made effectual, if used at the right temperature, 140°, without injuring the growth of the plant, this strikes me as the most favorable way of reducing their numbers, with the least expense and danger, as, with suitable implements, it can be applied with rapidity.

Since writing the above, two of my new species, as they appear to be, have come out of the chrysalis. To my surprise, they prove to be a small dark-brown moth-miller, highly ornamented with profuse markings. I had anticipated a purely white miller. I am not apprehensive of their being very troublesome, unless they prove prolific, like the Rapæ. In that event, they would constrict them in their rapacity, as they are great feeders.—New York Independent.

THE CARE AND WINTER-PRUNING OF PEACH TREES.—During our rambles in the South, among the peach orchards, we have given particular attention to the way the trees are trained and managed by professional fruit-growers and amateurs. Generally, with those who only plant this fruit for home use, there is no pruning or culture whatever. The trees are planted and then left entirely to their own sweet will. Nothing more whatever is done to them. If they grow, well and good; if they do not, the cry is that the trees were not good or the country is no fruit country. If they live, they are allowed to grow as they please. The peach-borer kills the trees, if they can. If there is ever any pruning done, it is simply to cut off the lower branches or to "trim them up," so as to be out of the way. The result is unsightly, unthrifty trees, that, when they do bear, especially after the first one or two crops, bear overcrops of small, worthless fruit. The majority of the growers for market do a little better; but not much. It is a rare thing to find an orchard that has been kept properly pruned and cut back, and most of them are found with bean-pole stems or main branches, bare of any fruit or foliage, except such as are crowded closely together at their extreme tips, resulting in overcrowded leaves and fruit, and poorly-colored, late-ripening, and small fruit, with a tendency to rot from overcrowding and shade.

The model peach tree, for the best results, we think, should have a clean stem of about three feet. At this point a regular whorl of four or five branches should be started. When those are started, the tree should have vigor enough to give each a growth of at least three feet the first season. These, early the next spring, should be cut back to eighteen inches, being careful to leave on them any sub-branches near their base. The next spring the resulting or next crop of branches should be cut back in about the same way, and the sub-branches half of them cut clear away, leaving every other one; and those not cut away cut back one-third to one-half. The summer after this the trees should give a splendid crop of fine fruit, that will need no thinning. The after cutting back and pruning should be after the same general plan, thinning out and cutting back the upper and outer branches, but never thinning out the small branches near the base of the large branches, except as above. As the trees grow older, it will be necessary to cut back and thin out more year by year, and eventually it will be necessary to cut back half of the main branches to near their base, at some point just above where a thrifty young twig is growing, so as to form a new, vigorous head; and to cut back the remaining branches the next year, and then following again the same system of training given above. We think that this system, carefully followed, will give continuously crops of fine fruit, with but little or no thinning; or, in other words, that by this renewal system of training, trees can be kept in a young, vigorous condition for a great many years. Who can find fault with it? Who will give us a better system? Our preference would be to have our trees with lower heads, rather than higher, were it not necessary to run the curculio-catcher in the orchard. On strong soils trees might do well with four feet of bare trunk.

We have found a great share of the peach orchard management in the South radically wrong. For instance, we have found the majority of the orchardists only beginning to take the borers from their peach trees, if at all, in September and during the winter, or after they have done their most serious damage; for we think that the damage done by this borer consists largely in the exudations of the elaborated sap or "gum" from their gnawings or the wounds made by them in the new bark and sap-wood, and not from the wounds themselves; therefore, they should be taken from the trees as early as July or August or as soon as they can be found. But prevention, in some way—by mounding up the base of the trees in May, or the use of some wash that will prevent the parent moth from laying her eggs, or destroying the eggs, if they are laid—would be the best practice. Certainly, anything that will prevent this great loss of tree-food, or elaborated sap, in the shape of exuding gum, would certainly result in a great good. We have seen it stated by good authority that a wash composed of diluted soft soap, in which a proper amount of crude carbolic acid had been mixed, and applied to the base of the trees as needed during late spring and summer, would entirely prevent the parent moth from depositing her eggs. This was the practice, we believe, of the late Mr. Batchiam, of Ohio, who reported it as a success. Who has tried it?—Prairie Farmer.

POULTRY DISEASES.—Fully nine-tenths of the diseases from which fowls suffer are simply and solely caused by vermin. Careful investigation has established this as a fact. The comb of a fowl may be considered its health indicator. The first intimation a close observer of his flock has is the condition of their comb. Comparatively few birds in their natural wild state die of disease. They have certain ways to keep themselves comparatively free from lice; fifty are not crowded in a space where only twenty-five should be; nature's (bird) laws are not transgressed and they thrive in health. With domestic fowls it is different; they are crowded together, become lousy and get the cholera, roup, canker and various su-forths, none of which would they have if lice were not preying on their bodies, unless it is roup, which is caused by several things. To avoid many of these troubles watch your poultry, and the time you see a hen moping around or refusing to eat, or one with feathers rumpled up, or comb looking dark blue at the end, pick her up and look for lice. You will find them. Grease her well with an ointment made of lard and sulphur, under the wings and over the vent and on the head. Perhaps, if you examine the roosts in the hen house, by taking them up and looking on the under side wherever the ends of the roosts rest on anything, you will be astonished to find the numerous little red lice congregated there. These torment the fowls at night and return to their hiding place before the fowls leave their roosts. The roosts should be frequently washed on all sides with coal oil.—Toronto Globe.

REPLACING A DEAD TREE.—Few persons succeed in planting a young tree where a tree has died. To succeed we deem it important to remove, as far as possible, old stump and roots and loosen the soil for several feet around where it is intended to plant the tree, let the surface soil be kept by itself, when the subsoil is thrown out to a sufficient depth the bottom of the hole should be loosened at least a spade's depth, then fill in with top soil until a sufficient depth remains to set the tree; having the roots carefully trimmed, set the tree carefully in position, spreading the fibrous roots naturally, and fill in with earth finely pulverized; when the roots are well covered with the earth press with the foot upon the roots firmly and then proceed to fill up the holes with the top soil. If it is not intended to cultivate the orchard plat it is very necessary to enclose the tree with a square rail pen or with plank and cultivate the soil about the tree for two or three years until the growth of the tree is fully assured or at least mulch it. The failure to replace a dead tree with a young, thrifty growing tree more frequently arises from neglect than any other real cause.—Drainage and Farm Journal.

AMERICAN PORK.—An old pork butcher, in Detroit, says the prejudice in Europe against American pork arises partly from the fact that hogs fattened on our Indian corn do not make as fine pork as do those of Germany, the Netherlands, France, &c., which are fattened chiefly on peas and buckwheat. With the latter such a condition as "rusty pork" is unknown. As both peas and buckwheat grow readily in this country, wherever properly cultivated, it may be worth while for some farmer to test the matter. Possibly the oleaginous principles in corn may tend to deteriorating effects, in some degree, though that cereal will doubtless continue the principal food for fattening hogs in this country.

GRAFTING.—Scions, it is claimed, carry with them the bearing year of the tree from which they were taken.

Household.

APPLE JELLY.—The best apple jelly we ever made, writes a lady, and, if I may be allowed to say so, the best I ever tasted, consisted of pure apple juice and pounded loaf sugar only, cleared without the aid of a jelly bag, an article of so-called domestic utility of which we have a wholesome horror. The only straining medium we employed was a piece of new strong coarse muslin, from which all the dressing was discharged by its having been passed two or three times through boiling water. It can scarcely be necessary to say that the fresher the fruit the better the jelly; also that the fruit should be gathered when fully ripe, unbruised, and perfectly dry. Pippins are the apples generally preferred for making jelly; but any variety of culinary apple, provided the flesh is juicy and tender, with an agreeable acidity, will do. Before cutting up the apples have ready a strong brown earthenware pan or jar, large enough to hold the whole of the apples when cut up. At the bottom of this pan put two or three tablespoonfuls of cold spring water, peel and core the apples, cut them into thin slices and throw them into the jar as they are done. When full place a saucer or earthenware lid over and tie it down tight over the jar with a piece of calico and string; place the jar in a hot oven until the fruit has melted to a pulp; take out the jar, and pour the fruit into a new, clean hair sieve, or into a bag of muslin, as aforesaid; leave it until the whole of the juice has run through into the vessel placed to receive it; when this is done put three-quarters of a pound of crushed loaf sugar to every pound of juice, or one pound of sugar if the jelly is preferred very sweet; pour into an enamelled preserving pan and simmer until the juice, when poured into a cold plate, sets in a few minutes; stir every now and then, but do not have the fire fierce enough to burn the sugar to the pan; a hot hearth or stove is always, of course, preferred to an open fire for any delicate culinary operation.

ITALIAN CREAM.—Pour a gill of cold water over three-quarters of an ounce of isinglass, and let it stand half an hour. Then turn it into half a pint of boiling hot milk and add a small stick of cinnamon and bits of lemon peel; and boil it ten minutes, or till the isinglass is all dissolved. Take one pint of sweet cream, add one teacupful fine sugar to it, and beat up well. Squeeze the juice from three oranges, add to it a glass of white wine, stir into the cream and sugar, and beat rapidly together. Strain the isinglass and milk into it; set the bowl on some pounded ice, and beat up the contents with an egg-beater. When it grows thick, put into a mould and place on ice in a cool place. Serve for dessert or a supper dish.

SCOTCH WOODCOCK.—Break two or three eggs into a saucepan; add a little salt and pepper and a tablespoonful of sweet milk. Stir up slightly, and cook slowly, as it bubbles up; add a large piece of sweet butter. Stir well from the bottom, so that the mixture will not stick to the pan. Have two slices of bread ready toasted; butter it slightly, and put on one slice two anchovies, well washed, scraped and chopped fine. Put the other slice of toast over the anchovies, and pour the eggs on it. Have the platter well heated and serve very hot.

TRIPE SAUTE.—Cut two pounds of tripe into narrow strips three inches in length. Put into a hot saucepan a heaping tablespoonful of butter, or clarified drippings, with a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, and half of a small onion chopped finely. When the mixture is boiling hot put in the tripe. Season it with salt and pepper, and fry it a light brown. Tripe can be made into very dainty dishes, and it is well known that a slice of well broiled, pickled tripe is one of the best dishes for persons of delicate digestive powers.—Country Gentleman.

MASHED POTATOES.—Boil the potatoes, gently, after having made them as nearly uniform in size as possible, by dividing the larger ones, or what is better, by slicing all, but not very thinly. As soon as the fork goes through readily, turn the water off (saving that for mixing your bread if you bake the same day); then mash through a colander into the same kettle or saucepan. Add butter and cream and salt, and with a long handled spoon beat a few minutes briskly. Set the saucepan where it will thoroughly heat again, and your potatoes will be a noticeable feature of the best dinners.

TO WASH DELICATE MUSLINS.—Put three pints of wheat bran and a handful of salt into a loose bag, and boil half an hour in six quarts of soft water. Use this water for washing muslins or lawns with delicate colors, keeping at hand the bag of bran to use instead of soap on any soiled spot that will not yield to slight rubbing. Rinse the muslin in clear water and dry quickly in the shade. Many colors in calico goods, which are injured by using the most delicate soap can be safely washed if wheat bran (or, if more convenient, wheat flour) is boiled and used instead.

ORANGE FRITTERS.—Sift one pound of Haxall flour into a dish, pour into it one pint of sweet milk, with a pinch of salt in it, and one-quarter of a pound of melted butter mixed with the milk. Stir the flour and milk into a smooth batter, and add three eggs beaten very lightly. Peel four oranges, taking off all the white pithy skin, and divide into pieces without breaking their skins. Put a piece into each large spoonful of batter, as it is turned into a kettle of boiling fat, and fry to a light brown. Sift powdered sugar over them while very hot, and serve hot. These fritters are excellent for a side dish, or for the lunch or tea table.

CORN FLOUR CAKES.—Beat six ounces of butter to a cream and add to it eight ounces of pounded sugar, and a few drops of lemon juice or ratafia, whichever preferred; mix thoroughly a dessertspoonful of baking powder with a pound of corn flour have ready some warm milk, and stir it with the corn flour into the sugar and butter, adding by degrees a little of each till the whole of the flour is in and the mixture is a light dough; bake at once. When a skewer, which has been inserted, comes out clean and bright it is done.

CURRANT JAM.—Take equal weights of currants and sugar, put them together in an earthen dish and wash them thoroughly. Cook slowly for thirty minutes in a porcelain-lined kettle. Black and red currants together, two quarts black to one quart of red, make a nicer jam than either alone. White currant jam is not only very nice, but very pretty.

Scientific.

—EDISON'S ELECTRIC LIGHT.—Major Eaton, the Vice-President of the Edison Electric Light Company, stated to a reporter on Saturday, December 31:

We have more than 800 employes at work on full time. The Edison Machine Works, in Goerck street, have been working day and night for the past two weeks. They have completed 12 dynamos, of 1,200 lights each, for the first district, which is bounded by Wall, Nassau, and Spruce streets, and the East River; also one mammoth dynamo for an Engraving Company in London; and 400 smaller ones for isolated lighting. The lamp factory at Menlo Park is still running with its regular force, and is turning out 1,100 lamps daily. The Edison Tube Company, which manufactures the electric under-ground street mains, is now running with a larger force than ever before. The work of wiring the first district, down town, is completed; over 1,100 houses having been supplied with wires, with a capacity of about 15,000 lamps. The work of laying the wires in another district will not be begun for several weeks. The first, or down town, district will be lighted from one central station, Nos. 255 and 257 Pearl street, in less than three months, unless, by reason of severe rains or heavy frosts, we are delayed in making our subterranean connections. This branch of the work is now progressing at the rate of 1,000 a day.

Mr. Edison is still taking out a large number of patents for electric lighting. He took out 25 patents on December 27 alone. This makes about 80 patents on electric lighting already issued to him, and he has several further applications pending in the Patent Office. His electric railway at Menlo Park is nearly completed for three miles. It is perfectly graded, and the cars for use there are now being turned out by the John Stephenson Company. The electric engines are now being manufactured in the Goerck street shops of the Company. This road is being built to illustrate by a practical test the economy to railroad men of electric over steam power. Thus you see we are not idle, and most of the delay in lighting up the first district is due to the rainy weather. We have discharged no men except for incompetency, and have immediately replaced them with others.

—COPYING LETTERS WITHOUT A PRESS.—A paper on a copying ink for readily transcribing letters with a press, by Prof. Attfield, F.R.S., etc., was read, says Science, at the last annual Pharmaceutical Conference at York, England. The author stated that for the past thirteen years all letters, reports, etc., that he had written had been transcribed into an ordinary thin paper copying book with no more effort than was employed in using a piece of blotting-paper. It had only been necessary to place the page of writing, note size, letter size, or even foolscap, in the letter-book, and use a leaf of the letter-book just as one would use a leaf of blotting-paper. The superfluous ink that would go into blotting-paper went on to the leaf of the letter-book and showing through the thin paper as usual, gave, on the other side of the leaf, a perfect transcript of the letter. Any excess of ink on the page, either of the letter or of the copying paper, was removed by placing a sheet of blotting-paper between them, and running one's hand firmly over the whole in the ordinary manner. The principle of the method consisted in dissolving a moderately powerful hygroscopic substance in any ordinary ink. After experimenting on all such substances known to him, he gave the preference to glycerine. Reduce, by evaporation, ten volumes of ink to six; then add four volumes of glycerine. Or manufacture some ink of nearly double strength and add to any quantity of it nearly an equal volume of glycerine.

—SILK COVERING FOR BOILERS.—Some of our German friends have recently been successfully experimenting with silk as a covering for boilers. In one trial three boilers of the same size and make were ranged in order, one covered with the ordinary felt, another with a coating of silk only five-eighths of the thickness of the felt, while the third was left altogether uncovered. They were all filled with water having a temperature of 100 degrees Centigrade, and examined at intervals. After the lapse of three hours it was found that the unprotected boiler had lost twelve degrees. After a further lapse of thirty-three hours, the felt-covered boiler had lost thirteen and a half degrees, and that the covered with silk only fourteen; so that there was no appreciable difference between the protective powers of the silk and those of a casing of felt nearly twice its thickness. With regard to the cost of the material, it is said that in all silk manufactories there are waste scraps which it would be difficult or impossible to utilize in the trade. These can, it is asserted, be made up into bands and rolls, costing comparatively little, and sold at a profit to the makers and users of boilers. As to the lasting and wearing powers of silk as compared with felt, nothing is said, and there has not, perhaps, been time to apply an adequate test; but it is at the least possible that in this respect the finer substance may possess great advantages over the coarser and cheaper.

—Prof. Prosdocimi, of the Este (France) Museum, who discovered a prehistoric cemetery on the slope of the hills overlooking that town, has unearthed in the same vicinity 32 tombs, 44 of them violated, apparently during the Roman period, the rest untouched, with all their pottery and bronzes. The urns are of three periods—some colored black, with linear ornamentation; others adorned with circles and wavy lines; others with alternate bands of red and black. The bronze ornaments are also very interesting, and a bronze chest bears three designs, comprising in all seventeen warriors and a priest, seven animals, (horses, oxen, stags, birds and a dog,) several plants, and a kind of chariot with a man seated in it. The Professor considers these the finest prehistoric remains in Italy.

—A remarkable mound, containing a vast number of human bones, was recently uncovered near Lanesboro, Minn. The finding of a single skull led to the unearthing of the bones of more than six hundred individuals. As those were all adult men, it is probable that the mound marked the site of a battle-field.

—Fifty thousand dollars worth of conch shells are annually exported from Nassau, N. P., to Italy, France, and elsewhere. In Italy they are cut into sleeve-buttons and brooches, while in France they are used in porcelain manufactories.

—Five walled tombs, each containing a skeleton, have been discovered at Chamblandes, Canton Vaud, Switzerland. From the absence of metal ornaments and other indications they are supposed to belong to an age prior to that of bronze.

EDUCATIONAL.

East Mississippi Female College.

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.

One of the most accessible and prosperous schools in the South. Its facilities, course of study, system and faculty are superior. It is a growing and popular institution under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"It has developed into great usefulness, and has established itself in the hearts and confidence of the people."—Mississippi Conference.

"The college is finely located to command a large patronage, and its management has been such as to secure the confidence of the people. It is an institution that deserves the liberal support and patronage of the Methodists of Mississippi."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Send for catalogue and exandine terms.

Whitworth Female College,

BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.

Will re-open September 21, 1881. Number of pupils last term, 291. Number of teachers 18. Board per half academic year, $60; Tuition from $15 to $25; Incidental Fees from $1 to $4.

The languages, ancient and modern, mathematics, the sciences, music, drawing and painting thoroughly taught.

The continued success of this school is its best indorsement. There has not been a death in the college for years past. Send for a catalogue.

H. F. JOHNSON, A. M., D. D.,
President.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Session 1881-82.

THE Academic, Biblical and Law Departments open September 1. The Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Departments open October 1.

The fees are as follows: Academic Department, $65; Biblical, $15; Law, $100; Medical, $65; Dental, $90; Pharmaceutical, $65.

Ten scholarships, worth $100 each, were awarded to meritorious students at the close of the last session. Four Graduate Fellowships, worth $300 each, and two Post-graduate Fellowships, worth $500, each, were likewise conferred.

The various Chairs of the University are filled by forty Professors and Instructors. Six hundred and thirty-two students, from twenty-one States, were matriculated last year.

For the ANNUAL REGISTER, or further information, address J. M. Leech, Secretary of the Faculty, or L. C. GARLAND, Chancellor.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson given their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Koeringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

The Fall Session will begin September 15, 1881.

Send for catalogue to

REV. E. E. WILEY, D. D., President.

Millwood Female Institute,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Founded 1866. Chartered 1870.

This school opens the first Monday of September 1881, with efficient accomplished teachers in every department.

Expenses, per session of five months, including Tuition, Board and Washing, $75.

Music on Piano or Guitar, with use of Instrumen and class singing, $25.

For further particulars send for catalogue.

MISS McCALMONT, Principal.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin October 5, 1881.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Principal.
J. B. MAGRUDER A. M., Assistant.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Session 1880-81 had 133 students, six professors and teachers and three A. B. graduates. The entire expenses for board and tuition for scholastic year need not exceed $144 in Preparatory department, nor $164 in College classes. Next session begins September 5, 1881. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,

HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

The thirty-second year begins August 31. A more healthy location can not be found. The College was never in a more prosperous condition. A full Faculty of thorough teachers; splendid buildings and a complete outfit for all departments, literary, music, languages and art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Prices reduced to suit the times. Special inducements offered. For terms and new catalogues address

REV. A. H. JONES, A. M., President.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Next session opens September 21, 1881. The services of experienced and successful teachers secured. Buildings undergoing necessary repairs. Every room being thoroughly renovated, and newly and handsomely furnished. No pains will be spared to give entire satisfaction. For further information address, Rev. T. C. BRADFORD, President.

Port Gibson, Miss.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

Will open on the first Monday in October. For terms and circulars, address,

MRS. MARY W. REED,
Principal.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,

GREENSBORO, ALA.

The next session will open on the first Wednesday in October next, with a full corps of able, experienced instructors. Course of study extensive and thorough. Expenses moderate. $175, in advance, will pay Board and Tuition in University classes for the entire scholastic year. $135 $155 in Preparatory Department. Health record almost unrivaled. Situated fifty miles from Selma, on the Selma and Greenboro railroad. For catalogue and further information, address

REV. J. LEWIS, D. D., Chancellor.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE

Female College,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The next session of this school will open on Monday, September 12, 1881. We ask all calls to the following points:

I. Our curriculum embraces a good course of study which we teach thoroughly.

II. We are prepared to satisfy the most cultivated taste in the departments of Music and Art.

III. We employ the best teaching talent within the range of our knowledge.

IV. We keep a good table in the College Boarding Department.

V. This school has a health record which is unsurpassed.

VI. Our charges are as moderate as they can be made without marring the best results in culture.

For full information, send for catalogue.

JOHN MASSEY, President,
Tuskegee, Ala.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded in 1849, offers superior advantages and healthy retreat.

The MALE DEPARTMENT is located in a quiet farming community, seven miles from Sweetwater East Tenn., Va. and Ga. R. R.

The FEMALE DEPARTMENT is located in the model town of Sweetwater, in a lovely section.

Experienced teachers, good work and low charges in both departments. Patronage merited.

For particulars address

REV. J. H. BRUNNER, D. D.,
Hiwassee College, Tenn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

in the South-west is now in stock and ready to fill all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at sho notice, and prices guaranteed as low as they can t had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application. Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

ndergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

Send for anything you want or address for prices,

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

WM. H. OGDEN, BENJ. G. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

NEW GOODS.

GREAT REDUCTION IN

CARPETS,

Tapestry Brussels,

Seventy Cents a yard up to $1 05.

Wilton, Axminsters, Velvets, Moquettes, Brussels, Ingrains, Three Plys, Window Shades, Lace Curtains, Cocoa, Napier and China Matting, Turkish Rugs, Crumb Cloths, Rugs and Mats in great variety.

A. BROUSSEAU'S SON,
17 Chartres St.

Call and see for yourself.

S. K. RUSS,

—WITH—

Ayers, Richard & Co.,

WHOLESALE GROCERS

—AND—

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

74, 76 Magazine, 88, 90, 92 Poydras St.

NEW ORLEANS.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box, 598, New York.

Christian Advocate.

Cornish Working-Women.

Picking our way through the purplish mud and stones below the Karn, we discovered a little old woman laboring over a pile of unmilled copper ore. We had to look twice before we could assure ourselves of her sex: not only was her dress perplexing, but there was an unreality and weirdness in her person. She was very small, almost dwarfish, with bent shoulders and wrinkled hands and face; her skin had the texture of parchment, and was curiously mottled with blue; her hair was thin and wiry. She seemed very old, but her eyes had shrewd and penetrating, quickness, and her movements were utterly without decrepitude. Indeed, she applied herself to her work with the willing vigor of a strong young man, and the work consisted of shovelling the heavy blocks of ore into a small wagon resting on a temporary tramway. Shovelful after shovelful was thrown in with an easy, muscular swing, and with much more activity than the average "navvy" ever exhibits. Her petticoats ended above the ankel, and were stained with the hue of the copper ore, her shapeless legs were muffled up in woolen wraps, and her feet encased in substantial brogans. She was not apparently uncomfortable bodily, but her face had in it a look of uncomplaining suffering, of unalterable gravity, of a habituated sorrow, which had extinguished all possibility of a smile. Not understanding a question which we put to her, she used the words "Please, sir?" a form of interrogation which we often heard in the neighborhood of Redruth. "You seem to be old for such hard work," we repeated, "Deed, sir, I don't know how old I am, but I've been at this forty years. I'm not young any longer, that's sure," she answered, with a clear voice with scarcely any accent. "Are you married?" "No, sir; nobody would ever have me," she continued, without relaxing from her gravity or delaying her work for a moment — "nobody would have me," or go with me, as I was always subject to fits, terrible they are. I still have 'em once or twice a week sometimes, always with a change in the moon." "How do you account for it?" "Why, before my twenty-fourth year I was in the services of a lady, who threw me downstairs, and that changed my blood; so, when the moon changes, I have fits. Little can be done for them when the blood is changed." This superstition was a matter of profound faith with her, but otherwise her manner was remarkably intelligent. She told us that her wages were fourteenpence—twenty eight cents—a day; and when we unnecessarily said that she must get tired of work at such a price, she answered, in a bitter tone, "No use being tired; when you are tire, there's the workhouse for you."

She had nearly filled the wagon by this time, and two younger women dressed as she was, but more vigorous looking, came to help her, and after spitting on their hands, which were as large and as hard as any man's, they applied themselves with shovels to the heap of ore, falling into a machine-like swing of the body as they scooped up the heavy rock. Two men afterward joined them, and when the wagon was loaded, they propelled it along the track toward the mill: the women sharing the work equally with the men, if, indeed, they did not even use greater exertions.

The employment of women underground is now forbidden by law, the degradation resulting from it having been perceived by English legislators only when it had become flagitious; but of thirteen thousand persons engaged in mines, about two thousand are women, who are employed in various parts of the process of dressing the ore. In the simpler operations very young girls are useful, and at the mill we found a large number of them—the daughters of miners usually—some of them pretty, and all of them neatly clothed and intelligent, even in manner. They can all write, and they have an appetite for literature of the Adolphus-Alcinasort, which they devour in penny instalments when their work is slack.—W. H. Rideing, in Harper's Magazine.

Advice to those who wear Glasses.

Men damaged in literary pursuits should read most by day and write most by night. It is worthy of note that reading causes more strain to the eye than writing, and that reading and that copying work in writing makes a greater demand upon the vision than off-hand composition. Twilight and a mixture of twilight and artificial illumination should be avoided for any kind of work. The pale cobalt-blue tint is the best that can be employed when protection for the eyes from intense glare is sought, as in the case of traveling upon snow fields in bright sunshine. The green glass that is often adopted for this purpose is not by any means worthy of confidence. Reading in Railway traveling is objectionable in the highest degree for a very obvious reason. The oscillation of the carriage continually alters the distance of the page from the eye, and so calls for unceasing strain in the effort to keep the organ in due accommodation for the ever varying distance of the dancing image. The exact fitting of the frame-work of spectacles to the face and eyes is of more importance than is generally conceived. If the centres of the lenses of the spectacles do not accurately coincide with the centres of the pupils of the eyes, the consequence is that the images in the separate eyes are a little displaced from the positions which they ought to hold, and that a somewhat painful and injurious effort has to be made by the eye to bring those images back into due correspondence for accurate vision. An incipient squint is apt to be in this way produced. Mr. Carter recommends that people should look to the centering of their spectacles for themselves. This may be easily done by standing before a looking-glass with the spectacles in their place. If the fit is a good one, the centre of the pupil should then appear in the centre of the rim. Fully formed spectacles are always to be preferred to folding frames, because they permit of more satisfactory adjustment in this particular, and because they are more easily kept in the right position with regard to the eyes. The only advantage which the pebble enjoys over glass for the construction of spectacles is the immunity which it possesses against scratching and fracture on account of its greater hardness. —The Edinburgh Review.

ARIZONA BIRDS.—The wild turkey abounds on the streams and the divides along the Gila River, and to the north of it feeding on the nuts and grass seeds which give it so fine a flavor.

Whether it is the aboriginal bird of America, or strayed from the Spanish Missions, matters not much to the eater, but I am inclined to think from the strong flavor and the color of the feathers that it is the genuine wild bird. Its weight far exceeds the domestic turkey.

The top-knot quail is a native of Arizona, and I venture to affirm that two good sportsmen can fill a wagon in one day along the Gila River bottoms.

As the agriculture of the country increases these birds increase in numbers, and at this season are very fat from the native seeds, the mesquite bean and the fields of grain in the settlements.

The absence of celery prohibits the enjoyment of the canvas back duck, but the teal duck is not excelled in any part of the world for juice and flavor. Mallards abound.

Doves are in season now, and can be taken in any numbers.

The Syrian dove—the same species I believe that were sold "two for a farthing" at the temple of Jerusalem—coo in the cottonwoods of Arizona. They are not more than a third the size of the dove of the Ark.

Wild pigeons are abundant—one of our mountains (Chiracahuas) is named for them.

Blue cranes—nine feet spread—are killed on the Colorado River, and eaten as Colorado turkeys.

Reed birds are plentiful in the swamps, and as large as bob-o-links in New-England.

Curlews are abundant from January till June.

Blackbirds (chonates) exceed all others in numbers and vocal powers. The trees are literally black with them in the spring, and their music is the joy of the morning.

The chapparal cock (paisano) is a very delicious bird, but hard to kill, its motions are so rapid. Those birds are the natural foes of the rattlesnake, and build a corral of cholla (cactus) around him, and irritate him until he lashes himself to death against the thorns by which he is surrounded.

Blue-jays, red-birds, whippoorwills, robins, sparrows, hawks, crows, eagles and such, are abundant.

Last summer I domesticated some humming birds in the Santa Catalina mountains, and fed them on the honey from the flower of the Maguey.—Cor. of Forest and Stream.

India-Rubber Gathering in Columbia.

When the hunter has found a rubber tree he first clears away a space from the roots and then moves on in search of others, returning to commence operations as soon as he has marked all the trees in the vicinity. He first of all digs a hole in the ground hard by, and then cuts in the tree a V-shaped incision with a machete as high as he can reach. The milk is caught as it exudes and flows into the hole. As soon as the flow from the cut has ceased the tree is cut down and the trunk raised from the ground by means of an improvised trestle. After placing leaves to catch the sap, gashes are cut throughout the whole length and the milk carefully collected. When it first exudes the sap is of the whiteness and consistence of cream, but it turns black when exposed to the air. When the hole is filled with rubber it is coagulated by adding hard soap or the root of the mechvacan, which has a most rapid action and prevents the escape of the water that is always present in the fresh sap. When coagulated sufficiently the rubber is carried on the backs of the hunters by bark thongs to the banks of the river and floated down on rafts. The annual destruction of rubber trees in Columbia is very great, and the industry must soon disappear altogether, unless the government puts in force a law that already exists, which compels the hunters to tap the trees without cutting them down. If this law were strictly carried out there would be a good opening for commercial enterprise, for rubber trees will grow from eight to ten inches diameter in three or four years from the seed. The trees require but little attention and begin to yield returns sooner than any other. Those that yield the greatest amount of rubber flourish on the banks of the Sinu and Asaito rivers. The value of the crude india-rubber imported into the states annually is about ten million dollars.—London Times.

THE USELESS CLOCK. "Big Ben," the great clock at Westminster, leads a busy, useful life. High in the dark she face, and stretches out his beautiful hands to tell the time. Not a moment does he stop to speak or play, as some children do when they should be at work. From morning to night, and when the great city is asleep, he still pursues his useful career. While long before the sun has risen, he still points to and chimes out the quickly passing hours.

There is another clock on the outside of an old country church which leads a very different life. It has no hands and cannot tell the time. But, strange to say, it is wound up once a week, and then does nothing but say, "click, click, click," while no one is a bit the better of it.

Now, while there are many leading a good, useful life, like "Big Ben," there are also some like that useless clock. Once a week, at church or Sunday-school, they, too, wind up; but it makes them no better. Their life is just a useless "click, click." They never tell the time.

When the clock does not tell the time, there is something wrong with it. And when we do not lead a fully, useful Christian life, there is something wrong with us. That useless clock only needed, perhaps, a nice pair of hands to make it right; but we need a new heart to make us right.

A little boy once listened to an address on the new heart, which deeply impressed and interested him. On coming home, he told what he had heard to his younger sister. "And," he added, "do you know, I believe I have got the new heart." "Oh," said the delighted little girl, "I am so glad; do show it to me."

"You may smile at the request of that child, yet she was not far wrong. All who have the new heart can show it by a new life. When we see any one striving to be like Jesus—holy, useful, making all around bright and glad by the sweetness of their life,—feel sure that the secret of it is a new heart. "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." —A. M., in The Christian.

—St. Lawrence Hall, on Thirty-fifth Street, in New York City which was formerly a low drinking and disorderly house, has now become a house of God, to be known hereafter as the Union Tabernacle Church. It was opened last Sunday by services conducted by the pastor, the Rev. G. J. Mingins. There was an audience of 900 in the afternoon, and nearly twice that number crowded the house in the evening.—New York Independent.

—Rev. J. F. Thomson is doing vigorous work in Buenos Ayres. "Spanish work mightily blessed," he writes to the Secretary. "Ragged day school has 120 scholars. Spanish Sunday-school risen from 15 to 280, of whom 80 come from the day school mentioned. I preach six times a week."

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. S. PFISTER,

Millinery and Dressmaking,

539 Magazine Street,

Bet. St. Mary and Felicity. NEW ORLEANS.

Bonnets and Hats Cleaned, Dyed and Altered.

E. E. LELAND,

No. 185 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

IMPORTED

MILLINERY

French Flowers and Feathers,

ORNAMENTS

Fringes and Tassels, Dress Trimmings, Novelties in Buttons, Ribbons, Corsets, Novelties in Ladies' Neckwear, Vellings and Crapes, Velvets, Lace Goods, Etc., Etc., Etc.

Special attention paid to Country Orders.

CRESCENT INSURANCE COMPANY,

Incorporated as a Mutual Company in 1849—Re-organized as a Stock Company in 1880.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - $100,000.

Has paid nearly NINE MILLIONS for losses Since 1849.

Annual and Term Policies Issued on Desirable Fire Business.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.
CHAS. H. DOLSEN.....Vice President
CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

TRUSTEES:

Sam'l H. Kennedy,	Paul E. Marlioner,
Victor Mayer,	Joseph Bowling,
W. H. Conger,	S. Hernsheim,
George W. Scnell,	Ed. J. Gay,
Alf. Monlton,	Edwd. Salle,
Charles Newman,	J. J. Reiss,
C. Marmont,	Louis Prados,
Lucien Ielery,	W. W. Swalo,
Charles H. Dolsen,	Harry L. Flash,
Reuben G. Bush,	John Brunaso,
John Calder,	A. H. Steward,
S. C. Coglon,	E. H. Adams,
W. A. Phelps,	Sigmund Katz,
M. Gillis,	N. D. Wallace,
	W. R. Lyman.

See our Agents throughout Louisiana Texas, Mississippi and Arkansas.

Factors' and Traders'

INSURANCE COMPANY.

19 CARONDELET STREET,

Paid-Up Capital.....$1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President,
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President,
THOS. F. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

TRUSTEES:

John I. Noble,	John Chaffe,
Richard Milliken,	Sam'l Friedlander,
R. M. Walmsley,	A. H. May,
T. Lyle Lyon,	Samuel H. Boyd,
Wm. J. Behan,	B. F. Eshleman,
Chas. Chaffe,	L. C. Jurey,
Wm. Hartwell,	C. J. Leeds,
A. F. Janin,	A. M. Blackman,
Henry Abraham,	Louis Bush,
A. Brittin,	G. W. Seiffell,
Wm. Cunningham,	John I. Adams,
R. T. Buckner,	Wm. A. Gwyn,
	Chas. E. Black.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S

MAMMOTH

QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 160 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3.50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5.50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF

CROCKERY

Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods

OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS

JOHN CAUCHE,

AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,

109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,

Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

H-O-W T-O P-A-I-N-T.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of Tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter,

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture, cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures.

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations whenever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BROWN'S

IRON

TRADE MARK P PURITY REGIST'D ACT JUNE 4 1878 MARK

BITTERS

A TRUE TONIC.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS are a certain cure for all diseases requiring a complete tonic; especially Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Intermittent Fevers, Want of Appetite, Loss of Strength, Lack of Energy, etc. Enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. Acts like a charm on the digestive organs, removing all dyspeptic symptoms, such as tasting the food, Belching, Heat in the Stomach, Heartburn, etc. The only Iron Preparation that will not blacken the teeth or give headache. Sold by all Druggists at $1.00 a bottle.

BROWN CHEMICAL CO.
Baltimore, Md.

See that our Trade Mark is made in Brown Chemical Co. red ink across face of label on wrapper.

EDUCATIONS.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.

SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Weight Cast with yoke & frame	Cost of Bell & Hang'g.
No. 6,	251 lbs.	$ 25 00
No. 6½,	271 lbs.	36 00
No. 7,	301 lbs.	50 00
No. 8,	341 lbs.	75 00
No. 9,	381 lbs.	130 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A

H. D. McCOWN,

DEALER IN FINE

CLOTHING,

SHIRTS

AND

Mens' Furnishing Goods,

Cor. Common and St. Charles Sts,

NEW ORLEANS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S

—MANUAL—

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, JR.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health;" and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

600 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

NEW HOME!

SEWING MACHINE

Is More Perfect, Costlier to Make, More Durable, and made of Finer Material than any other Machine, and

SOLD FOR LESS MONEY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: If you do not wish to buy the New Home, I advise you to wait until other machine companies make a machine equal to it.

HEADQUARTERS, 170 CANAL ST.,

GUSTAV SEEGER,

Sole Agent.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ORDERS

—FOR—

Fresh, First-Class Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Etc.,

—SENT TO—

E. H. ADAMS & BROTHER,

WILL RECEIVE THE

PROMPTEST AND MOST CAREFUL ATTENTION.

AS THEY DO NOT DEAL IN

"Damaged Goods," "Auction Goods," or "Job Lots,"

THEIR PATRONS ARE SURE TO GET GOOD VALUE.

No. 594 Magazine Street, New Orleans.

D. H. HOLMES,

155 Canal Street, - - - - 15 Bourbon Street.

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in

Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.

HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.

D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,

(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,

Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to $25
6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.

U. S. BONDS.

Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.
Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank.

58 CAMP STREET.

JAMES COBBS,

Attorney at Law,

46 ST. FRANCIS STREET,

MOBILE, ALA.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,

112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

I have decided to distribute the remainder of

My Stock of Pictures

among my customers, rather than sacrifice them. Any person buying $5 and upwards of other goods, will be entitled to select from a class of Pictures ranging in price according to the size of bill purchased. No additional price will be put upon the goods, as this is entirely a bonus to induce sales during the dull Summer months.

My stock is comprised in part of Carpets, Oil Cloths, Upholstery Goods, Mattings, Wall Paper, Window Shades, Cornices, Curtain Goods, Wire Screens Frames, Mouldings and Mirrors.

E. HICATH,

97 and 99 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The Shortest and Quickest Route to all Eastern Cities.

THROUGH WITHOUT CHANGE TO Nashville, Louisville, Lynchburg, Washington, Cincinnati, Columbus, O., and St. Louis.

ENTIRE TRAINS THROUGH FROM NEW ORLEANS TO LOUISVILLE.

	Leave.	Arrive.
Express	7.05 A. M.	10.05 P. M.
Coast Accommodation	3.32 P. M.	9.12 A. M.
Fast Mail	6.00 P. M.	10.05 A. M.

ONLY ONE CHANGE OF CARS TO NORTHERN AND EASTERN CITIES.

Ticket office corner U. Charles and Common sts. where Sleeping Car accommodations can be secured.

C. P. ATMORE,
General Passenger Agent.
J. H. SMITH,
Ticket Agent.
J. T. HARAHAN
Superintendent.

FURNITURE.

W. G. TEBAULT.

47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. G. TEBAULT,

47 Royal Street,

New Orleans.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!

Personal experiences in the

UNITED STATES and CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES.

By J. B. HOOD,

Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army.

Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund, by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.

Price in cloth binding, $2; in leather, $3 50. Mailed, post paid, on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
41 Camp street.

Liverpool and London and Globe

INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT.

Office, Cor. Carondelet and Gravier Streets.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

STATEMENT OF THE COMPANY, JANUARY 1, 1882.

Gross fire assets	$12,167,858 41
Fire liabilities, including paid up capital	5,876,957 51
Net surplus	$ 6,291,380 90

STATEMENT OF THE U. S. BRANCH, JULY 1, 1881.

Assets	$1,502,218 18
Liabilities	2,490,156 52
Surplus	$ 912,061 66

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on the same footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

J. F. SCHROEDER Esq., Chairman of L. Cahn & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERCY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Laffargue.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson & Simpson.

HENRY A. OGDEN,
Resident Secretary.

JULES F. BOUNY, Assistant Resident Secretary.
CLARENCE F. BOW, Deputy Asst Resident Sec'y.
New Orleans, October 20, 1881. nov eom

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward.
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward

All guaranteed.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

New Orleans Pacific Railroad.

TRAINS WEST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
New Orleans, leave	7.00 A. M.	5.00 P. M.
Algiers	7.20	5.20
Gretna	7.44	5.37
Company Canal	8.00	5.50
St. Charles	10.30	8.04
St. John	10.45	10.15
Laurel	1.00 P. M.	10.30
Ft. James	1.15	10.46
Donaldsonville	2.30	11.—
Bayou Goula	4.15	12.21 P. M.
Thibodeaux	5.15	1.30
West Baton Rouge arrive	7.01	1.50

TRAINS EAST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
West Baton Rouge, leave	7.10 A. M.	2.30 P. M.
Thibodeaux	8.27	3.44
Bayou Goula	9.11	4.27
Donaldsonville	10.31	5.—
St. James	1.00 M.	7.20
Laurel	1.15 P. M.	9.17
St. John	2.16	9.47
St. Charles	2.31	9.51
Company Canal	2.57	10.11
Gretna	3.25	10.40
Algiers	3.41	10.55
New Orleans, arrive	4.—	11.—

For rates and information address

H. S. McRAE, M. H. SPELMAN
Superintendent. G. P. and T. Agt.

New Orleans, October 15, 1881.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.

By A. J. COOK,

Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.

THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being now in its fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.

G. T. LATHROP,
41 Camp street, New Orleans.

SULLIVAN & BULGER,

97 CAMP STREET.

Plumbers and Gas Fitters,

DEALERS IN

Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all kinds, Iron, Lead and Terra cotta Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges, also, different kinds of Gas Machines for country use.

All Orders Promptly Attended to.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. 1. JONES & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, Jan. 23, 1882.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Last
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	8⅞	8⅝
Ordinary	9⅝	9⅜
Good ordinary	10⅝	10⅜
Low middling	11	11⅛
Middling	11⅜	11⅛
Good middling	12	12
Middling fair	12⅝	12⅜
Sales to-day	3,500 bales.
Receipts since our last	7,000 bales.
Receipts previously	261,101 bales
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	@	6⅝
Fully fair		7⅛
Prime		7⅝
Choice		7⅞
Yellow clarified		8⅜
White clarified		9⅛
Powdered
Crushed
Molasses, in bbls, ₱ gallon:
Common
Fair
Prime
Choice
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common
Fair
Prime
Choice

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western
New York
Coffee, ₱ lb.
Rio ordinary
Rio fair
Rio prime
Cheese, ₱ lb.
Western factory
Eastern dairy
Candles, ₱ lb.
Best brands
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.
Choice K. D
Flour, ₱ bbl.
Superfine
XX
XXX
Choice XX
Choice XXX
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1, in bbls
Half bbls
Kits
Mackerel, No. 2, in bbls
Half bbls
Kits
Mackerel, No. 3, in bbls
Half bbls
Kits
Codfish, ₱ lb
Herring, ₱ box
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Coal, in cases
Coal, in bbls
Linseed, raw
Linseed, boiled
Cottonseed
Lard
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia
Olive Palmo
Castile
Soda, ₱ lb
Starch, ₱ lb
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse
Fine

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, 60 lbs, ₱ bushel:
Yellow
White
Mixed
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western
Red rust-proof
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs:
Choice
Hay, ₱ 100:
Prime
Choice
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed
Clay

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast
Shoulders
Sides, clear rib
Sides, clear
Hams, sugar-cured
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb:
Clear rib sides
Clear sides
Shoulders
Lard, ₱ lb:
Choice, in kegs
Choice, in tierces

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl:
Irish
Sweet
Onions, ₱ bbl
Apples, ₱ bbl
Cabbages, ₱ lb
Sour Kroul, ₱ bbl

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
Indiu
Jute
Baling Twine, ₱ lb		15
Ties, ₱ bundles:
30 Ores and buckles		1 50

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen
Grown chickens		5 00
Young do		4 50
Ducks		4 50
Geese		5 00
Turkeys	15 00	16 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen
Western		30
Southern		32
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon
Comb, ₱ lb
Pecans, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	9	12
Texas
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl
Foreign, ₱ box	2 00	5 00
Wool, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	22	23
Texas
Feathers, ₱ lb:
Geese
Hides, ₱ lb:
Country green	6	7
Dry salted		10
Dry flint	11½	12
Ox Horns, each		6
Tallow, ₱ lb	6	7½
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton:
In sacks
Meal		25 00
Oil cake		25 00
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	2 50	2 75
Molasses barrels		1 35
Half barrels		1 05
Kegs		70
Oak Staves, per 1200:
Kegs		60 00
Barrels	70 00	75 00
Extra claret	100 00	105 00
Extra hogshead	140 00	145 00
Extra pipes	190 00	195 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs
Medium		6
Good to fine		7½
Low leaf
Medium		8
Good		9½
Fine		10
Selections		12½

WASN'T SHE CUTE!

She knew it was necessary to be beautiful to be attractive. She knew health gave beauty a peculiar charm, therefore she made free use of Brown's Iron Bitters, and her captivating smile seemed like a beam of sunshine; her eyes were bright and sparkling, and her skin, oh, 'twas most wondrous fair! Well worthy of a trial is this valuable medicine by all our lady friends.—Fashion Paper.

—The recent prohibition, in Calcutta of open-air preaching on the part of the missionaries has been overruled by the higher courts.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Mr. Scoville, as counsel for Guiteau, had at the outset of the trial a good deal of sympathy, based upon the idea that he was doing a chivalrous thing in defending so odious a criminal; but by his bearing on the trial he has dissipated any good feelings in his behalf.

To-day Scoville passed all bounds in his speech by making a most coarse and indecent assault upon President Arthur, Gen. Grant and Mr. Conkling, attempting to hold them responsible for the death of Garfield. This onslaught created much sensation in the court-room. Representative Turner, of Kentucky, who was present, was so much disgusted that he took his hat and left the room.

It is thought by some that the Judge ought to have rebuked Scoville, and made him confine his remarks within decent bounds. It looks as if Scoville had lost any hope of defeating a verdict of guilty.

HAZELHURST, Jan. 18.—A $20,000 fire occurred here last night, which burned five buildings, three of which were occupied. The following is a list of the losses and the amount of insurance: M. Faller, two frame buildings, $2,000, uninsured; Print Matthews, stock of goods, $11,800, insured for $5000; Challe & Powell, of New Orleans, building, $1000, supposed to be insured; J. C. Pitts, building, $1,500, uninsured; H. H. Nogg, building and stock, $4,000, insured for $3,500. The fire originated in an unoccupied building. Negroes were gambling in a back room, and leaving a fire burning in the building is supposed to be the cause. There are a few other small losses, but the exact amounts are not known.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—A special to the Evening Post, from Galveston, says: Mexican reports say there is a reign of terror in Jalisco. In a recent election riot two men were killed and four wounded by the troops. In the same State ten bandits attacked a train, killed one train-man and stole some freight. During the election trouble at Guadalajara, Lieut. Col Manuel Ayak was killed by Don Euzbio Barregan.

CANTON, Miss., Jan. 18.—We have now the highest water ever known in the Big Black valley. The railroad track is submerged near West Station, eight to fifteen inches, and the water is rising. It is still raining. No wash out is known.

There was no train South on the sixteenth and seventeenth instant. Can not learn the condition of the water to-day.

MOBILE, Jan. 18.—All the lower landings along the Tombigbee river are inundated. Fifty-six feet of water was reported at Tuscaloosa yesterday, and the river is still rising.

MEMPHIS Jan. 19.—John Sullivan, member of the Fire Department, has been sick a couple of days; to-day his case developed into a genuine case of small-pox, so pronounced by the Board of Health. A negro girl, with a case of variolnid, was also found in the southern portion of the city.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 19.—The river is rising slowly and is fifty-two feet on the gauge, within two feet of the rise of 1847. A large amount of money was raised to-day and committees were appointed to superintend the issuance of provisions to indigent sufferers from backwaters. Backwaters from the Cumberland have submerged portions of the Memphis and Louisville Road.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20. The Secretary of the Navy has just received the following telegram from Engineer Melville, of the lost Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette:

IRKUTSK, Jan. 18.—Melville, Danenhower and eleven men are all well. Melville returned to the Arctic Ocean; found the log-books, instruments and a few records left by DeLong. No tidings of the second cutter, Lieut. Chipp. Search was continued during the winter by the Cossack commandant of Bohm and Jukutsk under directions of Gen. Tschernieff. Word has been received from Kohlym river that no boat had arrived to date, November 19. I am acquainted with the country where DeLong and party are, and request orders to remain with two men to renew the search in March. Danenhower and nine men to return to the United States. Danenhower's sight is partially recovered.

G. W. MELVILLE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The National Board of Health to-day officially declared small-pox to be epidemic in the United States, and is now occupying itself in devising measures to protect the country against the disease.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The House Committee of Improvement of the Mississippi river held a five hours' session to-day, hearing arguments from Capt. John Cowdon, of Memphis, and Capt. T. P. Leathers, of New Orleans, in advocacy of an appropriation of $250,000 for the construction of a canal from the Mississippi river to Lake Borgne, ten miles below New Orleans. The gentlemen argued that such canal would drain off the surplus water of the river and thus prevent all overflows.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 21.—A great deal of suffering prevails among the unfortunates who have been driven from their homes by the high water.

Many are sick from exposure, and more will yet have to be sent to the hospital if the wet continues. The Ladies' Relief Society furnished provisions to-day to 550 families, averaging from five to eleven souls each.

It is estimated that not less than three thousand people had to be fed, and this number is likely to increase on a further rise of the river.

An expanse of ten miles in and around Nashville is covered with water. Most of the sufferers in the city are negroes, who occupied the greater portion of the lower part of the city. As many as eight or ten in places now occupy one room together.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The Senate Committee on Pensions to-day unanimously agreed to report a bill granting to Mrs. Lincoln $15,000 in cash to be available immediately, and also providing that from and after the enactment of this bill her pension shall be at the rate of $5000 per annum, the remainder of her life, in lieu of her present annual pension of $3000. The cash payment of $15,000 is to be granted as relief, and not as arrears of pension.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 21.—A Nashville special to the Times-Star says: Rain yesterday and last night raised the river twelve inches. The waters now extend over 3000 acres in the city limits. The Tennessee river, at Johnsonville, is ten miles wide. All railroad communication with Memphis is cut off. Large quantities of lumber are floating away from the lumber yards.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The Court-House is packed to-day, and hundreds unable to gain admission. Judge Porter commenced the closing argument. He is still unwell, and will therefore ask for an early adjournment. He depicted the character of the prisoner, and sketched the circumstances leading to the crime, and painted with fervid language the damning wickedness of its execution.

Guiteau, as usual, had the opening speech for the day, in the course of which he served the following notice upon Judge Porter:

"Now in regard to Judge Porter, I want to say, as he is to have the closing of the case, if he attempts to mislead the court or jury I and my counsel will stop him. He came on this case under misapprehension on the part of Gen. Arthur, otherwise he would not be in the case. He don't properly represent the government; he only represents himself."

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 23.—A bill passed the Senate to-day authorizing the Governor to offer a reward for the apprehension of the murderer of Gen. Tucker.

The bill to prevent and punish fighting in the State, as it passed, provides a fine of $1000 and imprisonment not less than one year in the county jail for principals, and imprisonment and fine of half the time and amount for seconds and stakeholders, and if death results, the penalties that are now prescribed by law will be enforced.

A resolution was adopted requesting Senators and Representatives in Congress to secure government aid towards closing the Bonnet Carre Crevass.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 23.—The Times-Star's Nashville special says: The river has fallen fifteen inches within the last twelve hours. Estimates are being made of the losses. The whole damage to the lumber interest will be over $150,000. Prowett, Spurr & Co.'s losses in lumber amount to $75,000. Damage to the city sewer will amount to $25,000. At a rough estimate the losses to individuals will aggregate $500,000. The fund for the relief sufferers from the flood reaches over $8000.

WEALTH IN THE MORMON TITHING-HOUSE.—Wagons loaded with the various products of Utah industries are constantly passing through the gate into the tithing-house at Salt Lake. The Mormon law requires that one-tenth of all the things produced by the labor of the faithful shall be given to the church, and the compliance is in the main honest, though attempts at shirking are occasionally detected. The annual income from this source is kept a secret by the rulers, but has been estimated as high as $5,000,000, and undoubtedly reaches $3,000,000. "It is thought by the Gentiles," says a correspondent of the Boston Herald, "and intimated by the saints themselves, that a portion of the tithing fund has been employed, and very effectively employed, in securing favorable legislation in the national Congress. The departed Brigham was wont to speak very contemptuously of Congress, boasting that he cared nothing for it, because he could influence its votes with money whenever he deemed it desirable. And there is reason to think that the boast was not wholly idle."—New York Sun.

—The following story concerning the Arabian horses brought to this country by Gen. Grant is said to be a fact. When the horses were delivered to the American official who was deputed to represent Gen. Grant, he found that, through some hocus-pocus of the employes of the Sultan's stables, one of the horses selected had been exchanged for a dismal beast, being lame and generally unsound. Our countryman did not wish to forward so wretched an animal to the United States; yet what was to be done? To refuse the Sultan's gift would have been a deadly insult, and, besides, he had no right to do anything of the kind; while to find fault with it would have been a deadlier. Finally a bright idea struck him. The unsound horse happened to be black, so he sent for the high and mighty Turkish official who had the matter in charge, and regretfully informed him that, though Gen. Grant was enchanted with the two noble steeds that were accorded him by the magnificence of the Sultan, he would, unfortunately, be unable to use the black one, as horses of that color were only employed for funerals in America, and to offer or accept one as a gift was held to be an exceedingly bad omen in that country. The courtious Turk was profuse in civilities and apologies, the black horse was taken away, and a sound and handsome animal of another color was sent in its stead.—New York Independent.

A NEW MAN DYSPEPSIA CURED.

From the Hon. J. B. Benson, Hart Co., Ga.

HARTWELL, GA., FEB. 10, 1881.

I want to say a good word for Brown's Iron Bitters. I am about sixty years of age; have warehouse, railroad, and newspaper work to do. I have been taking—and various other kinds of whisky bitters to give me an appetite, and the only appetite I got was one for drink. Rev. Mr. Anderson, the presiding elder for the district, stopped with me not long ago, suffering, dreadfully with dispepsia. I got him Brown's Iron Bitters. They cured him. After he left, I concluded to take that remaining in the bottle, and I assure you it has made a new man out of me. I have no desire for stimulants, and believe I could eat a pair of old boots and digest them as easily as rice. J. B. BENSON.

Quarterly Conferences.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

NEW ORLEANS DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Algiers	Jan. 28, 29
Morgan street	Feb. 5
Louisiana Avenue	12
Felicity street	19
Baton Rouge	25, 26
Grosse Tete, at Rosedale	Mar. 4, 5
Bayou Lafourche, at Houma	11, 12
St. Charles Avenue	18, 19
Carondelet	25, 26

The District Stewards will convene January 30, at Carondelet Street Church, 7 P. M., in pastor's office.

2 CHRISTIAN KEENER, P. E.

OPELOUSAS DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Washington	Jan. 21, 22
Plaquemine Brulee and Kimball's chapel	28, 29
Lake Charles	Feb. 4, 5
Abbeville	11, 12
Sugartown	18, 19
Opelousas	25, 26
Patterson ville and Morgan City	Mar. 4, 5
New Iberia	11, 12
Franklin	18, 19
Vermillionville	25, 26
Calcasieu mission	Apr. 1, 2
Grand Chenier	8, 9

3 LEWIS A. ERCO, P. E.

DELHI DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Waterproof, at Waterproof	Jan. 21, 22
Tensas, at Jordan Chapel	28, 29
Monroe, at Monroe	Feb. 4, 5
Trenton, at Trenton	11, 12
Lake Providence, at Lake Providence	18, 19
Winnsboro, at Winnsboro	25, 26
Delhi, at Delhi	Mar. 4, 5
Bayville, at Bayville	11, 12
Oak Ridge, at Prairie	18, 19
Lind Grove, at Bartholomew	25, 26
Bastrop, at Bastrop	Apr. 1, 2
Floyd, at Floyd	8, 9

3 E. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

SHREVEPORT DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Coushatta, at Coushatta	Jan. 21, 22
Springville, at Armstead chapel	28, 29
Logansport	Feb. 4, 5
Caddo, at Liberty	11, 12
Mooringsport	18, 19
North Bossier, at Concord	25, 26
South Bossier, at Bellvue	Mar. 4, 5
Shreveport	11, 12
Mansfield	18, 19
Natchitoches, at Natchitoches	25, 26
Minn, at New Hope	Apr. 1, 2
Aquacoc, at Holy Grove	8, 9
Sabine, Baron Sen	15, 16
Pleasant Hill	22, 23

District Stewards' meeting will be held at Shreveport, March 11, A. D. 1882.

T. H. M'CLENDON, P. E.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WINONA DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Alpha	Feb. 18, 19
French Camps	25, 26
Koschusko circuit	Mar. 3
Koschusko and Durant	4, 5
Newport	10, 12
Attala	18, 19
Richland	25, 26
Lexington	30
Winona and Valden	Apr. 1, 2
West	8, 9
Winona circuit	13
Walthall	15, 16
Carrollton	22, 23
Black Hawk	29, 30
Minter City	May 6, 7

Preachers on French Camp and Zilpha will please inform me where their Quarterly Conferences will be held. My address is Durum, Miss.

THOS. Y. RAMSEY, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

JACKSON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Canton	Jan. 1, 2
Jackson	7, 8
Edwards	14, 15
Hind's mission	17, 18
Bolton	21, 22
Madison, at Wesley	28, 29
Scott Chapel	Feb. 4, 5
Sharon, at Union	11, 12
Benton	18, 19
Yazoo City	Mar. 4, 5
Dover	11, 12
Mt. Carmel	18, 19

W. L. C. BENNETT, P. E.

GRANDON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Marvin circuit, at Westbrana	Jan. 7, 8
Cato circuit, at Clear Creek	14, 15
Trenton circuit, at Pokeville	21, 22
Raleigh circuit, at Raleigh	28, 29
Brandon station	Feb. 4, 5
Pinola circuit, at Holly Bush	11, 12
Lake circuit, at Lake	18, 19
Walnut Grove circuit, at Hillsboro	25, 26
Conehatta circuit, at Goshen	Mar. 4, 5
Newton circuit, at Newton	11, 12
Forest circuit, at Grange Hall	18, 19
Pearl Springs mission, at Mell Dale	25, 26
Decatur mission, at Mt. Hebron	Apr. 1, 2
Philadelphia mission, at Philadelphia	8, 9
Ludlow mission, at Conway	15, 16

District Stewards will meet at Morton, on Friday, February 3.

J. M. GANN, P. E.

WOODVILLE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Amite City	Jan. 7, 8
Clinton	14, 15
East Feliciana	21, 22
Pomchlonola, at Pomchlonola	28, 29
St. Helena	Feb. 4, 5
Amite	11, 12
Jackson	18, 19
Pipkin and Port Hudson	25, 26
Bayou Sara	Mar. 4, 5
Livingstone	11, 12
East Baton Rouge	18, 19
Wilkinson	25, 26
Woodville	Apr. 1, 2
North Wilkinson	8, 9

Address Greensburg Ex. Papers, to card, inform Presiding Elder of place for First Quarterly Meeting.

R. A. LITTLE, P. E.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Crystal Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Wesson and Beauregard, at Wesson	7, 8
Hazlehurst	14, 15
Brandywine, at Rehoboth	21, 22
Summit, at Summit	28, 29
McComb and Magnolia, at Magnolia	Feb. 4, 5
Providence, at Beulah	11, 12
Baton Pierre, at Pleasant Ridge	18, 19
Adams and Bonchuto, at Adams	25, 26
Scotland at Bethesda	Mar. 4, 5
Spring Ridge, at Forest Hill	11, 12
Terry, at Pleasant Grove	18, 19
Brookhaven	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in Hazlehurst, January 21, 1882.

J. A. B. JOICE, P. E.

VICKSBURG DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Natchez	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Vicksburg	Jan. 7, 8
Warren circuit, at Bovina	14, 15
Port Gibson	21, 22
Rocky Springs, at Grand Gulf	28, 29
Cayuga, at Utica	Feb. 4, 5
Fayette Circuit, at Fayette	11, 12
Meadville, at Oak Grove	18, 19
Kingston	25, 26
Clover Hill, at Mayersville	Mar. 4, 5
Rolling Fork, at Rolling Fork	11, 12
Mt. Olivet at Satartia	18, 19
	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in the Methodist Church at Port Gibson, January 28, at 10:30 o'clock A. M.

12TH S. WOODWARD, P. E.

SEASHORE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Ocean Springs circuit, at Ocean Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
East Pascagoula, at Agnes	Jan. 6
Moss Point, at Moss Point	8
West Pascagoula, at Oak Grove	14, 15
Henderboro, at Scott's Station	20
Pearlington, at Pearlington	21, 22
Franklinton, at Franklinton	26
Covington, at Covington	28, 29
Whitington, at Whitington	Feb. 4, 5
Spring Cottage, at Stewarts	11, 12
China Grove, at Whitesides	18, 19
Mt. Carmel, at Mt. Zion	25, 26
Westville, at Pleasant Hill	Mar. 4, 5
Bethel, at Hebron	11, 12
Enoch, at Scuba Chapel	18, 19

T. S. WEST, P. C.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MARIANA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Geneva circuit, at Ella	31, Jan. 1
Cerro Gordo, at Otter Creek	Jan. 7, 8
Freeport, at Freeport	14, 15
Holmes's Valley, at Adagail	28, 29
Mariana, at Mariana	Feb. 4, 5
Big Creek, at Big Creek	11, 12
Greenwood, at Collins Chapel	25, 26
Headland, at Poplarhead	Mar. 4, 5
Chippola, at New Britton	11, 12
Calhoun, at Bethel	18, 19

The District Stewards will meet at Mariana, February 4, 1882.

J. S. CRAZE, P. E.

PENSACOLA DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Pensacola	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Warrington	Jan. 1, 2
Millview and Ross Point, at Millview	7, 8
Powelton, at Powelton	11, 12
Milton	21, 22
Stockton, at Stockton	28, 29
Perdido mission, at High Pine	Feb. 1
Pollard, at Pollard	4, 5
Evergreen, at Belleville	11, 12
Repton, at Belleville	14, 15
Monroeville, at Liberty	18, 19
Herbert mission, at Baton Camp Ground	25, 26
Georgiana, at Wesley Chapel	Mar. 4, 5
Sepulga, at Bethel	11, 12
Monterey, at Monterey	18, 19
Yellow River mission

We have an appropriation of seventy-five dollars for this work, and wish to employ a local preacher. Address me at Citronelle, Alabama.

Pastors will please urge their official members to be present at their first quarterly conference.

52 S. G. COX, P. E.

GREENSBORO DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Greensboro station	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Newberne circuit, at Newberne, Wed'y	Jan. 4
Greensboro ct., at Union Chapel, Friday	6
Havana circuit, at Havana	7, 8
Green circuit, at Salem, Wednesday	11
Gainsville circuit, at Gainsville	14, 15
Belmont circuit, at Wesley Chapel, Friday	20
Livingstone and Eutaw, at Livingstone	21, 22
Cuba circuit, at York, Tuesday	24
Gaston circuit, at Sharon, Thursday	26
Butler and Mt. Sterling	28, 29
Choctaw circuit, at Oak Grove, Tuesday	31
Forkland circuit, at Forkland	Feb. 4, 5
Demopolis station, Wednesday	8

DEAR BRETHREN: In order that we may get all to work as soon as possible, I have put many of the above appointments in the week. I do not expect, in the end, to do you any the less service. Let us put everything into working order at once.

51 H. POUCHART, P. E.

MONTGOMERY DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Hartville circuit, at Seale	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Elmore circuit, at Oak Valley	7, 8
Tallassee station	9
Tuskegee circuit at Warrior Stand	14, 15
Tuskegee station	16
Salem circuit, at Pierce Chapel	21, 22
Auburn station	23
Crawford circuit, at Mt. Zion	28, 29
Montgomery station	Feb. 4, 5
Tallapoosa mission, at Rock Springs	9
Loachapoka circuit, at Notasulga	10, 11
Dudley station	12
Franklin mission, at St. John	18, 19
	25, 26

51 T. F. MANGUM, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SINGER $40 BORROWED BY I M SINGER TO BUILD THE FIRST SUCCESSFUL SEWING MACHINE AUGUST 1850 OBELISK

THE GENUINE SINGER MACHINE HAS BEEN AWARDED THE FIRST PRIZE OVER ALL COMPETITORS 200 TIMES MORE THAN

HIEROGLYPHICS THAT EVERY CHILD CAN UNDERSTAND

SALES OF THE GENUINE SINGER FAMILY SEWING MACHINE

1862 MACHINES SOLD	12,489
1872 "	219,758
1873 "	232,444
1874 "	241,679
1875 "	249,852
1876 "	262,316
1877 "	282,812
1878 "	356,432

TRADE MARK

1879 MACHINES SOLD	431,167
1880 "	538,609

BEING OVER THREE-QUARTERS OF ALL THE SEWING MACHINES SOLD THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

BUY NONE BUT THE GENUINE

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

85 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

$5 to $20 per day at Home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

PHILIP WERLEIN,

135 CANAL STREET.

The Leading Southern Piano House.

SEND FOR CATALOGUES.

Every Instrument Warranted.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

PIANOS.
CHICKERING,
MATHUSHEK,
HALE.

ORGANS.
ESTEY,
MASON & HAMLIN,
STERLING.

Lowest Prices, Most Liberal Terms.

No. 56 USE THE MEDICATED GLASSES TRADE MARK St. Charles St.

A WONDERFUL and SCIENTIFIC DEVICE.

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, and possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, as when first you use them. They have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European oculists claim that the MEDICATED GLASSES have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can they injure the eye.

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.

2. The chemicals make the glasses hard, they retain their polish. Hence you will always see things as bright and clear as at first.

3. The chemicals keep the glasses cold, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.

4. With these glasses you can read, write or sew all night, the light having no effect on the eye, without distressing or tiresome sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS—NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED.

The MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the frame H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED.

Dealers Supplied Wholesale at Liberal Discount.

ALL EYES SUITED. Persons residing at a distance who may wish to procure these spectacles can send for a circular containing description, prices, etc., and directions for insuring a perfect fit, and have them sent by mail, by addressing

HERC. HOUSAH,
CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,
56 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing mention this paper.

DIUTURNITY:

A COSMICAL ESSAY,

By REV. R. ABBEY,

Concerning the World's Present Infancy, its Immense Future, its Undiscovered Treasures, its Indestructibility, The Wisdom of Providence, The Office of Science, The Scope of Christianity, The Folly of a Millennium, The Non-human Second Coming of Christ, and The Glorious Destiny of Mankind.

"No ordinary ability is displayed. We have read the whole book with unflagging interest. It is sensible, readable and remarkable."—N. Y. Methodist.

"One of the most remarkable books we ever read."—Christian Advocate, Nashville.

"The author is a man of nature and scholarly mind."—American Christian Review.

"An entirely original argument. Readable and remarkable."—Missouri Presbyterian Herald.

"Diuturnity is the name of the book of the age."—Gospel Herald.

"Clear thinking, wonderful originality. Vast amount of information."—Hope Monthly.

Highly commended by more than a hundred writers. Price, $1 50.

Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville,
G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS.

Dealers in all kinds of

LUMBER, SHINGLES, &C.

AND IN

ALABAMA COAL.

Shipments made from either Mobile or New Orleans or to all railroads direct.

WANTED.—White Oak Staves, Red Cedar and Black Walnut logs, received at either New Orleans or Mobile. Highest cash price paid.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

TUERK'S
POSITIVE ROTARY
HYDRAULIC MOTOR,

For running all kinds of Machinery by

Water Power.

Send for Circular and Price List to
G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

KNABE
PIANOFORTES.
UNEQUALED IN
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability.
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
Nos. 204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by F. FRIEDRICKSON, Wholesale and Retail Druggist, New Orleans. Orders by mail at regular price.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 28.—NO. 5. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1882. WHOLE NO. 1391

PUBLISHED FOR THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE---112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.

Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE:
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HYNNICUTT.
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. FELIX R. HILL.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

WOODS IN WINTER.

BY R. W. COOPERWOOD.

When Winter winds are piercing chill,
And through the hawthorn blows the gale,
With solemn feet I tread the hills
That overlook the lonely vale.

O'er the bare upland, and away
Through the long reach of desert woods,
The embracing sunbeams chastely play;
And gladden those deep solitudes,

Where, twisted round the barren oak,
The summer vine in beauty clung,
And summer winds the sweet flower broke,
The crystal circle is hung.

Where, from their frozen urns, mute springs
Pour out the river's gradual tide;
Shrilly the skater's iron rings,
And voices all the woodland side.

Alas! how changed from the fair scene,
When birds sang out their mellow lay,
And leaves were soft, and woods were green,
And the song ceased not with the day.

But still wild music is abroad;
Pale, desert woods! within your crowd,
And gathering winds in hoarse accord
Amid the vocal reeds pipe loud.

Chill airs and whirling winds! ply your
Bleak power and drive the dry leaves free;
Ye have your charms! none asks me how
I love to see the opening year.

I love, and it cheers me long,

Is it a Claim or a Charity?

MR. EDITOR: A short and well-written article in the ADVOCATE, of January 19, on "The Law as Regards Conference Claimants," calls attention to a matter of more than ordinary importance. The author of that article believes the present law of the church is "holy, just and good;" but, as he seems open to conviction, perhaps he will not be offended if those who differ from him in belief write, as he has done, their convictions on the subject.

For a good many years, in service on the Joint Board of Finance, and in contact with members of the church, who are regular contributors to the "Conference collection," my attention has been directed to the defects of the law of the church as it now stands; and while I can not hope to influence the action of the General Conference as to this subject, yet I write to call attention to these defects. I think money paid to superannuates, their widows and orphans, is a claim, and so, must answer the question which forms the caption of this article. I am justified, in this conclusion, by the language of the Discipline, and the settled convictions of preachers and people in reference to it, and I propose to write of it as such. Now, as a charity, the necessities of those among whom it is distributed may form a basis for the distribution; but as a claim, that basis must be something which the church has received from them. Of course, that something is their service, and as it is simply impossible to find out the value, or "amount" of the service rendered, what better basis can be obtained than the time of it. While each financial board ought to be allowed discretionary power in adopting a scale of division, yet the number of years in the active ministry sought, by law, to be the basis in settling the amount paid to each claimant. Many good reasons may be advanced to sustain this position; among them, those that follow.

Such a law will recognize the universal sentiment, that remuneration must depend on the service rendered, and be in the ratio of the benefits received. Men of business are astonished when they learn that the "Conference collection" is divided among claimants according to their necessities; and the church, under the influence of this disclosure, withholds its money, too often with the feeling that this is only charity and its charity must begin at home. Let our people know that Conference claimants have indeed a claim on them, and their response to this assessment will be more prompt and liberal. They always show their recognition of long and faithful service, but can not see why they are called on to raise a fund, as large a part of which is received by the man, who in feeble health and a semi-local relation to the Conference, serves the church for one, two or five years, as is received by some old veteran who has lived through his fiftieth anniversary as minister of the gospel. I suppose, as a rule, one, out of fifty men who are put on the superannuated list in early life, goes there as the result of hard work and exposure in the itinerant ranks; the remaining forty-nine are men who are wrecked by disease before they enter the Conference, or are broken down from causes for which their work in the ministry is in no way accountable, and the church is under no more obligation to help them in that case, than it is to help anyone of its members who may become prostrated by disease and is thus thrown upon its charity.

Such a law, as is proposed, will tend to encourage our preachers; and will not, as the present law seems to do, put a premium on prodigality. So far as my observation goes, the salaries of Methodist preachers, great or small, are not more than enough to meet their expenses. If money is saved, it is saved by close economy, and by sacrifice of some things which people other than preachers think necessary to their comfort. This is true, whether the salary be two hundred or two thousand dollars. Small salaries are paid, in general, where the expenses are not great, and large salaries where the outgo is equal to the income. So the amount saved does not depend on the amount received, but on the capacity and willingness of the preachers to take care of what is received. Now, take a case. A. enters a Conference, is brilliant and popular, gets good appointments and receives fine salaries. He lives well, denies himself nothing that his salary will enable him to buy, and, alas, sometimes goes in debt to secure for himself and family all that their extravagance demands. Long or short he runs his career, and, at last, finds his name on the superannuated list, and his family and himself without money and without a home. B., who, by the way, entered the Conference in A.'s class, has served on all sorts of charges. Sometimes his salary has been large, sometimes otherwise; but he has been a careful economized man. His wants [illegible] supplied; and [illegible] he [illegible] has had to [illegible] good and devoted wife some simple and reasonable gratification, he has justified himself in language like this: "Never mind, my dear, it will not always be so. The money I am putting aside, after a time, will be sufficient to buy a home, and in our old age, if God will, we will rest quietly in that home of our own. The money then paid to us out of the Conference fund, I will sacredly devote to securing for you the comforts now denied you." He, too, finishes his course as an itinerant, and he and A. are among the superannuates of the Conference. The two cases come up for the consideration of the financial board. A. has friends who draw a strong picture of his wants. All are startled by the description of his dreadful destitution. B. is not represented at all, or if he is, it is by a modest letter he has written to some brother, containing the request to receive and bring to him "whatever amount" may be named by the board. The case is clear. The chairman says: "Brethren, we must be governed by the necessity of the claimants, and here, though their term of service is the same, we must discriminate. Bro. A. is in fearful want while Bro. B. has a home and farm of his own." Nobody asks if B. is able to work his farm, or if his land is of any account. It is forgotten that as the money saved by him was not much, his little place must be nearly, if not quite, worthless. He was not able, after all his self-denial, to buy a good place. Well, the board have just $300 to divide between these two, and the decision is made. A. gets $250, and B. $50. Is it right, is it just? Surely, there can be but one answer. By the law proposed, such cases would not occur. Prodigality would not be rewarded, and careful economy would not be punished. Equity demands that B. should have, in his old age, what he had all along denied himself of, that he might have it there; and that A. should have only what his time of service gave him a right to, even if it is insufficient to supply the comforts which he has never before been without.

Another advantage, resulting from the adoption of the proposed law will be, that it will save our Conferences of the error, or the necessity, of readmitting or admitting men who have spent the most and the best part of their lives in secular pursuits, and who enter or re-enter Conference too often, only to be a burden on charges which they do not serve acceptably, and then, after a year or so of inefficient work, to have their names placed upon that list which ought to contain only the names of those, who by hard work, or long service, have become entitled to the honor and the reward.

I think of other grounds, Mr. Editor, of objection to the law as it now stands, and of the adoption of the law proposed; but my letter has already gone far beyond the limits I had in view, so, just at this place I will close. HENRY O. MOORE.

To Conference and Back.

MR. EDITOR: On the second day of January, in company with President Borden and J. E. Scales, lay-delegate, we left Mansfield to attend the session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, which was to meet in New Orleans on the fourth.

We took a hack, the depot being a mile and a half from town. About the first question asked was: "Have a cigar? Does the smoke annoy you?" No, we do not smoke; but whenever we start for Conference we make up our mind to be well-smoked before we get back. We took the cars at two P. M., and, after a little more than an hour's pleasant travel, the conductor announced that we were at Pleasant Hill. For thirty years we have been traveling between these places, and have never appropriated less than a half day to make the trip till this time. What an immense amount of time that has been lost between these places alone, to say nothing of all the plodding horseback traveling of these thirty years. At six P. M., we arrived at Provencal (pronounced Provensaw), the terminus of the passenger cars. From here we were dependent upon the construction trains for connection with the Morgan line at Cheneyville, fifty miles distant. Our chagrin was immoderate when we learned that no train would leave for twenty-four hours, with no accommodations to stay, and a cross grained depot agent to contend with. We were asked out, and the key turned upon us, and it was the only place we could get to the fire, or even get a seat to sit down. His profanity was grating, and his conduct unjustifiable. We overheard some of his comrades reprove him for swearing in the presence of preachers. He said he was not aware that he was in the company of ministers from anything he had seen in their conduct. What he saw unministerial we can not conceive, as there were but two preachers, and one of them was sick, and we can vouch for the conduct of the other for the last forty years.

The lady, however, who kept the eating house, gave us the key to his conduct when she said: "He's drunk all the time, that is what is the matter with him." While involved in this trouble we were somewhat relieved by learning a special train was going through and would be on hand in a short time, and we hoped to go on it; but all we could get from it was that it was special. The train was loaded with a railroad dignitary, and no room for preachers or lay delegates for Conference. But, providentially or otherwise, the dignified train had not gone ten miles before it had run off the track more than once. They had not the faith of Laban, though a heathen, for he said of the Patriarch: "I have learned by experience that the Lord hath blessed me for thy sake." Three or four hours after they left, we took a construction train and soon overtook them.

On the night of the third we got to Cheneyville, where we had to remain till morning for the train to the city. Here we had pleasant and obliging officials, but no accommodations to stay—had to walk a mile and put up with an old colored woman known as Aunt Judy. Early on the morning of the fourth we were on the train and off for New Orleans, and, after a pleasant day's travel over a beautiful country, we arrived in the city at four P. M. We soon found our pleasant home at Mrs. Boullenet's, and learned that Conference business was progressing as usual. Our Conference enjoyment was marred by the sickness of Bro. Borden, who had much of college interest to attend to, and which no one else could. We were kept busy, during the session of the Conference, not having time to visit a friend or buy a bonnet. On our way home, after the first day, we had to take our chances to get from Cheneyville to Provencal on the construction trains. At Cheneyville we were detained eighteen hours. Charley Murray, a colored man, furnished us something to eat, but how to sleep was the hardest problem to solve. We found an open room, without fire, and some empty corn sacks to lie on, and Bro. Scales rented a comfort from a colored woman to cover with; so three of us laid us down to rest, and till morning rested one side at a time. This reminded us of the times when the New Orleans preacher ate the tough hen at Grand Bayou, crossed the Red river swamp in a mule wagon, and paid nothing for the extra jolts when on their way to the Conference at Mansfield in 1853. The ex-editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will remember what he said about the trip. From Cheneyville we rode on a flat car, which was pushed through mud end foremost. We protected ourselves from the cold wind by crouching behind some empty kegs. At Alexandria, for twenty-four hours, we had to wait for the wagon again. Here we whiled away a day. Went to the courthouse where a preliminary trial was pending of parties who had killed several persons in the western portion of the parish. As might be expected, it was stated, the killing was the result of a drunken spree. Will not the good people of this State send up a petition of 200,000 names for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the traffic in whisky? Here we met our old friend, R. J. Bowman, who took us home with him, as we supposed, to introduce us to his new wife; but, after he exhibited the model of a gang plow which he invented and for which he has a patent, we did not know so well about it. The model is beautiful, and we hope it will be a grand success. We also met with Dr. Laney of former acquaintance. We were glad, as time is leaving its mark on him, to find that he is ripening in piety. The road from Alexandria to Provencal was in a terrible condition. In many places, where the cuts were deep, large landslides had covered the rail track several feet deep. The engine, pulling the train through the mud, reminded us of an ox wagon on a farm road.

On one occasion we had to walk over the cross-ties five miles and carry our valises. Several ladies were in company, and true to their sex, they were all equal to the emergency, one of whom, especially, we thank for her sympathy. She said she was not sorry for any one but that little old man, and she wanted to pick him up and tote him. At Robtline we met the passenger train, and got home the sixth day after leaving the city. We do not wish to discourage anybody about the Pacific railway, but would advise travelers not to try it before next summer, as it is in a condition that it can not be improved before next spring. As you see, it has required some effort to get to Conference and back; but we made the trip, and though we got home with a purse more than thirty dollars lighter, we have some advantages over the man that did not go. It is said that two extremes meet: so the first and last appointment we ever received from an Annual Conference was Caddo circuit. J. P.

MANSFIELD, LA.

Colorado.

MR. EDITOR: I always read the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE with interest—interest scarcely less than when I left you; although quite a number of new faces appear from time to time, as correspondents and on your Conference list. Well, your last Conference proceedings were gratifying to me away here. Such good reports; collections for missions and forward movement in all your borders is truly encouraging and inspiring. Your young men are coming on and taking places of responsibility and importance. I sympathize with all your preachers—feel a prayerful interest in them. The older ones, in that they have borne witness for Jesus so long and are still standing in their "lot;" the younger, in that much is expected and required of them, and hardness and conflict awaits them in every field. The former must not be forgotten or mistreated, the latter must not be over-worked or over-caressed. Death continues his sad and unrelenting work. The company of the good and pure is rapidly augmenting. I might mention the names of some of the departed, whose memory is as ointment poured forth, but I forbear after mentioning one, Traxton Bowell, twice a member of my pastoral charge in New Iberia. I remember about the last time I saw him, now about ten years ago, I asked him what he was going to do with his means (his prospective wealth that was immense), that soon we would be called upon to give account of our stewardship. I said to him, and saw it arrested his attention, "You had better make the missionary society the heir of your property, that it may do good after you are gone." I have noticed, with pleasure, it has taken that direction. "Though dead, he speaketh," and it may be the blessed gospel to the poor benighted is now heard by reason of his bequest, and may be heard and result in the salvation of many. Such a life is not in vain. But I must stop my pen, as other reminiscences and recollections crowd upon me, suggested by this. I must relate one. In 1859, the pastor of New Iberia circuit, then embracing what is now Iberia, Vermillionville and Lafayette parishes, a large scope of Southwestern Louisiana, in the discharge of his extensive and onerous duties fell very sick, and at the house of Bro. Mouit, near New Iberia, lay quivering apparently between life and death. Dr. John Chevis, a local preacher, now dead, living then at Perry's Bridge below Abbeville, came over to spend the Sabbath and, perhaps, on Monday attend to some business, called on the sick preacher, then suffering in the greatest throes of misery. After praying with a vim he went on to town to fill the preacher's appointment, and was requested by him to pray for him, and, at a few minutes after eleven o'clock, the sick preacher was relieved and grew better almost instantaneously, and is now declaring salvation by faith in the crucified Lamb.

As you observe, my field of labor is Pueblo. It is a great business mart and railroad center. We have Pueblo and South Pueblo—twin cities. My church is in South Pueblo, and so is my address. Have been busy building a parsonage ever since I came here. Little over two months gone. In two days more will move into a neat, tasty, convenient parsonage, built against the rear end of the church and all paid for. Is not that good? Come and see us. I will let you sleep in my preacher's study, and walk thence right into my pulpit and preach to a large congregation. Will you? Love to all my old friends.

Affectionately in Christ,

T. D. WHITE.

SOUTH PUEBLO, COL., Jan. 20, 1882.

Fayette Circuit, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Notwithstanding the rainy weather, I have completed my first round of appointments. This is my fourth year on this circuit, and, by the grace of God, we are determined that this shall be the most successful year. Much remains to be done before we can leave the work with a consciousness of having done our duty. The first thing to be done is to see, if it is possible, that the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, or the Nashville Christian Advocate, comes to every Methodist family in my charge. Six new subscriptions have been sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and sample copies ordered for about twenty families, which copies I hope to follow up successfully. Another important work to be done is the building of a new parsonage. If God blesses our people this year with good crops, we hope to have a new house for the next preacher. This is known to be one of the first circuits in the Mississippi Conference. By the way, I expect we can show something more than any other circuit in this State, to wit: the minutes of every quarterly Conference, save two, since 1799. Rev. G. C. Armstrong has these minutes in a large book, well written and nicely kept. I can not close without telling you what a pleasant visit we had on the eleventh instant. By previous understanding among the ladies, they visited the parsonage on the above date, and when they left, our dining table was literally covered with good things. Ladies of other churches joined with ours in this exhibition of kindness. God bless these good women! The N. J. and C. railroad will soon connect us with Jackson, Miss.

Yours, D. C. BRADFORD.

FAYETTE, MISS., Jan. 23, 1882.

Methodism Fraternal, if not Organic.

Methodism is a substantial unity, but that substantial unity needs a practical demonstration. It is not essential that the different Methodist bodies should be organically united; but it is essential, for the highest ends, that all the branches of the one great family should be mutually co-operative. The resources, whether of men or money, possessed by any Methodist body, ought to be available, to any reasonable extent, to every other Methodist body. Only when we come to regard our cause as common will our unity be actual, fruitful, potent for good, and pregnant with blessings for the race. We may advance slowly toward this consummation, but every step is at once a benison and a prophecy. All our possessions and possibilities belong to the one recognized Lord and Head. His cause must not be hindered by our divisions. We must stand together that his church may stand stronger before the world. The time has come when every Methodist leader, in every Methodist organization, is bound to ask: "What will most effectually promote the common Methodist interest and work?"

There ought to be some arrangement made for an exchange of ministers between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. It would be a great convenience and advantage. It would be a sign of progress, a proof of fraternity, and a gateway to glorious results. The General Conference of the "Church, South," which meets next May, can initiate this grand movement. Let that body place in its Discipline a paragraph like this:

"Any Bishop of our church may, with the concurrence of any Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, transfer a member of an Annual Conference into any Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, transferred in like manner into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, shall have all rights as a member of an Annual Conference in our church."

This provision would be of no validity till the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church should make a similar arrangement, and give to its superintendents the required authority. But who can doubt that such authority would be given? The occasional exchange of ministers between the two bodies would follow, and a mutual advantage would be realized. In Baltimore, Washington, Louisville, St. Louis and other places the power of Methodism would be greatly increased by such an arrangement. The pastors in all these places would at once be brought into the most fraternal relations, and all Methodists would begin to realize that they constitute one great brotherhood.

The example of such practical fraternity would be inspiring and suggestive. The example would be followed by other Methodist bodies, both in this country and England, and some feasible plan for an exchange of pastors through the whole Methodist world would be ultimately devised. It would make the great Methodistic movement in all the earth effectually one, while it would not impinge autonomy or special work of any Methodist body. In the providence of God the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has now a great opportunity. May its General Conference see its high privilege, and seize the resplendent honor! Its trumpet blast will bring every Methodist body into line, and hasten the hour of the world's redemption. A. C. GEORGE, in New York Christian Advocate.

Florida Conference.

The thirty-seventh session of the Florida Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met in Bailey's Hall, Monticello, Fla., at 9:30 A. M., January 18, Bishop H. N. McTyeire in the chair.

We are indebted to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate for the following items and the appointments:

Local preachers, 19; white members, 10,685; colored, 12; Indian, 1; infants baptized, 501; adults baptized, 253; Sunday schools, 158; teachers, 801; Sunday school scholars, 7,127. Amount necessary for superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans, $1,511 66.

What has been contributed for missions? Domestic, $961 43; foreign, $1,011 02.

DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE: Clerical—C. E. Dowman, E. Pasco. Lay—E. L. T. Blake, J. P. Bellas, Lay—J. W. Tucker, T. Turnbull.

Jacksonville was selected as the place for the next session of the Conference.

APPOINTMENTS.

TALLAHASSEE DISTRICT—C. E. Dowman, P. E. Tallahassee, H. H. Kennedy; Leon circuit, W. S. Richardson; Monticello, E. Pasco; Union circuit, E. J. Holmes; Crawfordsville circuit, J. B. Ley; Wakeenah circuit, R. M. Tydings; Quincy, C. A. Saunders; Little River circuit, R. H. Howren; Gadsden circuit, R. Martin; Gadsden mission, W. G. Booth; Liberty mission, to be supplied; Apalachicola, J. A. Casteel.

LIVE OAK DISTRICT—S. E. Phillips, P. E. [illegible] Ocilla circuit, W. H. [illegible] Madison, supernumerary; [illegible] William Dunbar; [illegible] ole circuit, S. B. Black; [illegible] circuit, W. C. Collins; Mosely Hall circuit, J. S. Barnett supply; Troy circuit, J. D. Rogers; Old Town mission, to be supplied; Jasper circuit, E. J. Nixon; Welborn circuit, to be supplied; Lake City, E. L. T. Blake; Columbia circuit, T. J. Phillips; Newnansville, T. W. Tompkins; Lake Butler mission, W. B. Johnson; Benton and St. Marys, B. B. Bryan; White Springs circuit, W. O. Hampton.

JACKSONVILLE DISTRICT—Chas. A. Fulwood, P. E. Jacksonville, H. B. Avery; La Villa, H. B. Frazee; Duval circuit, to be supplied; Fernandina mission, J. Atkins; Nassau circuit, James Rhodes supply; Manderin mission, H. S. Miller; Palatka and Green Cove mission, S. Woodbery; St. Augustine mission, L. W. Moore; Fruitland circuit, T. Bishop; New Smyrna mission, to be supplied; Sanford and Ernest Chapel, A. A. Barnett, A. A. Presley, supernumerary; Kissimee City mission, E. F. Ley; Norwalk mission, O. A. Hiscock; Orlando, A. Peeler, one to be supplied; Apopka City circuit, R. H. Barnett, O. W. Ranson, supernumerary; Lake Jessup circuit, W. A. Simmons; Indian River mission, J. T. Driscoll.

GAINESVILLE DISTRICT—H. E. Cartridge, P. E. Gainesville, S. L. Smith; Starke and Waldo, to be supplied; Hawthorne circuit, W. M. Watts; Micanopy circuit, J. P. De Pass; Bronson and Cedar Keys, J. B. Johnstone; Archer circuit, W. F. LeGette; Levy mission, to be supplied; Ocala, E. H. Harrison; Marion circuit, J. C. Ley; Ocklawaha, J. S. Collier; Moss Bluff mission, E. D. Latter supply; Fort Mason circuit, W. H. Steinmeyer; Lochsborg and Ydata, W. F. Norton; Sumter circuit, A. C. LeGette; Key West: First Charge, R. L. Honiker; Spark's Chapel, J. J. Scally; Cuban mission, H. B. Somerlan.

TAMPA DISTRICT—H. C. Jordan, P. E. Tampa, U. S. Bird; Bartow circuit, C. E. Pelot; Fort Dade circuit, W. Williams; Alafia circuit, W. H. Parker; Brooksville circuit, W. Davies; Hernando mission, to be supplied; Manatee, F. R. Bridges, E. E. Gates, and A. A. Robinson, supernumerary; Fort Myers, E. H. Giles; Clear Water circuit, M. A. Phillips; Pine Level circuit, G. W. Mitchell; Fort Ogden circuit, W. E. Cottier; Oak Hill circuit, T. A. Branch; J. M. Henry, Sunday school secretary and Conference agent; A. J. W. Best, transferred to West Virginia Conference.

Two works of mercy are there which the Lord himself hath laid down, Forgive and thrive. As to what he saith of pardoning, thou both wishest thy sin to be pardoned thee, and thou hast another whom thou mayest pardon. Again, as to doing kindnesses, a beggar asks of thee; and thou art God's beggar. For we are all, when we pray, God's beggars; we stand, yea, rather we fall prostrate before the door of the great Householder; we groan in supplication, wishing to receive something, and this something is God himself.—St. Augustine.

To err in modes of prayer may be reprehensible; but not to pray is mad.—Isaac Taylor.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1882.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

MY JEWEL.

BY MRS. L. C. SAILER.

A precious jewel, bright
And fair to see,
Was sent to me.
For years for me it shone,
For years it seemed my own.
Alas! one night
He that the jewel sent
Said it was only lent.

And now he only claimed
His own by right,
My jewel bright;
My jewel? No, not mine
His jewel—made to shine
In heaven, named,
Yes, named, and loved and owned,
To me 'twas only loaned.

What could I do but bow
My head and say
Dear Lord, I pray,
For strength to give it up,
For strength to drink this cup,
For strength just now,
My precious jewel to resign,
To say "Thy will be done, not mine."

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

First Quarter—Lesson VI.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1882.—MARK, III: 6-19.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go, and bring forth fruit"—John xv, 16.

CHRIST AND HIS DISCIPLES:

6. And the Pharisees went forth, and straightway took counsel with the Herodians against him, how they might destroy him.

7. But Jesus withdrew himself with his disciples to the sea: and a great multitude from Galilee followed him, and from Judea.

8. And from Jerusalem, and from Idumea, and from beyond Jordan; and they about Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him.

9. And he spake to his disciples, that a small ship should wait on him because of the multitude, lest they should throng him.

10. For he had healed many; insomuch that they pressed upon him for to touch him, as many as had plagues.

11. And unclean spirits, when they saw him, fell down before him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God.

12. And he straitly charged them that they should not make him known.

13. And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would: and they came unto him.

14. And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach,

15. And to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils:

16. And Simon he surnamed Peter;

17. And James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; and he surnamed them Boanerges, which is, The sons of thunder:

18. And Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James the son of Alphæus, and Thaddeus, and Simon the Canaanite,

19. And Judas Iscariot, which also betrayed him: and they went into a house.

The Pharisees went forth from the synagogue thoroughly enraged at Jesus. With all their watching and cunningly laid snares they had been unable to entangle this matchless disputant in his words or acts. They had been foiled in every argument. Shamed into silence, exposed in the eyes of their enemies and thwarted in every attempt to find some ground for criminal accusation. He had done absolutely nothing which even their hate could construe into a breach of the Sabbath law. The man with the withered hand he had not touched; he bade him not to do anything except "stand forth, stretch forth thine hand," and even a Pharisee could not say that there was any infraction of the Sabbath in just speaking a word, when that word was followed by a miraculous blessing. He had cleared himself of all charges, and had turned their questions upon them with a most revealing effect. He exposed the Pharisees in the presence of the Sadducees, and stung the unbelieving, superstitious Sadducees in return for their ridicule of his doctrine by making a show of them openly in the presence of their Pharisee enemies. The two go out of the synagogue, and consort together against this common enemy. We see how the presence of Christ in the world stirred up a commotion. His very presence had the effect of marshalling in strong organization all the evil. Of these two parties, the Pharisees and Herodians, the latter were mostly made up of renegade Jews who had accepted position under Roman authority, and had gone over to their monstrous superstitions, a horrible hybred religion, resulting from a mixture of Jewish Scriptures and Grecian mythology, making these Herodians Saducees of the worst type of conscientious monsters. The Pharisees, made up of the church party and patriots, coalesce with the unbelieving, superstitious Herodians. These two agree to forget their instinctive and implacable hate for each other that they may unite together for the destruction of this redoubtable opponent. To-day the same combinations of bigotry and vice are banded in organized force against Jesus.

We have some churches whose pulpits are political rostrums. We have known a church to consort with the devil in the way of dice and liquor, horse-racing and Sabbath-breaking, in order to advance their cause, and defeat the gospel of Christ. Church and State take counsel against the Lord to destroy him. The Bible shut out of the public schools is the result of one of these counsels.

Jesus withdrew himself from this whirl of commotion; to have remained would have brought his ministry to a sudden end. He left the city, and went down to the seashore. Here the crowd followed him, people from Galilee, Jerusalem, Idumea, and from beyond Jordan, and they about Tyre and Sidon, that country cursed of God and devoted, years ago, to destruction; even from that doomed land some of the spared families of an accursed stock came. Some of these carried back the report of the wonder-worker to the poor Syrophenician woman who lived there, and who afterward so eagerly and triumphantly won a great blessing from the Lord for her daughter. His pulpit was a boat, the shore his auditorium; thus he was enabled to protect himself against throngs of people eager to come near to his person, that they might draw, by a touch, healing virtue from him. How men now would throng about his person were he here now. His spiritual presence is better than his bodily presence. What would become of some of us had his incarnation been perpetuated? The sick who can not get out of the house, what would they do? Jesus could not go to every house in every city. We could not carry all our sick to him; but now the poorest widow has but to speak, and the Divine Physician comes at once. "He makes all our beds in our sickness, and strengthens us upon the bed of languishing." He comes to our home, and abides with us. Then, how he would have stirred up the devil in bad men, and how they would have flocked about him to see this God-man who had once conquered their Prince. Even now a good, holy man will stir up a great commotion in any community, how much more would Jesus, were he here. Devils keep quiet when they do not feel the Saviour near, and so the saints have peace. Devil-possessed men and women, and unclean spirits, came to him, drawn by a strange fascination, as if by the magnet of his person and work. They were still men, though enslaved by a devil, and this Saviour drew all men to him, and his mission was to destroy the works of the devil. Whenever these poor frenzied demoniacs saw him they fell down and cried, "Thou art the Son of God." In every case he charged them to keep silent; the testimony of devils had no place in the evidence to which he appealed. Their witnessing brought trouble; it set men against this Teacher who devils acknowledged as the Son of God, and his enemies used their testimony to bring against our Lord that scolling calumny: "He casts out devils through Beelzebub." Their testimony, though true, became the occasion for unpardonable sins.

How many souls have been brought to deny the holy power of our Lord on earth through the teachings of some such unclean spirits; men who, though otherwise great, have an afflatus of the devil, and their writings pervert the faith of the weak, and turn them to blaspheming scoffers. Oh! young man, you who have given up the faith your mother lived and died by, do not listen to the testimony of these witnesses. The Lord has challenged them, one and all, and has rejected their testimony. In the judgment they shall be shown up as lying witnesses, and you who have pinned your faith to their teaching shall be classed with them, among the common damned. Christ retires from the company of the people, and goes up into a mountain. We find, from Luke's account, that it was evening, and that he went up the mountain alone, and spent the night in prayer, the disciples, at his request, remaining at the foot of the mount. The subject of his prayer was, no doubt, the selection of the twelve. He was in consultation with his Father as to whom he should choose as the founders of his church. When the morning came he was ready to make the choice. See him come out from his place of retiracy high up the mountain side, and call out in loud tones the name of Peter. Peter ascends to his Lord's summons, and thus he summons by name one and then another to come up to him, until twelve had been called. He marshalls his witnesses. Oh! the eager expectation of that company as they waited, each expecting and wondering, will he call me. We do not know the number of disciples from whom he selected these twelve, but no doubt there were many more than twelve. Were those who were not called disappointed? Were any surprised at the selection Christ made? Was there not some in that company of uncalled who, by common consent, or at least in the judgment of all, might better have been selected than some who had been chosen by the Master? They would not have been men had there not been some such thoughts in that little company. No doubt some who were left out thought the Lord had made a mistake, and so some in the twelve, let us hope, were humble enough to think the same of some of those chosen. The names, the persons, the number of these ordained apostles are given.

We think we can safely leave the justification of Christ's wisdom in the selection of these men for his apostles to the testimony of history. Their works, their words, the church they have left us, all vindicate his wisdom. His ways are not ours. We would not have selected fishermen, countrymen and publicans to declare, in its purity, the word of God, in the life and doings of his Son; and yet these are the men whom he selected as the best adapted to transmit to the world the principles of the spiritual kingdom he came to set up in human hearts.

These Complaints Against Methodism.

MR. EDITOR: It requires a good deal to provoke me to the point of replying to an article in a church paper, not that I am blessed with an overstock of patience or forbearance, but because I deprecate controversy, and have not sufficient vanity to suppose that I can write very edifyingly. But there is a writer who fired away at the preachers so recklessly, in the ADVOCATE of January 19, that I have determined, in spite of my modesty, to take the same advantage he did, and fire back at him. I have reference to the communication entitled "A Voice from the Pew," and over the signature of "Justitia." If "Justitia" like the suggestion? Does he not think it would be just the thing? But, seriously, it is time this croaking about preachers "not working" was stopped, and it is only persisted in by those who "know not whereof they affirm." I will venture the assertion that there is not a class of men on the earth, with the same natural and acquired abilities, who are harder worked and poorer paid than the average itinerant Methodist preachers. H.

Colportage Sketches—No. 20.

BY A. M. JONES.

THE SHOW.

There are "blind guides, which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." While at the seat of justice of one of the counties of North Alabama I saw posted, in a conspicuous place, large, imposing, fancy, attractive pictures of a wonderful show soon to exhibit in the beautiful town. Through these pictures, and the columns of the two weeklies, the coming circus was extensively advertised, and the people aroused and excited for miles in every direction. On the morning of the eventful day, knowing the old and the young, the white and the black were going to turn out in mass, and that my canvassing from house to house would be in vain, I drove into the crowded town for the purpose, if possible, to place in the hands of some of the thoughtless throng a few copies of the Holy Scriptures. Passing near the place where the showmen were diligently putting up their canvas, though not more than nine o'clock, yet there were already hundreds of men and boys, of both races, eagerly awaiting the opening of the scene, while surging streams of animated humanity continued to pour in from every road and street. With regret I confess that many, long, long years ago I witnessed a degrading scene of this kind, and in the midst of the intoxications of the occasion, surrounded by beauty, refinement and culture, my face burned as much on account of the indelicate costumes of the actresses as at the vulgar insinuations of the clown. The next day my face and conscience both burned while listening to a sermon by the venerable Bishop Andrew, in which he kindly alluded to the coarseness of the taste and the unchristian spirit which prompted the attending of such places. Since then I have felt no interest whatever in the grand farce, not even in the street procession. My only business on the crowded streets of that lovely town that day was, by every appropriate means, to circulate the Bible, and, though the occasion of a show, the multitude wild and excited, I resolved to be true to the important trust committed to my hands. By the assistance of Jim Malone, a colored preacher, sixty-seven books passed into the hands of the people. After the day's work was done, and a drive of ten miles, I rested at night with a thankful heart, believing that amidst so much wickedness at least some good had been accomplished. But imagine my surprise the next week when the following editorial appeared in one of the county papers:

"DISGUSTING."

"Passing down the east side of the square last Saturday our attention was called to Jim Malone, a colored preacher, holding an auction with several copies of the Bible as his only wares. This is the first time we ever saw such a sight, and it is sincerely hoped it will be the last. It perhaps is a necessary outgrowth of the revision, and may be only a less evil, yet it is disgusting to see that holy book hawked about in such style, and we, together with all who have a reverence for the sacred volume, justly condemn such sales."

If the editor had put himself to a little trouble he might easily have learned both the nature and object of these "sales," and been informed that "the American Bible Society" has no connection whatever with the "revision." The books were not sold by "auction," not one copy to the highest bidder. "The colored preacher" simply, in a loud tone of voice, with rather a nasal twang, called attention to the "holy book," and especially urged his own race to supply themselves with cheap Bibles. While his language was such as is used by all uneducated colored people, yet there was not a word which could not have been uttered in the presence of the most fastidious and refined. It seems strange that an editor, after mingling with a promiscuous multitude of four thousand people, and witnessing all the scenes in the show, and doubtless many outside, could find nothing during the day worthy of his condemnation except "a colored preacher" endeavoring to supply his poor, ignorant race with the Word of Life. Suppose it was an evil, an offense against the common proprieties and decencies of life, why was it pointed out especially, and held up in derision to the public gaze? Was there nothing "disgusting" in four thousand white and colored people, men, women and children, leaving their homes and business, and crowding around a grand fraud, a catch-penny, passing through the country in the name of a show. Was there nothing "disgusting" in those white men and negroes herding in and around those whisky dens, and staggering up and down the streets swearing, and in a state of intoxication and drunkenness? Was there nothing "disgusting" in three thousand people, many without the common comforts of life, and even destitute of Bibles, giving their hard-earned money to support a set of men and women who are not only a disgrace to humanity, but a curse to the world? Was there nothing "disgusting" in five hundred, more or less, church members, who had vowed before God and man to "renounce the devil and all his works," to be present at a scene where decency and modesty were put to the blush, and the name of the Saviour blasphemed? No. Nothing "disgusting" in all this, but something "exceedingly distasteful" in "a colored preacher" selling Bibles on the streets of a Christian town. After seeing the above editorial I prepared a communication for publication in the other weekly, similar to this sketch, but it was declined as being a "little too personal." The distributing of the Holy Scriptures was denounced as "disgusting," yet I was a stranger in a strange community, without any public means to vindicate my cause. It may not be astonishing, however, that two editors, who had so completely swallowed one show, and already commenced on four others soon to pass through the country, should strain a little at the sight of the Bible, or the publishing of an article, calling the attention of the people to the impropriety of supporting and encouraging such grand swindles and cheats. "Many men of many minds." I was completely "disgusted" with the show, the immense crowd, the drunkenness and swearing, but the editor passed by all these, patronized the circuses, and saw nothing offensive to his refined taste, except the selling of the Holy Scriptures. The five shows alluded to above cost the people of the county, at the lowest estimate, five thousand dollars. Reader, give your influence in favor of that which is good, and always condemn the evil.

Judge J. M. Ford.

MR. EDITOR: I saw in last week's ADVOCATE an obituary notice of Judge Ford, of Shreveport, which awakened in my mind memories of the past, and made me feel like adding something to what was said. My acquaintance with Judge Ford commenced in 1842, the first year I was on the Caddo circuit. One of my preaching places was the house of Bro. Jonathan Guice, near to Judge Ford's house. He and his family were regular attendants. I would open the door at every appointment, expecting him to join, for he seemed so much like a church member that I thought he surely would unite. In 1843 he and Bro. Wesley Tucker, with the little help given by others in the neighborhood, built the Providence Church, mentioned by Bro. S., and the first service held in it was a quarterly meeting occasion. Rev. David M. Wiggins was presiding elder. At the close of the eleven o'clock service of Sunday Judge Ford came forward and joined, being immediately followed by his wife, her brother, William Cates, and two others. That night (as I learned a few days after) he called his family together, including all his servants, and held family prayer, which he ever after kept up, when his health permitted, as long as he had a family. An old servant woman was so rejoiced that Massa Joe had become religious that she shouted all around the quarter. Bro. Tucker that night walked the yard at home all night, it was said, shouting at the top of his voice: "Glory to God." That Bro. Joe, as he called him, had at last joined the church, an event for which he had most devoutly prayed; that was an era in the history of Methodism in that community, and many were influenced to follow the example of Judge Ford. It was my happiness to call on the judge last winter, while attending the Conference in Shreveport. I found him in the same frame of mind of which Bro. S. speaks. He spoke of passing away with the greatest composure. I am sure he is safe. One by one my old friends are passing away, and yet I linger. May I be as ready as was he. JOEL SANDERS.

TROUPE, TEXAS, Jan. 6, 1882.

Marriages.

CHAMBERS ALLEN.—November 29, 1881 at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Hannaman, in Baton Rouge, La., by Rev. J. T. Daves, Mr. C. W. Chambers to Mrs. Josephine J. Allen, all of Baton Rouge.

SHIRLEY—WEEMS.—December 8, 1881, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. I. L. Peebles, Mr. G. W. Shirley to Miss S. E. Weems.

ROBINSON—WILLIAMSON.—December 15, 1881, at the residence of Dr. Key, Tranton, La., by Rev. D. F. White, Mr. C. W. Robinson to Miss Willie Williamson.

JEFFRIES—McDONALD.—December 22, 1881, at the residence of the bride's mother, at Rochester, La., December 22, 1881, by Rev. Philip Allan, Mr. Wm. D. Jeffries to Miss Alice E. McDonald, both of Jackson parish, La.

STEEL—FAULK.—January 12, 1882, at the residence of the bride's mother, Ouachita parish, La., by Rev R. F. White, Mr. John H. Steel to Miss Lillie Faulk.

GALLOWAY—VICKERS.—January 11, 1882, at the residence of the bride's father, J. W. Vickers, Esq., by Rev. Alex. Avery, Mr. Willie C. Galloway to Miss Sarah E. Vickers, all of Hempstead county, Ark.

RASMUSSEN—CLAUSON.—January 14, 1882, near Centerville, St. Mary parish, La., by Rev. T. K. Faunt Le Roy, Mr. Hanse Thompson Rasmussen and Miss Helluna Clauson.

Obituaries.

ELLIS.—Mrs. SUSSMURDA M. ELLIS, wife of Rev. John A. Ellis, of the Mississippi Conference, died at the residence of her son, Mr. J. M. T. Hamilton, near Meridian, Miss., December 26, 1881.

Mrs. Ellis was the daughter of Judge John M. Taylor, formerly of Alabama, and late of Louisiana. She was born in Huntsville, Ala., September 8, 1827, and lived most of her time till womanhood in Vicksburg, Miss. In 1844 she married Dr. Oscar Hamilton, and subsequently lived a number of years near Brandon, in Rankin county, Miss. Dr. Hamilton died December 27, 1851, and she became the wife of Rev. J. A. Ellis, August 26, 1863. About January, 1872, her husband having been appointed by the Mississippi Conference pastor of Meridian station, she removed to Meridian, where she lived, with the exception of a few months, until her death.

Sister Ellis was a woman of more than ordinary intellectual capacity, and by a wise improvement of favorable opportunities, she had a well cultivated mind, richly stored with knowledge. She had firm, positive convictions, strong impulses and feelings, and a high sense of obligation. She was decided in any choice she made, strong and earnest in any position she assumed, and gave to any cause she espoused her warmest sympathies and most earnest support. She was converted and became a Christian and member of the church in early life. Henceforth she was always, and in all places, the earnest friend and supporter of the church. She loved its ordinances and took pleasure in its ways. She was well instructed in its history, rejoiced in its successes, mourned over its failures, and joyfully hoped for its ultimate triumph. She had a sacred regard for its obligations, and respected and honored its authority. That the church might be pure and unspotted from the world, was to her a great burden of desire and prayer, and to see it dishonored, or its purity in any way marred, was a source of grief and regret.

The principles of the Christian religion were laid deep in her nature, in her convictions, feelings and affections, by the work of the holy Ghost in her conversion. She was a decided, uncompromising Christian. The devil, the world and the flesh were regarded as her enemies, and the enemies of humanity, and they received from her no favor; with them she made no compromise. Opposition to the right was firm, outspoken, bold and aggressive.

Eminently qualified for active Christian work, she was fond of it, and successful in it. While living in Franklin county she, by her personal efforts and means, founded, built up and sustained a flourishing Sunday-school in a destitute region, which resulted in the establishment of a good church and congregation. This incident was but characteristic of her. Everywhere her lot was cast, and opportunity offered, she was the same earnest worker in the Sunday-school and church, leading, if necessary, in the good work, and stirring up others to help.

Her compassionate nature made her the friend of the poor, the sick and the distressed. But few sympathized more deeply with suffering, and took more pleasure in relieving it. It was to her a work of love and tender regard which she lost no opportunity to perform.

She was rich in faith as well as good works. She had an enlarged, exalted conception of the privileges and possible attainments of the Christian in this life. There was strong, rich faith in Christ as a Saviour, and her ardent soul thirsted for the deeper things of God and salvation. Thus inspired she was not satisfied unless her spiritual life was progressive. She desired to grow in grace, and to comprehend the love of Christ, and to be filled with the fullness of God.

Her positive convictions, her strong impulses, and her earnest devotion may have sometimes led her into error, and betrayed her into faults. Her aggressiveness, and her opposition may have sometimes appeared to be lacking in wisdom and prudence, and possibly charity. If so, these were the faults and errors of her nature, and a consciousness of this was to her always a source of great sorrow and cause of deep penitence.

For perhaps more than two years Sister Ellis believed that her affliction was probably the hand of death at work, and thus prepossessed she turned her thoughts to the contemplation of death as probably near at hand. Under this conviction, on March 1, 1881, she wrote letters to be opened and read after her death. These were addressed, one to her husband, one to every one of her three children, and one to her daughter-in-law, whom she loved with a mother's heart. It has been the writer's privilege to read these dying farewell words coming from the heart of a devoted wife and an affectionate mother. They are words of counsel, instruction, encouragement, sympathy and hope from one standing in the presence of death and eternity to those she loved best of all others on earth. These are far too sacred for the public eye, yet they reveal the inner life, the feeling and affection, the faith and hope, the love and joy, of the saint of God as they can be seen no where else. She calmly contemplates the fact that her end is at hand and that her work is done, pours out the heart of a wife and mother in sacred dying words, and as if in the very brightness of the world of glory, points to her home in heaven and exhorts to follow. May these dying words deeply treasured by sad hearts, result in eternal good.

Sister Ellis had all the care, tender concern and devotion of a Christian mother for her children. As a wife the heart of her husband could safely trust her, and by her earnest faith and prayers, deep sympathy and wise counsels, she was a great help to him in the noble work of the Christian ministry. May the heavy loss he sustained to them and the church.

H. J. JONES.

PHIPPS.—Died in Paris, Lamar county, Texas, December 12, 1881, after a lingering illness, in the forty-eighth year of her age, CANNIE A., wife of W. R. Phipps.

The subject of this memoir had been a patient sufferer for many years. Her bodily infirmities were very great, too great scarcely to be lengthened, and pleased God to bring her through a very severe ordeal; she passed through deep waters, through many fiery trials, draped in mourner's weeds most of the whole journey through life. One by one she saw her loved ones depart, until she had mourned the loss of one husband, her first, and six children who preceded her to the spirit land. In the midst of all her afflictions she was the kind, patient and self-forgetting wife and mother. She was always cheerful and hopeful, and as she neared the end of her sorrowful life she grew in the graces of humility and faith. She had long been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and though by reason of her afflictions and circumstances, she was for many years debarred the privilege of worshiping God, the congregation with his people, she ever found comfort and peace in the religion of her Saviour. She enjoyed its light in the dark valley of her humiliation and sorrow.

She was the central figure of the family group, husband and children leaned upon her for strength who, though so weak in flesh, was strong in spirit and will. The gracious Father saw fit to prolong her sufferings for many years, but at length he said "it is enough." She departed to real leaving a heart-broken husband, two small and one grown daughter to mourn their loss.

Bless God for the promise of a real; and if dear Fannie's sufferings and sorrows be the measure of her eternal joy and rest how great is that joy at real! If heaven be bright to her in proportion to the darkness of her earthly pilgrimage, oh, how bright is that heaven to her! May God in his mercy bring all the loved ones home at last to dwell with her in that land of "pure delight where sickness immortal reign."

MRS. SARTHER.

PHIPPS.—Died, June 28, 1881, preceding the death of her suffering mother, LULA, daughter of W. R. and Fannie A. Phipps, in the seventeenth year of her age. Nearly all of her life had been spent nursing her invalid mother, and in helping her in the care of those around her; she went but a little while before her, and doubtless was waiting and watching at the beautiful gate for her whom she left on earth way. She spent her short time on earth in the sphere of a ministering spirit at the bed-side of her mother, and now they mingle with other kindred spirits in that bright clime where there is no sickness, and no need of a nurse. They are happy now and are as treasures laid up in heaven for those who yet remain on earth.

HER UNCLE.

HOLMES.—Miss ALICE HOLMES died of pneumonia at Bastrop, La., November 24, 1881, in the twenty-third year of her age. Sister Alice was born in Morehouse parish, La., April 21, 1858; made a profession of religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1872, and remained a consistent member of the same until the Master called her away.

Miss Alice was favored with a kind mother, a devoted step-father, affectionate brothers and sisters, beside many admiring friends, who mourn her decease. She is gone, no more to return to us. But this separation need not be final, for we all can go to her. I rejoice that I was her pastor for two years and would cheerfully commend her womanly modesty and Christian virtue to all as a model worthy their imitation. May all who knew and loved her be ready for the summons of their Lord.

J. M. MCKEE, P. C.

WATTS.—Little SAMUEL ERNEST, son of A. B. and Mary C. Watts, aged two years and five months, died of measels, terminating in pneumonia, January 7, 1882. He was the grand-son of Rev. G. W. Chatfield, who, with his grand mother, had preceded him to heaven. Dry your tears, dear parents, little Ernest is only transplanted to bloom forever in heaven's hall. Our Father has many ways to wean our hearts from the world. May this dispensation draw you nearer the precious cross of Jesus. Your lies in heaven are strengthening.

GEO. RANCROFT.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1882.

STARS OF THE NIGHT.

Stars of the crystal blue night,
Held there by infinite will,
Thrones that reflect the light
Of the great Monarch still;
Gems of his palace walls,
Lamps of eternal halls,
One thought my spirit fills,
God in his might!

Stars of the dawn's faint glow,
Silvered to sunrise ray,
Where the dark rivers flow
Brilliant in breaking day;
Lights that are burning while
Sunshine but veils your smile,
This thought my soul doth stay,
God in his truth!

Stars of the evening sky,
Shining when sunset fade,
While on the depths they die,
And in the depths are laid;
As o'er their darkened gleams
Ye rise in twilight dreams,
This, thought, the last, is nigh,
God in his love!

The Gospel in France.

The Rev. E. W. Hitchcock, D. D., recently delivered an address at the American Chapel in Paris, of which he is the pastor, on "The Gospel in France: its Agents and Adversaries, Conflicts and Victories." The address has been published. We make the following interesting extracts:

Associated as I have been, more or less intimately, with the French brethren, through successive years, admitted into their confidence, serving on many of their committees, planning enterprises, measuring resources, organizing and commissioning agencies, co-operating in work, I have come, in a measure to understand better what is implied in these four words: "the Evangelization of France"—the obstacles to be surmounted, before France shall be won to the gospel and Christ. In our calculation concerning the future of Protestantism in France, the forces of ignorance and indifference and irreligion must not be ignored. The superstition and bigotry and fanaticism of Romanism must not be underated. The numbers, the faith, the zeal, the liberality, the devotion, the moral force of Protestantism must not be overesthmated. This, then, as I understand it, is a fair statement of the facts—a calm view of the condition and progress and promise of this new Protestant movement in France.

First. There is such a movement. It is widespread. It declares itself in many ways. It is a complex movement with many factors. They are not all Christian. They are not all religious even. Prejudice and passion, politics and patriotism, as well as honest and intelligent conviction, furnish motives and impelling forces. To this general statement it must be added that there is, as yet, no great reform movement within the Protestant Church. The hearts of individuals have been touched with the sacred fire. But as yet there is no general revival of spiritual religion, with its strengthening of faith, quickening of zeal and renewal of consecration. And without the church there is no great awakening. The multitudes are not inquiring, "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?" But we must state things as they are. Very few are looking Zionward, with desire to enter within her gates. Still fewer, new-born into the kingdom, are rejoicing in the hope of the gospel, but there is a great increase in religious liberty. France to-day is open to the preaching of the gospel. Only a few years ago we were obliged to make this confession: "In France there is no such thing as religious liberty. The missions of Protestants are subject to espionage. Special invitations must be issued for a meeting for prayer in a private house. For a public religious service the permission of the prefet must be obtained a week in advance, and he has the power of withholding his consent and preventing meetings altogether. The police are ordered to attend the meeting when held and report thereon." This, indeed, was the legal status only a few months ago. It is different now. Under the new laws regulating public meetings, enacted by the late Parliament, you can hold religious meetings—public and private, anywhere—without issuing your special invitations, without previous consent of the prefet. A simple declaration, at the proper bureau, that a public meeting is to be held at a certain time and place, and will be presided over by responsible citizens in the full enjoyment of their civil rights, is sufficient. And you can distribute in the streets and public places Bibles and Testaments, and Christian literature, as was not legally allowed before. Even the law on colportage has been revised, so that foreigners can engage, without fear or restraint, in this branch of evangelistic work. All reasonable liberty is allowed. It is an immense stride in the right direction, and may turn out for the furtherance of the gospel. And yet there is another side to this bright picture. The liberty of the press, the liberty of colportage, the right of public and private meetings pertain not exclusively, or distinctly, to Protestants. The laws that grant and guarantee them were not specially inaugurated in their interests. The progressive Republicans, for political reasons, and in the carrying out of a governmental programme took the initiative, and the Socialists and Communists, the Freethinkers and Atheists share equally in the results. They are rejoicing to-day in the opportunity of holding their meetings and declaring and propagating their revolutionary and profane dogmas. And the Catholic party—the Ultramontanes and the Gallicans—the Monarchists, the Reactionists, the Propagandists of every type, all claim equal right, under the liberal laws, to maintain their position, defend their views and propagate their creed. Falling into the line of this free discussion, the Protestants may now openly avow their principles and fearlessly defend their cause. But they have not, and will not have, the whole field to themselves. And only as they field to themselves the stronger in argument and the more tenacious in purpose, evince the more faith, more zeal, more devotion, more practical wisdom, can they hope for the greater advantage or reap the richer and riper fruit. Comparing their present with the past the Protestants of France have gained greatly in relative position before the people; and this gain, in itself, is an inspiration and a presage. The domination, the overwhelming supremacy of the Church of Rome is being broken. And the causes are not far to seek. Catholicism, Ultramontane-Catholicism, which for the last thirty years has dominated the Romish Church is hierarchal, anti-Republican, despotic. It opposes itself to freedom of conscience, to independent investigation, to the circulation of the Scriptures and their prayerful, thoughtful study. It claims authority supreme over civil society and its individual members. Even the souls of the dead are pensioners upon its mercy. "Human law is vassal to the theocratic power. Sovereignty is neither in man nor in princes; it belongs to earth-born and man-chosen spiritual potentates, self-styled "vicegerents of God." The supreme constitution for mankind is the Syllabus. The supreme master of the earth is the Pope. But reason, and conscience, and common sense will not consent to be trampled upon forever without protest and without revolt. The manly soul asserts its freedom and its rights. And this is the meaning and interpretation of the religious—the politico-religious—movement in France to-day. It is a revolt against Romish tyranny, intellectual, political, spiritual. And yet, in accepting these facts, let us not deceive ourselves or suffer ourselves to be deceived. Though the overwhelming supremacy of the Church of Rome in France is broken, her power is by no means gone. The Romanists still outnumber the Protestants as 36 to 1. To be sure many of their members are only such in name. Less than formerly do ignorant Romanists look upon Protestants as monsters in human form, and cross themselves, in holy horror, if the shadow of one falls upon their pathway. Less openly and violently do the priests attack Protestantism from the pulpit and in the press. And when they do venture to misrepresent, caricature and calumniate they find greater difficulty in persuading their hearers and readers to accept their defamations. The people begin to distinguish between things that differ. And when the priest tells them that Protestantism is responsible for all the evils in the universe, that all the horrors of Nihilism and the Commune are its fruits—the people ask, whence, then, these orderly meetings in Protestant temples and mission-halls? Whence these self-denying labors of pastors and evangelists? Whence the pure morality and the heavenly doctrine they teach? There is something in this Protestantism that we have not yet fathomed. We will see what it is. We will know of this doctrine, whether it be of God. And this is the meaning and the interpretation of the thoughtful attention which multitudes throughout France, in the provinces as well as in the towns, are to-day giving to the proclamation of the gospel, which for the first time in their lives they are privileged to hear. They have asked—are now asking: "What has Protestantism to offer in place of the reigning superstition and unbelief?" And they await an answer. It makes it a solemn, critical moment for France, and for Europe and the world, whose religious future is pivoted upon this issue more than any of us have yet dreamed.

The magnitude and solemnity of the crisis are augmented and intensified by the fact that not only Roman Catholicism, with its consummate organization, the growth of the centuries, the masterpiece of human invention and constructive genius, with its myriad influences, secret, subtle, concentric, with ramifications everywhere—head and brains at Rome, feet and arms and hands with iron grip upon the conscience and the purse in every land under the sun—but also all the forces of ignorance and indifference and infidelity; from stolid unconcern, too stupid to think and too lazy to stir, to the most virulent atheism, mad with hate of everything which the church of the living God deems sacred—are leagued against the progress and the triumphs of spiritual religion and gospel truth. As between these two forces, Ultramontanism and atheism, there is no confessed sympathy, no formal alliance. If compelled to choose between the two, we might conclude, as the Protestant Guizot did, that it were much better for France to remain Roman Catholic than to become infidel and atheistic. How far gone France is in this latter direction it is difficult to say. I should be almost afraid to know the real truth. Startling intimations come, and from high sources. There is no question but that positive philosophy has taken captive many cultivated minds. The man of will and brains who rules France to-day from the president's chair in the Chamber of Deputies, is a confessed Positivist. He denies the supernatural, the immortality of the soul, the existence of a personal God—at least the Christian's God. I trust it is not true, as I have heard it affirmed, that, next to personal ambition and the glory of France, his ruling ambition is hatred of all supernatural religion. But that such a passion does rule the hearts of tens of thousands in France there can be no question. The grossest materialism has its disciples and advocates. Multitudes who have abandoned the Church of Rome have thrown off all religious restraint. There is even an anti-religious Propaganda. They have their organizations, their officers, their agents, their journals, their orators, their private and public conferences. One of the latter has just been concluded in this city at which it was expressly taught that "belief in a future life and responsibility to a higher power is an idle and ridiculous superstition; from which men's minds should be emancipated," and in marvellous contempt of their own vaunted freethinking principles and right of private judgment a resolution was passed to the effect "that it would be desirable for parents to be prohibited, by law, from speaking of religion to their children, even at home." The walls of Paris are often placarded with calls to these anti-religious atheistic reunions. Within the year they have been disgraced with the advertisements of a paper, founded and edited, so long as God suffered him to live, by the arch-traitor and arch-heretic, Blanqui, entitled, "No God, no Master." The Revolution of 1789 has been canonized, and its heroes made the creed of the new "no religion." But, notwithstanding this dark picture, large numbers of the people are far from being prepared to endorse the frenzied boastings of their would-be atheistic leaders. The sense of an inner need, which materialism can not meet, and which requires only to be deepened by the Divine Spirit's teachings to bring men to Christ, is widespread. Hence it is that all Paris, and all over France, so many, especially of the working classes, are ready and eager to listen to the faithful preaching of the gospel. The same testimony comes from other laborers in various parts of the French field. We thank God that it is no worse. We thank him that it is so well.

The evangelizing agencies now in the field are Bible societies, Sunday schools, theological schools, Christian schools of various kinds and grades, asylums, reformatory institutions, Young Men's Christian Associations, general missionary and evangelical societies, including those founded and fostered by Christians of other lands, with various other agencies employed by the modern Christian Church. There is the Reformed Church, the National Church of France, with its 570,000 members, one-third of whom hold liberal views and do not co-operate in evangelical work, allied to the State, and hampered in many ways by such an alliance, yet finding no way to sever its connection with it. There is the Lutheran Church, with its 80,000 members since the loss of Alsace and Lorraine, also allied to and fettered by the State. Then there is the union of Free Churches with 3,000 members, and 8,000 additional, or congregational adherents, striving to uphold and popularize and propagate the principles of a free church in a free State, worthy of all sympathy and help, although its growth and development are discouragingly slow. Then come the Methodist and Baptist Churches, tolerated by the government, but not patronized; few in number and weak in home resources, but fostered generously by the same denominations in more favored lands. The Societe Evangelique de France, the Home Missionary Society of the French Evangelical Alliance, and the oldest of the French societies for evangelization, maintains 47 agents in the field and expends in its work about 150,000 francs a year. The Societe Central de Evangelisation, the Home Missionary Society of the Reformed Church, has 140 agents in the field, laboring in 320 different localities. After 33 years of work it has planted between 40 and 50 churches, that have been recognized as such by the State, and has now the characteristic of permanency. The Free Churches, through their Synodical Commission, are carrying on an earnest and successful work in the neighborhood of their established churches as also in communities further removed, expending in their operations about 40,000 francs a year. The Mission Interieure, organized after the Franco-Prussian war as "a mission of the churches to the churches," has already become an efficient agency for evangelization. Enlisting the best talent of Protestant France from all the denominations, and investing preachers and teachers with a special commission, it sends them forth to witness for Christ and his truth, and incite pastors and churches to renewed consecration and intenser devotion. By means of popular conferences, lectures, addresses, sermons, the circulation of the Scriptures and religious literature it has carried and is carrying the gospel to centres where it had never before been heard, awakening interest, stimulating inquiry, deepening conviction, guiding the sin-burdened to the cross, gathering communities of believers, and laying, we trust, the foundation for many a gospel church. The Belleville Mission in this city, conducted by Miss de Broen, has attracted much attention, especially in England, by its steady growth and widening and beneficent influence. A popular mission, directed by the Rev. Wm. Gibson, B. A., and under the auspices of the Wesleyan Methodists, is accomplishing an excellent work, analogous to that inaugurated and directed by the Rev. McAll. The Baptist denomination are prosecuting a like work of evangelization, and, with the help of their American and English brethren, have recently established a theological school, under the direction of Dr. Mitchell, with an adjunct for the training, without denominational bias, of gospel workers and evangelists. The popular mission to the working people of Paris and France, founded and directed by the Rev. Mr. McAll, has twenty-nine stations, or mission-halls, in Paris now, and sixteen in the provincial towns and cities—centres all of light and moral and religious influence. At these stations there are sittings for 7,500 persons; and during the past year more than 7,000 meetings were held for children and adults, Sunday schools, mothers' meetings, industrial schools, preaching services and Bible classes conducted by the French pastors, through whose influence not a few have been led to attach themselves permanently to the Protestant communion. Nor, in enumerating evangelistic agencies, must I fail to speak of the "American and Foreign Christian Union," which, during the last year, has entered, with much zeal, upon this work of evangelization in France. At the close of the first year of my own ministry in Paris, we resolved to organize our chapel into a missionary association. Since that day, eight years ago, 80,000 francs have flowed into our missionary and benevolent treasuries, and 80,000 francs have gone out again to help scatter the good seed of the kingdom, and gather in the harvests from the ripening fields. During the year 1880 we furnished most of the money required for the support of three missions in Paris, under the direction of the Rev. Mr. M'All, and half the salary of two of his missionaries. "A Medical Mission" has more recently been founded at Grenelle, under the direction of members of our own church and congregation, whose financial support we have assumed.

In this fair land of France—the land where the Church of Christ has been justly symbolized by the "Burning Bush," ever consumed but not destroyed—there exist to-day alongside of and underneath the tendencies to Ultramontanism, to superstition, to freethought, to indifferentism, to infidelity, to atheism, counter-currents of religious thought and feeling and aspiration. They have been deepening and broadening and strengthening these last years. There are opportunities for preaching the gospel such as have not existed before for centuries. The masses are disposed to listen to Protestant teachers. The religious question has entered largely into politics. Anti-Clericalism is popular. The education of the masses, on a broad and national basis, occupies the attention of the government. The Syllabus, with its profane dogma of Papal infallibility, has opened a gulf between the Church of Rome and thinking, patriotic, and conscientious men, which can never be filled up or bridged over. The religious regeneration of France must be expected and toiled for and prayed for, even as it is demanded by the exigencies of her condition, and prophesied by the march of events.—Watchman, London.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—Ahmed Towfik Effendi, the Ulema who was imprisoned, and threatened with death for assisting Dr. Koelle, of the Church Missionary Society, in translations in Constantinople, was received into the Church of England in November. He had been sentenced to death, but, owing to the exertions of the British minister, his sentence was changed to banishment to Chios, whence he escaped to England. Under the circumstances, he will hardly think of returning to Turkey as a missionary.

—The Rev. Charles Chiniquy, well known as the Canada Presbyterian evangelist among the French, has come to this city to assist the Rev. P. A. Segalin, pastor of the French Baptist Mission, in a series of meetings for the benefit of the large French population of the eighth and fifteenth wards. He preached in the French Baptist Chapel last Sunday afternoon, in French, and in the evening in Dr. Ormiston's church.

—The number of Moravian missions is still seventeen. There are 282 missionaries, male and female, 1,481 native agents, 98 stations, with 15 outstations, 39,775 baptized adults and 26,836 baptized children, 1,406 candidates for baptism, the whole number of persons under instruction being 74,140, an increase the past year of 1,044. There was a gain in all the missions except Jamaica, where there was a loss of 509, and St. Thomas, which lost 12.

—From March 1 to December 1 the missionaries of the American Sunday-School Union in the Northwest established 490 new Sunday-schools, which have a membership of 2,103 teachers and 17,429 scholars. But for the work of the Union these schools would not have been established. Out of them many self-supporting churches will eventually come.

—Chinese officials are showing more interest than formerly in religious toleration. The Governor of Foochon has issued a proclamation calling upon the people not to molest the missionaries or the converts who follow them, either at their chapels or school-houses. The command has had a good effect, and the crowds have ceased annoying those who assemble for Christian instruction.

—The Spanish Bishops and the Ultramontane deputies in the Cortes are organizing a pilgrimage to Rome, with the approval of the Pope and the promise of the minister of the interior not to interfere if political demonstrations are avoided.

—The latest news from the missionaries of the Church Society in Uganda is that Mtesa is still very unfavorable, but the people are accessible and the country between the Lake and the Eastern Coast is ripe for missionary enterprise.

—Since the rebuke of the English prelates of the arrogance of Ritualistic Bishop Copleston, of Ceylon, matters have taken a very favorable turn for the church missionaries and peace reigns.

—The Church Missionary Society will send out eight missionaries to Central Africa, instead of five—three to Uyui, three to the South end of the Victoria Nyanza, and two to Ruhaga, Mtesa's capital.

—During the last ten years the members of Presbyterian (Northern) foreign mission churches have increased from 3,512 to 11,588—a gain of over 300 per cent.

—The Northern Presbyterians want $625,000 for their foreign mission work for the current year—a large advance upon last year.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The following is said to be the order in which the different churches were organized in America: The Episcopal Church was the first, organized in 1607 at Jamestown, Virginia. The Reformed Dutch Church was organized in 1628 at New York. The Congregational, (Puritan) first at Plymouth in 1620, the Mayflower having on board a fully organized church. The Quakers date from Philadelphia 1692. The Catholic received its organization in Maryland under Lord Baltimore 1634. The Baptists come next in Rhode Island in 1639 through the labors of Roger Williams. Next the Presbyterians had their beginning in Maryland in 1684. An interval of seventy-six years brings us to the first Methodist Church in New York in 1776. The Universalists and Unitarians about the beginning of the nineteenth century. The Disciples Church about the year 1812, its great leader being Alexander Campbell.

—The Rev. H. T. Morton, of the Southern Presbyterian Church, after having spent twenty-four years in the ministry, turned Baptist and was baptized in the Second Baptist Church of St. Louis and licensed. When the question of setting him apart to the work of the Baptist ministry came before a duly-called council in the Second Church, it was voted to recommend him for ordination. In the evening, however, a program was presented by Mr. Boyd, and adopted, which dispensed with the act of ordination, and, instead, extended to him the hand of fellowship. The American Baptist Flag strongly objects to this, as a recognition of "alien ordination."

—Bishop Reinkens, of the Old Catholic Church of Germany, has issued a long pastoral in relation to his recent visit to England, praising the hospitality and kindness of several prelates of the English Church, and speaking of the Anglican liturgy as uniting "in itself all the elements and parts of the historic Catholic ritual." He was impressed with the reverence, the dignity, and the devotion of the worshipers in services which he attended and calls upon his churches to reciprocate the friendly feeling of the Church of England, the "bulwark of Christendom," and intercede for her.

—The Wesleyan Methodist Calendar for 1882, just issued, gives the following statistics of Methodism in Great Britain; church membership, 30,706; ministers, 1,570; on probation, 129; supernumeraries, 271. The amounts raised from all sources during the year amounted £257,660. In addition large sums have been promised to the Thanks-giving Fund, which has now reached a total of £303,000.

—The secretary of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund has reported that the amount realized from the collections this year is nearly £31,000 against £30,400 last year, and that it will probably be increased by October to over £31,000. Payments have been ordered to 140 institutions—ten more than last year.

—The result of the revival in the Meriden (Conn.) Methodist Church has been carefully garnered, and out of 371 persons received on probation 251 have been made full members, 39 have been continued in the probationary relation, 31 have removed, 3 joined other churches, 35 discontinued, 2 can not be found, and 1 has died.

—Some of the priests of Canada are disobeying the orders of the Pope and Archbishop Taschereau commanding them to remain neutral in elections. A priest in Warwick told his people from the pulpit that they were bound to vote for the Catholic and French candidate.

—Statistics gathered for the Presbyterian Church from eleven States show that while there are 749 vacant churches there are only 351 inhabitants without charges.

—Rev. Theodore Bridge has translated St. Luke into the Yahgan language. It is spoken in the south of South America and is a very difficult tongue.

—The first religious body to formally adopt the revised New Testament was the Congregational Association of Marlboro, Mass., and then they went to work and reconsidered the vote.

Our Young People.

DISCONTENT.

BY SARAH H. JEWETT.

Down in a field one day in June,
The flowers all bloomed together,
Save one who tried to hide herself,
And drooped, that pleasant weather.

A robin who had flown too high,
And felt a little lazy,
Was resting near this buttercup
Who wished she were a daisy.

For daisies grow so trig and tall;
She always had a passion
For wearing frills around her neck
In just the daisies' fashion.

And buttercups must always be
The same old tiresome color,
While daisies dress in gold and white,
Although their gold is duller.

"Dear Robin," said this sad young flower,
"Perhaps you'd not mind trying
To find a nice white frill for me
Some day, when you are flying."

"You silly thing!" the robin said,
"I think you must be crazy;
I'd rather be my honest self
Than any made up daisy.

"You're pleer in your own bright gown
The little children love you;
Be the best buttercup you can,
And think no flower above you.

"Though swallows leave me out of sight,
We'll better keep our places,
Perhaps the world would all go wrong
With one too many daisies.

"Look bravely up into the sky,
And be content with knowing
That God wished for a buttercup
Just here, where you are growing."

—Play Days.

The Stork—Anecdotes.

The stork is a biblical bird, a classical bird, a bird famous in Europe, Asia, and Africa. It has supplied Isaiah and Jeremiah with illustrations, the Greeks with a law, Æsop with two fables, and the Eastern world has praised it in almost all oriental languages. Moses has placed it among unclean birds. It builds its nest on high trees, in steeples, and on the loftiest houses in cities. It has the legs and beak long and red; it feeds on serpents, frogs, and insects. It is not a bird of America. It is a migratory bird, passing the winter in the northern parts of Africa, and particularly in Egypt, and setting out in the spring for its summer resorts, which comprise Spain, France, Greece, Germany, Holland, Poland, and even Russia and Sweden. The stork does not visit England or Ireland. In size this bird is somewhat larger than the heron, its plumage is white, except the wings, which are black. The nest of the stork is an enormous fabric of sticks, straws, and other coarse materials.

Most of our readers have heard what the ancients believe concerning the filial affection of storks—how that when the parents grow old and incapable of feeding themselves, the young birds brought them food, and while fed them with all possible tenderness, even taking them on their backs and giving them a ride through the air; hence the law attributed to Solon, by which children were bound to support their parents in old age, was called the "Pelasgian, or Stork Law." However this may be, it is certain that these birds possess an unusual degree of affection for their young, and according to Buffon, some instances have been observed of birds who were unable to fly, either from weakness or accidental injury, being fed by their stronger companions.

Hadrian Junius, in his "History of Batavia," says: "In the year 1556 the town of Delft was half destroyed by fire, and when a female stork, who had been absent for some time in quest of food, returned to her nest, she found the house on which she had built on fire. At first she endeavored with all her powers to extricate her young ones from the impending destruction, but they were unable to fly; and finding all her efforts useless, she at last covered them with her body, and allowed herself to be consumed along with those she was powerless to save."

The ornithologist, Ulysses Aldrovandus, says: "In the city of Tarentum there once lived a poor widow, who was inconsolable for the loss of her husband, and passed her time in the greatest poverty and misery. One day she saw a young stork, who, having attempted to fly before his wings were sufficiently grown had fallen from his nest and broken his leg. Moved with compassion, she took up the poor bird, carried him home, and fed and nursed him until he was perfectly recovered and able to join his companions in their migration. Next spring, as the widow was sitting one evening by the seashore and confiding her melancholy to the waves, a stork suddenly descended as if from the clouds, and alighting in front of the afflicted widow, dropped into her lap from his beak a pebble as large as a dove's egg. Astonished at this, she examined the pebble carefully, and though little acquainted with precious stones, she had no difficulty in guessing that it was a diamond, and of sufficient value to maintain her in affluence the rest of her days. On taking the stork in her arms to give him a kiss for his generosity, she perceived from a scar on his leg that it was the identical bird she had nursed."

Respecting the sagacity of the stork, Oppian has the following curious story: "A pair of storks had build a nest and hatched their young ones, but a serpent came up and devoured the latter before they were old enough to fly. This happened two years following; but on the third the parents brought with them a strange bird, somewhat smaller than themselves, and having a large beak as sharp as a sword. To him they intrusted the care of the nest, and when the serpent came up for his meal, as usual, this bird attacked, and, after a severe contest, killed him. In consequence of the venomous bites inflicted by the serpent the whole of the bird's feathers fell off; but the grateful parents took care of their champion, fed him, and stayed with him until his feathers were grown again and he was able to accompany them to his native land."

In Africa there is a gigantic species of stork called the "marabou," which is of a solomestic turn, and is easily tamed. Sonnathman gives an account of one of those birds who used to walk into the house at dinner-time and take his meal with the family; but he was rather apt to help himself in defiance of the ordinary rules of politeness, and one day he stuck his bill into a whole boiled fowl, and bolted with it before it could be rescued from his devouring beak. On another occasion he behaved still worse, for in a fit of voracity he was so barbarous as to swallow the cat, a pet in the family.

MARY'S HAPPY DAY.—Little Mary had a birthday party when she was eight years old. Ten little girls came to play with her on the lawn. They all wore white dresses, pink and blue sashes, and pretty slippers.

When they were tired of playing games, Mary's mother called them to a table which was spread under some shady trees. There was plenty of cakes, candy, and fruit upon the table; but what pleased the children most was an old hen made of chocolate ice-cream. About her were a dozen little chickens made of pink, white and brown ice-cream. Each little girl was given a little chicken to eat.

While they were at the table Mary saw a little girl looking through the gate of the yard. Her dress was old and torn, and she had no shoes on her feet.

Mary had a kind heart, and she felt sorry for the little girl. She ran down to the gate, and asked her if she would like to come to the party.

The little girl, whose name was Fannie, said she did not know what a party was.

Then Mary took her by the hand and led her to the table, and gave her one of the little ice-cream chickens and told her to eat it.

"It must be cooked first," said Fannie; "I can't eat a little, raw chicken."

All the little girls laughed. They thought it very strange that Fannie had never eaten ice-cream. But they were very kind to her. They asked her to join in their games, and Fannie was so sweet-tempered and full of fun, that they were all glad Mary had brought her in to the party.

When it was time for them to go home, the little girls kissed Mary good by, and said they had never been to a better party.

When they were all gone, Mary's mother brought out some nice, neat clothes of Mary's and dressed Fannie in them. She put shoes and stockings on the little girl's feet, and a neat straw hat on her head. Then Mary gave her a doll and some other toys, and Fannie went away laughing with joy.

That night when Mary lay down in bed, she said to her mother, "This has been such a happy day, mamma; I have felt glad in my heart."

"That is because you have tried to make others happy," said her mother. "Remember always, that in order to be happy ourselves we must try to make others so."—Our Little Ones.

TO YOUNG MEN.—"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

A great many hopeful young men reach middle life before they come to realize what life means.

"Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his ways? By taking heed thereto according to thy word."

How much larger would life be if men start aright and never let go the one purpose of making all they can of themselves in the world!

When a young man sneers at the back-woods town in which he was born, and its old-fashioned ways, he has lost the best part of his manhood.

There are so many men of large promise who give hope of being truly great, then go out in darkness. It throws a shade of sadness over human life.

The most of men who fail in any undertaking blame the weather, the system of trade, the rascality of other men—anything but their own stupidness and prodigality.

It is a good sign when a man who, by waste or neglect, loses his position or his business, is willing to go down to the root of the matter and throw the blame on himself, where it belongs.

When a young man away from home can not find time at least once a week to write to his mother he is cutting loose from the strongest tie that can hold him in the hour of temptation.

There are a great many good, sensible Christian people in every city who would be glad to make the acquaintance of as many young men as they can, coming strangers to the city; but the young men must put themselves in the way of forming such associations.

When a young man goes from the country to the city he should carry his home with him—in following its teachings, in selecting only such companions as he would invite into his mother's parlor, in spending his Sabbaths and spare hours in such a way as he would be willing for the folks at home to know how they were spent.—Golden Rule.

AN ELEPHANT FIGHT.—It isn't often that elephants have such a battle in this country as occurred at a bridge over the Scotch Anna River, near Piedmont, Virginia, last fall. The elephants belonged to a menagerie, and were being driven to the Winter quarters in Virginia. All feeling had existed between two Asiatic elephants on the one side, and two African beasts on the other. While crossing the bridge, one of the latter started the battle by suddenly rushing against one of the Asiatics, named Chief, and hurling him into the river below. As the water was very deep Chief sustained no injury by his fall; but when he rose to the surface he sounded from his trumpet a blast that could be heard a mile or more away. At that there began one of the wildest scenes ever witnessed. The keeper and his men lost all control of the animals, which ran around to the river shore, some to assist and others to fight the unfortunate Chief. Two of the smaller elephants climbed on Chief's back, and fought fiercely with their trunks for several minutes. The Africans trotted up and down the shore, roaring and blowing mud and water through their trunks into the air, until one of the biggest of the Asiatics, the Princess, put them to rout. Returning from the chase of the Africans, the Princess helped Chief, who was floundering in the mud, to the shore; when they were chained together and driven slowly the road at some distance from the main herd.

"I AIN'T DOING NOTHING."—There was a boy in school once who was very lazy. He would sit on his seat all day and do nothing. He never made any noise or disturbed anyone. He never whispered or got into any mischief. The master never caught him at tricks.

One day, as he sat still and quiet, the master came along by him, and struck him a smart blow with a ferule. The boy jumped at the unexpected blow, and cried out:

"I ain't doing nothing!"

"That's just it," said the master; "I want you to do something."

So with some people. They think, like this boy, that innocence consists in doing nothing. Not so. We must do something. We must pray to Jesus, and speak for Jesus, and do all we can to show our love for Jesus. Some people think if they do nothing wicked, they are all right. Not so. We must not only "cease to do evil," but "learn to do well." And we should do all we can.

Are you doing all you can? Can't you find something more to do? Don't let us think we are good, because we "ain't doing nothing."—Anon.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. J. W. HESS. REV. W. L. C. HINSICUTT
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY, REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D.
REV. J. T. SAWYER

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1882.

Address of the Publishing Committee.

The Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE met in the office of the editor, January 25, 1882. All the members were present. The report of the publisher was received, and the general condition and interests of the paper carefully considered. The Rev. John T. Sawyer, of the Louisiana Conference, was added to the corps of corresponding editors, and the undersigned appointed to write the annual address to our patrons and friends.

This ADVOCATE is the property of the church. It is not an individual enterprise. All that it claims, material and immaterial, whether of fixtures and furniture, or of history and good-will, belongs to the Conferences. The history of the paper has been eventful. Its location is favorable, and most desirable. Christianity in the Southwest has needed, in this great commercial center, the strong arm of its defense and the gleaming sword of its advance. As the organ of a sound, Scriptural, Protestant Christianity, in the midst of Romanism and irreligion, its mission and ministry have been greatly blessed of God. To thousands of homes it has become a family necessity, sharing, with parent and pastor, the sacred responsibility of providing "food convenient" for young and old. That its mission has been too much circumscribed—that so large a number within the natural area of its circulation have deprived themselves of its weekly visits—is a matter of profound regret. Instead of thousands, its subscribers and readers should be numbered by tens of thousands. A good religious newspaper is possibly the most important factor in the development and growth of intelligent piety. Wherever the ADVOCATE has visited our Southwestern homes our institutions have been most liberally supported, our Discipline most conscientiously obeyed, and the doctrines and polity of the church best understood and defended. The ADVOCATE in every family ought to be the watchword and purpose of every pastor and official member. Within the bounds of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences alone there are not less than fourteen hundred stewards. But little would be hazarded in asserting that, if each was a regular and intelligent reader of his church paper, the support of the ministry would be less meager, and all the interests of our Methodism would take a speedy and healthy upward movement. To effect this increased circulation the following appeal is made:

1. To pastors. Unless the ADVOCATE has your hearty and active support it can not succeed. Your appreciation of its claims and value will largely determine its estimation in the church. You are kindly urged, therefore, to renewed and more vigorous effort in its behalf. Let us have an ADVOCATE revival during the next three months. Such a movement would efficiently aid in precipitating a great and general awakening in all our borders. Its worth as an adjunct pastor is beyond possibility of measurement or statistical exhibit.

2. To old subscribers. You have known the ADVOCATE long and well, and have looked for its weekly coming as the visit of a confiding and genial friend. This attachment has grown with years. Will you not, therefore, speak in earnest and timely word in its behalf? Can you not spend at least, during one day, two morning or evening hours in trying to extend its circulation? Let each old friend secure a new one. Dr. Samuel Johnson once said: "He who fails to keep his friendships in repair will soon be without any." As with an individual, so with a newspaper. New friends must be won by the warm attachment and active interest of the old.

3. To the ladies. Methodism owes much to her glorious womanhood. If she has had honored and heroic men, she has had devout women not a few. We appeal to you, therefore, with confidence, to help your ADVOCATE. You know its value. You have felt its gentle and loving helpfulness in the care and trials of the nursery. When sorrow came, it also came as your sympathizing friend. It has brightened the gloom and cheered the loneliness of many an otherwise weary, painful hour. Then please invite your neighbor to enjoy the fruits of its columns that have been so sweet to your own soul. Get your next-door friend to subscribe for the paper, and in so doing you will reap great reward, and that home will receive an abiding benediction. Present the ADVOCATE's claims in your missionary and aid society meetings. Organize a movement to send it to your destitute sisters, and write by the next mail to the publisher for special terms. If the women of the church can be thus actively enlisted the future of our paper will grow brighter and brighter unto the perfect day of its divine success.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY,
For the Publishing Committee.

Filled With the Spirit.

We have not seen Mr. Arthur's Tongue of Fire for many years, but in that most edifying and inspiring book, we believe he specially distinguishes between a partial and a full measure of the Holy Spirit in the heart. The gift may be in different degrees, fulness being the standard of privilege, and above the average experience of exemplary Christians. The Holy Spirit, in some measure, must dwell in every converted soul, and be consciously present in his work and witness. But this presence may be feebly manifested. It is as twilight compared with the perfect day of power and assurance. Goodness and faith in Barnabas seem to be distinguished from this fulness of the Spirit: "For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." These were qualities united, and conceivably there may be good men, and men of faith, in whom this fulness of the Spirit is not present.

There are many, and very many, good men and good women in the church, and men and women of faith, who yet lack this complete effusion of the Spirit. There are religious societies and congregations composed of good people. They are not without the Holy Spirit, but they are not filled with him. They are somewhat occupied in church work, they are orderly and devout worshipers, and have some religious comfort, but there is lack of liveliness and force. The preacher preaches to them thoughtfully, reverently, and in an edifying way. God is among them, there is the present Spirit, but the power is not in the assembly, it is not in the preacher, it is not in the individuals composing the assembly.

Reference to our concordances will show that the expression, "filled with the Holy Ghost," and terms of like import, occur often in the Acts and in the Epistles. A lower type of spirituality seems to be recognized. There is some grace, goodness, and Christian character without this fulness. But the true type, the highest in the Christian life, the Pentecostal standard, is to be "filled." And this without distinction of persons. It is not limited to Stephen, Barnabas and Peter, and other eminent teachers. The key-note of gospel experience was given on the day of Pentecost: "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." Paul is writing to private Christians, rather than to pastors and evangelists, when he says: "Be not filled with wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit."

As between the old dispensation and the new, the fulness of the Spirit is one of the main distinctions. We can not read the inspired songs of David, or the fervid utterances of Isaiah, without yielding to the conviction that there was much of the presence and comfort of the Holy Ghost in the hearts of those ancient servants of God. But in the new dispensation of grace the tide, so long ebbing and flowing, is at its flood. In some sense the Spirit was not given until Christ was glorified. Is not the explanation largely in the greater fulness of the Spirit as shed upon the Christian church?

In the hearts of believers, in the general feeling of the church, there is a state of unrest and of dissatisfaction. There is a painful sense of coming short in the inward life of faith, and in the force that should cleave its way through the thick masses of sin around us. It might be pleasant to sit in our pews, sing inspiring songs with the help of organ and choir, and listen to the instructive sermon, and enjoy the social delights of the house of prayer. But this is not holding forth the word of life as effectively as it should be; it is not going into all the world; it is not even sounding the note of awakening to those who live within hearing of the church bells. In the presence of a great work to be done, there is this sense of utter insufficiency, of feebleness, of inability to do anything.

We need the gift of power. Yes, but what is this gift? Are we far from the mark when we say that it is "to be filled with the Spirit?" Filled. Good and believing men have the Spirit in some degree, but they are not filled with the Spirit. With this partial anointing of the Spirit the Christian life and the church life do not go out, and something is done, but it can not satisfy the longings of the soul, nor meet the responsibility of the Christian church. There must be this fulness of the Holy Ghost in believing men before the dry bones of a dead world can be shaken.

Our attitude, in reference to this aspect of the Spirit's work, may be more serious than we imagine. It is to believers that the admonition is given: "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." The seal may not be altogether broken at once, and yet the Spirit is grieved, because we do not open our hearts to the fulness of his light and grace. He is grieved because we do not honor him in his divine personality and authority, and because we do not, with sufficient reverence and heartiness, seek his most abundant baptism. Not to be filled with the Spirit is, almost inevitably, to put upon him an affront, and to incur his just displeasure. If it does not lead to his departure, it leaves us where our spiritual twilight may gradually fade into gloom. Is God angry with his people? Does his displeasure rest upon Zion? If so the cause is mainly in this dishonoring of the Holy Spirit.

We talk of revivals, we pray for them, we must have them or we die. But a revival is to be filled with the Spirit. When believers are thus full of the Holy Ghost, and the preachers are thus filled, there is a Pentecost. The outside world soon hears of it, is moved by it, and communities are aroused. One man filled with the Holy Ghost will be felt in a congregation, and ten or twenty will stir things, and turn things upside down. Having the Spirit in some measure, let this be our special quest at the throne of grace, that we may be filled with the Holy Ghost.

Forsaking Methodism.

The Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman, widely-known as one of the most influential men and popular pulpit orators of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has become the pastor of the Madison Avenue Congregational Church in the city of New York. The arrangements and transformation were safely accomplished on the ninth instant. It is a striking coincidence that the retiring pastor, the Rev. W. R. Davis, was a convert or pervert from Methodism just three years ago. This sudden change of Dr. Newman has created quite a sensation in Northern Methodism. He has long been a leader, and during the presidency of Gen. Grant was the most conspicuous figure in the church. Now it is said the ex-President and Jay Gould are to be his special patrons and friends. In several General Conferences Dr. Newman received a large vote for the episcopacy. Doubtless, had that vote reached a majority he would not now be a Congregationalist, but, as of yore, a eulogist of Methodism and a glorifier of her glorious itinerancy. But a few months since Dr. Newman returned from London, whither he had gone as a delegate to the great Methodist Ecumenical Conference. In that body he read a paper of rare excellence and learning on Christian Perfection—a doctrine of all others distinctively Methodistic. With these words fresh on his lips, and with honors clustering around his name, placed there by the church of his fathers, it is difficult to account for his defection. The Pittsburg Christian Advocate has this to say on the subject, the force of which is acknowledged though the application may not be approved: "When a man, whose mother has nursed him tenderly, comes to the conclusion to disown her because there are some things she sees fit to withhold from him, the poignancy of her grief will be somewhat dulled by the consideration of the ingratitude he manifests."

This writer has watched carefully the drift of thought and events in the North, and is convinced there is a growing impatience with the short pastoral term, and that this, more than all other reasons combined, causes the defection of so many able men. Several of the strongest churches in Boston, Brooklyn and New York are filled by men who rose to distinction in the Methodist pastorate. In the South this has not been an agitating question, and possibly will not be for many years to come.

The church over which Dr. Newman now presides was projected by Dr. George H. Hepworth. It has a debt of $80,000. Dr. Newman's letter accepting the call stipulated that the arrangement was temporary, but, if his better judgment confirmed his action, he would become the permanent pastor. He was voted a salary of $6,000.

On account of his great pastoral efficiency, learning and growing conservatism this change will be regretted. Though radical and aggressive toward the South during the years immediately succeeding the war, Dr. Newman has become more and more catholic, generous, kindly and ecumenical. Whatever motive prompted his going, his loss to Methodism will be felt and deplored.

C. B. G.

Widows and Orphans.

There are some things in the administration of Methodist matters that, though pretty well done, might perhaps be still better done. One of this class is the care we take of the widows and orphans of our deceased preachers. This is one of the oldest, most cherished and popular features of our itinerant economy, and it is very justly so.

At least ninety per cent. of the itinerants die poor. And yet if the same energy, skill, self-denial, toil and frugality which the preacher and his wife practice were put into any other avocation they would enable the men at death, in ninety per cent. of the cases, to leave their families in circumstances of independence, if not of wealth. In Bishop Andrew's last will is this paragraph: "This is all the property, I believe, I have to dispose of. In early life I devoted myself to the ministry of the gospel of Jesus, and have had no time to accumulate wealth. But I trust I leave my children an untarnished reputation, and have a good hope, through grace, of resting with God when the pilgrimage of life is ended." It is only the very smallest per cent. of Methodist preachers who could not make the same declarations in their last wills and testaments. They all die poor, not because they are idle or thriftless, but because they "have no time to accumulate wealth, their lives being devoted to the ministry of the gospel." The church appreciates this, and hence is willing to support the families of those who die in the work. The preachers understand it, and hence are willing to aid the laymen, both by collecting funds and contributing what they can of their own means.

But do we manage this matter in the best way? Let us see. The way it is now done is this: Once a year a collection is taken in every pastoral charge, and the monies thus raised are carried to the ensuing Annual Conference, and distributed by the Joint Board of Finance to the claimants according to their necessities.

There are two parts of this plan of doing a good thing, which, it seems, might be easily substituted with others, that would make the whole administration more harmonious, and at the same time be more satisfactory and profitable to the parties most directly interested. I suggest them to the consideration of the delegates, for the different Conferences, to the next General Conference.

I. Let the appropriations be made at the Annual Conference before the collections are taken up, as is the case with the Board of Missions, and also with the Boards of Stewards on circuits, stations and districts, and let the appropriations be made, not according to the "necessities," but according to the number of the claimants, as is also the rule with these other boards.

II. Let the collection for widows and orphans and superannuates be taken quarterly instead of annually. It should be considered a part of what is raised for the support of the ministry, and when the eighth question is asked in the Quarterly Conference, let the answer be so much for preacher in charge, so much for presiding elder, so much for widows and orphans, and so much for superannuates. The money should be sent to the treasurer of the Joint Board to be paid to the claimants once a quarter. The advantages would be:

1. Larger collections. This would as surely be so, as it is that collections for the pastor made quarterly bring a better support than they would if made only once a year.

2. The money being paid over quarterly would do the receivers thereof more good. How would a preacher get along if he got his pay only once a year?

3. It would put the claim itself upon exactly the same ground of obligation occupied by the claims of the active pastor. And that is just where it should be. For if the preacher's claim is a debt of law, so is that of the superannuate and the widow and orphan; and, if the claim of the superannuate and the widow and orphan is a mere charity, so is the claim of the pastor; and, if one is a debt of religious honor (and it is this,) then so is the other.

To execute well the present law, it would be better for the Joint Board to hold office for four years, as is the case with the Board of Missions now. And should these suggestions be passed into the Discipline it would be still more appropriate for that board to be appointed quadrennially.

J. W. H.

Immigration.

The minds of thousands of our people are greatly exercised on the subject of immigration. Those who can not move to somebody else want somebody else to move to them. Like the flying fish, anywhere else and anyhow else than where and as they are would suit them better. The Legislature of Mississippi is begged to do something to encourage immigration, and many members strongly favor the appropriation of money for that purpose. This is one of the cases, it appears to me, where it is better to "endure the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of." The negro is not perhaps a satisfactory laborer in all respects, yet, I doubt not, he is the best the world can furnish for the place he fills. His ignorance and thriftlessness prevent him from competing with us in the accumulation of property, and keep him subject to hire as a laborer. Had we had, for laborers since our late war men of equal intelligence with ourselves they would by this time have become owners of almost all the land in the country. The negro will not work very well without some compulsion other than moral obligation. Neither will any other hired laborers in the world. The negro will steal articles of small value, especially to eat. While he was a slave he doubtless thought that what he ate he had made, and that it only strengthened him the more to work for the master who owned both the food and the eater. It is not strange that such habits should still be sometimes improperly indulged. But we can not judge him for such acts as we should judge ourselves. Wholesome laws have repressed thieving to a very large extent. Their morals, too, we may hope, are improving.

As a rule, too, the negro is easy to command, and feels no degradation in serving you. Of all the laboring classes in the world I take the negro to be the most willing and inoffensive. He never envies or bears malice, and rarely plots to rob or kill. Had we had any other race of people in their place I doubt whether we should not have been destroyed long since.

But what about the much-coveted foreign immigration? Whoever invites or begs or hires foreigners to come to this country will get more than he bargains for, and will not be pleased with the surplus, unless he be a land speculator or a speculator in something else, whose interests are not identical with those of the great body of our people. Pick and choose as you may, four out of five foreign immigrants will be such people as we do not want. They will have no sympathy with our laws our customs or our religion. They will be such people as can not be assimilated to our society, and ought not to be mingled with it. They would intermarry, to some extent, among us, thereby pulling us down a great deal, while we would raise them a very little. The most of them would ignore our Sabbath and scout our religious opinions. They would be politically, socially, morally and religiously antagonistic to us. As laborers they would be of two sorts: those who would remain hirelings and renters, and those who would not. The former class would be worse than the negro. They would work less and rob more than he does. Those who do menial work for hire are unreliable the world over. "The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling." The latter class would soon outstrip us in the race for fortune. They would soon own lands, and be independent of us; nay, our superiors in all worldly possessions. They would make fortunes out of us, laugh at our incapacity, and then rule us, as the Germans are now doing the natives in parts of Texas.

Since writing the foregoing the following, from the pen of E. S. Smith, Daleville, Texas, has fallen under my eye: "The Germans occupy, almost exclusively, large districts in the heart of the Conference, where once there were large churches and even circuits. Before their steady advance the American population has fallen back, and the territory has, by a necessity hitherto considered imperative, been abandoned by our preachers. Dwelling in large communities, they speak their mother tongue, keep up the customs of their forefathers, and show little disposition to become assimilated to American customs and modes of thought."

But, says one, we want our idle lands cultivated. I am unable to see the force of this argument. What advantage can it be to have land cultivated, if he who cultivates one acre consumes as much as will grow on two? It is not because our lands are not cultivated, but because they are unprofitably cultivated, that we are now dissatisfied. But will not foreigners cultivate our lands profitably? Profitably to whom? To themselves; not to us. We have classified them above. Those who work for us will be no better than the negroes; those who work profitably will soon grow rich out of us. The flood of foreign immigration to this country is a great calamity. At least four out of five of them are such as were not needed at the homes they left, and can never be of any advantage to us.

If we need anything on this subject it is rather to discourage immigration. If Mississippi had now within her borders the strong young men who have gone from her to Texas, California and other places since the late war, she would be more blessed than by a half million of foreign immigrants. The idea of a State with a million of inhabitants needing foreign immigrants is preposterous. They may need us; we certainly do not need them. But they will bring money with them. Money is by no means an essential blessing. Many of the most hateful and harmful people in the world possess money in considerable quantities.

If society and the Legislature together can devise any means whereby they can keep our young men at home, and induce them to settle on lands of their own, not rented places, and build houses and cultivate their native soil, adorning their homes with gardens, fruits and flowers, they will do more in a few years to promote the real prosperity of the State than all the immigration schemes that ever were invented could do in a lifetime.

W. L. C. H.

Among the Editors.

New York Christian Advocate:

Still another mode of unfair dealing is to take a collection, for one object and appropriate it to another. To make a powerful appeal for the poor, and apply all above the ordinary amount to the current expenses of the church; to take money for the cause of the missions, and apply it to the expenses of the Sunday school; to take it for the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and divert it to some other institution—these all are acts which, however well intended, are essentially dishonest. The Sunday school that devotes a part of its Sabbath collections to it own expenses and a part to the missions, should make that fact distinctly understood; and all specific designations of money, and conditions on which subscriptions are made and accepted, should be complied with to the letter.

To use endowment funds for current expenses contrary to the express or implied wishes of the donors, whether they were received by bequests or direct gifts, is an act not worthy of any better description than misappropriation of funds and betrayal of confidence. To collect money for an enterprise, and, on the enterprise being indefinitely postponed, to retain the funds or apply them to other uses without the consent of the givers, not assumed, but asked and received, is not only disreputable, but it is a gross imposition.

The acts hereinbefore denounced have all been committed—some by pastors, others by pastors and official boards combined, some by the latter alone. There are communities where Methodism has been ruined, where churches have been divided, where undying animosities have been caused by such acts. They are not only dishonest, but foolish; for more money can be raised on a frank statement than in any other way. Let all ministers and boards of trust, and all Sunday school societies, manage their affairs with candor and honesty; and wherever any thing questionable is proposed or attempted, let every layman oppose it, whether trustees, stewards, class leaders, or pastor, if all combined, defend it.

Chicago Standard:

"Stand up and preach us a simple gospel sermon. Don't make any special effort, but just give us the simple gospel." Such counsel, intended to give help and relief, is often spoken by the good deacon in the young pastor's ear. Does the lay brother know that he is asking the preacher to do the most difficult and arduous thing in connection with his work?

The "simple gospel," what is it? An English minister, addressing the late autumnal Conference, said: "Why, to preach the simple gospel is to produce the diamond, the very essence of costliness distilled out of Gethsemane pressures and Calvary fires, and no one can do it except the Spirit-baptized student, who has agonized through the strait gate into the very Zion of God's word." Our clerical friend speaks words of profound truth. To be simple on some matters is well-nigh a simple impossibility. Oh, the wealth and profundity of God's word! Who can measure its richness, who can cast the line to its lowest depths of meaning? To bring forth simples out from such mysteries is a responsibility for which man is all unworthy, and a task for which he is all-insufficient. It is wholly beyond his unaided search or grasp.

And yet, brethren, that is the work to which we are appointed. To preach the simple gospel is the very employment for which the apostle of our Lord Jesus Christ is apprehended. "Go preach the gospel", has come knocking at our hearts, and we have opened to its importunity. We have accepted the charge. What is it that has been intrusted to us? The wisdom of God—unutterable things, things past human comprehension, marvels of divine truth, mysteries of grace.

Richmond Christian Advocate:

Yes, "In all thy ways," whether they are ways of thought, of feeling, or of action; and not in these or those ways, but in "all" of them, everywhere, and at all times and under all circumstances. This commandment is exceedingly broad, and such, indeed, it should be, and so, too, should we scrupulously observe it, lest Satan get an advantage over us. The breadth of this law will justify itself to our consciousness as well as to our conscience, if we but remember that human life is a very large matter, occupying in the humblest man a wide surface, and that surface covering depths unfathomable, while reaching upward to heights immeasurable. God makes no small demands. Like an absolute sovereign, he requires all, and yet more as a Father, he asks for all, that we may understand how great he is, and how vast and varied is our capacity, under Providence and Grace, to serve and honor him, both in his majesty and tenderness. Obedience takes knowledge of God in these to conjoint facts. The divine majesty and tenderness are ever before its eye, and, in this largeness of spirit, reciprocating in its measure the fullness of Christ, it enters into the meaning of the words, "in all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths."

Zion's Herald.

This is the great necessity of our missionary cause at this hour. It rests too largely upon the wealthy few, instead of being distributed among the hundreds of thousands of comparatively poor. To organize a church for its Christian work and charity, individually and universally, is a greater matter than to preach wonderful sermons. And it will be appreciated as such by the church. An astonishing preacher comes and goes, and what has he done? There is a bustle and a crowd, and perhaps a pleasant memory left behind of eloquent sentences, unslavishly delivered, but what has the church done and what is its spiritual condition? Get the membership at work individually, and giving according to their several ability, and the influence of the minister who succeeds in accomplishing this will be felt in the ends of the earth and last while the world stands.

Church Manners.

CHARLES F. DEEMS, LL. D.

It would seem an impertinence to say anything to ordinarily well bred people in regard to their manners in church. Nevertheless, there are certain points of behavior which would be modified by thoughtful people, if they could see them from the point of view at which they are looked at by a sexton, or an usher, or a pastor.

We propose to give our readers the benefit of our own observations on this subject.

The first important thing is to be in the pew before the minister enters the pulpit. Few hearers have considered the vast importance of this direction. Tardiness in reaching church has a wide spread and disastrous spiritual influence. In different churches the ritual is different. Some commence with an exhortation, some with a hymn, some with the reading of the Scripture, and some with prayer. To any one of these the ushers ought to give uninterrupted attention; but, if you come in, to be shown to your seat, you lose the whole effect yourself, and you deprive other souls of the good they might obtain. You injure yourself seriously, because you either think that you are more important than the service of God or at least appear to think so. If you have real reverence, you fail to show it.

A member of the House of Commons in England would disparage his reputation for decency, if he came in while the Queen's address was being read by the Queen herself. His behavior would not be half as reprehensible as that of a person who should enter a church and disturb the congregation while the minister was reading the Holy Scripture.

You ought to know the precise time at which the service begins, and on Saturday night lay all your plans to be in church. The minister may be making, as in the Episcopal church, the exhortation to confession. Both that exhortation and that confession are exceedingly solemn things, and never to be taken in the mouth without an intense conviction of the grandeur and goodness of God, and the wickedness and sinfulness of man. Who are you, that you dare come trampling down the aisle and slamming the pew-door amidst such solemnity? When great companies of singers are engaged at a concert, every man is expected to be in his place before the first note is struck, and in churches where congregational singing prevails, every one is expected to assist, and you should be in your places with composed mind and heart attuned to the service, ready to perform your part, or, at least, not to jostle those who are already singing.

Sometimes, as in Presbyterian and other churches, the minister may be opening the service with a prayer of invocation. Every worshiper ought to be present at this. In some churches the service is commenced by reading the Holy Scriptures. A minister who discharges his duty faithfully in this department, carefully and prayerfully reads over the lessons, practising the proper tones of voice, to bring out in the reading the shades of sacred meaning in the text. His whole intellect and soul ought to be just as much in the reading of God's word as in the utterance of the sermon. However much you disturb such utterance you can never tell, but we can assure you, from a sad and bitter experience, that ministers are sometimes so much thrown off the track in the reading of their morning lessons, that they never fully recover themselves before the close of the sermon. And one late comer may, by the distraction he causes, produce a serious effect upon the manner in which the truth shall be presented to a thousand hearers. Therefore be early.

Rev. Thos. Y. Ramsey, Presiding Elder of the Winona District, North Mississippi Conference, writing from Durant to the Memphis Christian Advocate, January 19, says:

As you know, at the last session of North Mississippi Conference, I was removed to the Winona district. This change was made by the Bishop because the term of my worthy predecessor had expired. I find that Bro. Jones was very much beloved by these people, and leaves many friends behind. So far, I do not regret the change. I have everywhere met with a most cordial reception, and feel greatly obliged to both preachers and people for many favors.

A little more than two weeks ago I moved my family to this place, and immediately the friends here poured in their contributions upon us, and it has really cost us very little to live since we have been here.

The preachers are all at their posts, and, so far as I have seen, have entered upon the new year with fair prospects.

Bro. Thames, whose wife had been extremely ill, it was thought would be hindered in entering upon his work; but he has reached here in good time, and is making a fine impression. His wife is yet too feeble to move, but is improving.

Bro. Evans and Newsom, who were extremely ill before Conference, are so far recovered as to enter upon their work.

I found Bro. Foster, with his bride, at Lexington, entering upon his work with his usual zeal.

I also found Bro. Murrah and his accomplished young wife snugly fixed up in the new parsonage at Winona.

Bro. T. A. S. Adams is holding his own still with the High School at Kosciusko. By-the-way, those who are so fond of reading after his facile pen, may expect from the press, ere long, another entertaining volume of poems from him.

We are earnestly praying and looking for a revival of pure religion throughout the district. I believe this is the purpose of every man in the district who has charge of a work. May the Lord send it in his own good time.

Effects of Alcohol.

It is not to be expected that the discussion as to the effects of alcoholic drinks upon the human system will be ended during the present century. On the one hand is a body of reformers so earnest, so intense, so deeply impressed with the terrors of the evil that they can not be expected to abate in an advocacy which must ever provoke the opposition and the prejudices of those of less pronounced views.

The very habits of those who never exceed a temperate use make them able and not disinterested opposers of total abstinence, and create a third party, which will ever incline to hold the balance of power between those two classes who are temperate, as these think, either in the use of liquor or in the inculcation of teetotalism. Some have long since abandoned the expectancy of securing a unit of belief as to the food possibilities of alcohol. It is unfortunate that of late special efforts have been put forth to discredit the position taken by Richardson and on the experiments of Binz, to certify alcohol as a possible food.

We have examined with some care these experiments, as also the very inconclusive testimony given by those who appear before the Parliamentary Committee. We can not see that any new facts have been proven as to the effects of alcohol upon the human system. We have recently had occasion to examine various dietaries and to consider the value of food in relation to the economical yet adequate support of the working classes and their families. Edward Smith not only constructed tables for the English Government on the basis of scientific facts, but these were rightly put to the test under the various conditions of labor and of rest. The prisoner, the sailor, the agricultural laborer, the open air or shop artisan, and all the varied grades of labor have been tested to a degree that does not leave us much in doubt as to indication. There has been no disposition to exclude alcohol, either as present in distilled or fermented liquors, from this trial. As a result, we may safely say that one after another of the public institutions have crossed it from the list of foods, on the ground of its very low value and of its enormous unprofitableness as a food. The wage classes are those especially exposed to its ravages. Whatever excuse might be made for the rich to try it, to see if any possible and permanent aid can be obtained from it, does not apply to the very large class who, by economy, are called upon to substitute a for well-known, real economical foods. The malt drinks which have been and still are in so much use among the working-classes of Great Britain do not stand when in the dietaries of our institutions; their food values and cost is calculated. The experience of prisons has been most instructive on this point. The inmates are those who have often been addicted to drink, and so have established an artificial want. Yet, when once the dietary of the prison is acquired, these men generally begin to improve in health. If the State were to deal with this merely as a question of health and labor, there would be a great alteration in our present license system. It is just for the State and for the individual to advance upon the theory that there is nothing in alcohol which renders it a valuable addition to the ordinary diet, and that therefore its use is to be discarded.

It is noticeable how much its domain in medicine is being narrowed. The recent expose as to its use in hospitals is found to need other explanations than the necessities of patients. Alcohol, as a medicine, has taken a lower place for some of the causes that have lowered its estimation as a food. We do not doubt its value in meeting some emergencies of disease; but it can not be made to take the place of those nutriments which are indispensable to sustain force. We believe that this low rank which alcohol takes, as we come more fully to know of food values, should be urged as a very prominent reason for its limitation. It may be worth our while, now and then, to suspend the minute discussion of the question whether alcohol is a possible or complimentary food, and non-suit the whole question of its use by saying that it can not be justified either in comparison with other foods or because of its extravagance. It admits of thorough substitution in all those points in which it has stimulating values.

We now know that, if it were forever interdicted as a drink, the physical nature would not suffer by the exclusion, while it would be replaced by foods that give more vigor to the body and make the wage classes to feel the benefits in their pockets and in their homes, as well as in better stomach and greater muscular force.—New York Independent.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.—The Publishing Committee of this paper held its annual meeting at the ADVOCATE office on Wednesday last. All the members were present, to-wit: James A. Godfrey, W. L. C. Hunnicut and C. B. Galloway, of the Mississippi Conference, and Felix R. Hill, Christian Keener and Linus Parker, of the Louisiana Conference.

The usual address of the committee, prepared by Bro. Galloway, will be found in another column. Rev. J. T. Sawyer was elected one of the corresponding editors. Bro. Sawyer is at Shreveport, and at a point where he can furnish our readers with notes of current events in north Louisiana and adjacent regions. The corresponding editors of Mississippi and Alabama have done excellent service during the past year, and will doubtless continue to furnish notes and timely articles.

The appointment of these corresponding editors is not designed, however, to forestall communications from the pens of others. Our friends in every quarter of the church, far or near, are most cordially invited to furnish news items, religious and secular, and to send short contributions, carefully written, on subjects of interest to our readers. Articles in controversial form are not generally to our liking. A writer can show his opinion and meet opposing views without naming those who differ with him, or even seeming to personally antagonize them. Brethren will please to avoid personalities. Deal with facts and principles, the subject matter, and have nothing to say about the motives of any writer. Above all things, do not attempt to be sharp, or to say rasping and censorious things. Hard arguments are allowable, but not hard words.

—Guiteau has been found guilty. The jury did not deliberate two hours over the matter. Their minds were made up probably when counsel were done talking. The verdict gives general satisfaction. A motion for a new trial will be argued on Friday next. The inevitable hour may be delayed by various legal expedients, but Guiteau is bound to be hung. This is the verdict of the jury; it is also the verdict of public opinion.

—Rev. Henry D. Moore, pastor of Franklin Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Mobile, writing January 21, says: "A protracted meeting is now in progress at Franklin Street, and our prospect is good." We heartily pray that our Mobile churches may have a sweeping revival. It is also needed in New Orleans, and everywhere else where it does not already prevail.

—We have received a copy of the Minutes of the last session of the Mississippi Conference. The work is edited by C. B. Galloway, and W. C. Black, and appears to be accurate and complete. We would urge our lay brethren of the Mississippi Conference to give these printed minutes a careful study. They are published for information, and they are filled with most valuable information.

—The Pacific Methodist, published at San Francisco, California, is the able organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on the Pacific coast. It has recently changed its form from four to eight pages. The size and amount of reading matter about the same as formerly.

—Rev. Q. A. Oats, of the North Mississippi Conference, was married at the Female Seminary, Woodville, Miss., January 29, to Miss Alice A. Coleman, Rev. Ben. Jones, stepfather of the bride, officiating. We wish the happy couple long life, and happiness unalloyed.

—The Mississippi Pioneer is the title of a paper just started at Jackson, Miss. It is to be issued monthly, and is devoted to immigration, and the development of the agricultural, manufacturing and industrial resources of Mississippi. S. N. Van Praag, publisher.

—The Corsicana Messenger has changed its name to the Texas Messenger, published at Corsicana, Texas. Rev. M. H. Wells and T. R. Leeman, editors and proprietors. This lively journal has enlarged every way, in name, in editorial work, and in the size of the sheet.

—Rev. Dr. West, Presiding Elder of Seashore district, Mississippi Conference, informed us this week that Rev. G. T. Vickers, sick with small-pox at Covington, La., is rapidly convalescing. The disease at that place is not spreading.

—Rev. Wm. Spillman has become editor of the Mississippi Methodist. Dr. Spillman is a prolific writer, and will doubtless fill the position with ability.

We very much regret to learn that Rev. John Barcroft, of the North Mississippi Conference, has not improved in health since the adjournment of his Conference. In a note to us, dated Byhalia, Miss., January 26, Bro. Barcroft says: "The North Mississippi Conference gave me a superannuated relation at its late session at Grenada. The necessity of retiring was a source of grief to my spirit. Since Conference my symptoms have become more alarming and my sufferings greater. In this hour of my greatest sorrow I find my spirit seeking to be submissive to the Divine will, either in life or death. 'The Lord is my portion, saith my soul,' and that forever and ever. Glory to God."

"Joshua No. 1," writing in the Nashville Christian Advocate, says:

In the assessment of the presiding elder's salary you consider, 1. Ability; 2. Willingness, and the burden upon the charges; and this whole matter should be left to the good sense and discretion of the district stewards. Any rigid rule or per cent. is impracticable, and will end in defeat and disaster.

This seeming friction about the presiding elder's support has its origin in ignorance and stinginess, and the man who says most about the burden is generally the man who pays the least, and who is of no account to the church or the world.

The Methodist Church ceases when this office does, and I know no investment the church has made which yields better returns than the money she pays for these devoted servants.

Bishop Peck writes to one of the Methodist papers of a Conference of Methodist ministers in Detroit to consider "dangers to our church and to the people, from apparent decline in spirituality and the want of success in many parts of Michigan in winning souls to Christ." Upward of sixty ministers from different parts of the State were present. As to the results the Bishop says: "No man can define them. They will appear, he thinks, in the charges."

The anti-Mormon agitation is gaining in strength. The Presbyterian and Methodist ministers of Cincinnati have taken steps to have petitions to Congress circulated for signatures. A similar movement is also on foot in Chicago and Drs. Crosby, Hall, and others have been asked to call a meeting in New York City.

Bishop Kavanaugh, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, was eighty years old coevally with the date of our last paper—January 14. Mistaking the date, the Methodist preachers of Louisville, fifteen in number, with the Rev. David Morton, presiding elder, at their head, called on the Bishop on Monday, January 9, and tendered their congratulations and good wishes. The Bishop responded in brief but touching terms. It was a sort of impromptu love-feast.

The Rev. Jacob Freshman, son of a converted Jewish rabbi, has come to New York City, at the invitation of Dr. Charles F. Deems, and, encouraged by Drs. Crosby, Ormiston, and others, he has begun a Hebrew-Christian service among the Jews. He preaches every Sunday afternoon, in Cooper Union, to a considerable gathering of Jews and is about to open a Sunday-school. The mission is undenominational.

EMORY PROSPERS.—Up to date (January 18, says the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, the roll shows the names of two hundred and forty students. Ten or twelve more have spoken for places.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey are to go to Paris, and conduct revival services there, by request of a committee under the Presidency of Mr. R. W. McAll.

Books and Periodicals.

—We have received from the American Sunday-School Union, Philadelphia, the Gospel according to Mark, comparative edition: also Teacher's Primer No. 1.

—Original Chatter Box, edited by J. Erskine Clarke, M. A., and published by Estes and Lauriat, Boston, is one of the most splendidly illustrated magazines for young people that we are acquainted with. Price $1 a year.

—St. Nicholas, for February, is, as usual, wonderful for its numerous and fine illustrations. Among the articles are: Adventures of Prince Nezahualcoyotl; The Man in the Moon; The Round Stone—A Hungarian Folk Story; Donald and Dorothy; How a Little Girl Suggested the Invention of the Tiles Copo; Going to Sea—a Talk with Boys; Cornwallis's Buckles; A Curious Drama; Lady Ann's Valentine; Recollections of a Drummer-Boy; Men-and-Animal shows, and how they are moved about.

—Wide Awake, for February, is a marvel of beauty and sprightliness. It contains an abundance of attractive pictures and entertaining and instructive articles. Among the articles are: A Memorable Skate to Long-Level Lock; Painting Valentines; A Delightful Grandfather; Their Club and Oars; From the Hudson to the Neva; One Night's Musk-rat Trapping; The Breaking Up of the Ice-Bridge; Indian Children and their Pets; Johnny Pig; Ways to do Things; Old Ocean.

—The Theological and Homiletic Monthly, for January, R. N. Sledd, D. D., editor, James and Sledd, publishers, Richmond, Va., has the following articles: The Late Ecumenical Conference; The General Conference of 1882; The Philosophy of True Life; As the Truth is in Jesus; Joshua's Miracle; The Unity of the Church; The Voice of the Present, and the Saviour's Last Command; Preach a Personal Christ; Editorial Miscellany.

—The Popular Science Monthly, for February, has: The Seven World-Problems; How Animals Breath; Sanitary relations of the Soil; Longevity of the Oyster; Epidemic Convulsions; Extension of the Signal Service; A Botanist of the Ninth Century; Wild Animals as Man's Associates; Vibration of Rocks in Patapsco Valley; and other articles.

—Planter's Journal, published at Vicksburg, Miss., by the Planter's Journal Company, is an able monthly, and specially adapted to the wants of our cotton growers in the Southwest. Price $2 a year. We have received the January number.

—Our Little Ones and the Nursery, for February, is as usual most charmingly illustrated, and filled with prose and verse suited to the very young people. The Russell Publishing Company, Boston. Price $1 50 a year.

—Musical Herald, for January, received. An excellent number of this superior monthly.

Advocate Calendar,

For 1882.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

A depositor dropped in at the office of the cashier one morning to get a note discounted. The official was absent, but on his chair reclined a dump, fat faced individual, who was fast asleep. Turning to one of the clerks, and then glancing at the recumbent figure, the visitor observed: "Appears to be on pretty friendly terms with Morpheus." "It's his habit," responded the gentlemanly clerk. "He always goes to sleep when he comes here." "Has business, I suppose, with the cashier?" "Oh, yes; he's one of the government bank examiners."

A Little boy said, in the presence of Herbert Spencer: "What an awful lot of crows!" The philosopher corrected. The youth by saying: "I have yet to learn, little master, that there is anything to inspire awe in such a bird as a crow." For once the author of first principles met his match. The boy replied: "But I didn't say there was. I didn't say what lot of awful crows; but what an awful lot of crows!" Sound for the boy.

The great music house of P. Werlein continues to supply the world with musical instruments, and thousands of homes have been made happy by the possession of a piano or an organ through his low prices and astonishingly liberal terms. The name Werlein has become so identified with pianos that you hardly can think of pianos without thinking of Werlein. Go and try him, and our word for it, you will be pleased.

The two Sheridans were supping one night after the opera, at a period when Tom Sheridan expected to get into Parliament. "I think, father," said he, "that many men who are called great patriots in the House of Commons are great humbugs. For my own part, if I get into Parliament, I will pledge myself to no party, but write upon my forehead, in legible characters, 'To be Let.'" "And under that, Tom," said his father, "write 'Unfurnished.'"

A Norristown second-hand furniture dealer has a toy said to have been made by George Washington. This reminds us that a Philadelphia dealer in bric-a-brac has a soap-bubble blown by George, when nine years old.

"Yes," said Clara, "your Maltese kitty is pretty enough, but it can never come up to my bird." That was all she knew about it. The kitty did come up to her bird that very day, and it was all day with the bird.

An editor wrote a headline—"A Horrible Blunder"—to go over a railroad accident, but, though it was the printer's fault that it got over the account of a wedding, the editor was the man thrashed all the same.

Beneficent nature seems to have planted in every clime the proper remedies for the diseases incidental to it. Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm is made of an herb which grows all over the Gulf region, and it has never failed yet to cure all kinds of coughs and colds.

Is this not a Mule? Tickle his Heel and See. Yes, it is a Mule. You had better Send for a Doctor and a Minister. If it had been a Piano, instead of a Mule, you would not Have to Wear your self in a Sling for the next Six Months. Do you wish it had been a Piano?

It is now announced, on authority of "an eminent physician," that it is not healthy to rise before eight o'clock in the morning. This applies only to men. Wives can rise as early as seven, and start the fires as heretofore.

They had a lying match for a prize of $100 in Ohio recently, and one fellow was sharp enough to dance up to the rack and hitch on the unvarnished truth, and he got the $100 by unanimous vote of the judges.

A celebrated lawyer said that the three most troublesome clients he ever had were a young lady who wanted to be married; a married woman who wanted a divorce, and an old maid who didn't know what she wanted.

Lighten the burden of life, and make success certain, and your calculations accurate, by using Brown's Iron Bitters. It strengthens mind and body.

A Quaker's advice to his son on his wedding day: "When thee went a-courting, I told thee to keep thy eyes wide open. Now that thee is married, I tell thee to keep them half shut."

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend or the next year and you will not regret it.

The following typographical error shows the vast importance of a comma. At a banquet this toast was given: "Woman without her man, is a brute."

"My lord," said the foreman of an Irish jury, when giving in the verdict, "we find the man who stole the horse not guilty."

There is no change so sad to contemplate as the last ten cents left from a ten dollar bill.

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

'Tis easier to build two chimneys than to keep one in fuel.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

W. F. MELLEN,

Attorney at Law,

12 CARONDELET ST.,

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,

RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,

220 Jackson St., Bet. Chestnut and Coliseu

NEW ORLEANS.

Office Hours—Eight A. M., and three to four P. M.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,

GREENSBORO, ALA.

Second term opens February 20, 1882. The University is out of debt and has a full faculty.

For information address,

J. M. [illegible],

Secretary of the Faculty.

WOODVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY,

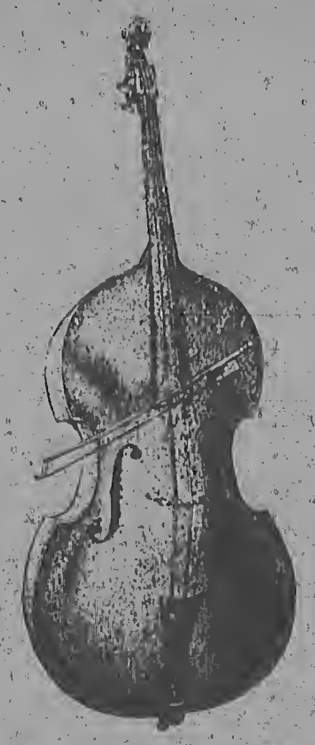
Woodville, Wilkinson Co., Miss.

INVITES PATRONAGE.

Buildings are good and comfortable, new and beautiful, and ample. Location healthful. Faculty full and efficient. Charges for board and tuition, per half academic year, $45 to $55.

WERLEIN'S,

NEW ORLEANS.



Make your home happy by purchasing one of those superb

CHICKERING,

MATHUSHEK,

or HALE

PIANOS.

If you should not want a Piano buy an Organ:

MASON & HAMLIN'S

LEAD.

STERLING ORGANS

Are Good and Cheap.

GOOD VIOLIN, BOW AND BOX, $5.

I am prepared to supply all persons with good bargains. If you will write for catalogue and prices you will be convinced that we do offer good inducements. Instruments sent on trial, and if not satisfactory, no sale nor expense.

PHILIP WERLEIN,

135 Canal St., New Orleans.

CHAPEL HILL ACADEMY,

MARSHALL COUNTY, TENN.

Opens the next session, the Sixteenth, under present principle, January 2, 1882. Course: English, Classics, Mathematics and Sciences. Thoroughness, Cheapness and Progress are all combined here. Efficient teachers employed, such as know how to teach, and are up with the spirit and progress of this age of Education. Entire expense, $70 to $80 per session of twenty weeks. Music by skillful teachers for $25 per session.

O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., Editor Christian Advocate, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., of this school says: "I unsolicited, we speak a word in behalf of this school. The Chapel Hill community is one of the best in Coffee county, the location is beautiful and healthful, and Prof. J. V. Will is a teacher whose skill as an educator is only equaled by his qualities as a Christian gentleman. All of which we say because we know it is so."

Pupils can enter at any time and will be charged only from time of entrance. Tri weekly stage from Nashville to this place, distance forty miles south.

Address S. V. WALL, Principal,

Chapel Hill, Tenn.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,

MONUMENTS.

Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,

MARBLE, SLATE,

And Iron Mantels and Grates,

114, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans.

FOR $2.50!

Mailed Postage Paid.

I have nineteen copies left of the

Complete Church Register,

historical and statistical, comprising A General Index; An Alphabetical Register for Church Members, Register of Official Members, of Baptisms, Marriages and Deaths, Register of Annual, Quarterly and Church Conferences, Tables for Church Collections, and an Annual Summary of the Yearly Work and Condition of the Church.

It is substantially bound in cloth, leather back ruled and combed, size about [illegible] inches over 200 pages, and no more can be had when this lot is disposed of. Original price $4. All in perfect order.

Address W. P. LAPLACE,

New Orleans.

Indian Turnip

COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle 50. Prepared and for sale by

W. P. LAPLACE, Druggist,

21 and 23 Elysian Fields street.

And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & CO. Augusta, Maine.

Agricultural.

WHAT IS A FRUIT?—We copy the following article from the London Gardeners' chronicle of recent date:

The above inquiry was suggested by a baked apple, and the same or a similar question often crops up with reference to schedules of flower shows. Is a cucumber a fruit or a vegetable? Is rhubarb a fruit or a vegetable? Of course we have our own ideas upon those points, and other people have theirs, and the result is a pretty wide difference of opinion, not unpleasing perhaps to those who contend for the use of English names and English words, but irritating to those who are trying to get at the truth, and prefer precision to vagueness. We turn to Webster's Dictionary, and there we find various interpretations of the word "fruit;" one is vague enough to please any one—"Whatever is produced for the enjoyment of man or animals by the processes of vegetable growth." It is clear that "branches, leaves, flowers, roots, tubers, seeds, perfumes, galls even, might be thus classed as fruit, even as the Irishmen call the noble tuber "the fruit at the root." But for gardening purposes, and still more for botanical purposes, a little more precision is necessary, else we might as well say that mother and child are identical, and that the nail on the great toe of Hercules is equivalent to Hercules himself. The dictionary is, however, equal to the occasion. If we do not like one meaning, we can try another. Here is one that will suit our purpose—"That part of plants which contains the seed." The dictionary at once goes on to spoil that definition by extending it and making it so vague that it ceases to be a definition at all; but we will stop at the "part of plants which contains the seed"—we will confine it to that, and not include anything outside the fruit, not being an integral part of it; nor will we include anything inside of it which is essentially a part of it. The fruit is that part of the plant which contains the seeds, and it is nothing else. The core of the baked apple is then, according to this, the true fruit, for that is the part that contains the pips, and the pips are the seeds. It is a cartilaginous five-lobed capsule, splitting along both edges. What oddities botanists are. They seem to reverse the natural order of things—they leave on their plates the fruit, and they eat something which they say is not the fruit! What is that something which they say is not the fruit? To answer this question to his own personal satisfaction—not, that is, to be dependent on dogma and "I say so" evidence, which is a kind of evidence eschewed in science except where no other can be had—the reader should see before him a flower of an apple or a pear in the earliest stages of its growth, and he should trace in other stages, from this earliest condition to the ripe state, the growth of the apple or of the pear. There are not many young gardeners who have skill and patience enough to do this thoroughly, and so they must perforce take something on trust. What in ordinary language is, then, only the swollen flower-stalk. Alchemillas and spiræas, peaches and cherries, are not to be had in flower just now; else a cut down through the centre of the flower of either of these would reveal the cup-like stalk encircling the young fruit in the centre, just as a pill is enclosed within a pill-box. Now, suppose the cup to be fleshy, and so thick as to come into contact with the fruit; and you would have exactly the condition of the apple. So, then, to say that the core of an apple is the true fruit, and the flesh thereof the dilated flower-stalk, is no dogma to be accepted as an article of faith, but it is a statement which any one with a pair of eyes, ordinarily nimble fingers, and a little patience, can, at the proper season, verify for himself. Another proof is afforded by the curious malformations, of which the Gardeners' Chronicle has from time to time published so many illustrations—cases wherein the stalk has asserted itself more or less successfully as a stalk and borne branches and leaves. Only the other day Mr. Burbidge sent us a note of a Bishop's Thumb pear, which produces pears of the ordinary character, together with others cylindrical and fleshy, but coreless—swollen stalks without any fruit at all.

What is the purpose of this swollen mass outside the fruit? Nowadays we seek for an intelligent purpose in everything; we believe that everything has been designed and created with a power of adapting itself to circumstances and of fulfilling its duties to itself and to other creatures. It is hard to think that a sour crab or a wild pear can be attractive; nevertheless there are some creatures, perhaps, to whom the acridity is not disagreeable, and who might be tempted by the glowing colors to prey even on the crab, and so liberate its seeds and secure the perpetuation of the species; or it may be that the sour juices, like the prickles of a thistle, serve to keep off intruders and unwelcome guests anxious to secure the toothsome seeds.

Whether or no, man has been sharp enough to avail himself of the wonderful power which the flower-stalk has of making itself agreeable, and by following out the same methods as nature herself—making use of work for him, as it were—he has been the means of setting in action the evolving forces which out of a crab or a wilding pear develop a Cornish Gillyflower or a Mario Louise. If he is to do more in this direction—and we can not doubt that he will—his chance of success lies largely in seeing things aright, calling things by their right names, and directing his efforts in the right direction.

So, after all, to be able to recognize the core of an apple as the fruit proper, and to see in the flesh of an apple a swollen flower-stalk, is not to indulge in a mere botanical technicality, as some might at first be inclined to suppose, but it affords a means of ascertaining a truth, and as such of opening up possibilities of future utility and development; for truth is never barren of result—the sterility lies with the man who does not avail himself of the truth so far as he can—deep thoughts to be evolved from the castaway core of an apple!

BUTTER-MAKING.—At a meeting of the Franklin County Institute Dr. E. L. Sturtevant, of Framingham, was the first speaker. He commenced with the axiom: Milk was the basis of butter-making. One parcel of milk, he said, would make butter while another would not; showing great difference in its characteristics. The quality of milk may be influenced by the feed given to the cows. He would treat these animals as butter cattle, stock cattle and store cattle, confining his remarks at present to the former. He raised four tons of corn stover to the acre, equal in feeding value to six-tenths the weight of good hay. Good butter can not be made from the milk of cows fed entirely on corn stover—in fact, milk is deteriorated to the extent of stover thus fed. Corn meal does not increase the flow of milk, only so far as its nutritive value extends. Cotton seed meal increases the flow of milk. Give a cow all the good hay she will eat and the addition of corn meal will not increase the flow of milk. A milk yielding eight per cent. of cream will often give more butter than one yielding sixty per cent. The constituents of milk can best be illustrated by the use of the microscope in comparing the clusters of butter globules therein contained. Through this test the Jerseys were proved emphatically to be the butter cows, the largest butter globules always producing the most and best butter. Where cream rises rapidly, leaving a blue skim-milk, then the cream is best. When skim milk looks of a whitish color, smallness of globules is indicated and an imperfect separation from the milk. The length of time consumed in churning is determined largely by the size of the butter globules; the largest specimens giving the quickest result in the churn. Any food that is acid is bad for butter-making. Feeding corn stover reduces the size of the butter globules, while corn meal tends to increase their size and hence is the best for butter. Shorts are the poorest feed known in butter-making, reducing the size of the globules. Cotton seed meal conveys a bad taste to butter, reducing the market value of the product. Linseed meal occasions no injury, while cotton seed does when fed to excess. Cob meal from Eastern corn is as valuable for feeding cows as Western corn meal, pound for pound.

E. P. Bowditch said: "Good feed is the basis of good butter; included in the former are good early-cut hay, rowen, carrots and corn meal. He grinds his Indian corn cobs with the corn, and considers it as good as Western corn meal, pound for pound. Cows should be kept scrupulously neat and clean—the same should apply to the stable. He is not in favor of barn cellars, because the odors from the manure permeate the hay, thus finally injuring the quality of butter. He practices deep setting with the milk, but is not particular about the method of setting provided other conditions are right, and the milk and cream removed from the deleterious effect of bad odors. Perfectly sweet cream will not make as good butter as cream which is allowed to ripen before churning. The lactic acid begins to form in sweet cream butter, soon making the butter rancid. Ripen the cream until it tastes a little acid."—New York Herald.

COTSWOLD SHEEP.—Cotswold Sheep were introduced to the special notice of American sheep breeders by the importations of Erastus Corning, and of Wm. H. Sotham, in the year 1840; and from the increase of these flocks, and many subsequent importations, they have become as well known as any of the improved breeds of sheep. The impetus given to the breeding of mutton sheep by Mr. Bakewell of Dishley, Leicestershire, through his wonderful improvement of the old Leicestershire sheep, and the establishment of the Dishley breed, as so far superior to all other long-wool sheep of England, that the rams were used upon long-wool flocks of all sections, had of course its effect upon the Cotswolds—the breed native to Gloucestershire and vicinity. The firmer and quicker fattening Dishley rams greatly improved these hardy, large-framed sheep, and judicious breeding, with heed to the important lessons which Mr. Bakewell taught, have confirmed and established the breed in such a number of points of superiority, that it is hardly too much to say that it now stands pre-eminent among the long-wool breeds.

The characteristics of the breed, when well developed, are a large size, with admirable form; bone enough to carry well a carcass weighing 200 to 250, and occasionally 300 pounds, or even more; early maturity (the lambs also attaining very soon a large size and fitness for market, due primarily to their hardiness, and secondarily, to the great abundance of milk yielded by the ewes); notable prolificacy of the ewes, and their excellent fleeces. In the matter of fleece there has been constant improvement, not only does it more completely cover the body, extending below the knees and the hocks, sometimes even to the feet, and almost all over the belly, but well over the poll. This feature is foolishly valued by breeders, and unshorn locks are left often hanging like a deformity over the eyes of favorite sheep. We must note also as characteristic of the breed, that the mutton is less tallowy, the fat more interlarded, and the flesh more marbled than that of less improved long-wool sheep.—American Agriculturist.

FRUIT TREES FOR ORNAMENTS.—Can anybody tell me why some of our best fruit trees should not be used as ornamental trees on the lawn? I mean any good and sufficient reason outside of the domain of prejudice and sentiment? For example, my friend, who is a gentleman of culture and refined taste, has bought a small place in the country, and wants fruits, flowers, vegetables, ornamental trees and shrubs and a small lawn; that is a real lawn and not a sham. Apples, pears, peaches, &c., he can not have in useful quantities unless they are used as accessories to the lawn. Then why may he not use them in this way for the purpose of ornamentation, not exclusively, but in combination with what are called ornamental trees? I have told him he may. Is it anything deeper than prejudice which prevents the judicious use of fruit trees on the lawn? I have so employed them several times where fruit could not otherwise be grown, and am by no means dissatisfied with the result. Pleasing effects can in this way be generally produced even on a limited scale. A peach, a cherry, a plum, &c., with double flowers, are ornamental trees; with single flowers they are not. But why? What can be more beautiful than an apple, a pear, or a peach tree in full bloom? Where a man has the choice of an orchard, that is the better place for his fruit trees, as he can cultivate them there as he can not on the lawn, and secure better fruit, but by top-dressing the lawn he can be pretty sure of fair crops of very good fruit. Therefore, I say that rather than be without fruit I would plant fruit trees on my lawn.—Rural New Yorker.

HOW TO WATER TREES.—Mr. Suel Foster writes: "When I see the distress of a tree suffering with drought, in the evening of the day I take the hoe or spade and remove the earth about the tree down to its upper roots, being very careful not to cut or bruise the bark of the roots; then turn in half or a full bucket of water. Do not replace the earth until the water has all soaked into the ground; be careful not to make a hole in the mud, for this is like ploughing land when the land is too wet. After this thorough watering a mulching is better than a second watering."

Household.

CARE OF MILK.—In discussing this question Mr. C. S. Kolbaum gives some very valuable suggestions to the indifferent and inexperienced dairymen of the grave results that come through their carelessness. He says manufacturers want the full and hearty co-operation of every dairyman in endeavoring to get the best possible results from their milk with the least percentage of loss. Good cows, well fed and well watered, will produce good milk. Well watered means plenty of good, healthy water from a running stream or good well. It is a notorious fact that poor water—or water from stagnant pools—is the cause of more taint in the milk in summer time than anything else. Salt, regularly given, adds to the quantity as well as the quality of milk. If it is possible, let the cows have access to plenty of shade during the hot days in summer, for many a can of milk is spoiled by a sluglo pailful drawn from a cow in an over-heated condition. Do not allow your men to beat them. They will give more and better milk for the kindness bestowed upon them. When your men come to milk insist that they clean the bag and teats with water, if they need it, and then dry them before milking, and don't allow them to drain the dirty mixture into the pail. Look to it that every pail, every strainer, every can, is washed in cold water first and then most thoroughly with hot water, drained and allowed to get the sun's rays upon them, if possible, for there is no purifier like good pure air and a bright sun. Every dairy farmer should be provided with a good milk house, situated at a good distance from the cow stable, so that it may be free from the disagreeable odors that milk is always sure to absorb if left all night in the cow stable. If you have not running water in the milk house, provide yourself with a good wind-mill pump. As soon as the milk is drawn, carry it at once to the milk house. Have the water about the cans changed several times, and the milk stirred to prevent cream rising, until it is cooled to about sixty degrees for the night's milk and sixty-five for the morning's. During all this time be sure and leave the can covers off, to allow the animal heat to escape. Do not mix your morning's and night's milk, but place them in separate cans, even if you have only a can altogether. Carry to the factory as soon after milking as it is cooled to a proper temperature, using, if possible, a spring wagon, to prevent too great churning on rough roads. Always cover your cans with a blanket to protect the milk from the sun in summer and from the cold in winter.—American Dairyman.

WATER OF AMMONIA, OR SPIRITS OF HARTSHORN.—A few months ago we suggested that house-keepers should keep a bottle of Lime-Water at hand, and mentioned some of its uses. Another alkaline solution, the Water of Ammonia, is also of great utility in the household. This is a solution of the gas Ammonia in water. Ammonia is formed when animal matters are distilled in a certain manner; the early chemists produced it from the horns of the deer or hart, and as they regarded everything that was distilled as a "spirit," they called this Spirits of Hartshorn. The gas, Ammonia, is invisible, but we can readily recognize it by its strong and pungent odor. One of its peculiarities is, the readiness with which it dissolves in water. At ordinary temperatures water will dissolve over 600 times its own bulk of the gas. The liquid sold by the druggists as Spirits of Hartshorn, is merely a solution of this gas in water, hence the more accurate name for it is Water of Ammonia. Two kinds are kept in the shops, one three times as strong as the other. If simply Water of Ammonia is asked for, the weaker kind is given; to procure the other the "strong" must be designated. To keep it, the bottle must be closed by a well fitting glass stopper which is waxed, or by a rubber one, as it soon destroys a cork. When applied to the skin, Ammonia is a powerful stimulant, and the strong solution will blister very promptly. It is usually applied externally in the form of a liniment. If one part of ordinary Water of Ammonia be mixed with two parts of Olive Oil, they form a liquid soap which is known as Volatile Liniment, and used wherever the stimulant action of Ammonia is needed, especially in the sore throats of children.—American Agriculturist.

MINCE MEAT.—Mince, very finely, some beef suet, and of this take one and one-half pounds; pick some currants, stone and chop finely some Malaga raisins, and take one and one-half pounds of each. Peel and core a quantity of apples, and weigh out one and one-half pounds of these, mince them also finely, and mix these four ingredients in a basin, adding to them one pound of moist sugar, one-half pound of mixed orange, citron, and lemon candied peel, also finely minced. Squeeze the juice of a lemon in the mixture, and, lastly, put in half the thin rind of it, chopped as finely as possible. Work the mixture with a spoon for a little time; put a half a teaspoonful of salt into half a tumblerful of brandy, with powdered spice and ginger, according to taste; add this to the mince, work it a little more to get it well mixed, and put it by in a covered jar. It should remain seven or eight days before being used and it will keep for several weeks.

DIPHTHERIA.—To us it appears that fresh air is the first necessity; we should allow a diptherial patient to be near an open window. Next, we should use hot malt vinegar for flannel wraps round the throat, gargles of the same diluted with water, and the most tonic diet possible. Neither quinine nor mineral tonics, but hot, strong wines, yolks of eggs beaten up in strong beef tea; warm baths made of chamomile flowers; feet placed in mustard and water, and flannel wraps soaked in the vinegar around the stomach. The juice pressed from raw beef, heated in a farina boiler and given constantly, but, above all, hot red wine. Inhalations of the fumes of vinegar with open mouth and pencilings of the same within the mouth. The use of lemons is also to be recommended. Diphtheria is a preventable disease, and when we know more of the conditions under which the health of human life can exist and are inclined to listen to it and act according to it we shall have fewer epidemics such as those of diphtheria.—Food and Health.

Clean oilcloth with milk and water; a brush and soap will ruin them.

Tumblers that have had milk in them should never be put in hot water.

TO MAKE TEPID WATER.—Tepid water is produced by combining two-thirds cold and one-third boiling water.

Educational.

—According to the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1879, in that year there were in the United States 361 colleges and high schools, with 4,241 instructors and 69,011 students; 81 scientific schools, with 10,619 pupils; 1,136 academies, with 5,961 instructors and 108,731 students; 207 normal schools, with 40,029 pupils; 195 kindergartens, with 7,551 pupils; 49 law schools, with 3,019 students; 111 medical schools, with 13,321 students; 53 deaf and dumb asylums, with 6,391 pupils; 30 blind asylums, with 2,213 pupils; 67 reform schools, with 14,216 pupils; 111 orphan asylums, containing 750,000 orphans. The public schools had 272,686 teachers and children enrolled 9,414,086. The permanent public school fund in the states and territories was $113,009,000, and the annual expenditure in sustaining the schools $82,767,815.

—In both France and England the study of Greek and Latin inscriptions has been taken up as a part of classical education. The French are in advance, for they are taking measures for working into the regular school course visits of inspection to the inscriptions preserved in the museums of Paris and other cities. A distinguished scholar, M. Egger, has proposed that the examples of grammatical rules in elementary Greek and Latin books should be taken to some extent from inscriptions, which furnish abundant models of the language of the best periods in simple and idiomatic forms.

—The only condition for entrance to any course of study at Adrian College, situated at Adrian, Mich., is that the applicant shall be thoroughly conversant with the studies logically essential for success in the study desired. Twenty-two hundred hours of class-work in collegiate branches are required for the bachelor's degree. Of this work, a stated amount must be performed in the department leading to the degree desired. For instance, the classical degree requires nine hundred hours in Latin and Greek, and the remaining work may be distributed in the other departments according to the individual necessities or purposes of the student.

—The minister of public instruction of Prussia has decreed that henceforth female teachers can not be definitely appointed for any position in the public schools until they have served from two to five years as provisional teachers. This shows that the government is opposed to the increase of female teachers. Several provincial and local authorities no longer appoint any female teachers, since they claim that most of them look upon their profession as a mere stepping-stone to something better.

—The total number of students in regular attendance at Oberlin College, Oberlin, O., is, according to the latest catalogue of that institution, 1325, of which number 809 are residents of Ohio. The department of theology contains 41; of philosophy and arts, 390; of preparatory instruction, 540; and the conservatory of music, 371. The total number is pretty equally divided between the sexes, there being 641 males and 684 females. The corps of instruction numbers forty, under the presidency of the Rev. James H. Fairchild.

—The present total value of the property of the University of Vermont is $285,000 and its yearly income is $21,000. During the past year it has received gifts amounting to $100,000. It now has seventy-four students in the academic department, eight of whom are ladies. An additional course has lately been arranged; one resembling the regular academic course in all except the omission of Greek and the substitution of scientific studies.

—The Princeton Theological Seminary (Presbyterian) has a total attendance this year of 126 students, seven of the number pursuing post-graduate courses in theology. All but seven of the total number are college graduates, 39 colleges and universities being represented. Princeton College naturally leads, with 30 graduates, followed by Lafayette, with 14. The faculty numbers nine, exclusive of the Stone lecturer, President Bartlett, of Dartmouth College.

—The Dutch Association for the Advancement of Useful Knowledge has resolved to establish schools of domestic economy in different parts of the Netherlands. The first school of this kind will be opened at Franeker, where the local authorities have offered suitable buildings and an annual subsidy. Poor pupils will be admitted free of charge, while those able to pay will have to contribute to the income of the school.

—The Harvard "Annex" for women has enjoyed a second successful year. Forty-seven ladies have attended the classes, and have shown themselves eager, devoted, and thoroughly well-conducted students. Sixteen of them were students of last year. The tendency, it is reported, has been toward science. All the courses in Greek have been taken. The managers intend to continue their experiment at least two years longer, perhaps four years.

—The colleges share considerably in the prosperous times. The Wesleyan University endowment fund, now $600,000, promises speedily to reach a round $1,000,000, as all but $5,000 is promised of the $100,000 which was to be raised to secure Mr. Soney's last promise of $100,000; and Mr. Soney now promises another $100,000 if an equal sum is secured.

—It is proposed in Switzerland to pass a Federal School Law for the government of the schools which are at present under the control of the separate cantons. One section of this law provides that every youth, after leaving the primary school, shall spend at least two hours every week in a night school.

—The late Stephen Whitney Phœnix bequeathed nearly $1,000,000 to Columbia College, New York City, part of it available at once and the rest on the death of his brother and sisters. It is to be applied chiefly to the purchase of scientific apparatus and books.

—Amherst has now 311 students, the freshman class numbering ninety-six members. Sanskrit is offered as a senior elective for the second and third terms of the year. The instructor is Mr. Elwell, formerly a pupil of Prof. W. D. Whitney.

—The University of Wisconsin, at Madison, Wis., has an attendance of 401 students. The faculty numbers 39, under the presidency of John Bascom, D.D., LL.D. Fifty of the total students are studying a course of law.

—An endeavor to abolish the teaching of Spanish in the San Francisco evening schools has just failed. The language is found to be too useful to business in that region to be given up.

EDUCATIONAL.

East Mississippi Female College.

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.

One of the most accessible and prosperous schools in the South. Its facilities, course of study, system and faculty are superior. It is a growing and popular institution under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"It has developed into great usefulness, and has established itself in the hearts and confidence of the people."—Mississippi Conference.

"The college is finely located to command a large patronage, and its management has been such as to secure the confidence of the people. It is an institution that deserves the liberal support and patronage of the Methodists of Mississippi."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Send for catalogue and examine terms.

Whitworth Female College,

BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.

Will re-open September 21, 1881. Number of pupils last term, 291. Number of teachers 18. Board per half academic year, $60; Tuition from $15 to $25; Incidental Fees from $1 to $4.

The languages, ancient and modern, mathematics, the sciences, music, drawing and painting thoroughly taught.

The continued success of this school is its best indorsement. There has not been a death in the college for years past. Send for a catalogue.

H. F. JOHNSON, A. M., D. D., President.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Session 1881-82.

THE Academic, Biblical and Law Departments open September 1. The Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Departments open October 1.

The fees are as follows: Academic Department, $65; Biblical, $15; Law, $100; Medical, $65; Dental, $90; Pharmaceutical, $65.

Ten scholarships, worth $100 each, were awarded to meritorious students at the close of the last session. Four Graduate Fellowships, worth $300 each, and two Post-graduate Fellowships, worth $500, each, were likewise conferred.

The various Chairs of the University are filled by forty Professors and Instructors. Six hundred and thirty-two students, from twenty-one States, were matriculated last year.

For the ANNUAL REGISTER, or further information, address J. M. Leech, Secretary of the Faculty, or L. C. GARLAND, Chancellor.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kuehnger, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

The Fall Session will begin September 15, 1881.

Send for catalogue to

REV. E. E. WILEY, D. D., President.

Millwood Female Institute,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Founded 1866. Chartered 1870.

This school opens the first Monday of September 1881, with efficient accomplished teachers in every department.

Expenses, per session of five months, including Tuition, Board and Washing, $75.

Music on Piano or Guitar, with use of instrument and class singing, $25.

For further particulars send for catalogue.

MISS McCALMONT, Principal.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin October 5, 1881.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Principal.

J. B. MAGRUDER A. M. Assistant.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Session 1880-81 had 133 students, six professors and teachers and three A. B. graduates. The entire expenses for board and tuition for scholastic year need not exceed $144 in Preparatory department, nor $164 in College classes. Next session begins September 5, 1881. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,

HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

The thirty-second year begins August 31. A more healthy location can not be found. The College was never in a more prosperous condition. A full Faculty of thorough teachers, splendid buildings and a complete outfit for all departments, literary, music, languages and art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Prices reduced to suit the times. Special inducements offered. For terms and new catalogues address

REV. A. B. JONES, A. M., President.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy,

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Next session opens September 21, 1881. The services of experienced and successful teachers secured. Buildings undergoing necessary repairs. Every room being thoroughly renovated, and newly and handsomely furnished. No pains will be spared to give entire satisfaction. For further information address, Rev. T. C. BRADFORD, President.

Port Gibson, Miss.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

Will open on the first Monday in October. For terms and circulars, address,

MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,

GREENSBORO, ALA.

The next session will open on the first Wednesday in October next, with a full corps of able, experienced Instructors. Course of study extensive and thorough. Expenses moderate. $175, in advance, will pay Board and Tuition in University classes for the entire scholastic year. $135-$155 in Preparatory Department. Health record almost unrivaled. Situated fifty miles from Selma, on the Selma and Greensboro railroad. For catalogue and further information, address

REV. J. LEWIS, D. D., Chancellor.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE

Female College,

TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The next session of this school will open on Monday, September 19, 1881. We ask attention to the following points:

I. Our curriculum embraces a good course of study which we teach thoroughly.

II. We are prepared to satisfy the most cultivated taste in the departments of Music and Art.

III. We employ the best teaching talent within the range of our knowledge.

IV. We keep a good table in the College Boarding Department.

V. This school has a health record which is unsurpassed.

VI. Our charges are as moderate as they can be made without marring the best results in culture.

For full information, send for catalogue.

JOHN MASSEY, President.

Tuskegee, Ala.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded in 1849, offers superior advantages and Healthy retreat.

The MALE DEPARTMENT is located in a quiet farming community, seven miles from Sweetwater East Tenn., Va. and Ga. R. R.

The FEMALE DEPARTMENT is located in the model town of Sweetwater, in a lovely section.

Experienced teachers, good work and low charges in both departments. Patronage merited.

For particulars address

REV. J. H. BRUNNER, D. D., Hiwassee College, Tenn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

in the South-west is now in stock and ready to all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at sho notice, and prices guaranteed as low as they can b had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application. Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

Send for anything you want or address for prices,

G. T. LATHROP,

New Orleans.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. O. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

NEW GOODS.

GREAT REDUCTION IN

CARPETS,

Tapestry Brussels,

Seventy Cents a yard up to $1 05.

Willtons, Axminsters, Velvets, Moquettes, Brussels, Ingrains, Three Plys. Window Shades, Lace Curtains, Cocoa, Napier and China Matting, Turkish Rugs, Crumb Cloths, Rugs and Mats in great variety.

A. BROUSSEAU'S SON,

17 Chartres St.

Call and see for yourself.

S. K. RUSS,

—WITH—

Ayers, Richard & Co.,

WHOLESALE GROCERS

—AND—

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

74, 76 Magazine, 88, 90, 92 Poydras St.

NEW ORLEANS.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,

P. O. Box, 598, New York.

Christian Advocate.

The Old Barrel.

A MINISTER'S SOLILOQUY.

The barrel is a metaphor. Ministers never write their sermons on circular paper. A sermon always has angles to it, if it is good for anything. It would not be economical to pack them in barrels; it would leave too many chinks. But here they are in a dry-goods box, fifteen hundred of them, all ready for the paper-mill. Pretty heavy it is it seems to me when I lift it as though it were as heavy as lead. Ah me! how much hot lead I have poured into people's ears! But now these old sermons are hard and cold. It would take a hot fire to warm some of them again, so that they might run and have free course and be glorified.

I suppose I ought not to handle them much; for the man will be here soon, and it is almost time to nail down the cover. That sermon on "Revelation" is just as likely to be torn to pieces first as the sermon on "Genesis;" "and "Job's Patience (No. 68)," and "Joseph's Goodness (18)," "The Dry Bones (221)," and "The Thorn in the Flesh (1,279)," are all likely to go to the bath together. Somehow it seems to me that they ought to be worth more than two cents a pound. But paper mills are not sentimental and thoughtful, and the ink on the page only lessens its value. I think I would burn them up rather than send them to the mill, if I did not have a satisfaction in feeling that the many sheets I have spoiled can be made white again. Quod scripsi, scripsi. Would that the only blots and blunders that I have made were those on the pages of these sermons!

As I look into this box, it seems as if I was looking into a soul-glass which mirrored my moral and intellectual features. I can see my own soul in this box of sermons. I have poured it out for forty years. Thank heaven it is not all in this box, and cannot be sent to any mill. But what burrowed memories these old sermons awaken! What a record they contain of the history of a human mind and heart! The mind is small, but the heart large. Perhaps if there were mere intellect in them it would not be necessary to send to the paper-mill. And yet all that seems valuable to me in them now is the heart that beats in some of them still, and which makes me feel as if I were going to bury them before they were quite dead.

I wonder if the idle words they contain are all taken down in heaven. I should be sorry to feel that any angel scribe had recorded them all in full. For some of them I don't want to see again. And yet if I could send to the judgment seat a transcript of my soul to be used as documentary evidence in a great trial, I should like to send these sermons. But as they are in form and style of expression, their dry leaves are redolent of the best thought I ever had. They are stained with no impurity, embittered with no rancor, soiled with no earthly passions, marred by no dishonesty. Here are no dregs of brain or heart. I put conscience into them. The holiest aspirations, the most exalted ideas of virtue, the gladdest hope, the warmest love, the most sublime thought of God, the greatest charity for man, the sincerest devotion to truth, and the profoundest faith that I could cherish have all been poured into these sermons. Whatever else I was out of the pulpit, however faulty and imperfect my life, I was pure in heart and devout in spirit when I wrote these sermons. To these the best energies of my heart and soul were consentrated.

The old thrill comes back again as I look over some of these pages. They be nothing but cinders and ashes for every one o'say; but in the embers there are still some live sparks for me, which set my soul aflame. My heart always had a good deal of tinder in it and the experiences of life furnished the flint. Some of them are so old and so perfunctory, or so alien to my usual mood, that I never can remember where they came from; and others are so commonplace I wonder they ever came at all. But how can I ever forget the joy and agony of soul in which some of them were born? Like a stream of molten fire they flowed from my pen. The thought breathed and the words burned, and the paper seemed to scorch as I wrote upon it. These were the sermons that burned in the pulpit. The congregation caught the fire. It is a joy to think that some of the lives, they kindled shone brighter and brighter in the perfect day. It is easy to pick these sermons from the pile. They are bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh, my blood flows their arteries; but the spirit that speaks in them seems not my voice, but the very breath of God. And yet I never felt so humble as when I had delivered one of these sermons. Precious legacies of long ministry, shall I send you the rest? But why keep them now? Their work, like mine, is done. It is a comforting thought that the mill cannot destroy their influence. These words have been transmitted into life and character. Why should I keep the page on which they are written? Let them go.

Is it a little morbid to linger so long over this old box? It is not the exultation of vanity nor the sad brooding of regret, but a little self indulgent contemplation of the monuments—or shall I call them the wrecks?—of years. Fifteen hundred weeks of my life packed into that box? I can almost live them over in an hour. What is the fruit? Hollingsworth will say as he puts them on the scale, "Nothing but leaves." But leaves have their use, for the healing of the nations. Here and there in orderly pile I think I find a little balsam. There is No. 542, "Oil for the Wounded Spirit," and 763, "Blessed are They that Mourn." Shall I ever forget the sweet and humble satisfaction that came to me with the assurance that the waves of sorrow in a troubled soul had been stilled by words of mine? Joy enough for any heart to be called and inspired as a messenger of the Holy Ghost. And there, too, is that old sermon on "The Ways of Providence." How many miles we have traveled together? What a medley of towns and dates on the last page! Let me see—fifty-one times! And the secret of it all was that Deacon White said to me, "Parson, when you exchange, preach that sermon." And so I put it on wheels, I think five thousand people must have heard it; but it would have been hard work for me to get them together all at once. But here is another, with only one entry on the back. It wasn't worth preaching twice, nor once for that matter. Oh, the distressing sense of shame and failure! Who can ever forget it! It takes the light from the eye, the color from the cheek, the marrow from the bones. That sermon almost cost me a spell of sickness; but now I shall have my revenge.

How patient and long suffering are congregations, and how uncertain, too, is their response! I spent weeks and almost months on this discourse on "The a posteriori argument for the being and attributes of God," and half the people went to sleep when I gave it. And there is that superficial sermon on "Mary and Martha," which I dashed off at a sitting, and people said 'twas grand. Pretty hard it is to tell sometimes what diet a congregation will digest best.

Well, I've nearly reached the bottom of the box. There are two or three that I preached in the seminary. I have had grace given to me never to preach them anywhere else. And there is No. 1, the head of the list, not so bad as it might have been; and here is 1,597, the last of the list, not so good as it ought to have been, Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, the begining and the end.

Pure, sweet and soul thrilling memories, let them rise. The old church bell is ringing in my ear. I can see the people crossing the village green. I am standing once more in the old pulpit. Before me are the saintly forms of those I loved. Soft, sweet harmonies from the organ float upon the air. We raise our hymn of praise. We lift our hearts in prayer. Together we read the Word. Once more I feel the indescribable joy of him whose heart is fired with the Holy Ghost, who preaches with authority and not as the scribes. Then my speech and my preaching were not with the enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power; that their faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

It is worth all the pain and toil and self-denial to have this alluring recollection, and with it surges in the memory of happy homes, perfumed with the sanctities of affection, where I was ever welcome; hours spent in delightful converse at the social board; and the unfailing remembrance, too, of the patient sufferers languishing on their beds of pain, and yet illustrating the sweetness and sublimity of the Christian faith. I always brought away more than I carried. How often I have held their hands as they entered the vale and crossed the narrow stream, when it seemed to me as if the very windows of heaven were opened and the glory of God shone on the transfigured face!

Was it the door bell? Did you say he had come? I meant to be ready, but I dropped into reverie. It is soon done. Put on the cover. Another nail, if you please. It seems like nailing down my own coffin; as if I were a pall-bearer at my own funeral. There it is. All ready. "Take them up gently, lift them with care." Stop! Let me write the epitaph:

My words shall pass away, but the word of the Lord shall endure forever.
—The Advance.

The States.

The Hon. Hamilton B. Staples read a paper at the annual meeting of the American Antiquarian Society in Worchester, in which he discusses the origin of the names of several of the States. His conclusions were as follows:—New Hampshire gets its name from Hampshire, England. Massachusetts is derived from an Indian name, first given to the bay, signifying "near the great hills." Rhode Island has an obscure origin, the Island of Rhodes, the "Island of the Roads," and a Dutch origin, "Red Island," were mentioned, the first one seeming to have the best historical support. Connetlcut is an Indian name, signifying "land on a long tidal river." New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland, were passed over. Virginia, the Carolinas and Georgia have a royal origin. Maine was named from the fact that it was supposed to contain the "mayne portion" of New England. Vermont has no especial question, except that it is claimed to have first been an alias—New Connecticut, alias Vermont. Kentucky popularly signifies either a "dark and bloody ground," or a "bloody river," but its origin signifies "the head of a river," or "the long river." Tennessee comes from its river, the name being derived from the name of an Indian village on the river—"Tanasee." Ohio is named after an Indian name, signifying "something great," with an accent of admiration. Indiana comes from the name of an early land company. Illinois comes from the Indian—the name of a tribe. Michigan is claimed to mean "lake country;" it probably came from the name of the lake, "Great Lake," which bore this name before the land adjacent was named. Louisiana is from the French, Arkansas and Missouri are Indian—the former being doubtful, the latter is called to mean in its original "muddy water," which describes the river. Iowa is also Indian, with doubtful meaning. Texas is popularly supposed to be Indian, but may be Spanish. Florida is Spanish, "a flowery land." Oregon has a conjectural origin. It is probably Indian, but a spanish origin is claimed. California comes from a spanish romance of 1510. Nevada takes its name from the mountains who get theirs from a resemblance to the Nevadas of South America. Minnesota is Indian, "sky-tinted waters." Nebraska is variously rendered "shallow water" and "flat country." Kansas is from an Indian root, Kaw, corrupted by the French. Mississippi is "great water," or "whole river." Alabama is Indian, the name of a fortress and a tribe, signifying, as is claimed, "here we rest."—Philadelphia Ledger.

HOW THE RUSSIANS KEEP WARM.—The Russians have a great knack of making their winter pleasant. You feel nothing of the cold in those tightly-built houses where all doors and windows are double, and were all the rooms are kept warm by big stoves hidden in the walls. There is no damp in a Russian house, and the inmates may dress indoors in the lightest of garbs, which contrast oddly with the mass of furs and wraps which they don when going out.

A Russian can afford to run no risk of exposure when he leaves the house for a walk or drive. He covers his head and ears with a fur bonnet, his feet and legs with felt boots lined with wool or fur, which are drawn over the ordinary boots and trousers, and reach up to the knees. He next cloaks himself in a top-coat with fur collar, lining, and cuffs. He buries his hands in a pair of fingerless gloves of seal or bear skin. Thus equipped, with the collar of his coat raised all around, so that it muffles him up to the eyes, the Russian exposes only his nose to the cold air, and he takes care frequently to give that organ a little rub to keep the circulation going. A stranger who is apt to forget the precaution would often get his nose frozen, if it were not for the courtesy of the Russians, who will always warn him if they see his nose "whimping," and will, nobbidden, help him to chafe it vigorously with snow.

In Russian cities walking is just possible for men during the winter, but hardly so for ladies. The women of the lower order wear knee-boots; those of the shop-keeping class seldom venture out at all; those of the aristocracy go out in sleighs.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. S. PFISTER,

Millinery and Dressmaking,

539 Magazine Street,

Bet. St. Mary and Felicity. NEW ORLEANS.

Bonnets and Hats Cleaned, Dyed and Altered.

E. E. LELAND,

No. 185 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

IMPORTED

MILLINERY

French Flowers and Feathers,

ORNAMENTS

Fringes and Tassels, Dress Trimmings, Novelties in Buttons, Ribbons, Corsets, Novelties in Ladies' Neckwear, Veilings and Crapes, Velvets, Lace Goods, Etc., Etc., Etc.

Special attention paid to Country Orders.

CRESCENT INSURANCE COMPANY,

Incorporated as a Mutual Company in 1849—Re-organized as a Stock Company in 1880.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - - $100,000.

Has paid nearly NINE MILLIONS for losses Since 1849.

Annual and Term Policies Issued on Desirable Fire Business.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.
CHAS. H. DOLSEN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

TRUSTEES:

Sam'l H. Kennedy,	Paul E. Mortimer,
Victor Mayer,	Joseph Bowling,
W. B. Conger,	S. Hernsheim,
George W. Sentell,	Ed. J. Gay,
Alf. Moulton,	Edwd. Nalle,
Charles Newman,	J. J. Reiss,
C. Marinoni,	Louis Prados,
Lucien Delery,	W. W. Swain,
Charles H. Dolsen,	Harry L. Flash,
Reuben G. Bush,	John Brunnao,
John Calder,	A. H. Steward,
S. C. Coulon,	R. H. Adams,
W. A. Phelps,	Sigmund Katz,
M. Gillis,	N. D. Wallace,

W. R. Lyman.

See our Agents throughout Louisiana Texas, Mississippi and Arkansas.

Factors' and Traders'

INSURANCE COMPANY.

49 CARONDELET STREET,

Paid Up Capital .....$1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President.
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President.
THOS. F. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

TRUSTEES:

John I. Noble,	John Chaffe,
Richard Milliken,	Sam'l Friedlander,
R. M. Walmsley,	A. H. May,
T. Lyle Lyon,	Samuel H. Boyd,
Wm. J. Behan,	B. F. Eshleman,
Chas. Chaffe,	L. C. Jurey,
Wm. Hartwell,	C. J. Leeds,
A. T. Jaulin,	A. M. Bickham,
Henry Abraham,	Louis Bush,
A. Brittin,	G. W. Scotell,
Wm. Cunningham,	John I. Adams,
R. T. Buckner,	Wm. A. Gwyn;

Chas. E. Black.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S

MAMMOTH

QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 160 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD-BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5.50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF

CROCKERY

Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods

OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS

JOHN GAUCHE,

AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,

103, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,

Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

H-O-W T-O P-A-I-N-T.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, zinc, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures.

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations whenever they can serve to make the subject plainer and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BROWN'S

IRON

TRADE PURITY MARK

BITTERS

A TRUE TONIC.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS are a certain cure for all diseases requiring a complete tonic; especially Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Intermittent Fevers, Want of Appetite, Loss of Strength, Lack of Energy, etc. Enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. Acts like a charm on the digestive organs, removing all dyspeptic symptoms, such as tasting the food, Belching, Heat in the Stomach, Heartburn, etc. The only Iron Preparation that will not blacken the teeth or give headache. Sold by all Druggists at $1.00 a bottle.

BROWN CHEMICAL CO.
Baltimore, Md.

See that our Trade Mark and Signature are on the wrapper of Brown Chemical Co.'s Iron Bitters. Take no other.

TESTIMONIALS.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.

SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Wgt with yoke & frame	Cost o Bell & Hang's.
No. 6,	251n....230 lbs....	$ 25 00
No. 6½,	271n....240 lbs....	36 00
No. 7,	30in....490 lbs....	50 00
No. 8,	34in....730 lbs....	75 00
No. 9,	38in....925 lbs....	130 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

H. D. McCOWN,

DEALER IN FINE

CLOTHING,

SHIRTS

AND

Mens' Furnishing Goods,

Cor. Common and St. Charles Sts.

NEW ORLEANS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S

—MANUAL—

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, Jr.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, even that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is also hotly aggressive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

NEW HOME!

SEWING MACHINE

Is More Perfect, Costlier to Make, More Durable, and made of Finer Material than any other Machine, and

SOLD FOR LESS MONEY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: If you do not wish to buy the New Home, I advise you to wait until other machine companies make a machine equal to it.

HEADQUARTERS, 170 CANAL ST.,

GUSTAV SEEGER,

Sole Agent.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ORDERS

—FOR—

Fresh, First-Class Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Etc.,

—SENT TO—

E. H. ADAMS & BROTHER,

WILL RECEIVE THE

PROMPTEST AND MOST CAREFUL ATTENTION.

AS THEY DO NOT DEAL IN

"Damaged Goods," "Auction Goods," or "Job Lots,"

THEIR PATRONS ARE SURE TO GET GOOD VALUE.

No. 594 Magazine Street, New Orleans.

D. H. HOLMES,

155 Canal Street, - - - - 15 Bourbon Street.

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in

Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.

HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.

D. H. HOLMES,

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE. 155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,

(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,

Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to $26

6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.

U. S. BONDS.

Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.

Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

58 CAMP STREET.

JAMES COBBS,

Attorney at Law,

46 ST. FRANCIS STREET,

MOBILE, ALA.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,

112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

I have decided to distribute the remainder of

My Stock of Pictures

among my customers, rather than sacrifice them. Any person buying $5 and upwards of other goods, will be entitled to select from a class of Pictures ranging in price according to the size of bill purchased. No additional price will be put upon the goods, as this is entirely a bonus to induce sales during the dull summer months.

My stock is comprised in part of Carpets, Oil Cloths, Upholstery Goods, Mattings, Wall Paper, Window Shades Cornices, Curtain Goods, Wire Screens, Frames, Mouldings and Mirrors.

E. HEATH,

97 and 99 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The Shortest and Quickest Route to all Eastern Cities.

THROUGH WITHOUT CHANGE TO

Nashville, Louisville, Lynchburg, Washington, Cincinnati, Columbus, O., and St. Louis.

ENTIRE TRAINS THROUGH FROM NEW ORLEANS TO LOUISVILLE.

	Leave.	Arrive.
Express	7.02 A. M.	10.02 P. M
Cont'l Accommodation	5.32 P. M.	9.12 A. M
Fast Mail	5.00 P. M.	10.02 A. M

ONLY ONE CHANGE OF CARS TO NORTHERN AND EASTERN CITIES.

Ticket office corner I. Charles and Common sts. where Sleeping Car accommodations can be secured.

C. P. ATMORE,
General Passenger Agent.
J. H. SMITH,
Ticket Agent.
J. T. HARAHAN,
Superintendent.

FURNITURE.

W. G. TEBAULT.

47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. G. TEBAULT,

47 Royal Street,

" New Orleans.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!

Personal experiences in the

UNITED STATES and

CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES,

By J. B. HOOD

Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army.

Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.

Price in cloth binding, $3; in leather, $3.60.

Mailed, post paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street.

Liverpool and London and Globe

INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT.

Office, Cor. Carondelet and Gravier Streets.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

STATEMENT OF THE COMPANY.

JANUARY 1, 1881.

Gross fire assets	$12,167,538 44
Fire liabilities, including paid up capital	5 875,957 54
Net surplus	$ 6,201,580 90

STATEMENT OF THE U. S. BRANCH.

JULY 1, 1881.

Assets	$4,692,248 18
Liabilities	2,650,166 52
Surplus	$2,042,081 66

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:

J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of L. Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson & Simpson.

HENRY V. OGDEN,
Resident Secretary.

JULES P. ROUX, Assistant Resident Secretary.
CLARENCE F LOW, Deputy Ass't Resident Sec'y.

New Orleans, October 20, 1881. 1myeow

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward.
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $15 and upward.
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.
ROY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.

All guaranteed.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

New Orleans Pacific Railroad.

TRAINS WEST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
New Orleans, leave		8.00 A. M.
Algiers "	7.00 A. M.	8.20
Florida "	7.15	8.27
Company Canal "	7.40	8.40
St. Charles "	10.28	9.36
St. John "	11.45	10.06
Vacherie "	1.00 P. M.	10.37
St. James "	1.45	10.56
Donaldsonville "	2.50	11.35
Bayou Goula "	4 13	12 21 P. M.
Plaquemine "	5.34	12.46
West Baton Rouge, arrive	7.00	1.30

TRAINS EAST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
West Baton Rouge, leave	7.00 A. M.	2.30 P. M.
Plaquemine "	8.27	3.14
Bayou Goula "	9.44	3.27
Donaldsonville "	10.41	4.20
St. James "	12.10 M.	4.59
Vacherie "	1.05 P. M.	5.17
St. John "	2.10	5.37
St. Charles "	3.13	6.17
Company Canal "	3.42	7.11
Gretna "	6.32	7.26
Algiers "	6.45	7.35
New Orleans, arrive		8.00

For rates and information address

H. S. MORSE, Superintendent. M. D. SELEMAN, G. P. and T. Agt.

New Orleans, October 15, 1881.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.

By A. J. COOK,

Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.

THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being new it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SULLIVAN & BULGER,

97 CAMP STREET,

Plumbers and Gas Fitters,

DEALERS IN

Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all kinds, Iron, Lead and Terra-cotta Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cocking Tampes, also, different kinds of Lift Machines, for country use.

All Orders Promptly Attended to.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. JONES & Co. Nassau, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 1000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, Jan. 30, 1882.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Sat.
Cotton. ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	8¾	8¾
Ordinary	9⅜	9⅜
Good ordinary	10⅝	10⅝
Low middling	10¾	11⅛
Middling	11⅜	11⅜
Good middling	12	12
Middling fair	12¾	12¾
Sales to-day	2,400 bales.
Receipts since our last	7,162 bales.
Receipts previously	967,114 bales.
Sugar. ₱ lb.:
Fair	60	6⅛
Fully fair	—	—
Prime	—	6⅝
Choice	7⅛	7⅛
Yellow clarified	8⅜	8⅜
White clarified	9⅜	9
Powdered	—	—
Crushed	—	—
Molasses. ₱ bbl. ₱ gallon:
Common	35	40
Fair	42	45
Prime	50	52
Choice	—	—
Rice. Louisiana ₱ lb.:
Common	4	5
Fair	5¾	6
Prime	6⅜	6⅝
Choice	7	7

GROCERIES.

Butter. ₱ lb.:
Western	41	41
New York	—	—
Coffee. ₱ lb.:
Rio ordinary	8¾	8¾
Rio fair	9¾	9¾
Rio prime	10¾	11
Cheese. ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	17
Candles. ₱ lb.:
Best Grades	11⅜	11⅜
Corn Meal. ₱ bbl.:
Choice	4 60	4 75
Flour. ₱ bbl.:
Superfine	5 00	5 25
XX	5 50	5 75
XXX	6 25	6 50
Choice	—	—
Combo	—	—
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1 (in kits)	3 50	3 00
Half bbls	4 50	5 00
Kits	77	82
Mackerel, No. 2	3 00	3 00
Half bbls	4 00	4 50
Kits	70	77
Mackerel, No. 3 (in kits)	2 00	2 25
Half bbls	3 50	4 00
Kits	61	70
Codfish, ₱ lb.	—	—
Herring, ₱ box	—	—
Oils. ₱ gallon:
Coal, 45 degrees	—	—
Cook oil (bbls)	—	—
Linseed, raw	57	63
Linseed, boiled	60	70
Cotton seed	37	44
Lard	80	1 00
Soap. ₱ box:
Marseilles	—	2 25
Olive	—	2 50
Palm	—	—
Castile	—	2 00
Soda. ₱ lb.	—	—
Starch. ₱ lb.	—	3½
Salt. ₱ sack:
Coarse	75	85
Fine	95	1 20

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn. In sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	—	83
White	—	80
Mixed	—	80
Oats. ₱ bushel:
Western	55	57½
Red rust-proof	73½	76
Bran. ₱ 100 lbs:
Choice	—	1 25
Hay. ₱ ton:
Prime	—	24 00
Choice	25 00	26 50
Cow Peas. ₱ bushel:
Mixed	—	—
Clay	—	—

PROVISIONS.

Bacon. ₱ lb.:
Breakfast	—	10½
Shoulders	—	8¾
Sides, clear rib	—	10¾
Sides, clear	—	10¾
Hams, sugar-cured	11¾	13
Mess Pork. ₱ bbl.	—	19 50
Dry Salt Meat. ₱ lb.:
Clear rib sides	—	9¾
Clear sides	—	10¾
Shoulders	6¾	7
Lard. ₱ lb.:
Choice, in kegs	—	12½
Choice, in tierces	11¾	11¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes. ₱ bbl.:
Irish	3 50	4 00
Sweet	—	1 75
Onions. ₱ bbl.	2 50	2 75
Apples. ₱ bbl.	—	5 00
Cabbages. ₱ lb.	—	—
Sour Krout. ₱ bbl.	8 00	10 00

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging. ₱ yard:
Jute	—	—
Jute	—	—
Baling Twine. ₱ lb.	—	18
Ties. ₱ bundle:
Iron	—	1 50

SUNDRIES.

Poultry.
Grown chickens	4 50	5 00
Young do	2 50	3 00
Ducks	2 50	3 00
Geese	5 00	5 50
Turkeys	16 00	18 00
Eggs. ₱ dozen:
Western	—	25
Louisiana	22	25
Honey.
Strained ₱ gallon	—	—
Comb ₱ lb.	—	—
Pecans. ₱ lb.:
Louisiana	5	12
Texas	—	—
Oranges:
Louisiana ₱ bbl.	—	—
Foreign ₱ box	2 00	5 50
Wool. ₱ lb.:
Louisiana	22	23
Texas	—	—
Feathers. ₱ lb.
Geese	—	—
Hides. ₱ lb.
Country green	6	7
Dry salted	10	10½
Dry flint	12	12½
Ox Horns. each	—	6
Tallow. ₱ lb.	6½	7
Cotton Seed. ₱ ton:
In sacks	—	—
Meal	24 00	26 00
Oil cake	—	26 50
Cooperage. ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	2 50	2 75
Molasses barrels	—	1 35
Half barrels	—	1 05
Kegs	—	70
Oak Staves, per 1200:
Kegs	—	60 00
Barrels	70 00	75 00
Extra claret	100 00	105 00
Extra hogshead	140 00	145 00
Extra pipes	190 00	195 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs	—	6
Medium	—	7½
Good to fine	—	—
Low leaf	—	8
Medium	—	9½
Good	—	10
Fine	—	12½
Selections	—	—

NERVOUS SUFFERERS.

Nervousness is often attended by many annoying symptoms such as black spots flitting before the eyes, ringing or buzzing in the ears, flashes of visionary light in darkness, inability to look up or about suddenly without growing faint or dizzy, wakefulness, vivid dreaming, etc., all of which is permanently cured by using Brown's Iron Bitters.

—The commission appointed to prepare a creed for the Congregational churches will hold its first meeting in Plymouth Church, Syracuse, N. Y., September 27, at eight P. M.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Gov. Colquitt, of Georgia, in his address before the Young Men's Christian Association last evening, said: In his visit to New York he was struck by the wonderful intensity of the struggle for life; the rush of business as though each man was in pursuit of a visible fortune, and feared it might elude him.

"It was a vast city with vast opportunities, and it was no wonder so many young people came here to enter on life's race. They left many anxious hearts behind them. The inquiry of old people down in Georgia was not as to the commerce of New York, or of her wealth, but whether their sons were safe; and if those parents could only know of the efforts being made to save strange young men in this great city, they would say: "God bless the Young Men's Christian Association!"

Referring to the remarks by Dr. Brooks, who welcomed the Governor as one who had been once arrayed against us, but who was now indeed a brother, Gov. Colquitt said he was glad to be so greeted, and if the graces and virtues of Christian religion, the love of our fellow-men which it teaches, and the hope of life to come which it promises could not break down and bridge over sectionalism, then God help our country.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The Guiteau trial, after lasting ten weeks, was brought to a close this evening by a verdict of guilty. There is a feeling of profound satisfaction over the result in this city by all who are anxious to have the majesty of the law upheld and a rebuke administered to the criminal class who so often have been shielded by juries.

The trial is unprecedented in this country. Judge Cox's lenmency to the prisoner has greatly mortified and outraged the public, including those who respect his private virtues and judicial integrity; but his closing charge to the jury was such as the country had a right to expect.

Many persons have feared that the jury would be divided. A week ago Mr. Davidge, while hoping and expecting a verdict of guilty, expressed to me the apprehension that some one juror would be led by a morbid desire singularity or an affectation of being wiser than other people, to hang the jury on the insanity plea.

The conduct of the case by Messrs. Davidge and Porter has been very able, and their closing speeches have done much to secure this prompt verdict.

The public mischief of allowing this audacious criminal to escape can hardly be estimated; but the danger is now fully passed, and there is no doubt whatever that this creature will pay the penalty of his crime.

Mr. Scoville will file a motion in arrest of judgment, which it is evident, from Judge Cox's decision of to-day, will be refused. He will also move for a new trial, but it is safe to say that whether the case be carried on points of law to the District Supreme Court, the judges will be unanimous for upholding the verdict.

Guiteau's only chance for an escape was with an ignorant juryman or two, and this chance having been lost he is now certain to be executed. The motions for a new trial and the arguing of the exceptions may involve some months' delay, but there is now no reason to fear that the American people will be disgraced by Guiteau's escaping the gallows. It is equally safe to say that he has no earthly chance of pardon by the executive. The case is practically closed.

MOBILE, Jan. 25.—The Congregational Church, a frame building, and the Emerson Institute, a two-story brick, owned by the American Missionary Association, burned here this morning. Insurance on the church, $1,000; on the college building, $8,000. This fire was started by incendiaries in the chapel.

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 28.—The Christian Temperance Union, which is in session here, adopted the following resolutions at the meeting this morning:

Whereas, Senator Logan, of Illinois, has introduced a bill in Congress to set apart the revenue derived from distilleries for education;

Resolved, That we enter our most solemn protest against the attempted consideration of an unholy, iniquitous and diabolical perversion of the gift of God into alcoholic stimulants.

Resolved, That we request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote against the bill or any similar one that has for its object the setting apart of the revenue derived from this source to a good and laudable purpose.

The first Friday in next August has been set apart as a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of intemperance in this State. To-night Miss Francis E. Willard, of Chicago, is addressing a large audience in the Statehouse on the subject of intemperance.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 28.—Shortly before 5 o'clock this afternoon, Mr. Scoville filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia papers upon which he bases his motion for a new trial. Not being familiar with the practice in this District, Mr. Scoville concluded to file two motions to assure himself against the possibility of being deprived, through any legal technicality, of the right of review by the court in general term. Papers filed in support of the motion are the prisoner's affidavit; the affidavit of Frederick P. Snyder as to the finding of a newspaper under circumstances indicating that it had been read by the jury; the affidavit of J. W. Guiteau that he is acquainted with the signatures of five of the jurors whose names are written on the margin of the newspaper said to have been seen by the jury, that he has seen them write their names, and believes the writing upon said newspaper to have been made by the jurors named. The last affidavit is that of Mr. Scoville, setting forth newly discovered evidence, upon which he bases his motion for a new trial.

Mr. Scoville's application for a new trial passed upon the grounds of uncertainty of the verdict—guilty as indicted. The indictment consists of different, varying and inconsistent counts, and the verdict don't specify upon which count or counts it is founded. Lack of jurisdiction, errors in ruling, in charge to jury, in excluding some and rejecting other evidence, misbehavior on the part of the jury and new evidence discovered. The main reliance is placed upon the affidavit of Snyder. The latter says he is a resident of Jersey City; was a guest at the National Hotel in December. During his stay there he passed through the corridor and observed the door of one of the rooms occupied by the jurors open, and on the table within lay a newspaper, which he secured. It was a copy of the Evening Critic, of December 19, and upon its margin were the names of several of the jurymen written in ink. John W. Guiteau, in his affidavit declares that these names are autographs of the jurors named. This newspaper was handed to Mr. Scoville, with a statement of the circumstances.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 19.—The river is stationary at 50 5 10 on the gauge.

A McMinnville, Tenn., special says the water spout poured upon White and Van Buren and parts of Warren county last night. Caney Fork at 12 M. was rising at the rate of two feet an hour. Rock river is fuller than ever was known. All communication with the upper counties is suspended. These streams are tributaries to the Cumberland river, and threaten greater floods than ever.

SHREVEPORT, La., Jan. 30.—A dispatch was received here last night from Baton Rouge announcing the sudden death of Hon. Geo. Williamson of this city, on board the steamer Jesse K. Bell. Mr. Williamson was minister to Central America, appointed by President Grant in 1873, and continued by President Hayes till his resignation some two years ago. He was nominated by the Republicans of this (Fourth) district for Congress, but withdrew. He was 52 years of age, and has figured prominently as a leading lawyer and in the politics of Louisiana for many years. During the war he served on the staff of Gen. Leonidas Polk, in the Confederate army. His remains will be brought here for interment.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Rev. Henry W. Bellows, D. D., is dead.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—In the Criminal Court, this morning, the court fixed upon Friday next as the day for hearing arguments upon the motion for a new trial for Guiteau.

Mr. Scoville called attention to the fact that one of the affidavits in support of the motion had annexed to it a copy of the Critic. The allegation was that during the trial the paper had been read by the jury. It bore on the margin what purported to be the signatures of four jurors.

The jurors denied that they saw any newspaper or put their names upon any newspaper during the time they were impaneled. He thought it important to cross-examine the jurors in connection with their admission that they had, during that time given their autographs to various persons.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, Jan. 24.—In the Reichstag to-day, during debate on the budget, a discussion arose concerning the late imperial rescript, Bismarck said it did aim to create a new constitution. The maxim "The King reigns but does not govern," did not apply in Germany. The expression "Ministerial responsibility" was equally absurd. He declared that the rescript remained unshaken by the attacks upon it.

He was fully aware of his responsibility in signing it, and that he was answerable for all the acts of the sovereign. It was to the sovereign, and not to parliament, that Germany owed the position she enjoyed. Bismarck asked whether any one could reproach him with cowardice. There was a great uproar on the left. Prince Bismarck stepped forward and repeated his inquiry, saying: "Is there one among you who dares to bring such a charge?"

The speech of Bismarck in the Reichstag to-day created great excitement. It was an emphatic reassertion of the doctrines of the Imperial rescript as to the relations between the Prussian King and people—a direct challenge to the Reichstag, and very aggressive in tone. It caused a tremendous uproar in the house, although otherwise it made a favorable impression. The expression which Bismarck pronounced equally absurd with "The King reigns but does not govern," was "constitutional absolutism of the Ministry," which Herr Haenel had used in attacking the rescript, not "ministerial responsibility," as reported in a previous dispatch.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Orders have been received at Portsmouth for the dispatch of a batalion of foot to Dublin, Sunday.

Another regiment of infantry has been suddenly ordered to Portsmouth to embark for Dublin. Three other regiments have been medically inspected and sensational rumors are afloat.

BROKEN LEVEES.—Yesterday Gov. McEnery received information from Mr. Sullivan at Lockport, in Bayou Lafourche, in Lafourche parish, that the levee near that place had broken, a gap twenty feet wide having been formed, letting the water into the surrounding country and threatening considerable damage.

The Governor telegraphed in reply that he had sent an engineer promptly to look after the crevasse. The point in question is near the New Orleans and Texas Railroad, and about halfway between this city and Berwick's Bay crossing. It is the midst of a fine sugar and rice country, and a serious flood might do much damage.

Reports of a crevasse at Delta, on the Louisiana side just below Vicksburg, are a surprise to those who know the levees there which resisted the flood of 1874. It was represented on Saturday night that the break in the levee there was a hundred yards wide, and that the waters of the Mississippi river were flooding the country at a dangerous rate. Such a break must increase rapidly in size and power to do damage.

No official information on the subject had been received up to last night by the Governor.—New Orleans Picayune, January 29.

—The chief royal topic of the day in Europe is the mysterious disappearance of King Louis of Bavaria. He has left his kingdom, without a word of farewell, and is traveling about incognito, vouchsafing no trace of his whereabouts. There are easy suggestions that he has been kidnapped, and one irreverent journal solemnly says: "If the monarch in question will speedily return to his disconsolate subjects, all will be forgiven."

WORTH A DOZEN DEAD MEN.

RICHMOND, VA., MAY 20, 1881.

My physician, after exhausting me financially, coolly informed me that my case was hopeless, that no remedy would reach my case, and it was entirely useless for me to continue taking medicine. I was told that one lung was gone, and that my bowels and kidneys were all decayed. I suffered excruciatingly from the horrors of dyspepsia and painful urination, and my breath came short and quick, while my heart at times ceased to beat entirely, while again it would thump most vehemently. A sister of mine, a Mrs. Rhorer, in Baltimore, wrote to father advising him to get me Brown's Iron Bitters. From the very first dose I felt a change; now all pain is gone, my digestion is good, my urine is free from sediment, and my slumber unbroken and dreamless. I now feel perfectly restored, and go about and do as much work as ever I did, and I do not feel the least fatigued

DANIEL R. M'KENZIE.

The District Stewards of Woodville District, Mississippi Conference, will please meet at the Methodist Church in Greensburg, on Wednesday, February 15, 1882, at eleven o'clock, A. M. I hope the brethren will appreciate the importance of the business to be transacted enough to attend the meeting.

D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

APPORTIONMENTS FOR NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT FOR 1882.

	Foreign Missions.	Domestic Missions.	Conference Claimants.	Bishops.	Education.	Presidents' Fund.
Carondelet Street	$30	$100	$100	$100	$100	$100
Felicity Street	340	85	350	70	50	200
St. Charles Avenue	225	50	300	50	50	180
Louisiana Avenue	90	30	100	20	20	80
Marcan Street	85	25	50	10	10	40
Algiers	55	20	40	10	5	40
Baton Rouge	110	50	150	20	20	150
Grosse Tete	30	10	25	5	5	50
Labourche	20	10	5	5	5	40

T. KENNEDY, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

NEW ORLEANS DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Algiers	Jan. 28, 29
Morean street	"
Louisiana Avenue	12
Felicity Street	19
Baton Rouge	26
Grosse Tete, at Rosedale	Mar. 1, 2
Bayou Lafourche, at Houma	11, 12
St. Charles Avenue	18, 19
Carondelet	25, 26

The District Steward will convene January 30, at Carondelet Street Church, P. M., in pastor's office.

CHRISTIAN KEENER, P. E.

OPELOUSAS DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Washington	Jan. 21, 22
Plaquemine, Bruslee and Kimball's Chapel	28, 29
Lake Charles	Feb. 4, 5
Abbeville	11, 12
Sugartown	18, 19
Opelousas	25, 26
Patterson ville and Morgan City	Mar. 4, 5
New Iberia	11, 12
Franklin	18, 19
Vermillionville	24, 26
Calcasieu mission	Apr. 1, 2
Grand Chenier	8, 9

LEWIS A. REED, P. E.

N. DELHI DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Waterproof, at Waterproof	Jan. 21, 22
Tensas, at Jordan's Chapel	28, 29
Monroe, at Monroe	Feb. 4, 5
Trenton, at Trenton	11, 12
Lake Providence, at Lake Providence	18, 19
Winnsboro, at Winnsboro	25, 26
Delhi, at Delhi	Mar. 4, 5
Rayville, at Rayville	11, 12
Oak Ridge, at Peach	18, 19
Lind Grove, at Bethlehem	25, 26
Bastrop, at Bastrop	Apr. 1, 2
Floyd, at Floyd	8, 9

L. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

SHREVEPORT DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Coushatta, at Coushatta	Jan. 21, 22
Springville, at Antioch Prairie	28, 29
Logansport	Feb. 4, 5
Caddo, at Liberty	11, 12
Monroe sport	18, 19
North Bossier, at Concord	25, 26
South Bossier, at Bellvine	Mar. 4, 5
Shreveport	11, 12
Mansfield	18, 19
Natchitoches, at Natchitoches	25, 26
Many, at New Hope	Apr. 1, 2
Anacoco, at Holy Grove	8, 9
Sabine, Bayou Sea	15, 16
Pleasant Hill	22, 23

District Stewards' meeting will be held at Shreveport, March 11, A. D. 1882.

T. H. M'CLENDON, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT—FIRST ROUND.

Meridian	Jan. 7, 8
DeSoto	14
Waynesboro
Winchester, at Hebron
Chickasalwa, at Mount Olive	5
Shubuta, at Shubuta	6
Paulding, at Paulding	18, 19
Enterprise and Quitman at Enterprise	25, 26
Enterprise, at Chunkey	Mar. 4, 5
Marion, at Marion	11, 12
Lauderdale, at Lauderdale	18, 19
Ellwood, at Ellwood	25, 26
DeKalb, at DeKalb	Apr. 1, 2
Long Creek mission, at Oak Grove	8, 9

JAS. A. GODFREY, P. E.

JACKSON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Canton	Jan. 21, 22
Jackson	28, 29
Edwards	14, 15
Hind's mission	17, 18
Bolton	18, 22
Madison, at Wesley	25, 29
Starks Chapel	Feb. 4, 5
Sharon, at Union	11, 12
Benton	18, 19
Silver City	25, 26
Yazoo City	Mar. 4, 5
Dover	11, 12
Mt. Carmel	19

W. D. F. BENNETT, P. E.

BRANDON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Marvin circuit, at Wesleyan	Jan. 7, 8
Canton circuit, at Clear Creek	14, 15
Trenton circuit, at Pokeville	21, 22
Raleigh circuit, at Raleigh	28, 29
Brandon station	Feb. 4, 5
Pinckney circuit, at Holly Bush	11, 12
Lake circuit, at Lake	18, 19
Walnut Grove circuit, at Hillsboro	25, 26
Carthage circuit, at Goshen	Mar. 4, 5
Newton circuit, at Newton	11, 12
Forest circuit, at Grange Hall	18, 19
Beech Springs mission, at Mill Dale	25, 26
Decatur mission, at Mt. Hebron	Apr. 1, 2
Philadelphia mission, at Philadelphia	8, 9
Ludlow mission, at Contreil	15, 16

District Stewards will meet at Morton, on Friday, February 3.

J. M. GANN, P. E.

WOODVILLE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Audle City	Jan. 7, 8
Clinton	14, 15
East Feliciana	21, 22
Ponchitoula, at Ponchitoula	28, 29
St. Helena	Feb. 4, 5
Amite	11, 12
Jackson	18, 19
Pipkins and Port Hudson	25, 26
Bayou Sara	Mar. 4, 5
Livingston	11, 12
East Baton Rouge	18, 19
Wilkinson	25, 26
Woodville	Apr. 1, 2
North Wilkinson	8, 9

Address, Greensburg, La. Pastors, by card, inform Presiding Elder of place for First Quarterly Meeting.

D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Crystal Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Wesson and Beauregard, at Wesson	7, 8
Hazlehurst	14, 15
Brandywine, at Rehoboth	21, 22
Summit, at Summit	28, 29
McComb and Magnolia, at Magnolia	Feb. 4, 5
Providence, at Bahalia	11, 12
Bayou Pierre, at Pleasant Ridge	18, 19
Adams and Bogue Chitto, at Adams	25, 26
Scotland, at Bethesda	Mar. 4, 5
Sterling Ridge, at Forrest Hill	11, 12
Terry, at Pleasant Grove	18, 19
Brookhaven	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in Hazlehurst, January 14, 1882.

J. A. B. JONES, P. E.

VICKSBURG DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Natchez	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Vicksburg	Jan. 7, 8
Warren circuit, at Rovina	14, 15
Port Gibson	28, 29
Rocky Springs, at Grand Gulf	Feb. 4, 5
Cayuga, at Utica	11, 12
Fayette circuit, at Fayette	18, 19
Meadville, at Oak Grove	25, 26
Kingston	Mar. 4, 5
Clover Hill, at Maverville	11, 12
Rolling Fork, at Rolling Fork	18, 19
Mt. Olivet, at Satartia	25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in the Methodist Church at Port Gibson, January 28, at 10 o'clock A. M.

R. S. WOODWARD, P. E.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WINONA DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Alpha	Feb. 18, 19
French Camps	25, 26
Kosciusko circuit	Mar. 3
Kosciusko and Durant	4, 5
Newport	11, 12
Aberdeen	18, 19
Richland	25, 26
Lexington	31
Winona and Vaiden	Apr. 1, 2
West	8, 9
Wingus circuit	13
Walthall	15, 16
Carrollton	22, 23
Black Hawk	29, 30
Minter City	May 6, 7

Brothers on French Camp and Zilpha will please inform me where their Quarterly Conferences will be held. My address is Durant, Miss.

THOS. Y. RAMSEY, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low-test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Co., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SINGER $40 BORROWED BY I. M. SINGER TO BUILD THE FIRST SUCCESSFUL SEWING MACHINE AUGUST 1850 OBELISK

THE GENUINE SINGER MACHINE HAS BEEN AWARDED THE FIRST PRIZE OVER ALL COMPETITORS MORE THAN 200 TIMES

SALES OF THE GENUINE SINGER FAMILY SEWING MACHINE

1862 MACHINE, SOLD	12 489
1872	219,758
1873	232,444
1874	241,679
1875	249,852
1876	262,316
1877	282,812
1878	356,432
TRADE MARK
1879 MACHINES SOLD	431,167
1880	538,609

BEING OVER THREE-QUARTERS OF ALL THE SEWING MACHINES SOLD THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

BUY NONE BUT THE GENUINE

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END

HIEROGLYPHICS THAT EVERY CHILD CAN UNDERSTAND

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

85 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

$5 to $20 per day at Home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

No. 56 St.

A WONDERFUL

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, and possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, as when first you use them. They have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European scientists claim that the MEDICATED GLASSES have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that is usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.

2. The chemicals harden the glasses hard; they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first.

3. The chemicals keep the glasses cold, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.

4. With these glasses you can read, write or sew all night, the light having no effect on the eye, nor the distressing or tiresome sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS—NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED.

THE MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the frame H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED.

Dealers Supplied Wholesale at Liberal Discount.

ALL EYES SUITED. Persons residing at a distance who may wish to procure these spectacles can send for a circular containing description, prices, etc., and directions for insuring a perfect fit, and have them sent by mail, by addressing

HERC. HOUSAH,
CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,
56 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing mention this paper.

CHURCH'S MUSICAL VISITOR,

AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF MUSIC.

Every number contains 32 large pages filled with Musical Sketches, Original Articles on Criticisms, Poetry, Notes, Musical News, and five to ten pages of New Music. Every subscriber receives free, the choice of 10 Elegant Premium Volumes!

Each premium contains 32 pages of Sheet Music. Full particulars and list of contents of premiums sent on application.

Subscription only $1.50 a Year!

Agents Wanted in every Town and City, to whom a liberal commission will be paid.

Circulars, blanks, etc., supplied free.

Send Stamp for Sample Copy.

PUBLISHED BY

JOHN CHURCH & CO.,

New York Office, 5 Union Square. | CINCINNATI, O.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. G. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

DIUTURNITY:

A COSMICAL ESSAY,

By REV. R. ABBEY.

Concerning the World's Present Infancy, Its Immense Future, Its Undiscovered Treasures, Its Indestructibility, The Wisdom of Providence, The Office of Science, The Scope of Christianity, The Folly of a Millenium, The Non-Human Second Coming of Christ, and The Glorious Destiny of Mankind.

"No ordinary ability is displayed. We have read the whole book with unflagging interest. It is salable, readable and remarkable."—N. Y. Methodist.

"One of the most remarkable books we ever read."—Christian Advocate, Nashville.

"The author is a man of mature and scholarly mind."—American Christian Review.

"An entirely original argument. Readable and remarkable."—Missouri Presbyterian Herald.

"Diuturnity is the name of the book of the age."—Gospel Herald.

"Clear thinking, wonderful originality. Vast amount of information."—Home Monthly.

Highly commended by more than a hundred writers. Price, $1 50.

Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville,
G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS.

Dealers in all kinds of

LUMBER, SHINGLES, &C.

AND IN

ALABAMA COAL.

Shipments made from either Mobile or New Orleans or from Mills or Mines direct.

WANTED.—White Oak Staves, Red Cedar and Black Walnut logs, received at either New Orleans or Mobile. Highest cash price paid.

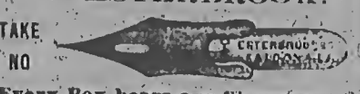
A. C. DANNER & CO.,

ROSES We give more and better plants for the money than any other house in the country. Catalogues for 1882 now ready, free to all. Send for one and see for yourself the beautiful plants we offer. MILLER & HUNT, Wrights Grove, Chicago.

ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR GENUINE AND ORIGINAL "ESTERBROOK" "Falcon Pen, No. 048."

Beware of Imitations! The Genuine Falcon Pens are stamped "ESTERBROOK."

TAKE NO



Every Box bears our Signature, thus:

R. Esterbrook & Co.

Esterbrook Steel Pen Co., 26 John St., New York.

TUERK'S POSITIVE ROTARY HYDRAULIC MOTOR.

For running all Kinds of Machinery by

Water Power.

Send for Circular and Price List to

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SEND 25 CENTS

For a copy of the new

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Mailed post-paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

KNABE

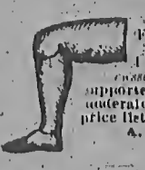
PIANOFORTES.

UNEQUALED IN

Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

Nos. 204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore
No. 112 Fifth Avenue New York.



DR. ILLY'S PATENT ARTIFICIAL LIMBS. The Best and cheapest. Satisfaction guaranteed. I keep on hand a large assortment of Trusses, Shoulder Braces, Abdominal supporters; Elastic Stockings, etc., at moderate prices. Send for pamphlet and price list.

A. McDERMOTT, Manufacturer,
153 Camp St., New Orleans.

CANCERS ARE CURED.

(Without knife or pain.) Patients not laid up a single day by treatment, but improve from the beginning. ALL DISEASES OF FEMALES, (no matter how long standing,) are speedily and happily cured; viz: Irregularities, Nervousness, tumors, ulcers, displacements, fistulas, etc., by

T. C. BRACKING, M. D.,
154 Canal street, New Orleans, La.

Those afflicted had better call at once.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guar

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 28.—NO. 6. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1882. WHOLE NO. 1392

PUBLISHED FOR THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
A. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, ... $2 per annum.
Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half-price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY,
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT,
REV. C. D. GALLOWAY.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. FELIX R. HILL,
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

THE INNER CALM.

BY H. BONAR.

Calm me, my God, and keep me calm,
While these hot breezes blow;
Be like the night dew's cooling balm
Upon earth's fevered brow.

Calm me, my God, and keep me calm,
Soft resting on thy breast;
Soothe me with holy hymn and psalm
And bid my spirit rest.

Calm me, my God and keep me calm,
Let thine outstretching wing
Be like the shade of Elim's palm
Beside the desert spring.

Yes, keep me calm, though loud and rude
The sounds my ears that greet;
Calm in the closet's solitude,
Calm in the bustling street.

Calm in the hour of buoyant health,
Calm in my hour of pain;
Calm in my poverty or wealth,
Calm in my loss or gain.

Calm in the sufferance of wrong,
Like Him who bore my shame,
Calm 'mid the threatening, taunting throng,
Who hate thy holy name.

Calm when the great world's news, with power
My listening spirit stirs,
Let not the tidings of the hour
Find too fond an ear.

Calm as the ray of sun or star
Which storms assail in vain,
Moving unruffled through earth's war
The eternal calm to gain.

Letter from Western Texas.

MR. EDITOR: I have been intending for some time to write you from my work in Texas, but, like most preachers, delayed to comply with your request. Shall speak first of my own charge. At the session of the Northwest Texas Conference, which was held at Waxahachee, November 15, 1881, I was appointed to Lampasas and Burnet Station, a most delightful work. The places numbering about 2,000 souls. They are about twenty miles apart. Lampasas is the larger—about 1,200 inhabitants, with two churches, Methodist and Baptist, about equally divided in numbers, about 150 members in each church. We will have the better church when finished. Size, 30x60. I have added ten to our membership. Five more will be received soon. We are prospering as a church. We have some ceiling to put on yet, to make the pulpit and altar, then we want to have our new church dedicated by Bishop J. C. Keener, of your city, in July, when he will be here to us at the Southwestern University at Georgetown, Texas, forty-five miles from Lampasas. We shall have railroad communications with Galveston by that time. Lampasas Sulphur Springs are famous. The main Sulphur is the largest spring of the kind I have ever seen, and I have visited celebrated springs, among the rest, the White Sulphur, of Grecbrier, West Virginia. But I think this the strongest sulphur I have ever seen. Capacity, 300 gallons per minute. Then there is another spring here with a capacity of 600 gallons per minute. Lampasas, town and county, are well supplied with living water all the year. This is a great sheep county. We have the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fee railroad, and we expect the Texas and St. Louis railway, giving us fine railroad connections with all parts of the country.

It is supposed by well-informed men that we will have at least 1,000 visitors here during the watering season, thereby making this one of the most attractive places in the South or West. We have a good Sunday-school, numbering 150 by the roll. Our town is growing rapidly—new faces may be seen every day on the streets. A number of buildings are being constructed. Withal, we are a live people. We are about sixty miles from Austin.

Burnet is a town of about 800 inhabitants and a thorough business place. It has houses that sell from $50,000 to $150,000 a year. There is no denominational church at Burnet. There is a union church, occupied by the Baptists, old school Presbyterians, Southern branch, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Methodist Protestant. They occupy one Sunday in the month respectively. The Christian Church occupies the house in the afternoon of each day and the fifth Sundays. We expect to build a church in Burnet this year. We have over $1,000 now subscribed; shall increase the subscription to at least $2,000. We have a good lot properly secured to our church. This I shall always observe and hope all our preachers and laity will do likewise. Have your deeds made according to the disciplinary requirements. After trouble then will be avoided.

We have the largest communion at Burnet, about eighty members, most of whom are in town. And a better membership I have never seen. I love good people everywhere I meet them. Our church here and at Lampasas is blessed with some as good and as true Christians as are to be found anywhere. I often think of the hour we spent together in Lovefeast in New Orleans while on my way to Texas. Wish you could be with us here next summer. We should be happy to hear you preach. Burnet is a growing town. It will have one railroad completed to it by the first of May, and we expect the Texas and St. Louis railway to go to Burnet, which will make Burnet one of the most desirable towns in the State. It is very healthy. The doctors are generally poor. With a bunch of cattle they make out to live. It is a stock county, more especially sheep, which will be the great business, I think, in Texas in the future. Many people are coming to Burnet. Lands are cheap. By communicating with Gen. A. R. Johnson, or Judge M. A. Martin, of Burnet, and Maj. James A. Hamon and Judge John Mathews, of Lampasas, persons can get reliable information of Texas lands. It is well for persons contemplating a change to write to some one in Texas, before they come, and get all the information possible. I can recommend these men as gentlemen and trustworthy. I am always ready to aid any one coming to Texas in advice.

The Methodist Church is the strongest in the State, and by far the most aggressive and progressive. In the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the re are over 90,000 actual members. There were received by ritual last year (1881), 9,303, besides a much larger number by letter. In all about 20,000. Our church is on a firm basis, and is doing grand work for the Master in Texas. There are 381 pastors, 34 presiding elders, 885 local preachers—1,300 in all. What a host of workers. Our local preachers are faithful and godly men. They do efficient work. God bless them! I love them. They have been a power in the Methodist Church. We have some as good schools in Texas as you will find anywhere. Among the many, I shall name only a few. Southwestern University, at Georgetown, presided over by Dr. F. A. Mood, is the joint property of our church in Texas. It is said to be the best school in the State. Then there is the Marvin College, at Waxahachie, presided over by Gen. L. M. Lewis. This is a first-class school. Then there is the Waco Female College, presided over by Rev. S. P. Wright, A. M. There are other good schools; one at Sherman, one at Dallas, and many others of high grade in the State but too numerous to mention. They are good schools. Our church is alive to the best methods of education. We have many district schools to a flourishing condition. We are showing our faith by our works.

To build up Methodism permanently, we must, as the church has ever done from its origin, foster education. Sanctified learning is a power, and gives force and effect to the cause of Christ. To build churches and parsonages is a live issue in the Methodist Church all over Texas. Without church property no church can live to a late date. Therefore, there must be a corresponding interest in church property as well as to have sinners converted. We must give them a home in the kingdom of grace. The churches and parsonages are generally of modern style and good architectural beauty. Good architecture is very essential to the comfort of both preacher and hearers. May all preachers secure good plans before building churches etc. I am told by an old Presbyterian minister that there are about 130,000 Methodists, 125,000 Baptists, 30,000 Christians (alias Campbellites). I judge about 20,000 Presbyterians, old school, North and South, Cumberland, etc., in the State. The Southern branch of the Presbyterian Church has, I am told, about 6,000 members. The Northern branch not so many; the Cumberland and other branches of the Presbyterians about 10,000 members with but little church property, as I have learned by observation and otherwise. The Methodist Church was, as you know, the first to plant the seed of the gospel on Texas soil. The church has always been equal to any emergency that might arise. Our church needs more good men as preachers. I have no doubt but what we shall have a Bishop to make Texas his home after next May. We need the oversight of one of our Bishops, and we deserve one.

Yours very respectfully,

W. H. LEFEVRE.

LAMPASAS, TEXAS, Jan. 30, 1882.

Letter from California.

MR. EDITOR: I have made one round on the San Francisco district—hence have seen more of the State than I had in the two years on the circuits. This district comprises the richest and oldest-settled part of the State, and it is surprising to any one to know that only thirty years ago this State had but few Americans settled in it. The wealth of many men here runs high up into the millions. If I had as many thousands as they have millions I should feel rich indeed. As to religion, most of the churches seem rather luke-warm; too much business of this world to attend to, but little time for Christ.

Saturday is a bad day here to hold quarterly meetings, unless it be after nine o'clock P. M. At most places people are fond of short sermons; they measure the length better than the depth, and this is a good thing on many of us poor preachers on this coast. Most people here are very positive, have great individuality; hence, as a rule, we get only one at a time converted or to join the church. People here do not move by groups, as we have seen them in other States. So far as we know the whole universe is made up of centers and systems, and so it is in most communities but in this. California is full of centers, but no systems. I have attended many funerals here, and, as a rule, we bury our dead in good style and much display; but, as to tears and deep feeling, I have seen but little. There must be a cause for everything, but why so little sympathy for our fellow-creatures is hard to understand. The preacher who can get tears from his congregation while preaching to them, must live near the Saviour himself and be able to impart much of the spirit of love. Often in class and prayer-meeting we see earnestness in men and women, all on the altar of the Lord, and yet the feeling is not so visible as in other places I have been. Notwithstanding these things, I fully believe that the purity of heart and the stability of Christian people here is as good as I have ever seen in any country. I think our church is looking up on this coast. We want a Bishop with us on the Pacific coast, and we intend to send up to the General Conference for one. We not only need a Bishop, but need twenty more good preachers, and, as a rule, we take good care of our preachers in the Pacific Conference. If men wish to come here, let them come and take luck with us; best not to pick for our best places at first. We are willing to give an equal chance, but do not like to make it unequal. Transfers coming in this way will find no opposition in this Conference. I am always delighted to read the reports of my old Conference, but one item, in the report on temperance did not make me glad. An Annual Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, should not tell people, nor preachers, who they should or should not vote for. I do not object to the sentiment, but like it out of the Conferences. Such would do very well for our Yankee brethren; but we have thus far left politics out of our Conferences, and I hope we will continue to do so.

I have read "Our Brother in Black." I do not like the genealogy. The doctor must be a long-eyed man—can see his kinfolks afar off. The doctor's grammar is good, rhetoric fair, logic very bad.

F. M. FEATHERSTON.

Jan. 26, 1882.

The Past.

In the retrospect, no child of God could desire to become again what he was in a state of nature. There is nothing in the desolation of that experience but the remembrance of the horrible pit of sin and death out of which the grace of God did so mercifully lift him. And yet, painful as is the review, it is an admitted advantage to us all to take frequent glances at the dark page in our history. Possibly the chief subjective benefit derived from serious reflections on our past state is the pain it gives us. It is said that, Pythagoras, "studying philosophy, was so anxious to keep awake and improve all his time, that with a string he tied the hair of his head to a beam above, so that the very moment he nodded in sleep, the pain would awake him." And, that we might not think more highly of ourselves than we ought, God has mercifully preserved the shadows of that dreary past, that the light of Divine truth might now and again cast them across our spiritual vision.

And if the experience is painful to us, we are surely comforted with the additional reflection that it can not possibly be more so than it has been to the very best who have gone before us. Certainly no man ever endured a more acute mental agony from any cause than did St. Paul from these reflections on the past. For, while he could say of the apostles, "I have labored more abundantly than they all," the remembrance of what he had been over caused him to add: "I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God."

But if the retrospect is subjectively painful and humiliating, objectively it is exalting to a boundless degree. It unfolds to its heights and depths of Divine grace, that no affirmation of holy writ could reveal. We are not driven to the thief on the cross for an illustration of its power to save; but with St. Paul we can each feel that it saved me, the chief of sinners. There is a tradition which says: "There once lived a nobleman in France in whose domains all the wood and stone, when split or hewn, bore the owner's coat-of arms depicted upon them by nature." But it is no tradition with us; but by gracious experience we feel with every glance into the past, that by grace the image of the Son of God is stamped upon our once fallen and degraded spiritual nature.

And thus it is that we are not only assured of God's power and willingness to save any and every lost soul; but, that he who has brought us out of the depths in the past, will carry us to the height of his own glory in the future.

J. M. WEEMS.

From China.

Rev. W. W. Royall, writing from Nexiang, China, November 28, 1881, to the Richmond Christian Advocate, says:

To-day I am just back from a trip to Kading, where I went to look after our schools. The air was frosty, and there was considerable wind; but, oh, it is so delightful here once more to feel the sensation of good, bracing cold! As I walked awhile by the side of the canal, while the boat went a little ahead, it was really enjoyable. Though one misses the gold and red and purple of the home forests, yet the fields of sprouting wheat, rich, green vegetables, and brown cotton-stalks, with here and there a grove of bamboo, and the canal, here clear as crystal, with long mosses reaching to the glassy surface of the water, with ducks and geese chattering here and there, and boats of all descriptions pulling heavily against the wind or dashing along before it, these formed no mean picture of life and beauty.

The graceful outline of a fine three-arched bridge rises before me now. There it has stood for I know not how many centuries; and there it will stand for many more if left alone. Its huge stones neatly chiseled, its arches rounded as beautifully and gracefully as any I ever saw, and the clear water mirroring its form from below, make the image of it an unceasing pleasure to me. One must get all the enjoyment he can out of any given object of beauty here in China. He will not find enough to sate him.

I went into the city accompanied by Bro. Lee. I heard the pupils read some in each of the books they were studying, and I also asked them questions to see what they knew of the meaning of what they read. Chinese children are taught to repeat books by rote, with no idea whatever of the meaning of the words. All their books are in Wun Le, or classical, and it takes careful attention on the part of a grown person, and one well educated, to catch the meaning of a Wun Le sentence. We use Pu Tah, or spoken Chinese, in our hymn books, catechisms and Testaments. Yet even these the children can and do learn to repeat without a word of mistake, without having any idea of the meaning. The idea of making a pupil think, and think independently, boldly, strongly, is not to be found in all Chinese literature so far as I have heard. "What does the book say?" is the end of the matter.

It is a most difficult matter to get a man that has any idea of teaching. We have endless trouble and annoyance with our day school teachers, and after all we can do we sometimes find we have employed a miserable opium smoker. And yet even when we think we are sure that the man smokes we can not positively detect him. If asked he will as surely tell a falsehood about it as he can get words to do so. Only opium smokers know where opium is to be had, and so detection is almost impossible.

We left the city after examining the school, and walked back to Bro. Lee's house, which is just outside the walls. On the way he told me that a few days ago four literary men passing our chapel were overheard in conversation about it. One said "Jesus Chapel," as he read the name, and then began to abuse the religion of Christ and speak evil of the Lord Jesus. Another said: "You are wrong. Jesus is the Lord of all lands and of all men." And he went on to speak of Christ as the true God.

This is the more remarkable, because these literary men are exceedingly proud and arrogant. They seldom, or never, listen to our preaching, and are as scornful and contemptuous as possible in their allusions to Christianity.

But as sure as we live the leaven is working in China. No human eye can foresee the results that are to come out of the mighty, though silent, forces now at work in the minds of the people. It is astonishing with what eagerness they are talking about this scheme of Dr. Allen's at Shanghai. Already he has two donations of $100 each from Chinese friends to help pay for teachers to man the schools. Besides these there have been numerous gifts of five and ten dollars. Many men will become annual subscribers of ten, twenty, fifty and one hundred dollars to pay for efficient native teachers. The Chinese papers talk of it, and they commend it. The people of the better classes are interested.

Now be it known, once for all, that this is no scheme to entice the rich and great to us as though we were merely desirous of saving them. Poor boys will find in it a chance of elevation they never dared hitherto to dream of. The educated people here control the sentiments of the lower classes. If a literary man says it is thus or so, you will have a miserable time convincing the lower classes that it is not. Though Confucianists are not themselves idolators—that is, not as the people are—yet they are the bulwark of idolatry and superstition in China. God speed the day when this monstrous system shall fall to rise no more.

Guiteau Sentenced.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—After the motion for a new trial had been overruled, Guiteau, who had been permitted to resume his seat at the counsel's table, called out: "If your honor pleases, I desire to ask if there is any motion that I ought to make to resume my rights?"

Mr. Scoville tried to prevent his speaking, but he retorted: "Well, I don't want any advantage taken of me; I want to know how much time I shall have to prepare my appeal to the court in banc."

Mr. Scoville—"Please keep quiet, we haven't reached that yet."

Guiteau (with much excitement)—"I won't keep quiet; I am here and I propose to do my own talking."

Judge Cox then informed Mr. Scoville of the rules of practice applicable to the filing of his exceptions, and after this matter had been arranged, Col. Corkhill renewed his motion, saying: "It is now my duty to ask for the sentence of the court."

Judge Cox (to prisoner)—"Stand up; have you anything to say why sentence should not now be passed upon you?"

Guiteau, still sitting—"I ask your honor to postpone sentence as long as possible."

Judge Cox—"Stand up. Have you anything to say why sentence should not now be pronounced upon you?"

The prisoner then arose, pale but with lips compressed and desperate determination stamped upon his features, and in a low and deliberate tone he begun, but soon his manner became violent, and pounding upon the table, he delivered himself of the following harangue:

"I am not guilty of the charge set forth in the indictment. It was God's act, not mine, and God will take care of it; and, don't let the American people forget it. He will take care of it, and every officer of this government, from the executive down to that marshal, taking in every man on that jury, and every member on this bench, will pay for it, and the American nation will roll in blood if my body goes into the ground and I am hung. The Jews put the despised Galilean into the grave; for a time they triumphed; but at the destruction of Jerusalem, forty years afterwards, the Almighty got even with them. I am not afraid of death. I am here as God's man. Kill me to-morrow, if you want, I am God's man, and I have been from the start."

Judge Cox then proceeded to pass sentence, addressing the prisoner as follows:

"You have been convicted of a crime so terrible in its circumstances, and so far reaching, that it has drawn upon you the horror of the whole world, and the execrations of your countrymen. The excitement produced by such an offense, made it no easy task to secure for you a fair and impartial trial; but you have had the power of the United States treasury and government in your service to protect your person from violence and to procure evidence from all parts of the country. You have had as fair and impartial a jury as ever assembled in a court of justice. You have been defended by counsel with zeal and devotion that merit the highest encomiums of all. I certainly have done my best to secure a fair presentation of your defense. Notwithstanding all this, you have been found guilty. It would have been a comfort to many people if the verdict of the jury had established the fact that your act was that of an irresponsible man. It would have left the people the satisfying belief that the crime of political assassination was something entirely foreign to the institutions and civilization of our country; but the result has denied them that comfort. The country will accept it as a fact that the crime can be committed, and the court will have to deal unto him the last penalty known to the criminal code, to serve as an example to others. Your career has been so extraordinary, that the people might well, at times, have doubted your sanity; but one can not but believe that when the crime was committed you thoroughly understood the nature of the crime and its consequences."

Guiteau—"I was acting as God's man."

"And that you had moral sense and conscience enough to recognize the moral iniquity of such an act."

The prisoner—"That's a matter of opinion."

"Your own testimony shows that you recoiled with horror at the idea. You say that you played against it. You say that you thought it might be prevented. That shows that your conscience warned against it; but by the wretched sophistry of your own mind you worked yourself up against the protest of your own conscience. What motive could have induced you to this act must be a matter of conjecture. Probably men will think that some political fanaticism or morbid desire for self-exaltation was the real inspiration for the act. Your own testimony seems to controvert the theories of your counsel. They have maintained and thought honestly, I believe, that you were driven against your will by an insane impulse to commit the act; but your testimony showed that you deliberately resolved to do it, and that deliberate and misguided will was the sole impulse. This may seem insanity to some persons, but the law looks upon it as a willful crime. You will have due opportunity of having any errors I may have committed during the course of the trial passed upon by the court en banc, but meanwhile it is necessary for me to pronounce the sentence of the law: that you be taken hence to the common jail of the district, from whence you came, and there be kept in confinement; and on Friday, the thirtieth day of June, 1882, you be taken to the place of execution, within the walls of said jail, and there, between the hours of twelve and two P. M., you be hanged by the neck until you are dead, and may the Lord have mercy on your soul."

During the reading Guiteau stood apparently unmoved, and with his gaze riveted on the judge; but when the final words were spoken he struck the table violently and shouted:

"And may the Lord have mercy on your soul. I'd rather stand where I do than where that jury does and where your honor does. I'm not afraid to die. I stand here as God's man, and God Almighty will curse every man who has had a part in procuring this unrighteous verdict. Nothing but good has come from Garfield's removal, and that will be the verdict of posterity on my inspiration. I don't care a snap for the verdict of this corrupt generation. I would rather a thousand times be in my position than that of those who have hounded me to death. I shall have a glorious flight to glory, but that miserable scoundrel Corkhill will have a permanent job down below where the devil is preparing for him."

After apparently talking himself out, the prisoner turned to his brother, and without the slightest trace of excitement, conversed for some moments before being taken from the court room.

The Small Arts of Living.

Hardly anything is too small to spoil the comforts of life if it be misplaced. A speck in the eye, a kernel of wheat in the boot, a pin-point touching the skin, a band too tight, a needed strap gone—and good-bye comfort! Considering how much depends on our daily food, it is surprising how little is thought of the conditions under which it is taken in many families. Some people think a good deal more of what is on the table than what is said or done around it; and some few reverse the order—an operation that may do well for special occasions, when what is said is something extraordinary; but one that we shall beg leave to be excused from as regular diet, even if the gods come to dine, until we are able to dispense with all that is implied in a good appetite. The cookery is too big a topic to touch in this connection; though what with cookery schools, better knowledge among the people, and higher standards made familiar by our best hotels and dining places, the art has greatly advanced in this city within the present generation. Good bread, appropriately broiled steak, and a roast done to a turn, no longer excite the special wonder that they once did. By and by, perhaps, it will not be unusual to find a good soup, or vegetables that haven't been spoiled in cooking. But consider the meal cooked; how shall it be best enjoyed? By having it daintily and tastefully arranged and served in the first place. We always mark the good house-wife up a notch or two in our esteem if we see that, however competent help she may have, she always slips out to give the last touches to the table before the family or the guests sit down. Some do it for the family, but not for the family, but that is an error. The artistic arrangement of the table furniture; the skill that avoids crowding dishes together, or leaving space too bare; the forethought that looks out for flowers for the dining table, though the center-table go bare; the quick eye which sees that everything is in its place—these supplement the fare wonderfully. Promptness in each member of the family is another essential. It demoralizes the group to have stragglers dropping in all the way through the meal, and gives a restaurant air—a suggestion of mere "feeding"—to the family meal, which it should never have.—Golden Rule.

—Have you got hold of a new truth? Hold it modestly, though firmly and with decision. Do not noisily proclaim it from the house-top. Let it silently ally itself with the truths you learned yesterday, and with those which you may live to learn to-morrow; and if they all grow up together, each will become more mellow and matured.—Wm. Knight.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1882.

THE DREAMER.

All day the white-haired woman sits
Beside the open door and knits.
No living thing her dim eye sees,
As busy with old memories
She dreams her dreams of what has been,
And knits her old time fancies in.

She thinks of those who long ago
Went out across the ripening how
How many times her listening ear
Had thought her footsteps near
And when she started up to find
A dead leaf rustling in the wind

Looking over those who lie
Beneath the wide and tender sky,
With folded hands on quiet breast
All wrapped about with peace and rest,
She thanks of them—for to her they tread
The green earth with her—None are dead.

Then, as years leave gold like the leaves
About the graves where summer weaves
Her grass—"God's Acre"—deep
Safe the from all the outer clamor,
She feels that all—No grass not mold
Can hide the ones she loved of old.

She talks with them. With bowed white head
Makes cheery in the homest tread,
She thinks he comes and sits with her
Whose voice was love's interpreter,
O dreamer! young again to-day,
What matter if your hair be gray?

Sometimes she thinks that round her knee
Her children play in happy glee,
And, when they tired and sleepy grow,
She sings some songs of long ago,
And on her mother's loving breast
She tucks the little ones to rest.

O dreamer! knitting all the day
Your dreams in with your stocking gray,
Yours is a happy, happy heart;
A haunted world from ours apart!
The years that turn your tresses gray
Have given, not taken, your youth to-day.

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

First Quarter—Lesson VII.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1882. MARK III.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"He that is not with me is against me."—Matthew xii, 30.

TOES AND FRIENDS.

20. And the multitude cometh together again, so that they could not so much as eat bread.

21. And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, He is beside himself.

22. And the scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils.

23. And he called them unto him, and said unto them in parables, How can Satan cast out Satan?

24. And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand.

25. And if an house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.

26. And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he can not stand, but hath an end.

27. No man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man; and then he will spoil his house.

28. Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme:

29. But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation:

30. Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit.

31. There came then his brethren and his mother, and standing without, sent unto him, calling him.

32. And the multitude sat about him, and they said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee.

33. And he answered them, saying, Who is my mother, or my brethren?

34. And he looked round about on them which sat about him, and said, Behold, my mother and my brethren!

35. For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother.

After Jesus had selected his twelve apostles he then instructed them and the multitude in the principles of his kingdom. We have his words of instruction in the Sermon on the Mount. He descended to the shore, and returned to his home at Capernaum, followed by the multitude. They soon found the house where he lodged, and they besieged him, bringing their sick. His house was thronged with applicants for aid from the great Physician. So urgent and persistent were they for help that the Master had time for neither rest nor food; his labors were incessant. I have known of rich merchants who had no time to eat. One scene I recall of one who had his little daughter to feed him with a spoon while he, upon his bed reclining, opened and read his dispatches; time to eat and rest were thus utilized by this busy man; but Jesus could not even have this small respite from labors. The friends of this merchant made no expostulations, for every hour of time meant a thousand dollars; but the friends of Jesus, his mother and brethren and others, when they heard of his incessant labors, and loss of rest and food, to save him, brought to bear against him the charge of insanity, and tried their best to interdict him, just as we would any of our relations whom we found bent on self-destruction. They went out to lay hold on him. The right thing would have been to have interdicted these friends; they were acting without reason, not Jesus; there is nothing unreasonable if our temporal affairs sometimes must give way to the soul's eternal interests. Christ saw that the saving and healings of these afflicted ones was a greater interest than mere food and rest. How this attempt to arrest him in his work, on the plea of insanity, must have stung his sensitive soul. What a wound received from his own familiar friends; yea, they of his own household. How they had misconceived him. What a want of faith in him. Was his own mother among these friends? that mother whom he had once before reproved for interfering in his great work? "Wot ye not that I must be about my Father's business." She understood not that saying. Is she still in the dark as to who her son is? His own brethren believed yet in him. How many mothers, wives and friends have sat by with no protest on their lips, no sign of disapproval, but rather, with words of encouragement, watching sons, husbands and friends destroy their souls; no time for rest, none for consideration, no time for religion, for prayer, for church. Oh! mothers, wives, why don't you appeal to God to lay hold upon them: why don't you call upon the church to interdict them? They are starving out their souls. Men may fight fire at a burning house until they faint and fall; no one hints at any insanity, but all say noble man, cheer him, cheer him. But let him fight the devil to save a soul, and people say poor fanatic. Men may shout their voices gone over a political victory dishonestly won, but let a man in church get happy because a soul is saved, and give loud cheers of victory, and he would be asked out. His explanation would have to be quick and earnest if he would be allowed to stay. Men in the world will permit a man to deal in any specialty, to any extent, except religion; he must use moderation in that if he would keep his liberty. Deceitful world, you can bear with the most exalted enthusiasm in the patriot the most devoted madness in the soldier; you can excuse the sentimental folly of the philanthropist, but the moment enthusiasm is transferred to religion, the only thing worthy of the fervor of the man's whole self, you cry, madness. Thou hypocrite; we don't believe you. Fear and policy are at the root of your objections. Thus we find Christ in his ministry fulfilling that Messianic prophecy in the Psalms which sadly tells of his bitterest opposition coming from his own familiar friends. Their conduct was at its best phrase, the policy of unbelief. They knew he was not beside himself, but they listened to the charge of insanity brought by his enemies, and fell in with it, thinking it was the best way to deliver him out of this stir and excitement, and take him back to quiet Nazareth.

His next assault was from the scribes sent down from Jerusalem. Maybe these were the deputies of the Pharisees in league with the Herodians, bent on his destruction.

They said; so they explained it in a wise way, just as we have heard scientific wiseacres in a quiet way explaining religious phenomena as personal magnetism or animal excitement. "He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of devils casteth he out devils." They whispered around this homœopathic explanation of these wonderful cures to the great edification of all that wanted the things explained upon scientific principles. But unfortunately the Physician heard them, and exploded their theory, and showed up the fallacy of their hypocrisy. He called out to them; they had whispered their explanation in undertones; they did not care to have him hear them, but he hears thoughts. He calls out to them that he may gain the attention of all, and publicly unearth these slanderers.

How can Satan cast out Satan? Satan could cast out some inferior demon who was not doing the work of destruction fast enough, and himself assume control of a human heart. But who can conceive of Satan casting himself out? If a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom can not stand. A kingdom may be torn by factions, and convulsed by intestine wars, but as long as it exists it must be a unit as against other nations who seek its conquest. Hell is an anarchy; devils are in arms against each other, blind rage and hate universally prevail. Each part is warring against each other part. Hell is an awful contradiction in itself, but, when God is concerned, hell is a cult. Behold! a graphic absurdity. See Satan rise up in all the panoply of his might to put himself down. See him falling in with Christ; how shall his kingdom stand?

Christ fully shows the folly of their words, and then he shows the guilt of such blasphemy as that which, with every evidence to the contrary, refers the works of Christ to Satan.

In this connection Christ speaks ominous words concerning the sin of blasphemy. Blasphemy is treason against God. Treason is of different degrees, in proportion to its animus. There are many phases of treason that admit of forgiveness, but here Christ warns these scribes of one order of treason, high treason, which hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation, and further warns them of the fact that they, by ascribing the work of the Spirit of God to the power of evil, were coming perilously near to it. These words of the Son of man, once heard, can never be forgotten. They have come down the ages to disturb the souls of all who read them.

What we may ask is the nature of this blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. The context helps us to understand something of its nature. To condemn Christ as a glutton, as Sabbath breaker, or as blasphemer, when he said "thy sins be forgiven thee," was to speak against the Son of man; these sins might be sins of ignorance, not implying more than narrow-minded prejudice; they may be forgiven, but to see a man delivered from the power of Satan unto God, and to watch the work of the Spirit of God, and then ascribe it to the power of Satan, this is to be out of sympathy with goodness and mercy altogether, and in such a person there is no opening, "no place for" repentance, and therefore none for forgiveness. The very capacity of goodness is destroyed by such perverted antagonism of the truth.

The Lord does not say that the scribes had committed this sin, but he hints that they are tending that way. To-day we can see this same high treason to God and his truth when the clearest proofs of Divine power and goodness are distorted into evidence that the power is evil. Human nature, in its extremest debasement, identifies itself with devil nature, and must share its doom. Matthew, in reporting these words, reports the same fact by the words "neither in this world nor in the world to come." The distinction between the two worlds was not the same to the Jewish listeners as to us; for them this world, or better this age, was the time before the coming of Christ; the world to come was the spirit's dispensation which was to follow. We live in the world to come; and Jesus meant to warn them against such sins under the rule of the Spirit. Our Lord stood on the boundary line of two ages, that of the law and the prophets and that of the kingdom of heaven, and he lets them know that this enmity against goodness has no hope in either. As fulfilling the truth of this warning we have, but to remember those first blasphemers under the new dispensation of the Spirit, Ananias and Sapphira.

This sentence of our Lord gives absolutely not even the shadow of a hope that there may be forgiveness in the world to come, if not for this sin at least for some. The world to come, in the sense of eternal world, is not here even thought of, and the doctrine of purgatory can not lean on this.

Oh! do not pin your hope upon this implication of these words. His words can not be forced into teaching that repentance, and therefore pardon, may come in the world that follows death. The darkness behind the veil is not relieved by the least gleam of hope from the words "in this world or the world to come."

In the midst of this profound discussion he is interrupted by his friends, his mother and brethren calling for him. Those were the friends who tried to lay hold of him. Hear his answer. Looking round on those who sat in circle about him, his disciples and devoted followers, he said: "Behold! my mother and my brethren." What did he mean? Was it not that spiritual relationships to God, through Christ, are above the natural relationships of kinship. There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. May we not add, by the authority of Christ's answer, than a mother or a sister. "Whosoever shall do the will of God" he recognizes as the ground of this spiritual relationship, not an outward fellowship, but inward, based upon holiness, for to do the will of God is the essence of holiness, and the last expression and fullest God ever gave us of his will is to believe on him whom he has sent.

Worldly Pleasures and Amusements.

MR. EDITOR: Worldly pleasures and amusements evidently belong to the works of the flesh. The Apostle Paul, in his Epistle to the Galatians, enumerates the works of the flesh to which they were most inclined; some of which are wrought principally, if not entirely, in the mind of the individual, and yet they are called works of the flesh. Hence it is clear that the apostle does not, by the works of the flesh, mean the body or sensual appetites and inclinations only; but the corruption of human nature, as it spreads through all the powers of the soul, as well as the members of the body.

Do we not hazard our Christian character and hope of entering into rest after death, when, to gratify fleshly lusts, we yield obedience to the inclinations of human nature to indulge in worldly pleasures and amusements? It would seem so if there is any force in what the apostle says, for his language is very explicit: "That they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

How it is that pleasures, so short in duration and so unsatisfying in their nature, are so much sought after by individuals who profess to have a sincere desire to flee the wrath to come and to be saved from their sins (when the pleasure of our holy religion is so much more to be desired) I can not understand, unless they profess to have what in reality they have not, or have not the moral courage to resist the tempter when solicited to participate in these worldly pleasures and amusements.

The pleasure derived from indulging in worldly amusements is transitory and vain, only calculated to choke "the good word of God" in the heart, so that it bring no fruit to perfection, pervert the taste, degrade the mind, and bind the soul in shackels of never-ending woe. They lead us to poverty and disgrace. While indulging in them we "regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands."

His judgments are not in all our thoughts, nor do we feel with any great force the responsibilities that rest upon us: And more than this: While engaged in revellings, we not only reject all offers of reconciliation, but actually forget the God in whom we "live, move and have our being."

In these amusements the wicked seek their happiness, and are much surprised that the righteous find no pleasure in them.

Indulgence in worldly pleasures and amusements is characteristic of the sinner, and a proof of folly, as evinced by holy writ; for, says the inspired word, "the heart of the wise is in the house of mourning, but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth."

No church member, or members, fully alive to Christ, or groaning so to be, taketh pleasure in worldly amusements. "Walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost," they have perfect peace; but, apart from conformity to the will of God, there is no pleasure for his people.

No better evidence need we have that a church is spiritually dead than that her members delight in worldly amusements and pleasures, for "she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." Many of the young members of our church, and old ones too, are being led away from Christ by worldly pleasures and amusements, and are falling from their own steadfastness. Sad thought! But does all the blame rest on them? Have their parents given, and are they still giving, all diligence to prevent their children from making shipwreck of the faith? Has the church of God ceased not to raise her warning voice when the tempter was nigh? Has the minister's trump given no uncertain sound when the enemy approached the fold? Or have we all been negligent of the best interests of those who are near and dear to us? I fear we all have part and lot in this matter.

Let us examine our hearts, repent of our sins, reform our lives, asking God to forgive, that the blood of our own and our neighbor's children may not be required at our hands.

M. CLAYTON CALLAWAY.

"Four Bishops."

MR. EDITOR: Rev. Angus Dowling, under the above caption, has an article in the ADVOCATE of the nineteenth instant containing some utterances to which exception may justly be taken. He seems to think his article will be fruitful of several things: "It will, no doubt, save the General Conference a great deal of talking and planning." "It will help to shorten the session," etc. Does the General Conference talk and plan as to the election of Bishops? I suppose not. There might be discussion and difference of opinion as to the number of Bishops to be elected, but as to the class of men to be elected "talking and planning" would appear to be out of place.

But what I object to most seriously is a certain qualification for the Episcopacy as advocated by Bro. Dowling. He says: "A man, to be qualified for the office and work of a Bishop, should be a man of one calling and one work." "I would rule out every aspirant to that office whose whole life-work has not been in the pastoral ministry;" "would rule out every man whose ministerial life has been broken into sections by other callings and offices in the church."

Now all this, taken together, is open to most serious objection, as constituting the very worst form of electioneering—electioneering in favor of a class. The writer of the article in question would "rule out" all school presidents and professors, all editors, missionary secretaries, etc., and would say to the General Conference: "The class to which I belong is the class from which to select Bishops;" for, if I am not mistaken, Bro. Dowling's whole ministerial life has been in the pastoral work.

Is not Bro. Dowling unfortunate in the use of the phrase, "aspirant to that office?" Who is aspiring? Thanks be unto God, our Southern Methodism has hitherto been remarkably free from anything of that sort, and, I am constrained to believe, is still free from it.

But why this discrimination as against those whose "ministerial life has been broken into sections by other callings and offices in the church?" Had the General Conference heretofore pursued the course indicated by the article in question the church had been deprived of the faithful labors in the Episcopal office of our present Bishops with, perhaps, a single exception. And so of some of our honored dead. No more devoted and laborious men than our Bishops, of the present and the past, could have been found, and yet nearly all of them have filled "other offices in the church" than the pastorate.

It is freely admitted that an experience in the different, and especially the harder and more difficult, fields of ministerial labor is a very desirable if not necessary qualification for the Episcopacy. But the mere fact that a man has presided over an institution of learning, or edited a paper, does not in the least disqualify him for the sacred office.

My text comes at the close of my remarks, and is found in Acts i, 24: "And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen."

Let the number of Bishops to be elected be discussed; let the question of necessity for any election at all be debated, but let us not propose any man or any class of men in particular for election.

TIMS. CAMERON.

BLACK HAWK, Miss., Jan. 27, 1882.

"The Law as Regards Conference Claimants."

MR. EDITOR: Under the above caption, and over the signature of Bibgyer, appears an article in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of January 19, 1882. Now, while I seldom ever write an article, either for publication or the waste basket, and this is because I see so many others more gifted in this important art of informing the public mind, especially important on religious subjects, yet I can not refrain from giving publicity to my hearty indorsement of the views set forth by Bro. Bibgyor. I hope that every member elect to the next General Conference will read that article, and ponder the subject well, if he has any thought of changing the law as it now stands in our Discipline regulating the distribution of the Conference fund.

In addition to what Bro. Bibgyor says on this subject, I can not see how any one can read understandingly the first sixteen verses of the twentieth chapter of Matthew and think for a moment that it would be "a just and equitable gage" to regulate the distribution of the Conference fund by the number of years a minister has been engaged in actual itinerant service. For while this may have reference to the call of the Gentiles into the church of Christ, yet who dare say that it does not apply, and may not have been designed by our Lord to refer to the support and care of the gospel laborers in his vineyard.

Some may think that Bro. Bibgyor's illustration case is an extreme one, still there are many just such cases in our Conferences. But let us take, possibly, a more common one.

A. has served thirty years, ten of which have been on hard works and very scant support; the next five he has more pleasant works and a better support; the next fifteen he has had stations with good salaries and fine educational advantages for his children, who by this time have become mostly self-sustaining. He has a home and a small farm, which, if properly managed, will very nearly support himself and family, though he may be old and feeble himself.

B. has served fifteen years, ten on the same kind of works that A. served—hard works and scant support. The next five are the same kind of works that A. served—more pleasant and better support. But just here his health fails, and he, like A., is superannuated. He did not have fifteen years in stations and on good salaries like A. His children have not had the educational advantages that A.'s children had, and they are not self-sustaining. He has no home or farm, he has no means of support save his own feeble strength. Now, in this condition, homeless and almost penniless, is it an "equitable gage" that gives B. but half as much as A.? Think on these things.

A. C. HENDLEY.

Byram, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Spring Ridge circuit, to which I was assigned at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, is composed of four preaching places, and is about thirty miles in circumference. I reached the circuit December 30, and began work the first Sunday in January, and, though the weather has been very inclement and the roads bad, I have made my first round without missing an appointment.

My people have received me into their homes and hearts, and are doing what they can to make me comfortable and happy. God bless them.

While on my first round I visited as much as I could between showers, and made inquiry as to the spiritual state of the church. I find the cause of Christ not prospering as it ought. While a majority of the members are steadfast in the faith, and abounding in the work of the Lord, others have broken their religious vows and are drifting away. Can they not 'come back' to their Father's house? Will they not? God help them come. I can report only one Sunday-school on my work in successful operation. We expect to organize others on our second round. Parents seem to be much interested in the education of their children. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is spoken of in the highest terms by those who subscribe for it in the bounds of my charge. It ought to be in every family, especially Methodist, and I will give diligence, both in public and in private, to impress this truth upon the minds and hearts of my people, and secure their subscriptions. Owing to a failure in crops, caused by the drought last year, the people are not as prosperous, financially, as they otherwise would have been; however, only a few will have to go in debt for a few supplies. I am pleased with my work and people; the outlook is hopeful, and we pray that God will give success to our labors during this Conference year.

Your Brother,

M. CLAYTON CALLAWAY.

JANUARY 27, 1882.

Rebaptism.

In the course of my ministry, some years ago, I had a similar instance as that of E. M. G. It was an old lady, some sixty years old, a lady whose head was as white almost as snow. She was dissatisfied with her baptism—was baptized in infancy. She was a Methodist, and therefore believed in infant baptism, but the grounds of her dissatisfaction was that her father was a wicked man and a disbeliever when she received the ordinance. She was dissatisfied, and was growing more so. I utterly failed to convince her, and therefore rebaptized her. I have always thought I did right, think so yet. Her conscience was satisfied.

B. T. P.

JONESTOWN, Mississippi.

Obituaries.

MIMS.—DAVID MIMS, the subject of this brief obituary notice, was born in Lincoln county, Ga., May 22, 1807. He was the youngest of ten children, and in his infancy was bereaved of his parents, and left to the guardianship of his brother, Marshall, who had the care and management of himself, and of his brothers, Seaborn and Shadrack, who still survive him. These brothers all removed to Alabama in the year 1820, and settled in Autauga county. When about sixteen years of age he professed religion and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in its communion lived an acceptable and devoted member until the day of his death.

On the twenty-sixth of May, 1831, he was married to Miss Sophie Addison, who still survives him, together with four sons and one daughter.

In 1842 he removed to Summerfield, and became identified with the Centenary Institute as a trustee. Here his family grew up, and were educated, and here and in the immediate neighborhood he lived for forty years the warm friend of the church and an ornament to society.

In the character of David Mims, deceased, these traits were most marked, reverence for the Deity, love of truth, devotion, and constancy in his friendships, purity of conversation and kindness of manner. He was a scrupulous observer of the Sabbath, always making Saturday his preparation day. He was strictly temperate. He was a cultivated gentleman, fond of reading, and was one of the men who lived to purpose. As might be expected of such a man, and such a Christian, he had a family altar, and nothing but sickness prevented the evening and morning sacrifice. It is worthy of note, too, that he was never known to murmur at the loss of property or repine under the great afflictions of life.

The deceased was the long and tried friend of the writer of this brief notice, with whom we have spent many happy hours, and whose friendship we hope to renew and perpetuate in that happy home where friends shall never part.

A. H. MITCHELL.

BLACK.—MRS. SUSAN CORNELIA BLACK was born in Tippah county, Miss., September 28, 1847, the daughter of P. C. and S. J. Bishop, and died at Bolton, Hinds county, Miss., December 13, 1881.

In early life she consecrated herself to God's service. During the summer of 1861, while age raged on every side, the Prince of Peace set his seal upon her heart and brow. Then she joined the Harrisville Baptist Church, of this county, under the ministry of Rev. W. H. Gallman, by profession of faith in Christ as her personal Savior. This profession she continued to adorn by the holy life and Christian death she was called to die.

The character of Sister Black was one of more than ordinary excellence. Her religion was like the peace of an inhabitant of a gently flowing river. She delighted in the public worship of God as well as in private devotion. She thought more of her duty to God than her partiality for any particular mode of church. Eminently liberal in her Christian views she entered heartily into the work of her Methodist Church, thus helping to the rapid organization of this place. In our Woman's Missionary Society she was among the first and most active to work, discharge [illegible] devolved upon her, as the record [illegible] with [illegible] fidelity, which was the [illegible] of her [illegible] character. Though naturally timid, she would not shirk the duty of praying in the social meeting. On these occasions we have seen her countenance lit up with such a glow of holy serenity as made us think her communion must be sweet and soul-reviving.

At the early age of eighteen, viz: December 7, 1865, she was united in holy wedlock to Mr. James M. Black, who was only a few years older. Their young lives so fully and beautifully blended that they became joined "as one." Several children were born to them, of whom five were living when she went home to God, gloriously followed.

Good and helpful as was her example in Church relations, at home it shone with even brighter lustre. She lived to her affections. The energetic housekeeper, the devoted wife, the tenderly [illegible] thoughtful neighbor [illegible] by all who were favored with her society.

She went joyously along [illegible] bright valley, in the midst of [illegible] while the feeble flickering flame was fanning out in the wind that passed over it, her spirit expatiated in the life to come. Her tongue alternately [illegible] praising him who "forgiveth all iniquities," and expecting all about to meet her "up there." Truly that dying chamber was like the anti-chamber of Heaven. It is well with our dear sister. But nothing short of the grace of Christ so freely given can comfort those who are left bereaved.

J. F. DRAKE.

BLACK.—NETTIE, eldest daughter of Bro. J. M. and Sister S. C. Black, was born in Copiah county, Mississippi, July 10, 1868. She was ill with typho-malarial fever when her dear mother passed away and lingered here but ten days longer. She died December 23, 1881, at the age of thirteen years, five months and thirteen days.

Just budding into lovely young womanhood, an opened, all-wise hand transplanted her to the Paradise above, to bloom more beautifully there than the rough winds of earth would admit. Gentle, loving, earnest and faithful, she was true to duty and obedient in all things, at home, in school, and Sunday-school. We can see now why our Nettie was taken from where she seemed to be so much needed. But God knoweth. We rest in the thought: He sees the end from the beginning.

Will not all who read, pray that this family circle, broken now, and its links widely scattered, may be reunited in a perfect bond around the throne of God.

J. P. D.

WELLS.—KATE LOUISE, daughter of Capt. H. T. and Laura A. Wells, died at the residence of Rev. H. V. Johnson, Brookhaven, Miss., December 7, 1881, aged seventeen years.

Only in sighs and tears and sobs can we talk of Katie. We have tried but can find no words soft enough, no whispers soft and low enough to tell our sorrow, yet we feel some tribute must be offered to her memory! How we all loved her and her death has cast a deep shadow upon our hearts that can not soon be lifted, and in the darkness it is so hard to trace the hand of Providence, though we try to trust it. We know God's ways are past finding out, but never did they seem shrouded in deeper mystery! Katie was so young to die, she was one of "those happy souls that love to live," and was worthy of life. God and her loved ones had lavished upon her every blessing that could make life sweet and earth attractive, beautiful and intelligent, petted and indulged, yet amid all these temptations she was as gentle and artless as a child, with sympathy for every thing human, a lover of Christ and an earnest worker in his church. The rose had not yet with the morning dew was not lovlier than her character, and the snow white lilies that bloomed at her mother's door were not whiter than her soul. Young as she was she seem to have learned the great lesson of life: "That happiness alone can be found in life's duties." So unlike the heartlessness of fashion, the selfish lovers of ease that of late years we meet with everywhere and that are a shame to womanhood.

Katie was the light of her home, and there is a blackness there now that can be felt: she was its pride, its deified idol, and she has left it dismantled and in ruins! She was her father's and mother's crowning jewel, and, shorn of their honors, they sit in the dust, humbled indeed! But oh! the wonderful mystery of grace! beneath this chastening rod they have been able to say "though he slay me yet will I trust in thee." Katie was at Whitworth College busy with her studies when she took typhoid fever; her parents were sent for and together with her loved teachers and friends nursed her to the last. In death she was not afraid and among her last whispers to earth were these words to her mother: "I am dying but I am happy."

Darling Katie, precious young friend farewell! Earth seems poorer since you have left us, but heaven seems nearer and dearer.

V. D. A.

FOSTER.—MARY, infant daughter of Dr. D. W. and Melissa Foster, died, near Opelousas, La., January 18, 1882. Her stay on earth was transient, she was with us only two short months and a half. Like a ray of sunshine she came to brighten our home and gladden our hearts; then flickered and passed quickly away. God loaned us the tender and beautiful bud, for a few days, and then saw best to remove it from earth and transplant it in heaven. The Lord gave it, the Lord hath taken it, blessed be the name of the Lord. The dear little baby's sufferings are over, and we must go up to heaven to meet it, and be forever with Jesus and all our loved ones.

EMMA FOSTER.

REED.—[illegible]d, at Edgefield Court House, South Carolina, December 27, 1881, after a brief illness, from the effects of diptheria, BLANDINA aged five years, eight months and four days, only daughter of Ellie A. (deceased) and Isaac A. Reed.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1882.

DROPPING A SEED.

The land was still; the skies were gray with weeping;
Into the soft brown earth the seed she cast;
"I sow," she cried, "will come the time of reaping,
The golden time when clouds and tears are past!"
There came a whisper through the autumn haze,
"Yea, I am sure; and it after many days."

Hour after hour she marks the tiful glooming
Of sunlight stealing through the cloudy rift;
Hour after hour she lingers, fully dreaming,
To see the fair soil round the dead leaves drift;
Or for some small green sign of life she prays;
Have I not watched and waited many days?"

At early morning, chilled and sad, she hearkens
To spring-day winds that through the poplars blow;
For ever hill and plain the heaven darkens,
Her field is covered with a shroud of snow;
Ah, Lord! she sighs, are these thy loving ways?
He answers: "Spake I not of many days?"

The snow-drop blooms; the purple violet glistens
On banks of moss that take the sparkling showers;
Half-clothed, half-hiding yet, she strays and listens
To gladness singing to the shy young flowers;
A little longer still the love delays
The promised blessing—"After many days."

O happy world, she cries, the sun is shining!
Above the soil I see the springing green;
I could not trust his word without repining,
I would not wait in peace for things unseen;
Forgive me, Lord, my soul is full of praise;
My doubting heart prolonged thy "many days."

—Sunday Magazine.

The Ministry of Little Children.

Bishop H. N. McTyeire, D. D. New Orleans Christian Advocate, 1853.

Some while ago, in a mood for such statistics, our eye fell on the item that in one year the deaths in four Eastern cities amounted to 43,432, and of this number, 21,767 were children under five years of age.

The last sentence fixed our attention: 21,767 children perished during the year—We prefer to say, died. This in four cities only? Of the balance of the 43,432, who can tell their eternal destiny? Some to heaven, some to hell? But of these little ones none can doubt. Taking the aggregate of other cities and villages, and the country at large, we comprehend a fact that finds expression at the Saviour's lips, "Of such is the kingdom of God," and in the sacred couplet

Millions of infant souls compose
The family above.

The adults had worked out their mission, or failed to do it. But these little ones? had they no mission? Was their being a failure? Lived they, and suffered, and died, and is the world all the same as though they had not been? Nay, verily. There was a precious ministry, and such as they only could fulfill.

What a waste of life! exclaims the worldly economist, as he figures up the statistics of population. They lived in vain, is the thought of the man ambitious of making his mark on the age. Mere blanks, beings in vain, flowers that came to no fruit, broken off, fallen, faded, is the thought and feeling of many.

But Christian philosophy presents a more ennobling and comforting view.

How cold, selfish, would this world of ours be without these children! They preach the evangel of beauty and innocence; they break the incrustations of worldliness; they touch the chords vibrating solemnly, sweetly, and reserved only for their tiny hands; they stir in the heart hidden wells of feeling; they preserve human sympathies from utter ossification; they deeply enrich our hard nature.

Geologists often show us, deep down under the earth's layers, the clear and well-defined print of a frail leaf, or the track of a little lord, made in the dim ages past. These have left imperishable memorials of themselves on the face of a world from which whole species, and races, and kingdoms have passed away without a record.

The Bible makes many records, minute and kind, of the death of little children. They have their significance. Take the case of David's family. We lose sight of the sickness, and suffering and death of the unweaned child, in the effects produced upon the royal parent. It is not saying too much, that a large proportion of those who are saved will be saved by the ministry of little children.

Summing up the moral results of the year, we must put credit all to orators, and presses, and institutions. These little preachers have visited homes, and softened the hearts of the multitudes, and drawn them heavenward, where other voices have not been heeded.

The strong man nursed to tears, has bowed over the little coffin and wept. Under what sermon was he ever so melted down? What other preacher ever availed to bow that pride of strength, and unseal that fountain of tears?

The gay, worldly-minded mother sits silent, and sheds secret tears, and prays; and, peradventure, as these two hearts are drawn closer by our common grief, they think of a common home in heaven, and resolve, through grace, as the babe can not come to them, they will go to it.

"When our little boy died," has been the beginning of pilgrimage for many bereaved parents. "When the baby died," dates impressions on the family circle that have matured to godliness.

The old may outlive their friends; the middle-aged may make enemies who are glad to be rid of them, or, wandering off, die where none lament; but the babe is without prejudice in life, and mighty in death. It is God's messenger of reconciliation, his flag of truce in this world of enmities, and envies, and wrath, and strife. It has strong hold on two hearts, if no more. The empty crib, the half-worn shoe, the soft locks of hair, that few may see, prolong the painful yet pleasing memory of the angel-visitor that looked in upon us and smiled, and went to heaven, bidding us, amid care and sorrow, to follow on.

There is something so peculiarly affecting in the loss of a child that we sympathize with the parent who said he believed no minister prepared to bury another's child who had not buried one of his own.

There's many an empty cradle,
There's many an empty bed,
There's many an empty bosom
Whose joy and light are fled;
For thick in every grave-yard
The little hillocks lie,
And every hillock represents
An angel in the sky.

In this way heaven is receiving large contributions from earth. Next to the conversion of a soul, the enemy of God and man may take least pleasure in the death of a child. His snares are all prevented, and his prey surely lost.

We bless God for our creation. The opening of a career of immortal existence is in itself a great event—a mission of praise and glory, which death can not frustrate. Though the voice of praise swell as the sound of many waters, and the celestial harpers are numberless, yet his ear detects each new voice and joyful string, and the praise of these little ones glorifieth him. In this view, the babe, even of a few days, and sickly—that goeth from the cradle to the grave—is of more infinite importance than material worlds.

A Hindoo woman said to a missionary, "Surely, your Bible was written by a woman." "Why?" "Because it says so many kind things for women. Our Shastahs never refer to us but in reproach." Parents who have watched by the couch of suffering innocence, and seen the desire of their eyes taken away at a stroke, have found themselves busy running over the Scriptures for faith, and gathering up, as a stay for their hearts, what God has said for their little children. How full, and precious and unequivocal are the passages of comfort! The conclusion is, Surely, the Bible was given by a parent. And so it was. He knows the heart of a parent, and works in it and by it to the glory of his grace. He weaves out of this exquisite material silken cords that draw mightily. He touches stricken souls with this divine polarity, and then sets the object of affection in the skies.

O prattling tongues; never formed to speech, and now still in death, how eloquently you preach to us! O little pattering feet, leading the way, how many, through rude and stormy scenes, are following after you to heaven! We thank God for your ministry, and if it be in vain, the fault and the loss will be all our own.

O'Dea on Suicide.

The recent publication of Morselli's work on suicide in the International Scientific series, with its fine elaboration of statistics and its masterly analysis and synthesis of the facts in relation to voluntary self-destruction, makes competition hazardous for another author dealing with the same question. The significance, however, of two thoughtful works appearing almost simultaneously from the press on suicide is worth noting. When the difference between the works is understood, it will of necessity attract readers to both. The character of the work of the Italian doctor is well described in its sub-title, "An Essay on Comparative Moral Statistics," while the full title of the work before us by James J. O'Dea, M. D., of New York, "Suicide: Studies on Its Philosophy, Causes and Prevention," indicates its more ambitious scope. To the purely scientific mind the work of Moselli will possess the higher attractiveness; but that of Mr. O'Dea, while concealing the mechanism of his calculations, gives more space to the historical, legal and theological aspects of suicide. In this particular Mr. O'Dea's work will form an admirable introduction to the study of Morselli's. It is to be regretted that Mr. O'Dea has not given the authorities for all his tables and that he has not given the dates they represent. In view of the known increase of the fatal act in civilized countries, his figures must be taken with caution. Generally speaking, he reaches the same conclusions as the European savans as to the periodicity and causation of suicide, yet some discrepancies are notable. We miss from his book a consideration of the effect of religion as a restraint as shown in the modern statistics. His chapter on prevention is more valuable than the Italian doctors, inasmuch as it treats of particular frames of mind distinctly recognizable as suicidal, and which, however, they confer upon dementia, can not be set down as those of insanity. Religious and moral training are the general preventives he prescribes, but his hints upon medical advice and treatment are excellent also. Melancholy, however induced, is one of the most frequent fore-runners of suicide. Sometimes the melancholy is of physical origin; bile and malaria, particularly when their effects are exaggerated by the use of alcohol, are especially fruitful in predisposing to self-murder. We can not do better than quote Mr. O'Dea's sensible remarks on the melancholy mood:

"There is a particular faculty which every one should cultivate who is disposed to melancholy—the faculty of analyzing states of feeling so as to separate facts from impressions. In seasons of gloom our impressions are distorted and much exaggerated. We feel and fear either without real cause, or a great deal more than the facts warrant. If we could mentally separate our feelings from their actual or imaginary causes; if, as the homely but striking expression puts it, we would take our hearts between our hands and study them, we might often succeed in convincing ourselves that not the facts but some fault in our own minds and bodies is responsible for the mental agitation and depression we suffer. There is much truth and wisdom in Montaigne's remark that 'Things do not torment a man so much as the opinion he has of things.' Not only, then, should this faculty be cultivated, but indulgence in any substance which, like intoxicating drink, limits it for ready use should be carefully avoided."

Relief of the digestive system and the procurement of sleep by proper means are things for the man or woman with melancholy to seek. Change of occupation and of scene are powerful aids; but the deeper the roots of morality and religion in one's being the less will the mind harbor suicidal thoughts.—New York Herald.

PRAYER IN FAITH NOT FAITH IN PRAYER.—There is a vast difference between prayer in faith and faith in prayer—a difference as vast in their character as in their commonness. Faith in prayer is very common; almost everybody has more or less of it. Prayer in faith is anything but common; so uncommon, in fact, that our Lord questions if he shall find any of it on the earth when he comes back to this world again. Prayer in faith is a commanded duty; faith in prayer is neither commanded nor justifiable. Prayer in faith is always reverent and spiritual; faith in prayer is too often superstitious and presuming, although again it is the unconscious reliance of reverent and spiritually-minded—but sadly mistaken—Christian disciples. What has been the nature of your praying—that of prayer in faith, or of faith in prayer?

Praying in faith is making known our requests unto God, in full confidence that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us; and, that according to our faith, an answer to our prayers will be granted us. Having faith in prayer is believing that because certain prayers are offered certain results will follow; that the praying will secure the thing prayed for. Praying in faith comes of an abiding confidence in the person prayed to; the confidence is in him; it is based on a knowledge of what he is, and on a conviction that he is every way worthy to be trusted. Faith in prayer is a blind or a presuming reliance on an agency of good—an unauthorized dependence on mere human means. Praying in faith is the act of a simple-hearted child of God.—Sunday School Times.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—The Moravian missionaries on the Moskito Coast write of a remarkable awakening. The accounts read like those of early Methodist revivals. It began at Magdala some months ago. Mr. C. A. Martin writes from Blewfields that "it is spreading along the whole coast," and from all sides calls come for assistance. At Blewfields over a hundred persons were received into the church the previous week, and "at the evening services there is such a crowd that we can not kneel down for prayer." Mr. Martin goes on to say that on the previous Sunday, while on his way to visit a parishioner, a woman met him and begged him to come to the church, where her husband had been praying three days and could not "obtain peace." He found the man prostrate in the church, prayed with him, and sent him home rejoicing. Just before the public service he was summoned to another man, who lay prostrate on the ground. The public service was followed by a second and a third. Mr. H. Peper writes from Magdala that previous to the revival there prevailed in that place a "terrible degree of gross immorality and godlessness." It was the worst town in the country. "Now," he says, "all is changed. The most violent drunkards, who were objects of general dread, are now, like lambs, sitting at the feet of the Good Shepherd. I have never heard such prayers as here, they appear to proceed from the lowest depths of hearts that are deeply touched by divine grace. Every dwelling seems to be a house of prayer."

—China's Millions, for January, publishes a map and some very interesting diagrams of China, and shows the progress made by missions in that country since 1865. It appears that in all of the eighteen provinces save one (Kwang-si, one of the two smallest in population) there are missionaries. In 1865 there were no missionaries in any of the eleven inland provinces; now there are five in Ganhway, nine in Khang-si, four in Kwei-chau, four in Si-ch'uen, eleven in Shansi, three in Kan-suh, four in Shensi, one in Honan, one in Hunan, three in Yunnan. The China Inland Mission alone, according to these diagrams, is represented in Gan-hway, Kwei-chau, Si-ch'uen, Kan-suh, Shansi, Honan, Hunan, and Yunnan. The diagrams are in squares, each of which represents 250,000 population, and the population of each province is seen at a glance. The five largest provinces are on the seaboard and the three smallest are inland provinces.

—The gospel is winning its way in the New Hebrides. Ten years ago there was but one island in the group that could be called Christian, and now they are all open to the gospel. One great drawback to the work is the fact that twenty different languages or dialects, are spoken by the natives, requiring as many different translations of the Bible. In one island the people contributed 88,500 in arrow-root, to pay for the printing and circulation of the Scriptures.

—The Year Book of the Unitarian Churches for 1882 gives, as the whole number of churches, 344, seven more than for 1881. The whole number of ministers is 401. Of the list for 1881 fourteen died the past year—a larger number than for any previous year. Ten were graduated from the two divinity schools. The names of four women are among the list of ministers.

—A Yale student, who was to be a foreign missionary, was rather jeeringly asked by a classmate years ago for "the first bushel of idols" he should persuade the heathen to give up. He went to Japan, and has already collected and sent home barrels full, which were furnished for the purpose by converts.

—There are 43 missionary Bishops in the Protestant Episcopal Church, each receiving $3,000 and having charge of about 400 missionaries. Three hundred of those labor among white people, 41 among colored people, and 32 among Indians.

—Reports come from Burmah that after five years' labor of the native Karen missionaries among the Kakkyens, a peculiarly murdered race, six of that people and one Shan give evidence of conversion.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Part of the few French Vaudois now living in the Valley of Freissiniere are melting away under the adverse influences of climate and soil, and it is proposed by Dean Frederantle, Mons. E. Revoillaud and other friends of this historic people to raise funds sufficient to remove them to Algiers, where life can be maintained under easier circumstances. An appeal put forth in behalf of this cause says: "It would be a lasting regret and humiliation were we to leave them longer a prey to poverty and distraction, especially at a time when the great Protestant family everywhere enjoys such abundant prosperity." Contributions are received by the American and Foreign Christian Union, 10 Bible House, New York City.—New York Independent.

—The condition of the Jews in Russia is attracting general attention in England. The lord mayor of London, in response to a request by Cardinal Manning, Archbishop Tait, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and others, has called a public meeting for February 1, to make a declaration of opinion relative to the persecution which continues to bring disaster on the Semitic race in the Czar's dominions. The Journal de St. Petersbourg comments angrily on this movement in England and declares that the accounts of anti-Jewish riots are exaggerated.

—The Emmanuel Baptist Church, Chicago, reconstructed, at a cost of $60,000, out of the partially burned Michigan Avenue Church, was dedicated Sunday morning, December 25, Dr. Lorimer, the pastor, preaching the sermon. About $21,000 are needed to pay last bills. Of this sum $16,000 were obtained on Sunday, January 1. The audience room is very fine, and will seat about 2,000 people.

—The organ of the clericals in Rome says: "The German Center Party has resolved to introduce in the Reichstag a bill repealing the law by which abuses by ecclesiastics in the exercise of their functions are punished. The government will thereby be put to a test. If the government accepts the bill, there will be peace; if not, the empire will fall back into the position from which it apparently wishes to escape."

—The Reformed Episcopal Church has been in existence eight years, beginning with nine clergymen, including Bishop Cummins, and twenty laymen. It now has one hundred and ten clergymen and about seven thousand communicants. It has church property valued at $315,000, exclusive of incumbrances.

—At the annual session in Philadelphia last week of the general committee of the Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, it was reported that during the past year the receipts were $200,001.71, and the disbursements $180,222.75, and that 115 churches were aided.

—The United Brethren Methodists have a law, says the New York Independent, for the prevention of too much activity in the making of doctrinal literature. No preacher or lay member even may publish a book or pamphlet on doctrine without the approbation of the annual Conference. This rule is, we judge, effectual.

—Among the nominations made by Free Presbyteries for successor to Prof. Robertson Smith in Aberdeen College are the names of the Rev. Messrs. C. C. Cameron, W. G. Emslie, W. Findlay, and R. Smith. The friends of the ousted professor are said to favor Mr. Emslie.

—The general summary of missionary labor in the Seventh-Day Adventist Church for the year past shows that in twenty-seven Annual Conferences in this country, in England, in Switzerland, and in Norway six hundred and three members were added to the churches.

—In Virginia the Southern Methodists have 108,500 members; the Baptists, 207,559; the Presbyterians, 24,604; the Episcopalians, 12,778; the Lutherans, 14,000; the Disciples of Christ, 13,500. The Roman Catholics report a population of 17,000.

—The English Liberation Society has issued a circular for a new campaign, in which the opinion is expressed that the present is a favorable time to press the question of disestablishment, with a view of inciting Parliament to action.

—The New York Friends report an increase of 199 members above all losses, during the past year. This unusual gain is ascribed to the influence of revival meetings, which are now permitted.

—Presbyterian Church members form about one-eighth of the church membership of South Carolina.

—There are 568 Baptist Churches in Pennsylvania, with a membership of 61,572.

Our Young People.

LITTLE BIRD WITH ROSY RED.

BY MARY E. BRADLEY.

When the winds of winter blow,
And the air is thick with snow,
Drifting over hill and hollow,
Whitening all the naked trees,
Then the bluebird and the jay
And the oriole fly away,
Where the bobolink and swallow
Flew before them of their case.

You may look, and look in vain,
For you will not see again
Any flash of blue or yellow
Flitting deep and window by;
They have spread their dainty wings,
All the sunshine-loving things,
Gone to pipe away their mellow
Tunes beneath a southern sky.

But we are not left alone,
Though the summer birds have flown,
Though the honeybees have vanished,
And the kitty-dills are dead;
Still a cheery ringing note
From a clear melodious throat,
Tells that winter-less not banished
Little bird with breast red.

Fly away, your sunny bird!
Sweeter song I never heard,
For it seems to say, Remember
God, our Father, sits above,
Though the world is full of wrong,
Though the winter days are long,
He can fill the bleak December
With the sunshine of his love.

—St. Nicholas.

The Fall of a Mountain.

BY DAVID KER.

Some seventy years ago an old man sat at the door of his cottage in the Swiss village of Goldau enjoying the warmth of the summer sunshine, and the view of the fresh green valley dappled here and there with dark clumps of trees. All around, the great purple mountains stood out against the sky, as if keeping guard over the pretty little village in their midst, with its tiny toy-huts clustered beneath the shadow of the neat white church, like chickens nestling under the wing of the mother hen.

A big, florid, jolly-looking man came striding up the path, and held out his hand to the old peasant, with a hearty "Good-day, Neighbor Kraus."

"Good-day, Neighbor Schwartz. Fine weather to-day."

"Beautiful. We'll have a famous harvest this year, please God."

"I hope so, neighbor. Won't you sit down a minute? It's warm walking."

"Thanks; I will. Holloa? what's the matter over yonder?"

Right opposite them, five thousand feet overhead, towered the dark mass of the Rossberg, the highest of the surrounding mountains. Just as Schwartz spoke its huge outline seemed to be agitated by a slight tremulous motion, like the nodding of a plume of feathers.

"Well, my friend, what are you staring at? Did you never see the trees shaking in the wind before?"

"Of course; but it seemed to me somehow as if it wasn't only the trees that shook, but the whole mountain."

"You're easily scared," chuckled the old man. "I suppose you are thinking of the old saying that the Rossberg is to fall some day. Bah! they've been saying so ever since I was a child, and it hasn't fallen yet."

Schwartz laughed, and the two friends went on talking. But suddenly the visitor started up with a look of unmistakable terror; and no wonder. His spiked staff, which he had stuck carelessly into the ground beside him when he sat down, was moving to and fro of itself.

"Good gracious! do you see that, Father Kraus? And look at those birds yonder, flying, screaming away from the trees on the Rossberg! Something is wrong, say what you will."

At that moment Hans Godrel, the miller, came flying past, shouting, "Run for your lives! The stream's dried up, and the always comes before an earthquake or an avalanche. Run!"

"Pooh! I'll have time to fill my pipe again," said old Kraus, coolly producing his tobacco pouch.

But Schwartz was too thoroughly frightened to wait another moment. Down the hill he flew like a madman, and had barely got clear of the village, when the earth shook under his feet so violently as to throw him down. He sprang up again just in time to see poor old Kraus's cottage vanish in a whirl of dust like a bursting bubble. The next moment there came a terrific crash, followed by another so much louder that it seemed to shake the very sky. In a moment all was as dark as night, and amid the gloom could be heard a medley of fearful sounds—the rending of strong timbers, the hollow rumble of falling rocks and gravel, the crash of wrecked buildings, the shrieks of the doomed inmates, and the roar of angry waves from the lake below, as if all its waters were breaking loose at once.

The last house of the village, on the side farthest from the Rossberg, was that of Antoine Sopel, the wood-cutter, who at the first alarm snatched up two of his children, and made for the opposite hillside, calling to his wife to follow with the other two. But the youngest, Marianne, a little girl of six, had just run back into the house, and before her mother could reach her, the first crash came. The terrified woman seized the other girl, and fled without looking behind her.

But the old servant, Francoise, could think of her little favorite even under the shadow of coming destruction. She darted into the house, and had just caught the child in her arms, when the tremendous din of the final crash told her that it was too late. In an instant the house was lifted bodily from its place, and spun round like a top. The child was torn from her clasp, and she felt herself thrown violently forward, the strong timbers falling to pieces around her like a pack of cards. Still, however, the brave woman struggled to free herself; but the weight that kept her down defied her utmost strength. For her own safety she cared little, although a violent pain in her head and a numbness along her left arm told her that she was severely hurt. But where was the child?

"Marianne!" cried she, in desperation.

"Here I am," answered a tiny voice, seemingly not far from her. "I'm not hurt a bit, only there's something holding me down; and I can see light overhead quite plain. Won't they come and take us out soon?"

"No, there's no hope of that," said the old woman, feebly; "this is the day of doom for us all. Say your prayers, darling, and commend yourself to God."

And upward through the universal ruin amid shattered rocks and uprooted mountains, stole the child's clear, sweet voice, praying the prayer that she had learned at her mother's knee. It rose from that grim chaos of destruction like Jonah's prayer from the depths of the sea, and like it was heard and answered.

How long the two prisoners remained pent up in that living grave, they could never have told; but all at once Marianne thought she heard a voice calling her name, and held her breath to listen. Yes, she was not mistaken; there was a voice calling to her, and it was the voice of her father!

Sepel, having seen his wife and the other three children placed in safety far up the opposite hillside, had hurried back to seek the missing girl. But it was in vain that he looked for any trace of the village or even of the valley itself. The green, sunny uplands, where the laborers had been working and the children frolicking but a few hours before, were now one hideous disorder of fallen rocks, barn gravel, and black, clayey dust, amid which he wandered at random, calling despairingly upon his lost darling.

But the answer came at last: a clear, musical call, which rose from a shapeless heap of ruin that even he had failed to recognize as his pretty little cottage. Hurrying to the spot, he began to tear away the rubbish with the strength of a giant, and speedily drew forth the child unhurt, the falling timbers, as if by miracle, having formed a kind of arch over her, completely protecting her from injury.

Brave old Francoise had been less fortunate. Her left arm was so badly hurt that she never recovered the use of it, and to the end of her life she was always timid and nervous from the effects of that terrible night. But compared with the rest of the ill-fated villagers, she might well esteem herself fortunate. Four-fifths of them were killed on the spot, many more crippled for life, and those who escaped found themselves reduced to absolute beggary. Of Goldau itself nothing remained but the bell of its steeple, which was found more than a mile away. The lower end of Lake Lowertz, farther down the valley, was completely choked up by the falling rocks; and the water thus dislodged, rushed in a mighty wave seventy feet high over the island in the centre, sweeping away every living thing upon it. The once happy and beautiful valley is still a frightful desert, and here and there among the surrounding hills you may find some white-haired grandfather who himself witnessed the calamity, and will tell you, in his quaint mountain speech, how the Rossberg fell upon Goldau.—Harper's Young People.

A Sketch for Young People.

"He's the smartest young man in our class."

"Yes, but he gets drunk."

"Oh! but he's so fine looking, so noble and talented, withal. His composition yesterday was the very best in our division. He writes splendidly! They say he's writing for a magazine, my elder than he is, and not out of school yet!—won't he be a great man, though, some day?"

"No, I don't think he will."

"Why not?"

"He gets drunk."

"Oh! that nothing, a good many smart men get drunk. Every young man has his wild oats to sow; and because a fellow gets a little boozy once in awhile, I wouldn't condemn him forever; quite likely he'll outgrow it when he gets older and sees the folly of it."

"More likely that will outgrow him; and as to his getting a little boozy, I'm afraid he was a good deal so when the boys found him beside the walk, the other night, and had to carry him to his room, dodging around street corners and skulking through by-ways, so that none of the professors would see him. I tell you a person who drinks at all is not to be depended on. The only young man that I have any confidence in are those who let intoxicating liquors entirely alone."

"Well, I don't care, he's good and smart, anyhow, and I like him."

"I don't; he gets drunk."

So the conversation ran on between the two schoolmates who were walking just ahead of me. Ah! how those words, "He gets drunk," kept ringing in my ears! Possessed of a noble manhood and a glorious intellect; blessed with the best and greatest of God's gifts; having the love and approbation of teachers; admired and looked up to by associates; the pride and hope of a fond father, intertwined in the heart and life of a doting mother, united in close and tender bonds with brothers and sisters; holding in his hand the honor and good name of the institution with which he is connected; of the society in which he mingles, and yet "gets drunk!"

As a natural consequence, that young man who drinks will generally blight the manhood that is within him, change to curses the blessings that are upon him; bring to the dust whatever high-born aspirations, whatever longings for greatness, glory and immortality may be his; put out the brightness of their future in the darkness of disappointment, pain and sorrow; bring shame and reproach upon brothers and sisters; trample upon the love and confidence of fellows; shut himself out from all goodness, purity, usefulness and happiness; blot out the image of God that is stamped upon him, and drag himself down lower than the brutes. Ayé, so surely does he shut himself out from heaven as "he gets drunk!"

PRAYER AND STUDY.—A girl at a London boarding-school was remarked for reporting her lessons well. A school-fellow, rather lily inclined, said to her one day, "How is it that you always say your lessons so perfectly?" She replied, "I always pray that I may say my lessons well." "Do you?" said the other; "well, then, I will pray too." But, alas! the next morning she could not even repeat a word of her usual task. Very much confounded, she run to her friend, and reproached her as deceitful. "I prayed," said she, "but I could not say a single word of my lesson." "Perhaps," rejoined the other, "you took no pains to learn it. You must study as well as pray."

A BULDOG DOG.—"A friend of mine," says the Spectator "has a rough-haired collie, wise and exquisitely modeled. One evening a lady of the household, with whom he was a special favorite, stopped quietly, as he lay asleep on the rug, and placing her face close to his head blew sharply with a slight shout in one of his ears. Terrified and startled, he jumped up and moved off, seemingly offended. In the course of the evening the lady happened to be reclining in an easy chair, when the collie was observed by some of the inmates to rise, and, making a circuit, to move stealthily towards the chair, put one of his fore paws on one of the arms, and placing his nose close to the lady's ear, to give a sharp bark and instantly bound off."

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. J. W. HEAR. REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY. REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D.
REV. J. T. SAWYER.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1882.

"The Christian Religion," by Prof. George P. Fisher, in the February number of the North American Review, is an article of great merit. We regretted the publication of Ingersoll's articles in the North American. It is true they could only harm the ignorant and immature, but they would be sure to unsettle such minds, and to confirm those disposed to infidelity. The articles were, notwithstanding their brilliant and polished style, coarse, weak and blasphemous, and unfit to appear in any respectable journal. Mr. Black's rejoinder to Ingersoll's first article was clever in some respects, but far from satisfactory.

Prof. Fisher's article meets the requirements of the occasion fully, and is a masterpiece as a presentation and defense of the Christian religion. He handles the subject in a positive way, rather than in the controversial form. Mr. Ingersoll is not once mentioned, and yet every point in his infidel drivel is met, and his sophistries completely exposed.

It is an article that we could wish every young man to read, and that all who are troubled with doubt might study with care. The article is a model in the calmness, candor and good temper which pervade it. There is not in it a tinge of asperity, nor a single offensive personal allusion. These are qualities which all who write for the press and who feel called to controversy, might imitate to their own advantage, and to the advantage of the truth.

Fraternity, especially as between the Northern and Southern Methodisms, we supposed had been settled by the Cape May Commission. In the opinion of some, however, fraternity can only be realized by harmony in reference to past events and convictions. It amounts to this: that before our Northern brethren can regard us of the South as truly fraternal we must confess that, as a church, we were wrong in all the matters in controversy, and that they were right.

If this, and this only, is fraternity we wish none of it. We hold as strongly as ever to the position that the course pursued by the Southern Methodist Church was right, from first to last, and there is not one measure, from the action of the Southern delegates in 1844 to the finale of the Cape May Commission, that we would recall or wish undone. Neither the principles nor the facts of our past history are to be abandoned or forgotten.

The passions and prejudices of a past controversy may well be allowed to sleep, and issues that are dead may be allowed to remain in their graves. Beyond this we can yield nothing without betraying the cause of righteousness and truth. And this is enough. We believe the Southern Church to-day stands where she has stood from the first. There may be individual divergencies, but the great body of our people are true to the principles of our past record. They accept fraternity only upon this basis, and not upon the basis of a repudiation of their past history.

The New York Christian Advocate, referring to an article in its columns from a contributor, on "Our Superannuates," says:

> It was suggested by the munificent gift of Thomas H. Suckley, of Rhinebeck, N. Y., to the New York Conference of 130 acres of ground, beautifully situated near his residence, to provide homes for the superannuated members of the New York Conference. Three houses are now occupied by worthy ministers whose days of labor are past. Mr. Suckley offers to give $10,000 as an endowment fund to provide forever for the expenses of the farm. The only condition is that enough money shall be raised from other sources to build three new houses, so that six families shall be accomodated instead of three.

We have recently published several articles from thoughtful writers on this subject. Their suggestions are worth considering, and, perhaps, also of adoption. The question is not without its difficulties. In addition to any plan of aiding our Conference claimants by regular, annual collections, the gift of Mr. Suckley, referred to in the above extract, may suggest a very practical beneficence to the liberally-disposed. With homes provided for the superannuates, or their families, the money raised for them might place them in circumstances of tolerable comfort.

Every Conference might provide homes, say one within the bounds of each district, and keep them in repair for such occupants as the Conference might designate. We should prefer to have them in the shape of small farms or plots of ground of ten or twenty acres, with neat and commodious cottages, located not in the same vicinity, but at such points as would command health and agreeable society.

They would not be Conference alms-houses, but parsonage homes for the worn-out preachers and their families, and could be occupied with as much independence and self-respect as are the circuit and station parsonages by the effective preachers. There would be no more charity in the one case than in the other. The superannuate, who has done long and useful service, is as much entitled to be furnished with a home as is the effective preacher in the zenith of his career. The above, or some other plan, for furnishing homes for our superannuates may be adopted some day, but the time is probably distant. Attention has been recently directed to some modification of our present law in the distribution of funds raised.

The time basis of claim has been suggested, and this seems just. It could be incorporated in the present law so as to combine with the present ground of discrimination. The Joint Board are now directed to distribute the funds collected to the claimants according to their best judgment of their several necessities. The law might be amended so that the funds shall be distributed according to the number of years of effective service of the superannuates, and according to the necessities of the claimants. In this case the board would consider the time basis and also the necessity, and give due weight to each.

In addition to this, the superannuated list might be guarded by excluding from this claim those who have not rendered at least seven or ten years of effective service.

With some such changes as the above, and with due carefulness in admissions, readmissions, and locations, the abuses, sometimes complained of, would measurably disappear. The present plan is not a bad one. It may, however, be improved by some slight modifications, as we believe. If the pastors will give diligence they will usually have little trouble in raising the assessments for the Conference claimants. Almost everything depends upon the efforts of the pastors.

How to be Filled.

"You do not tell us how to obtain this fulness of the Spirit." Perhaps we can not. The privilege and the need of it being set forth, and these being known and felt, what is the thing to do? The Saviour says: "If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" Asking is a means of obtaining all spiritual blessings, and of this as the sum of them. In this asking there is necessarily reference to the promise. The disciples, after our Lord's ascension, waited "for the promise of the Father." It was a prayerful waiting, waiting in faith, in believing expectancy. Another and most important element in this asking is the sense of need, and, further, the willingness to receive the Holy Spirit in his fulness. Prayer, embracing these several elements, faith in a Divine promise, the felt need, and willingness to be blessed, are the means.

Such prayer is not of so easy performance as we might, at first, imagine. In much that has the form of prayer, even of special prayer for the Holy Ghost, there is little faith, no adequate sense of need, and at heart there is scarcely a willingness. In regard to this unwillingness to be filled with the Spirit, a little self-examination may reveal the truth. Such an experience, as this fulness of the Spirit describes, demands the surrender of the world. The love of money, the inordinate love of pleasure, excessive indulgence of appetite, must all yield to the requirements of a higher spiritual life. Can they who mingle in the dissipations and frivolities of the dance, or who even occasionally patronize the theater and opera, places where the entire atmosphere and drift are sensual and often licentious, be filled with the Spirit? The incongruity is so monstrous as to need no amplification. To enjoy the fellowship of the Spirit there must be separateness from the world, and from the most common and valued of fashionable diversions. A religion of form, and of ordinary good morals, is all that the most of religious people are willing to have. They do not desire, they are not willing, to be filled with the Spirit.

There is a better class of Christians than this. They do pray, they keep themselves unspotted from the world, but the desire of the heart is not realized. Faith, need, willingness. At one, or all these points, we must look for the cause of failure. There is, perhaps, a wavering faith, a sense of need, that is less than absorbing and supreme, and a double-mindedness where there should be a single eye. God is ready to bestow the blessing, a blessing that flows from the Father's heart through the only begotten Son. We may not be able more definitely to locate the cause of failure, only we know it must be in ourselves. If we do not receive it is because we ask amiss. It is a work of prayer. But prayer draws within its sphere of struggle every element of character, and in its sweep and current of power enfolds and bears along the whole man. The asking upon which the gift depends must be the highest exercise of all those faculties which become active in prayer.

We have thought that if Christians can be deeply enough awakened to the need of this fulness of the Spirit, the result would in no case be doubtful. It is not usually difficult for a sinner, thoroughly awakened and convicted, to come to Christ. And in the case of believers, when the need is felt, felt overwhelmingly, as an awakening and a powerful conviction, felt so pungently that the soul cries out for the living God, the victory is nearly won. The fulness of the Spirit is the great need of the church. There is general assent to this, but, in fact, as individual Christians, we do not adequately feel this need. The awakening that is to cause the church to arise and shine, and to put on her strength, and her beautiful garments, is this conviction of need.

In our social and public worship we do not usually ask with sufficient earnestness, point and persistence for the Holy Ghost. Certain passages indicate that this fulness is, if not dependent, yet often conditioned, upon united prayer. So it was when the day of Pentecost was fully come. On another occasion, "when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness." A dead prayer meeting, or a dead worshiping assembly, under this dispensation of the Spirit, is a strange sight—a most anomalous thing.

To be filled with the Spirit should be recognized as one of the most important ends of public and social worship. It is a divinely-appointed means, and this is a purpose that should never be lost from view. In fact, there is in such assemblies almost always a peculiar manifestation of the Holy Spirit. A clear and urgent recognition of him at such times would lead to wonderful demonstrations of the Spirit. Neglecters of the prayer meeting, and of other social religious meetings, are usually without spirituality, or, if not without the Spirit, his presence is, in measure, reduced to the minimum.

We suppose, of course, that all earnest souls, desiring to be filled with the Spirit, give much time to the study of the Scripture, secret prayer, and that they are diligent in good works. We take it for granted that they are looking unto Jesus, the Author and the Finisher of their faith, and that their hearts constantly turn to the ascended and glorified Saviour, whose office and prerogative it is to baptize with the Holy Ghost and fire. In these reflections we have endeavored to present the fulness of the Spirit as a blessing to be specially sought, as an aspect of Christian experience and attainment to be coveted as among the best gifts, and as the source of evangelizing power in the church of Christ. May the blessed Spirit himself shine upon us, and guide us into all truth.

A Good Law Much Neglected.

There is a law in Mississippi that makes it a high misdemeanor for any public officer to be drunk or intoxicated, and provides that, on conviction, he shall be removed from office. This statute is wise, and should be unsparingly and impartially enforced. If a man has no more respect for himself, he ought to honor his office too much to reel in the streets, or bestialize his character and conscience with mean whisky. If not, he should be promptly removed, and surrendered to the bar-room and swill-tub. But suppose this law should be suddenly enforced—could the sword of Damocles fall upon every such offender—how many vacancies in office would appear! An incarnated distillery has no right to disgrace the fair name of the State by holding any office, high or low. Let those entrusted with the execution of the laws, who may chance to read these lines, see to it that this remains no longer a dead letter. If it is no degradation of the office to be filled by a drunkard, then the law ought to be repealed; but if it is desirable to have sober, respectable men to hold these places of public trust, then, wherever an offense occurs, conviction and removal should speedily follow. In all the great State of Mississippi, with her thousands of officers, but very few of such needed removals have been enforced. Why is this? Are all our office-holders temperate men? Were these the few conspicuous, disgraceful exceptions? All honorable and patriotic citizens would hope to think so, but the sad fact will not allow. If any Mississippi judges should read this article it is suggested that they call attention to this law in future charges to grand juries. Again, we say let it be enforced rigidly and everywhere.

C. B. G.

Alabama Notes.

The month of January has been remarkably warm and cloudy, having numbered hardly more than a half dozen frosts, and not more than a dozen sunshiny days. The results are, in some respects, good; in others not good. Live stock has done unusually well on a small amount of feed from the barn, and with little attention from the owner. Grass is green and growing, and what vegetables were in the gardens have been unhurt; there is plenty of greens in the land. But in this locality the weather has somehow or other developed an unprecedented amount of jaundice. At least one hundred cases have occurred in and near Prattville. The doctors say it is an epidemic. The fall of rain has not been large here, but the flood in the river shows that it has been very heavy in the regions above.

The planting interests are in such a state of uncertainty that most farmers, who feel themselves competent for any other business, would quit their plantations if they could sell for anything like the real worth of the land. The high prices of provisions, the unreliableness of the field hands, failure of last year, and uncertainty of the seasons, all make them generally dissatisfied. But as most of them feel they can do nothing else, and can not turn their land into money, they will have to stick to the fields and do the best they can. A large acreage has been put in oats, and the oats look well. The general purpose is to plant more grain. The money-lending agencies at Montgomery and Selma are doing a big business with the farmers, who believe it will be better for them than to get advances from commission merchants. How this thing will work out in the end is to most minds very uncertain.

Manufactories are multiplying in the State, and are worked with profit. This form of investment and labor is attracting the attention of young men of all classes of society. They are seeking places in machine shops, in mills, on railroads and in mines. It once was the ambition of our young men to own so much land and make so many bales of cotton. Now their aim seems to be to know how to run a locomotive or a stationary engine, to manage a saw mill or cotton mill, to boss an iron furnace or to work a mine. It is strange that the State has never collected the statistics showing the condition of these vital interests. There is no officer required to gather and report such facts and figures.

There being no elections on hand, no occasion exists for any special political excitement, yet the newspapers, very properly, keep their eyes on the political movements of other States, and carefully study and promptly report every change, particularly such as seem even remotely to tend toward the re-establishment of the old regime of negro rule, of which we have such horrible recollections. It seems to be a very pleasant pastime with some men, who never lived under this rule, and never realized, by personal experience, its degradation and misery to write books and essays telling how the South would have hardly been inhabitable to-day had it not been for the martyr spirit of devoted Yankee school teachers, who risked life and all else dear to them at the bloody hands of an overthrown slaveocracy, to teach the poor negro how to read and write, and pray and vote; or to denounce Southern statesmanship under the disgraced and opprobrious name of bourbonism in political sermons, or to lecture Southern churches on their religious duties to the benighted "brother in black" in newspaper articles. It can not be justly said of these men, North or South, in Church or State, that all of them are mercenary or malignant, but it ought to be said of the last one of them that they speak foolishly and falsely. Like all fanatics, they believe they can define the relationships and point out the duties of other people better than those people themselves can do it; that they know from a distance more about the real conditions of the problem in hand than do those who have given it their best thoughts for half a century, and have daily stood just where they have been forced to see all its bearings and results. May heaven defend us against such fanatical counsels, and spare us the shame of having such men to rule over us.

A decision of Mr. Bruce, United States Circuit Court judge, by which the commissioners of Chambers county had been sentenced to heavy fine and imprisonment for not doing a thing the duties of their office did not require them to do, and a thing which, in the nature of the case they had no right to do, has lately been reversed by the Supreme Court at Washington City, and the men have been turned out of jail. It was a case of great interest throughout the whole State, and there is great rejoicing over the decision of the Supreme Court. This is a specimen of what we once had in Alabama, and of what, doubtless, we would have again if some people could have their way.

In the Alabama Christian Advocate there has lately been quite a lively discussion of the interests of the Southern University by brethren of the two Alabama Conferences. The question seems to be whether the college shall live or die at Greensboro, or whether it shall be taken to some other place at which to live or die. Were I permitted to make a speech I should certainly say let it live at Greensboro. This it will do, provided the members of the Board of Trust will send their sons to its halls, when they have to go off to college, and the preachers in both Conferences will all give it the support of which it is worthy, and which the grave interests involved demand. The endowment was originally about $200,000, a large part of which was paid in Confederate bonds. The board, I believe, has a good many thousands of these bonds in its safe, and they were thought to be dead. But not long ago bonds of this description, strangely and suddenly, showed signs of life, and what everybody thought was absolute death proved to be only a very long sleep. Who can say that these dry bones will not yet stand up and walk? At any rate, let a sleepless eye be kept on them, and on every other matter, great or small, that looks to the perpetuity and success of the college at Greensboro.

J. W. H.

The Prize Fight.

Some two or three weeks ago we published a brief article condemning this brutal and barbarous affair, and also censuring the secular press of the city for its failure to utter any word of protest, and for its tacit approval of the vile practice. Certainly the course of our city duffers has been calculated to incite interest in the cruel sport, and to give it a tone of respectability. The Picayune, of February 5, publishes a protest written by Rev. J. William Flinn, a Presbyterian pastor of New Orleans. We do not agree with the editorial comment of the Picayune on Mr. Flinn's communication, where it is said:

> The mission of the press is to record current events, exhibit the varying phases of society, and in this manner point out the work for the reformer and the humanitarian. It certainly can not be expected of us that we should undertake the whole duty of protecting the people morally and politically. The press needs allies and supporters, and, unless it raises up these, to give force and effect to its teachings, it can accomplish nothing.

If it is not the business of the press to condemn vice and crime, and to advocate good morals, we do not know what its business is. Mr. Flinn's article is as follows:

> Much space in the city papers has for some time been given to the coming prize fight between the pugilists, Ryan and Sullivan. All that has been said, up to the present (in so far as I know,) has been in the way of advertisement, approval and encouragement. Taking the utterances of our press as an index of public sentiment, a stranger would infer that prize fighting was indorsed by the real public opinion of the city, for the channel by which indorsement and opposition are expressed is supposed to be equally open to both sides. Those who disapprove have hitherto kept silent.
>
> But this silence is not the result of indifference. The public, whose opinion ought and, in the long run, does sway the life and mould the character of a people, are those who control and support the industrial agencies, the business activities and the intellectual and moral institutions of the community. This public, representing the highest moral, social and financial interests of New Orleans, does not indorse or support prize fights. A prominent gentleman said to me the other day: "This pugilism is a relic of the barbarism and brutality of the Anglo-Saxon race, which now and then will crop out." His words express the sentiment of a large majority of the people of this city.
>
> A few significant facts prove what the real sentiment of our community is. Among them is the difficulty which the prize fighters have encountered in securing transportation to the scenes of combat. They applied to Mr. Whitney, president of the Morgan road, for a train to go out and fight somewhere on the line of his road. He peremptorily refused to charter his cars to be used for any such unrighteous purpose. Mr. Clarke, of the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans road, did substantially the same thing when application was made to him for special trains on which to go out and fight somewhere on the Jackson road. He refused by asking the prohibitory price of $500 for each coach. All honor to these gentlemen for refusing to sacrifice their self-respect, and encourage immorality for money. I am not positively informed about the attitude of the Louisville and Nashville line, but it is to be hoped that the report that they have chartered trains to the pugilists is untrue.
>
> Another fact, indicative of the best public opinion on this subject, is the hearty condemnation of our business men of high standing, freely expressed on every side, when their opinions are called for. In a very short canvass, speaking to a few dozen gentlemen, taken at random as I met them on the street and in their places of business, I found only one man who was even indifferent. The others, such as Messrs. W. H. Lyman, Wheeler & Pierson, I. L. Lyons, etc., were very emphatic in denouncing the prize fight as "immoral, brutalizing and detrimental to the interests of the city."
>
> Among the reasons why the thinking people of our city oppose prize fighting are the following: a disreputable class of people from all parts of the country always swarm to witness these scenes, and, when our youths are seduced into the temptation of mingling with such company, the contact must soil them, and leave a moral stain on their lives.
>
> Some of our people suspect that the unusual swarm of thieves and burglars, infesting our city for some time past, is due in large measure to this prize fight. A carcass will always attract flies.
>
> The gambling and rivalries, inseparably connected with pugilism, fan the low passions into a blaze, resulting often in drunkenness and debauchery among those who win, and suicide among those who lose money. Public opinion all over the country (as expressed in the laws of nearly every State prohibiting prize fights) should have weight with all who are interested in the welfare of our State and city. We wish to build up our country by encouraging the flow of a good class of people to our towns and farms. We wish to encourage capitalists to invest their money in Southern lands and manufactures. Neither capital nor men will be tempted into a community where gambling and prize fighting find encouragement, for where these flourish virtue and intelligence languish, and where the tone of morality is low capital finds no security and industry meets no encouragement. Hence, because our highest interests are involved, this protest is made.

Among the Editors.

Memphis Christian Advocate.

If less moving were required, it would be less difficult to find a suitable time for holding Conference sessions. But if Conferences could be convened at any season of the year, and therefore be distributed through the entire year, one-half the number of Bishops could do the work that is required under the prevailing custom of holding all in about four months except one or two. There are about seven months in the year in which only about one Conference, on an average, is held, and about eight months for about two or three Conference sessions. Thus about one-half of each year is passed, on the average, without a Conference to claim the attention of the Episcopacy. To hold all the Conferences in a short time requires a strong force. But it leaves that strong force for the balance of the time, each to spend his valuable time as seemeth good to himself, making him the prey of a score or more of presiding elders and half as many college presidents, requiring almost a summer of Episcopal correspondence at the rate of $3,000 a year.

Standard, Chicago.

No men are watched so narrowly as the railroad magnates. If a private conference is held or an extended trip is taken, the circumstance is closely noted and widely reported. The herald goes forth at once to inform the people that something is coming; they must keep their eyes wide open. Jay Gould, his son, and several other prominent railway officials, are now taking a tour through the West by special car. Everywhere the interviewer is ready to receive them and, as inoffensively as possible, inquire their business. Grave apprehensions anticipate their coming. It is said that the insatiable Gould is still bent on destruction. He comes to devour new corporations or at least to depose old officers. His son endeavors to allay fears. The trip, he says, is merely the annual excursion over the roads operated by the company. His father, he assures the reporter, means to do no one any harm; his acceptance of a few new incumbencies is only significant of further measures of economy. So let us be calm. The king has not yet ordered our heads off.

Texas Christian Advocate.

"Our competitors are striving to make the impression that in our Southern work we are only a 'nigger church.'"—Northwestern Christian Advocate. Bro. Edwards, who are your "competitors" in the South? The Southern Methodist Church wishes you God-speed in every good work; but we do not think there is any fraternity or piety in your effort to disintegrate or absorb the Southern church. Most of your Southern members are negroes, but they are not your Southern "work" by long odds. They are for the most part the "work" of the Southern church, which you took from her by the tricks of politicians. We say this to you in all kindness; but we shall continue to say it until you temper your politics with religion.

—At our old church home, Felicity Street, New Orleans, there are fair congregations and some steady progress. The pastor, Dr. Carter, has entered upon his second year auspiciously, and his people are enjoying and being profited by his able ministry.

The Sunday-school is a model for system and order, and we should judge also for thorough work. W. H. Foster, Esq., has been the superintendent, most of the time, for the past thirty years, and is still at his post, with strength and interest unabated. Hon. Edward Bootl. has been teacher in this school for nearly thirty years, and last Sunday we found him still in charge of the young men's Bible class.

The library is about the largest and best of any Sunday-school within our knowledge. Against the wall, on one side of the school room, is an elegant walnut case filled with Chinese curiosities. It was the Sunday—first Sunday of the month—for contributions from the classes to foreign missions; and we were gratified to see that the interest of the school in this great cause has not declined.

Bishop Peck, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, after holding a Conference at Franklin, La., spent several days in New Orleans. On Sunday night last, by the invitation of the pastor, Rev. F. R. Hill, the Bishop preached at the Carondelet Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We have heard that the sermon was in power and demonstration of the Spirit; and that the hearers were greatly pleased and edified. Bishop Peck is one of the historical men of Methodism, exceedingly venerable in years, and a man of marked intellectual vigor.

—Bishop Keener preached at the Carondelet Street Church on Sunday morning, February 5, after which Bro. Cargill, of Coushatta, La., was ordained deacon.

—In another column we publish the sentence of Guiteau. He is to be hung on Friday, June 30. The appeal taken to the Court en Banc will doubtless be adverse to the assassin. If Guiteau lives till the time appointed his hanging is sure.

—The latest report of Bishop Wightman's condition represents him as no better. He is very feeble.

Small-Pox.

By the following extract from the New Orleans Daily Picayune it will be seen that there is little danger of a small-pox epidemic here:

"There are no evidences of any danger of a spread of small-pox in New Orleans, and thanks to the precautions taken by the health authorities, vaccination has been so faithfully attended to that there is left in the city but comparatively little material for the disease to feed upon.

"You know," said Dr. Joseph Jones, President of the Board of Health, "that the passenger trains on the several railways are regularly inspected for small-pox cases. The railway which connects most directly with the section of country in which the small-pox contagion is epidemic, is the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans road; and we are naturally particularly careful of that route. The contagion can be brought in rags, but there are probably no rags shipped from that region of country to this city, because we manufacture no paper here. Rags might be brought here from the surrounding country for shipment, however, and one can not be too particular in these times."

The attention of the railway authorities has been called to these matters, and the following is a reply on the subject from the chief of the Jackson road:

OFFICE VICE-PRESIDENT AND MANAGER, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS AND N. O. R. R., New Orleans, Jan. 27, 1882.

Dr. Jos. Jones, President Board of Health, New Orleans

Dear Sir:—In regard to your inquiry yesterday as to whether this company was receiving rags for delivery in New Orleans, or any kind of freight that might be suspected of carrying contagion of small-pox, I beg to inform you that our investigations show that no rags have been brought to this city over our road during the present year, and as far as we can ascertain, in the past twelve months.

We desire to co-operate with the authorities in preventing the introduction of this disease, and for the protection of our employees as well as the public, would not knowingly transport in any direction passengers or merchandise which might be the vehicle of such contagion.

Very respectfully, T. E. KING, Secretary and Vice-President.

The Rev. A. P. Parker writes to the St. Louis Christian Advocate:

The prospects for the Southern Methodist Anglo-Chinese College in Shanghai are very good. A building is being put up on Dr. Allen's lot for one of the branch institutions, and another will be built immediately in another part of the city for another branch, and both will be opened for students in February. The money for the first of these buildings comes from the sale of the native parsonage property in Shanghai, which Dr. Allen has purchased of the mission, and is now using the money ($2,000) to build the branch school. The money for the other is a part of the proceeds of the sale of the old mission-premises in Shanghai. We have secured three good lots of land in Suchow recently—all near our present premises—one for the Women's Missionary Society, one for Brother Reid's house, the new church, and a second residence, and one for Dr. Lambuth's hospital. The church, Brother Reid's parsonage, and the girls' school, are being built now, and we expect to have them all finished before winter.

The general outlook for our work is very good, the results that can be tabulated are meager. We are confident of glorious success. Let us have the moral and material support of the home Churches.

More Poems.

We learn that our friend and Brother, Rev. T. A. S. Adams, of the North Mississippi Conference, Kosciusko, Miss., is now passing through the press another volume of poetry, and that it will be out sometime in April. The volume will be a 12mo of 250 pages, plain type, extra superfine paper. A serio-comic poem entitled Aunt Peggy, a real character of Southern frontier life, will occupy one-half of the volume, and contains some of the gifted author's best things. The remainder of the volume consists of miscellaneous poems; among others, "Rest," "Bury him in the Sea" Ode on the death of Coke, "Penie," "Growing Gray." The volume will be bound substantially in cloth, and sold at seventy-five cents a copy. We anticipate a work of rare merit and interest. We have no doubt it will be in demand. A fine prose writer, and an able preacher, the author is also a true poet.

A GOOD WORK.—The following communication from the Ladies' Aid Society, of Morgan City, La., is full of excellent suggestions, and we hope will encourage and incite the women of the church generally to systematic diligence in doing good. Among other items we call special attention to the action of our friends in Morgan City in supplying the people with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Morgan City, having purchased by their united efforts and presented to every Sunday-school scholar, who can read, a "Bible," feel they can extend their good work by placing in the families of each Sabbath-school scholar a copy of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. We therefore send for ten copies, sent to "Ladies' Aid Society" Methodist Episcopal Church, Morgan City. The name named "Society" are sending to-day school ten orphan children whose friends are not able to educate them. The money is deposited to pay for five months. At the expiration of that time, they will be entered for another session.

MRS. J. N. PHARR, Pres't.
MISS SALLIE KNOX, Sec.

Rev. W. D. Dominick, writing from Shubuta, Miss., February 1, brings us sad intelligence. We extend to the family of Sister Ledyard, and to her parents, Brother and Sister Heard, our deepest sympathy. May God graciously sustain the bereaved. Bro. Dominick says: "Our church and community feel sadly bereaved. Sister Carrie Ledyard, wife of Mr. Thomas Ledyard of this place, and daughter of our beloved Brother and Sister, Rev. J. T. Heard and Martha Heard, died very suddenly last Monday evening at seven o'clock, and was buried yesterday at the family burying ground. Sister Ledyard was a most estimable lady, a zealous worker in the church. We shall miss her, and none more than the pastor and his family. A suitable obituary will be sent soon."

Rev. Inman W. Cooper, writing from Ponchatoula, La., January 28 1882, says: "Bro. Little and I changed appointments for this week, and I am with my esteemed friend and Brother R. F. Flowers. He is moving on smoothly. He expects to build several churches this year. In his difficult field of labor may God crown his labors with abundant success. The field is white unto the harvest. May the preachers of the Woodville District gather in many souls this year! Brave hearts brethren, and much faith, and the victory is ours.

—We are indebted to President Warren for a copy of the President's Annual Report of Boston University, 1880 81. The whole number of students registered during the year was 507. Of this number 108 were women. The assets of the University, independent of the property held by the trustees of the Rich estate, and that received from the New England Female Medical College, are valued at $131,008.86. Liabilities, $80,982.10. On the thirteenth of January the bequest of Isaac Rich became a part of the assets of the institution. The President's report was issued previous to that date, and the amount is not given. It is, however, very large, probably over one million of dollars.

A circular issued since the President's report says: "At a meeting of the trustees of Boston University, the twenty-fifth instant, it was unanimously voted to establish, in the academic department, or College of Liberal Arts, sixty-four free scholarships for the benefit of deserving and needy students. These will be divided equally between the sexes. They will be administered by the faculty according to regulations now in process of preparation. In grateful commemoration of the munificent legacy of Mr. Rich, which amounts to nearly one million dollars, these new foundations will be perpetually known as The Isaac Rich Scholarships."

—We have received Register of Vanderbilt University for 1880-81; and announcement for 1881-82. The catalogue of students for 1880-81 shows in the several departments: The academic 240; Biblical 70; Law 53; Medical 308; Dental 20; Pharmacy 17.

—Rev. J. L. Porter, a superannuated member of the Pacific Conference, died January 18, 1882.

—Rev. Thos. M. Ragsdale, preacher in charge of Rome circuit, Illinois Conference, died January 21.

—Rev. A. T. Lewis, of Triplett circuit, Missouri Conference, died January 30.

How Thiers Worked to Save France.

The Hon. Elihu B. Washburne gives in The Century for January his reminiscences of Thiers, and describes his habits of work as follows; "The labors of Thiers at this time were simply prodigious. The condition of France was terrible. The Germans held military occupation of a large number of departments; its armies in part prisoners; its treasury empty and its credit impaired; the whole interior administration disorganized; violence and disorder in the large cities; political parties violent, and the assembly secretely hostile and and reactionary; the indemnity to be raised for Germany. Though seventy five years old, Thiers entered on his duties with juvenile ardor, and exhibited an activity alike without limit and without example. There was little that escaped him in the administration of the government. With but a few hours of sleep, five o'clock in the morning always found him at work in his cabinet, in conjunction with his secretary, his life long friend and associate, Barthelemy St. Hilaire, one of the most distinguished men of France, member of the French Academy, and recently minister of Foreign Affairs under President Grevy. I recollect an account given in the papers of Thiers having once playfully reproached his old friend for not having arrived at his cabinet until after five o'clock in the morning. 'Often would some minister be surprised to receive a note asking him to call in relation to some matter in his department, at six o'clock in the morning. While giving all his attention to matters of interior administration and to public affairs generally, Thiers was attending the sessions of the National Assembly and participating in the discussion of the most important questions. As M. Jules Simon well says, he was absorbed in labors enough to fill three existences. He managed to do everything, thanks to his strength of will, and the extreme facility of his mind. He gave himself up entirely to the matter in hand and the person present. He never had that busy and preoccupied air which some persons have with one-twentieth of the work. He was in some respects, like Lincoln. He was cheerful in the midst of the greatest crisis. He would catch a jesting phrase on the wing, and was not afraid of a doubtful joke. His natural cheerfulness was a great aid to him in his crushing work. While his ministers were weighed down with labor and responsibilities, he was always cheerful and at his ease. He has furnished an example for all rulers. He gave all he had of heart, mind, and strength to his country. He did not fritter away his time on trifling and immaterial questions, nor permit it to be taken up in dispensing public patronage. He rarely gave himself any vacation. When the Chambers had taken a vacancy and the ministers were having their holidays, Thiers was once asked about a holiday for himself. 'Ah!' said he, 'my holiday is eighteen hours' work a day.'"

We learn by telegraph, says the Texas Christian Advocate of January 21, that Rev. B. D. Dashiell, presiding elder of Chapell Hill district, Texas Conference, died at his home in Brenham, January 14th. His health has been failing for some weeks and his friends have seriously apprehended this result. His burial took place from the Methodist church, Brenham, Sunday, January 15, the Masonic fraternity conducting the services. The Baptist and Presbyterian clergy united with his Methodist brethern in cordial testimonials of the character and services of this able minister of the gospel. The attendance was one of the largest that ever followed a citizen of Brenham to the grave. He was a good man and a devoted minister of the Gospel of Christ. His family will have the sympathies of the church.

Rev. G. H. Smith, writing to the Nashville Advocate, says: "I believe I told you I was removed to Madison I am so popular that I can't stay long in one place. The people here when they found I was going away were so delighted they gave me some new clothes and paid me my salary.

Personal and Other.

—At North Adams (Mass.,) a few evenings ago a physician was called by telephone about one o'clock at night. The call came from Briggville. A child there was suffering with the croup and in a critical condition. The night was dark and stormy, and the doctor found nothing pleasant in the contemplation of the trip which he was asked to make. When preparing to go out into the darkness and rain his mind conceived a bright thought, which was immediately followed by acts. He called the Briggsville House in which the little sufferer lay and requested the parents to bring it to the telephone transmitter. This was done. The child coughed its croupy cough, and the doctor listened intently to every sound which came from his patient. He prescribed a remedy, and one of the members of the family prepared and administered it. The relief was immediate and the recovery rapid. The doctor waited at the telephone until he heard of the favorable results of the prescription, and then sought again the repose of his couch, pronouncing blessings on the inventor of telephones.

—The New York Tribune says: Two thousand pounds of opium, valued at about $20,000, were smuggled from the steamer Tokio to the San Francisco water front last week, directly under the noses of a captain and ten inspectors who had been warned that such an adventure was on foot. Before the opium could be landed, however, it was pounced upon by two officers who had been detailed to patrol the water front, and each of them will get about $7,000 for his night's work—one-third the value of the prize. People interested in such matters are now trying to ascertain what the custom-house officers on board the Tokio were doing while nearly a ton of opium was being lowered over the side of the ship.

—Meissonier, the famous French painter, is a man of small stature, and in his immense studio, where he paints horses from life, he looks like a dwarf. His nose is long and aquiline. A moustache hides the mouth and the chin is covered by a swallow-tailed beard, which ends below the nethermost limit of the waistcoat. Very wide, square shoulders support the head. A short body rests on shorter legs, which are of spindle thickness. The whole face and figure express decision, assurance, and originality pushed to the verge of eccentricity. Meissonier speaks English with deliberate accentuation. An utter stranger to the curious little artist would be wanting in penetration if he failed to divine in him some sort of greatness.—New York Independent.

—The Duke of Albany, Queen Victoria's youngest son, has gone to Germany, to visit the family of his future bride. His marriage will take place at Windsor, and probably in St. George's Chapel; but this is not settled, as the Queen is at present disposed to command that the ceremony shall be celebrated in the private chapel within the castle, where Princess Christian and more recently Princess Frederica were married. It is thought, however, that she will yield to the anxious desire of the bridegroom that he may be married with precisely the same state as his brother, the Duke of Connaught.

—Gustave Doré is nearly fifty years of age and looks about thirty-five. He is of medium stature and has the frame of an acrobat, with the head of a poet. In the street he might be mistaken for a beggar, for he is the worse-dressed man in Paris, the scapegoat of a tailor, who inflicts upon him all his misfits.

—Rev. Dr. R. S. Rust, one of the appointed delegates to the Ecumenical Conference, to be held in London in September next, has found it necessary to tender his resignation in view of the pressure of duties connected with the Freedmen's Aid Society, of which he is corresponding secretary.

—"Delphine Gay," the talented widow of Emile de Girardin, is said to be dying from the abuse of morphine. She can not sleep, and lies day and night on a sofa, praying for death. The woman who was so beautiful eleven years ago is now a piteous wreck.

—His Highness, Rampel Singh, Rajah of Rampur, now resident in England, intends contesting one of the metropolitan boroughs at the next vacancy, on "independent and constitutional principles."

—Prince Victor Napoleon, one of the two young sons of Prince Jerome Bonaparte, has enlisted as a private in an artillery regiment. His father consented to his taking the step.

—The Southern Presbyterian General Assembly appointed a committee to examine the revised New Testament and make a report to the next Assembly.

—Richard Watson Gilder, the new editor of the Century Magazine, is a son of the late Rev. W. H. Gilder, of the New York East Conference.

—A commemorative silver plate has been placed upon the pew formerly occupied by President Garfield in the Christian Church at Washington.

—The estate of the late Senator Carpenter, of Wisconsin, yields upward of $100,000 to his widow and daughter.

—A strict prohibitory liquor law has been passed by the people of Tapitea, in Micronesia.

The young Prince Imperial of Japan will soon be sent to France, to complete his education.

—General Lowry, the newly elected Governor of Mississippi, is an earnest and sterling Methodist.

—Mr. George Muller has gone to Palestine to encourage Christian workers in the Holy Land.

Books and Periodicals.

TALES OF TRYST, embracing authentic accounts of Providential Guidance, Assistance and Deliverance. Written and selected by H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian. 12mo, pp. 382. Price, $1.25. Boston: Scriptural Tract Repository; H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill.

The volume is made up of incidents and events illustrating God's care and faithfulness, providential direction, and guidance of gospel ministry. An entertaining work, and helpful to the faith of believers. Some of the tales are trivial and not worth telling; some savor of fanaticism, but many of them will prove useful and edifying.

—The Huguenots, by Gustave Masson, B. A., Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co., publishers, New York. This is also a 12mo, paper cover, 192 pages. The author sketches the history of the Huguenots from the beginning of the Reformation to the death of Louis XIV. His work relates to a very important period of French history, and is of thrilling interest. We have not been able to give it a critical examination, but it seems to be reliable and written in a spirit of perfect candor.

—We have received from Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co., New York, our Colonial Empire, by R. Acton. The volume is a 12mo, paper cover, 192 pages and replete with interesting and valuable information in reference to the colonies of England.

—The Nineteenth Century, January, 1882, George Munro, publisher, New York, has: 1. Westminster Abbey, July 25, 1881; 2. The Crisis of Parliamentary Government; 3. The Biologists on Vivisection; 4. Morley's Life of Cobden; 5. The Sicily of Thucydides and Theocritus; 6. The Agnostic at Church; 7. The Oldest Epic of Christendom; 8. Canada's Highway to the Pacific; 9. Mythology Among the Hottentots; 10. The Machinery of Elective Government.

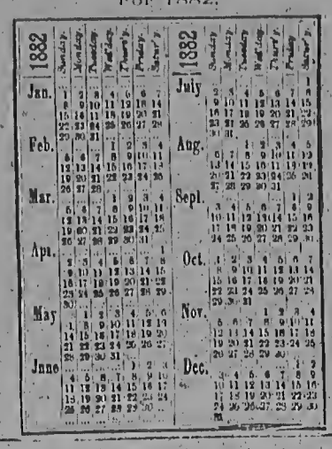
—The Cotemporary Review, January, 1882, George Munro, publisher, New York, has: 1. Peasant Proprietors in France; 2. The Value of Egypt to Great Britain; 3. Married Women in Factories; 4. Zululand After the War; 5. The City of London, Its Population and Position; 6. Christian Socialists in Germany; 7. Our Industrial Schools; 8. Old and New Canons of Poetical Criticism; 9. On Some Defects in the Educational Organization of Scotland; 10. The Irish Landlords.

—The Homiletic Magazine ("The Homiletic Quarterly,") January, 1882, Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., American publishers, New York, has a sermon by Dr. A. A. Lipscombe, on Thomas the Doubter. The Departments of Practical Homiletics, Exposition and Miscellany are full, varied and instructive. This, of all the Homiletic Magazines, is perhaps the best.

—The Art Amateur, February, 1882, Montague Marks, editor and publisher, New York, has its usual supplement designs, and a very fine table of contents. The literature and illustrations of art in this splendid monthly are of great merit. Price $1 a year.

Advocate Calendar,

For 1882.



Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

The old adage "The best is always the cheapest" will apply to no article with greater force than to seeds. Nothing is quite so worthless as poor seeds. D. M. Ferry & Co. of Detroit, Mich., seem to be one of the very few firms engaged in the seed business who have fully realized the importance of putting up and selling only the freshest and best of all varieties of seeds, and as a legitimate result their brand of seeds has become exceedingly popular all over the land. We take pleasure in referring to their advertisement, and would advise all our readers, who will be likely to require seeds, to send and obtain their beautiful catalogue, giving prices, instructions for planting, etc.

The following was recently overheard: Daughter (home from school): "Now, Papa! are you satisfied? Just look at my testimonials—political economy, satisfactory; fine arts and music, very good; logic, excellent"—Father: "Very much so, my dear; especially as regards your future. If your husband should understand anything of housekeeping, cooking, mending, and the use of the sewing machine, perhaps your married life will, indeed, be happy."

The great music house of P. Werlein continues to supply the world with musical instruments, and thousands of homes have been made happy by the possession of a piano or an organ through his low prices and exceedingly liberal terms. The name Werlein has become so identified with pianos that you hardly can think of pianos without thinking of Werlein. Go and try him, and our word for it, you will be pleased.

From a little boy's revised primer: Here we have a Greenbacker. He seems Troubled about Something. He is Troubled about the National Debt. He is Grieving because the Country of his Nativity owes one Billion Dollars. The other Man around the Corner is a Grocery Man. He, too, is Troubled, but he is not Worrying about the National Debt. Oh! no. He is Worrying about the one Dollar and Forty cents the Greenbacker owes him.

The duty of living properly before a child is very now and then illustrated. A physician called upon a lady, and was met at the door by her little girl, who went up stairs to tell her mother. Upon her return, the gentleman said, "Did you tell your mamma?" "Yes, sir." "And what did she say?" "She said, 'O pshaw!'"

CONSUMPTION CURED.—Since 1870 Dr. Sherar has each year sent from this office the means of relief and cure to thousands afflicted with disease. The correspondence necessitated by this work becoming too heavy for him, I came to his aid. He now feels constrained to relinquish it entirely, and has placed in my hands the formula of that simple vegetable remedy discovered by an East India missionary, and found so effective for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Diseases; also all Nervous Complaints. Its remarkable curative powers have been proven in many thousand cases, and actuated by the desire to relieve suffering humanity, I gladly assume the duty of making it known to others. Address me, with stamp, naming this paper and I will mail you, free of charge, the recipe of this wonderful remedy, with full directions for its preparation and use, printed in German, French or English. W. A. Noyes, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

See the Horse-Car. How Full it is? Now it is Not so Full. See How the People run Out of it. There is a Woman with the Small-Pox in the Corner. See the Woman Laugh! Is not that a Pretty Trick the Woman has Played? How would You like to have such a Trick Played on You?

A lady who had been traveling in Italy was asked by a friend how she liked Venice. "O! very much, indeed," was the reply. "I was unfortunate enough, however, to arrive there just at the time of a heavy flood, and we had to go about the streets in boats."

"I say, Patrick, that is the worst-looking horse that I have ever seen in harness. Why don't you fatten him up?" "Fat him up, is it? Faix, the poor baste can scarcely carry the little male that's on him now," replied Pat.

Benificent nature seems to have planted in every clime the proper remedies for the diseases incidental to it. Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm is made of an herb which grows all over the Gulf region, and it has never failed yet to cure all kinds of coughs and colds.

"Reasons for dressing plainly on Sunday" is the title of a little essay on social ethics. Most of us have the very best reasons for dressing plainly on Sunday. Don't mention it.

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend or the next year and you will not regret it.

On Saturday a Pittsburg man, arriving in Newark, ordered a cabman to drive him to the Newark Steel Works, and cabby innocently took him to the city hall.

"Well," said an Irish attorney, "if it plaze the court, if I am wrong in this, I have another point equally as conclusive."

At a printers' festival the following toast was offered: "Woman! Second only to the press in the dissemination of news."

The most sacred obligation is the marriage contract. The most sacred duty is to maintain one health. The best medicine is Brown's Iron Bitters.

A wag said of an egotistical writer: "Somebody should take pity on his readers and put out his I's."

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

Time and the mule should always be taken by the forelock, never by the fetlock.

Silks and satins, scarlets and velvets, put out the kitchen fire.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

WERLEIN'S,
NEW ORLEANS.

Make your home happy by purchasing one of those superb:

CHICKERING,
MATHUSHEK,
OR HALE
PIANOS.

If you should not want a Piano buy an Organ:

MASON & HAMLIN'S
LEAD.
STERLING ORGANS
Are Good and Cheap.

GOOD VIOLIN, BOW AND BOX, $5.

I am prepared to supply all persons with good bargains. If you will write for catalogue and prices you will be convinced that we do offer good inducements

Instruments sent on trial, and if not satisfactory, no sale nor expense.

PHILIP WERLEIN,
135 Canal St., New Orleans.

CHAPEL HILL ACADEMY,
MARSHALL COUNTY, TENN.

Opens the next session, the Sixteenth, under present principle, January 2, 1882. Course: English, Classics, Mathematics and Sciences. Thoroughness, Cheapness and Progress are all combined here. Efficient teachers employed, such as know how to teach, and are up with the spirit and progress of this age of Education. Entire expense, $70 to $80 per session of twenty weeks. Music by skillful teachers for $25 per session.

O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., editor Christian Advocate, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., of this school says: "Unsolicited, we speak a word in behalf of this school. The Chapel Hill community is one of the best in the country, the location is beautiful and healthful, and Prof. S. V. Wall is a teacher whose skill as an educator is only equaled by his qualities as a Christian gentleman. All of which we say because we know it is so."

Pupils can enter at any time and will be charged only from time of entrance. Tri-weekly stage from Nashville to this place, distance forty miles south.

Address S. V. WALL, Principal,
Chapel Hill, Tenn.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,
MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,
MONUMENTS.
Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,
MARBLE, SLATE,
And Iron Mantels and Grates.
111, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans

FOR $2.50!

Mailed Postage Paid.

I have nineteen copies left of the

Complete Church Register,

Historical and statistical, comprising: A General Index; An Alphabetical Register for Church Members; Register of Official Members, of Baptisms, Marriages and Deaths; Register of Annual Quarterly and Church Conferences; Tables for Church Collections; and an Annual Summary of the Yearly Work and condition of the Church.

It is substantially bound in cloth, leather back, ruled and printed, size about 10x15 inches, over 200 pages, and no more can be had when this lot is disposed of. Original price $5. All in perfect order.

Address G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

Indian Turnip
COMPOUND
PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by B. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street, And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

Will be mailed FREE to all applicants, and to customers without ordering it. It contains five colored plates, fine engravings, about 200 pages, and full descriptions, prices and directions for planting 1500 varieties of Vegetable and Flower Seeds, Plants, Fruit Trees, etc. Invaluable to all. Michigan grown seeds will be found more reliable for planting in the South than those grown in a warmer climate. We make a specialty of supplying Planters, Truckmen and Market Gardners. Address,
D. M. FERRY & CO., Detroit, Mich.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co. Augusta, Maine.

Agricultural.

MANAGING A SMALL FARM.—A correspondent writes us that he is a young man just beginning life as a farmer with but little means. He has a farm of twenty acres, and he would be pleased to have our opinion as to whether or not twenty acres, in the hands of a person who is not at all afraid to work, could be made to yield a living for a man and his wife, the latter also being industrious and economical. The land is naturally good, but it is not near enough to any large city to be profitably worked for market gardening purposes; it will have to be worked as a common farm. If we think a farm so small could be made self-sustaining he would like to have our advice as to its best management; if not, he will try to get more land, though this would involve him in debt, a thing which he would like to avoid, if possible.

Replying we would say: Avoid the debt, by all means. The farm is large enough to begin with, and large enough to grow larger under the influence of industry and good management.

Our able cotemporary, the Petersburg, Va. Rural Messenger, lately published an article on the good management of small farms which throws so much light on this subject, that we shall draw quite liberally upon it for many of the figures employed in this reply to our correspondent.

Supposing the twenty-acre farm to be in good order, the first thing will be to cast the crop, of course. We would put five acres to corn, which, if the land is fair, ought to yield 25 bushels to the acre, or 125 bushels in all. Besides this it ought to yield 1,000 pounds of good pulled fodder, to say nothing of a goodly quantity of top fodder, well suited for cattle. Field peas should be planted between the rows of corn at the "laying by," and these ought to yield 20 bushels of peas and a good deal of pea-fodder gathered just before frost. The peas will almost pay for the culture of the corn.

The quantity of corn just named will be ample for the little family under consideration, or even for a larger family, say, of five persons; also for one horse, a few hogs and a small flock of poultry.

In the fall the corn land can be put to oats either to be used as a pasture, or to be harvested in the spring following. It should yield twenty bushels of thrashed oats to the acre, at least; or, if cut for hay before ripe it should yield not less than 2,000 pounds.

Early in the spring half an acre should be put to Irish potatoes, which under good management ought to give a return of fifty bushels. If in the lower South a crop of sweet potatoes not less than fifty bushels can follow the Irish potatoes on the same land; but to make sure we will give the sweet potatoes a half acre to themselves. The two potato crops will be equal to fifty bushels of corn, both in the way of family supplies and as a feed for hogs and poultry.

If grass and clover can be successfully grown in the region where the farm is located, two acres may be devoted to these crops, to furnish occasional grazing for calves, or other young stock, and also summer forage for a cow. In addition, about two tons of dry forage, or hay, should be saved.

One acre should be put to some kind of sugar-producing crop—sugar cane, if in the cane belt, or sorghum, if above. This will give all the sweets needed in the family, with some to sell, perhaps.

An acre should be devoted to fruits, of a kind that succeeds in the region; it may look like a small acreage to devote to such a purpose, yet under proper management it can be made to show wonderful results. Another acre should be set aside for the vegetable garden. This should receive the highest skill, the richest manure, and the best cultivation the farmer is able to bestow. A well managed kitchen garden is equal to half the board of a family. It is a never-failing green grocer from which supplies can be drawn at all seasons, in all their crisp and native purity and freshness. Do not fail to have a well stocked garden, and without it, your little, twenty acre farm will likely prove a failure. It is impossible to estimate its worth, and we make no attempt at it.

One acre may be devoted to yard purposes, as for poultry, the barn, etc. This, as you see, leaves us with still eight acres unprovided for, which may be devoted to cotton as the money or surplus crop after enough, say one acre, has been set aside for the residence. A careful rotation with the crops as just cast, and proper tilling of one after the other, together with such a quantity of stock as can be well fed by the products, will keep up a family of five persons first-rate. There are many things in connection with the little farm, not mentioned here, that could be made a source of profit, as raising upland rice, gathering cow-grass hay, and the like; certainly more than to cover the outlays that would not be calculated upon from the statements already made.—Nashville Register.

THE FENCE POLICY OF THE SOUTH.—The period is not far distant when the policy of keeping up stock instead of fencing growing crops will be enforced universally in this and several other of the Southern States. The wide-spread destruction of timber for the purpose of obtaining rails for fencing is a cogent argument in favor of fencing the stock rather than the fields. As it will require much less timber to secure the former than the latter, the new policy will prove protective to our forests which still remain, and those that have been felled simply to obtain rails, will have an opportunity to fill up with a new growth.

We are very much mistaken in the signs of the times if our forests are not to be the best safeguards of protection from another source which promises to be complete and enduring. We refer to the substitute for wooden fences, to the form of such as are made of iron in some practical form. The effectiveness, convenience, cheapness and durability of this material, commend it to the judgment of all sensible people, so we may soon expect to see its general adoption give entire freedom to our forests.

The policy of keeping up stock and turning out fields is urged as well by the difficulty in procuring labor for splitting rails, as by the great scarcity of timber. This difficulty will operate likewise in causing farmers to adopt the iron fencing.

The facility with which the iron fence can be removed, and re-established around other area, is a feature which highly commends it. The transfer of the old-fashioned rail fence is a heavy and expensive work, and if these should be used, stock would be shifted very seldom—not near so often as the preservation of their health would require, and their fertilizing influences would be far less equitably distributed to the lands, while pasturage would be saved if the iron fence were in use.

It is not our object to advertise the manufacturers of this commodity, but to assure the agricultural people of the South that the enterprise and genius of man have wrought out a most effective article for their deliverance from the double evil of sparse forests and unwilling labor. Barbed wire fences are objectionable because of their liability to injure stock, but the use of hoop iron is recommended as a most excellent substitute, by those most experienced in the use of both.

While considering this policy of keeping up domestic animals, it is not out of place to suggest the probability of their rapid and material improvement from close care and better attention. Now, they are generally objects of neglect, subject to the abuse of the malignant or wanton. The owner who turns his domestic animals upon the commons, trusts to accident to render them a source of profit, and it is generally true that he is rewarded for his folly and negligence, by degenerate and worthless animals. If we would raise stock to profit, they must be looked after regularly, properly provided with water and food, and supplied with shelter from the winds, rains and snows of winter. In the contemplation of the new policy of keeping up our stock, there are visions of splendid horses, cows, sheep, hogs, etc., sleek, fat, symmetrical and valuable, rising before us, as the miserable picture of our present neglected and degenerate creatures fades and dies.

The General Assembly of Georgia, has made it easy for a majority of the citizens of any county or district to determine upon the new policy, and it will be the dawn of an era of prosperity when every county in the State has decided to abandon the practice of fencing crops and letting domestic animals go at large.—Southern Cultivator & Dixie Farmer.

PLOWING CLOVER UNDER.—The inquiry of W. T. R. in lately regard to the case of plowing down clover on the Ravenna farm, is one that is not only interesting to him but to thousands of farmers in Northern Ohio. The farm spoken of is what might be termed the second bench of the Cuyahoga river, and would be called a level farm, though its western boundary takes in a border of low, mound-like hills, none of them probably exceeding forty feet in altitude. The bulk of the farm is upon the level plateau, though the hills are all under the plow. The soil is sandy; not white, but the variety that is "just about the right color." The timber that once covered the entire farm was white oak of large size, and the clearing of the farm involved immense labor. The rotation of crops for years has been corn, oats, wheat, and then clover. A crop of rye or barley is occasionally grown in some lot, but these four have been the "round and round." There is no particular meadow, the clover pasture may be meadow four years hence. The whole farm is under the plow, and about 125 to 150 acres are under yearly cultivation.

One fact I perhaps made unduly strong, the exclusive dependence upon clover as a fertilizer, but as I mentioned the keeping of some fifty head of live stock, this should carry the impression that the usual barnyard manure is used as far as it goes. The stables for stock are ample, and straw is used as an absorbent, and the huge piles of rotting compost from this source are carefully employed in securing fertility. The straw from the stacks, not thus used around the barns, is drawn out and plowed under. Still it will be seen that even this amount of stable manure, etc., would go a very little way in fertilizing a hundred or so acres per year, and clover in truth may be denominated the source of fertility from which these never diminishing crops receive their supply of food.

"Clover sickness" has never broken out in these parts to my knowledge, and would not be likely to do so when land is subjected to continual change of condition, the rotating between pasture, meadow, corn, oats, wheat and back to clover: the constant adding to the humus of the soil by the incorporation of clover; the rich stores of barnyard manure, and finally the straw and stubble itself, are together greater than the wants of the first succeeding crops, and are saved and used to grow the following ones. The plow starts as soon as a crop is off the ground, to prepare for the next in succession. The impression that the farm is all in corn one year, and the next, etc., is not correct. The fields are so divided off that about equal areas of the different grains are raised yearly.

As to clover upon a clay soil, I will cite the farm of about like size several miles away, what was "Mt. Zion" of the infantile Mormon Church, in Hiram county. This farm is on the heights of land, and while portions are sandy, the clay predominates. This farm, with the same rotation of crops, using all the manure and straw to assist the clover as I was told a few days since by the owner, "growing better every year," and he said in continuance, "I give the greater share of the credit to clover as a fertilizer, for I never used a pound of commercial fertilizer in my life." I have no doubt that my friend will find clover a great benefit in not only maintaining the fertility of his farm in Minnesota, but increasing it as well; but he should never forget the value of manure as an auxiliary in the productiveness of land, no matter what the soil or conditions.—J. G., in Country Gentleman.

MANURE FOR STRAWBERRIES.—A correspondent of the Fruit Recorder says: "An experiment made last year by myself may not come amiss at this time with those who grow strawberries. I procured half a hogshead, filled it with rain water, and put into it one-quarter pound of ammonia, and one-quarter pound of common nitre. When the strawberry plants were blossoming out, I gave them a sprinkling of the solution at evening, twice a week, until the fruit was nearly ripe. The result was nearly double the amount of fruit on those where the liquid was applied, to where none of the liquid was applied."

TO GROW SEEDLINGS IN THE HOUSE.—Use Peter Henderson's plan: First, sift a shallow box half full of fine rich loam; second, put on a half inch of finely sifted, dried sphagnum, and press it down; third, sift one-quarter of an inch of fine, rich loam and sow on the seed and press it down with a smooth board; fourth, cover the whole with finely sifted moss or sphagnum—one-half inch and press it down carefully and water it all thoroughly. The moss on top will hold the moisture and heat, and the roots of the plants will be more obvious in the second layer of moss. Fine moss is also used in potting plants.

THE TOAD.—Teach your children not to annoy or mutilate the toad. The rather comic, hilly fellow in your garden will destroy many insects.

Household.

HINTS ON CAKE BAKING.—When cakes are made without yeast or eggs, soda and powder being the substitutes, they require quick baking in a moderately hot oven, and should be drawn directly they are done or they get dry and tasteless. For a plain cake, made with one pound of flour, &c., the time to be allowed in baking would be from forty to fifty minutes, at the outside not more than an hour. Yeast cakes take longer—say from ten to fifteen minutes—and will bear being left in the oven rather over the time without much injury. Very rich cakes, in which butter and eggs predominate, take, of course, very much longer time to cook, a pound cake taking from an hour and a half to two hours, and a bride cake three and a half. On no account should an oven be too hot when the cake is put in—that is, hot enough to brown at once; if so, in five minutes the whole outside will be burned, and the interior will stand little chance of being cooked. The old plan of feeling the handle of the oven door to test the heat is not always successful; it is better to sprinkle a little flour inside and shut the door for about three minutes; if at the end of that time it is of a rich light brown the cake may be put in, but if burned the heat must first be lessened.

In making cakes see that all the ingredients are thoroughly dried before use, even the flour; this, for a very rich cake, where a dark color is wanted, may be baked, as it adds materially to the rich appearance of the condiment. Beat the eggs in a cool place, near an open window if possible, and then let them stay till wanted. It may not be out of place here if I suggest to any lady amateur who wishes to practice the art of cake making that she should take care to have all her her ingredients ready to her hand before commencing her work—sugar pounded, raisins stoned and chopped if necessary, citron cut up, currants washed and dried, and tins already greased to hold the mixture when ready.—New York Herald.

APPLE CREAM.—Peel and core one pound of apples, place them in a stew pan with eight ounces of sugar and a pinch of ground nutmeg. Let cook until tender; pass the apples through a seive and let get cold. Whisk up rather stiff half a pint of cream, add the apple pulp, a little essence of lemon, one ounce of isinglass boiled in a gill of water, mix well together; pour into a jelly mold and let set. When required dip the mold into warm water for a half a minute, wipe it with a cloth and turn it out on a glass or silver dish. Garnish with red flowers and slices of lemon.

CLEAR GAME SOUP.—Cut up into convenient pieces either a calf's foot or a cow heel. Pack them into a saucepan with the remnants of two or three birds (grouse, partridges, woodcocks, &c.,) a small piece of ham, an onion, two carrots, a piece of celery, some parsley, a bay leaf, a sprig of thyme, whole pepper, cloves, mace, and salt to taste. Fill up with cold water and let the whole simmer for three hours; then strain the liquor and set it to boil again. When boiling throw in one ounce of raw beef or liver coarsely chopped, a liquor glassful of sherry, and after a couple of minutes strain the liquor and set it to boil again, then throw in one ounce of raw beef or liver coarsely chopped; let it give one boil and strain the soup through a napkin.

CELERY ON TOAST.—Trim the roots and cut to the same length (about six inches) three heads of celery, wash them carefully, tie them together with string, parboil them a few minutes and drain them. Put a layer of bacon in a saucepan, lay the celery on this, with an onion and a carrot sliced, a bunch of sweet herbs, pepper, salt, a blade of mace or a few cloves; fill up with enough stock just to cover the celery and let it gently simmer till done. Take some of the liquor well freed from fat, thicken it with a little flour and butter; pour it on a dish. Have ready a number of slices of bread cut to a uniform shape and fried in butter; arrange them on the sauce in a circle, disposing half a head of celery on each.

BISQUE OF LOBSTER.—Pick out all the meat from a lobster, pound it in a mortar with an equal quantity of butter until a fine orange colored pulp is obtained; to this add pepper, salt and grated nutmeg to taste; take as much bread crumbs as there is lobster pulp, soak them in stock, then melt a piece of butter in a saucepan, amalgamate with it a heaped teaspoonful of flour, mix the lobster pulp with the bread crumbs and put both into the saucepan on the fire, stirring the contents until they thicken and boil; draw it then on one side and carefully skim off superfluous fat; then strain the soup through a hair sieve, make it boiling hot and serve with small dice of bread fried in butter.

FRIED FOWL.—When you have cut the pieces put them into a basin with a little salt and pepper; a spoonful of oil and two of vinegar, and a little chopped eschalot; stir them well in it and let them remain for half an hour; have ready a quantity of butter, and take a fork and dip each piece, one after the other, into it, and then let it drop into the frying-pan, in which is sufficient hot fat to cover them; fry a nice color and serve in the form of a pyramid, with fried parsley over, or any sauce you like under.

CHOCOLATE CANDY.—Two cups of granulated sugar, half a cup of milk; boil just five minutes; then take it from the stove and stir till it is stiff; then drop on buttered plates, and leave till cold; while it is cooling, break a square of Baker's chocolate in small pieces in a bowl, and set it over a teakettle in which the water is boiling; after it is melted then take the drops and with a fork coil them in the melted chocolate; then lay on the plates till cold.

DUCHESSE POTATOES.—Take half a dozen potatoes, boil them, pass them through a sieve, and work into them in a bowl, one gill of cream and the yolks of three eggs; add pepper, salt and nutmeg to taste and some parsley finely chopped. When they are well mixed and smooth take them up by tablespoonfuls, roll each in a ball, flatten it and flour it slightly; lay them all in a saute pan, with plenty of butter melted, and cook them slowly. Turn them over when one side is done, and serve hot as soon as both sides are colored.

POPOVERS.—One cup of sweet milk, one egg, a bit of melted butter, flour enough to make a stiff batter, and a little salt. Have the oven hot, and the gem pan warm, and the tea cakes will be light and tender.

Scientific.

—AMERICAN HEMP IN MEDICINE.—Some time ago, we do not recall precisely the time, Dr. H. C. Wood read an essay before the American Philosophical Society, in which he gave the results of some experiments with an article of hemp grown in Kentucky.

He took an alcoholic extract made from the dried leaves, swallowing at a dose nearly all the product of an ounce and a half of the leaves, with the effect of profound hemp intoxication. It proved to be toxic in its power, although he recovered himself in a day or two. He had all the exuberant hilarity usually experienced from hemp, followed by a fear of impending death, which took so deep a hold of him that it was impossible to shake it off. Other trials that he has made with it, convince him that it has more power than the cannibis Indica, or Indian hemp; on one occasion four times the dose of the latter failing to produce the effect of the Kentucky specimen.

He has his extract made from a tincture, after removing certain inert matters by an alkali. He intimates the hope that in the present revision of the United States Pharmacopœia, the ex. cannibis purificatum may be replaced by a preparation to be called Resena cannibis, and to be made by precipitating the concentrated tincture by water made strongly alkaline by soda. —Northern Christian Advocate.

—THE GASTROSCOPE.—American dyspeptics will be interested to learn something about the "Gatroscope," an apparatus for illuminating and inspecting the inside of the living human stomach. This instrument is the invention of Dr. Mikoliez, of Vienna. The London Telegraph states that on the 5th of last month it was exhibited to the leading professors of the medical faculty at the Polyklinik, and the doctor performed some interesting experiments with it upon a female hospital patient suffering from chronic dyspepsia. It consists of a tube, fitted with a set of minute but powerful reflectors at one end, and connected at the other with an electric battery, by which a brilliant light is projected into the stomach requiring inspection. This tube was passed down the subject's throat, and remained there fully twenty minutes, during which time the Viennese professors were enabled to diagnose the condition of every part of the mucous membrane thus lighted up and revealed to their gaze. The gastroscope is considered likely to render invaluable services in the cause of electro-otidoscopic investigation, which for some time past has been prosecuted with ardor by eminent Austrian pathologists. A number of ingenious contrivances for examining the interior of the body have been invented within a few years, but owing to their great cost, but few of them have come into use.

—The excavations in the garden of the Villa Farnesina for widening the bed of the Tiber, have again yielded several interesting archæological results. A statue of a Roman matron, 1 meter 70 centimeters high, and perfect except for the loss of the left hand, was found recently, and close by another statue, of Tiberius, which was, however, in many fragments. Near these a sepulchrum, containing several urns, was discovered, four of which were of the finest workmanship, decorated with reliefs of fruits and flowers; in other two, besides the ashes and calcined bones found in all, there were two gold rings, with onyx stones, somewhat damaged by fire, but still enough to show an intaglio—one of a lion sleeping, the other of three children chasing a boar. It is conjectured that the urns had been previously discovered in the Aurelian wall, which passes by a few steps off, and that the finer urns had been robbed of anything of value, while the plain ones escaped notice. On one of the latter is an inscription, "Minati A. Pollæ."

—POWER OF SEA BREAKERS.—From experiments which were made some time since at the Bell Rock and Skerryvore lighthouse, on the coast of Scotland, it was found that, while the force of the breakers on the shore of the German ocean may be taken about a ton and a half upon every square foot of surface exposed to them, the Atlantic breakers fall with double that weight, or three tons to the square foot; and thus a surface of only two square yards sustains a blow from a heavy Atlantic breaker equal to about fifty-four tons. In November, 1824 a heavy gale blew, and blocks of limestone and granite, were washed about like pebbles, at the Plymouth breakwater. About 300 tons of such rocks were borne a distance of 200 feet, and up the inclined planes of the breakwater, carried over it, and scattered in various directions. A block of limestone seven tons in weight was in one place washed a distance of 150 feet. Blocks of three tons weight were torn away by a single breaker and hurled over into the harbor; and one of two tons, strongly bronzed down upon a jetty, was torn away by an overpowering breaker.

—We find the following very questionable information in the London Engineer: "A curious fact has come to light regarding the emigration of Sheffield razor-grinders to America. In the spring of last year a Sheffield firm removed to the States, taking the workmen with them. The firm had tanks specially constructed, which were filled with Sheffield water to be used for hardening purposes. So long as the water lasted the manufacture of Sheffield razors in America progressed without a hitch, but some time ago the water was exhausted, and recourse was had to American water. To the grinders' horror, their worst fears were realized—the water would neither harden razor-blades nor give the needful polish to razors merely made 'to sell.' The failure of American water has caused the scheme to collapse, and Sheffield will recover any portion of the razor trade she had lost by the temporary success of the experiment. The grinders may soon be expected back in Sheffield."

—In a communication recently made to the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, Dr. Joseph Leidy remarks that few have any idea of the immense profusion of invertebrate life which prevails in the fresh waters of New Jersey. He named various species of minute creatures that he had found in one small pond, near Woodbury, New Jersey. Some of those contained chlorophyl; but Dr. Leidy believes they derived it from food. Good eyes can see many of these interesting creatures, without the aid of the microscope.

—M. Daubree has examined a volcanic dust which fell on January 4, 1880, at Dominica. It was remarkable as containing a considerable quantity of iron pyrites and sulphide of lead.

—The Sabine Index states that near Sabine town, there has been found a mine of coal. Parties are now employed in working it.

EDUCATIONAL.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,
GREENSBORO, ALA.

Second term opens February 20, 1882. The University is out of debt and has a full faculty.
For information address,
F. M. PETERSON,
Secretary of the Faculty.

WOODVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY,
Woodville, Wilkinson Co., Miss.
INVITES PATRONAGE.

Buildings are good and comfortable; grounds beautiful and ample; location healthful. Faculty full and efficient. Charges for board and tuition, per half academic year, $75 to $85.

East Mississippi Female College.
MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.
REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.

One of the most accessible and prosperous schools in the South. Its facilities, course of study, system and faculty are superior. It is a growing and popular institution under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"It has developed into great usefulness, and has established itself in the hearts and confidence of the people."—Mississippi Conference.

"The college is finely located to command a large patronage, and its management has been such as to secure the confidence of the people. It is an institution that deserves the liberal support and patronage of the Methodists of Mississippi."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Send for catalogue and examine terms.

Whitworth Female College,
BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.

Will re-open September 21, 1881. Number of pupils last term, 291. Number of teachers 18. Board per half academic year, $60; Tuition from $15 to $25; Incidental Fees from $1 to $4.

The languages, ancient and modern, mathematics, the sciences, music, drawing and painting thoroughly taught.

The continued success of this school is its best indorsement. There has not been a death in the college for years past. Send for a catalogue.
H. F. JOHNSON, A. M., D. D.,
President.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.
NASHVILLE, TENN.
Session 1881-82.

THE Academic, Biblical and Law Departments open September 7. The Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Departments open October 1.

The fees are as follows: Academic Department, $65; Biblical, $15; Law, $100; Medical, $65; Dental, $50; Pharmaceutical, $65.

Ten scholarships, worth $100 each, were awarded to meritorious students at the close of the last session. Four Graduate Fellowships, worth $300 each, and two Post-graduate Fellowships, worth $500, each, were likewise conferred.

The various Chairs of the University are filled by forty Professors and Instructors. Six hundred and thirty-two students, from twenty-one States, were matriculated last year.

For the ANNUAL REGISTER, or further information, address J. M. Leech, Secretary of the Faculty, or
L. C. GARLAND, Chancellor.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,
ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus, and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kuehnger, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

The Fall Session will begin September 15, 1881.

Send for catalogue to
REV. E. E. WILEY, D. D., President.

Millwood Female Institute,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.
Founded 1866. Chartered 1870.

This school opens the first Monday of September 1881, with efficient accomplished teachers in every department.

Expenses, per session of five months, including Tuition, Board and Washing, $75.

Music on Piano or Guitar, with use of instrument and class singing, $25.

For further particulars send for catalogue.
MISS. McCALMONT, Principal.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,
AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin October 5, 1881.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. The instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, progress and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to
W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Principal,
J. C. MAGRUDER A. M. Assistant.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Session 1880-81 had 134 students, six professors and teachers and three A. M. graduates. The entire expenses for board and tuition for scholastic year need not exceed $144 in Preparatory department, nor $161 in College classes. Next session begins September 5, 1881. Send for a Catalogue.
C. G. ANDREWS, President.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,
HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

The thirty-second year begins August 31. A more healthy location can not be found. The College was never in a more prosperous condition. A full Faculty of thorough teachers, splendid buildings and complete outfit for all departments, literary, music, languages and art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Prices reduced to suit the times. Special inducements offered. For terms and new catalogues address
REV. A. H. JONES, A. M., President.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy,
FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Next session opens September 21, 1881. The services of experienced and successful teachers secured. Buildings undergoing necessary repairs. Every room being thoroughly renovated, and newly and handsomely furnished. No pains will be spared to give entire satisfaction. For further information address Rev. T. C. BRALFORD, President.
Port Gibson, Miss.

READVILLA SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

Will open on the first Monday in October. For terms and circulars, address,
MRS. MARY W. REED,
Principal.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE
Female College,
TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The next session of this school will open on Monday, September 19, 1881. We ask attention to the following points:

I. Our curriculum embraces a good course of study which we teach thoroughly.

II. We are prepared to satisfy the most cultivated taste in the departments of Music and Art.

III. We employ the best teaching talent within the range of our knowledge.

IV. We keep a good table in the College Boarding Department.

V. This school has a health record which is unsurpassed.

VI. Our charges are as moderate as they can be made without marring the best results in culture.

For full information, send for catalogue.
JOHN MASSEY, President.
Tuskegee, Ala.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,
EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded in 1849, offers superior advantages and healthy retreat.

The MALE DEPARTMENT is located in a quiet farming community, seven miles from Sweetwater East Tenn., Va. and Ga. R. R.

The FEMALE DEPARTMENT is located in the model town of Sweetwater, in a lovely section. Experienced teachers, good work and low charges in both departments. Patronage merited.

For particulars address
REV. J. H. BRUNNER, D. D.,
Hiwassee College, Tenn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,
SCHOLARS
AND DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

in the South-west is now in stock and ready to all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,
NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at short notice, and prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application. Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,
SLATED CLOTH,
LIQUID SLATING,
BLACKBOARDS,
BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,
CHALK CRAYONS,
MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,
NUMERICAL FRAMES,
SCHOOL SATCHELS,
BOOK STRAPS,
WRITING PAPER,
DRAWING PAPER,
BLOTTING PAPER,
WRITING BOOKS,
COMPOSITION BOOKS,
SLATES AND PENCILS,
INK, INK STANDS, PENS,
PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, teachers and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.
FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. L. RAYNE.
OGDEN & RAYNE,
DEALERS IN
BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,
AND AGENTS FOR THE
Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,
AND
Shultz Belting Company,
18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

NEW GOODS.
GREAT REDUCTION IN
CARPETS,
Tapestry Brussels,
Seventy Cents a yard up to $1 05.
Wiltons, Axminsters, Velvets, Moquettes, Brussels, Ingrains, Three-Plys, Window Shades, Lace Curtains, Cocoa, Napier and China Matting, Turkish Rugs; Crumb Cloths, Rugs and Mats in great variety.
A. BROUSSEAU'S SON,
17 Chartres St.
Call and see for yourself.

S. K. RUSS,
—WITH—
Ayers, Richard & Co.,
WHOLESALE GROCERS
—AND—
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
74, 76 Magazine, 88, 90, 92 Poydras St.
NEW ORLEANS.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address
Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box, 598, New York.

Christian Advocate.

"Felicity."

The Rev. John Wesley Calvin Knox began his sermon on the text "God is love," "about the" multifarious cosmogonies and the idiosyncrasies of scientists and metaphysicians, whose incarnations, contemporaneous and otherwise, beginning with the prystine philosophers, whether of Egypt, or Arabia, Chaldea," etc.; and some of his hearers did not wait to see where he and is beginning would end, but they ther proceeded to adjust themselves the conditions of sleep. Why not? is surely a more hopeful and enjoyble enterprise than to try one's hand philorophical gymnastics.

We remember once listening to a rench clergyman in the Church of Ho Britains, New York. His language as choice Parisian, but what did that nify to Amreun ears, until Dr. Geo. Cheever, standing by his side, gave his honest English. After ten minthe audience wearied of the foreigr, and wished simply for one of the ter's grand Saxon sermons.

Unfortunately for Rev. J. W. C. Knox resaid, and some of his audience, he no interpreter. Nor will he be prefied upon to explain himself; and ree few churches are sufficiently reast of the times to provide the rshipers with Webster's Unabridged, result every time is—speaking in unknown tongue, or rather, for the st of some thing better to do—sleep. The long, involved sentences and ds, hard to be understood, with ich some sermons begin—if they do continue and end—are simply a deof the devil to put the hearer where will not or cannot hear the truth. A d that has been tugging all the week h life's hard battles, and is weary, sary, cannot, certainly will not, snap fin twain to hear unpleasant doctines on the Sabbath. It is said that en Webster was once making a ech in the Senate upon a profound est, and noticed that his fellowators were slipping out one by one, e those who remained were in deep ep, he turned to Calhoun, who was ng near, and inquired: "And do understand me, sir?" "Yes sir, it makes my head ache," was the ons.

e mass of church-goers do not prohe hear the Gospel at the price heads. The minister who takes trouble to darken counsel with ds, will always be rewarded as darkness. They that sleep, sleep the night.

nehow, strangely, scholars, many sters especially, whose business gh the people, act as though the were scholars like themselves, when they wish to tell them a news from God they manage to eal it in a foreign tongue.

lassical, technical and metaphysrhetoric, so often the furniture of ons—what else is it all but an unwn language to four-fifths of the whose good is sought?

Please use very simple words in ing to my people to-morrow, many of them will not understand," a country minister to a brother ng him in the city.

I will try," was the promise.

the following Monday as they sat e study, they talked of the ser-

And was my sermon simple enough, rother? I have tried to have it so."

Excellent! excellent! though there e some words of classical origin that e of my congregation probably did nderstand."

ossible! what words?"

Well, such as 'felicity' for exam-

'felicity!' nonsense! I'd like to see man that don't know what that ans.

Very well! yonder comes John, s not a scholar, I own, but then he sensible man in many respects, and of a large class who go to church, are going from our preaching to gmmut. He heard your sermon erday. I venture he had no very r idea of your meaning when you that word. "Here, John," called minister, as the latter came within g distance. "You heard this brore ch yesterday?"

Yes, sir."

Well John, you enjoyed the ser- I trust?"

Reel me a deal o' good sir."

You understood all, John?"

I think I may say I did; pretty at least. Of course, a poor, plain like me, that's never been to school ogie winter to a doestrict school, n't be expected to know everything college gentlemun say."

John, do you remember the word ecity' in yesterday's sermon?"

Yes, I think I do, well, for it come two or three times, and on the way e I says to my woman: 'Molly,' I, 'what does 'felersety' mean, ast she didn't know no better nor But we kep a-talking' on it, an'

You think you know now, John?"

Well, Yes, sir; I reckon some-

And what does it mean, John?"

I reckon it means—though I don't see how it fit in the sermon; don't mean the inside of a pig, gentle-

John is an extreme case." And if he why not accommodate him in y sermon with "happiness" inead of "felicity," which he will never take for the "inside," etc.?

One word I suppose that clergymen, all scholars, would acquire the use of simplest Saxon from their great book. Herein, King James' version is a masterpiece. From an examation of a dozen chapters in the New tament chosen at random, and a mbers of verses in the Psalms, it pears that about four-fifths or sevenths of the words are of one syllable. is is one reason why children step so ckly from the primer to the blessed ok.

he careful study of his published mons, with a view to the use of ular expression, would not harm ny a preacher whose style smacks re of Channing than of Christ.—ald and Presbyter.

The Natives of New Guinea.

Although Mr. Wallace has spoken of natives as one race, those who have n the inhabitants in the southeast greater difficulty in classifying m. All agree in testifying to the at variety of physiognomy and the arent difference in shape of skull dmost every district. Whatever the typical Papuan may be, I have n natives who possess many of the aracteristics said to be distinctive, t hitherto quite at variance with them. a letter I recently received from fessor Giglioli of Florence, he aks of having seen the large collection of skulls made by Signor D'Albertis in his voyage up the Fly River, and says: "The great variety in the shape of the cranium of some of the inland natives has sorely puzzled me. Indeed, the only feasible explanation is, that there has been a great mingling of races in that great island."

The difference in color is very marked. To the west, Black natives are found, while from Redscar Bay eastward a light-brown race inhabits the coast. On the mountains, in the interior, are people intermediate between these two in color, and essentially different in all their habits. I should say these are the true aborigines of this part of New Guinea, while the coast tribes, black and brown, are probably settlers. The light haired natives belong undoubtedly to the same race as the New Zealanders, Tahitians, Samoans, etc., but are so split up and divided that every few miles of coast brings you to a people speaking a different language from those you have just left. These are often dialects, but are quite as dissimilar as those spoken in the various islands of Eastern Polynesia. Altogether, I know of twenty-five different languages spoken in the three hundred miles of coast I am personally acquainted with. My previous acquaintance with several languages of Eastern Polynesia was a great help in acquiring that of the people among whom I was living in New Guinea. I had the pleasure of reducing two of these to a written form, and getting books printed in them, and before I left New Guinea I had the greater pleasure of hearing some of the native children read fluently in their own language.

The men are of a warm brown color, muscular and well developed, straight and agile, with fairly well-formed noses and lips, neither protruding nor thick. Many have intelligent faces, and all glory in their huge mop of hair. They carefully pull out every hair from their beards, and at times shave off their eyebrows and the hair from their temples; and most wear ornaments in their noses and tightly plaited armlets, which they make to serve them as pockets. The women wear a decent girdle or petticoat, reaching from the hips to the knees, are tattooed very closely, pierce their ears with many holes, load them down with ornaments, and shave their heads when they are married. All their muscles and limbs have free action, they are stately and graceful in all their movements, and their use of colored leaves and flowers no rules of art could improve. The position of the women is not so low and degraded as it often is among barbarous races.—From "New Guinea and its People," by Rev. W. G. Lawes.

The Royal Family of Russia.—It may be a platitude, writes H. A. Sala, to remark that illustrious rank, an income of a great many thousands of roubles a year, a fine house to live in, a French cook and plenty servants, and the breast of your coat all covered with stars and crosses do not necessarily of themselves confer on humanity the thing called happiness; but it is expedient to remember this truism in view of the opinion that those adorn no states of existence more monotonous, more useless, and, indeed, more mischievous to society, and, indeed, more generally deplorable than those of the male members of the Imperial family in Russia. The Grand Duchesses are more fortunate. They have, at least, the chance of marrying foreign potentates, of escaping from his Imperial Majesty's jail in which his Imperial Majesty himself is the chief prisoner of conversing with free people and of breathing free air. But there are these young, middle-aged, and elderly Imperial gentlemen, forming a caste apart, as isolated and comparatively as numerous as the Imperial caste of the Yellow Girdle in China, condemned to pass their lives, buttoned and buckled and strapped up in the tight-fitting uniforms, and to wear helmets or forage caps on their heads. They were dressed in uniform when they were children; they live in uniform; and when they die they will be buried in uniform. Each adult one of them is nursed up in a palace of his own as big as a barrack, where he keeps, or rather is kept in safe custody by, a swarming retinue of aids-de-camp, equeries, maitres d'hotel, grooms, and lackeys, and the wages of this army of parasites added to the revenue apportioned to their highnesses from a civil list of ten millions of roubles a year, but which, as practically unlimited, go far toward eating up the fat of the land, and grinding the face of the miserable moujik even to the bone.

Choosing a Sheykh.—In an Arab tribe, when the Sheykh dies, the elders of the tribe, heads of its great houses and sections, assemble in one of their number's tent and, sitting in a circle, discuss the subject of his successor. There really the choice of a successor is open to any one of them, for the tribe, however large, is all one great family, descended from a common ancestor, and though no one from without could be admitted to the supreme rule, any one from within the tribe can hold office. But in practice the choice is limited to a few persons. The reverence of the Arabs for blood, and for selected strains of blood, prevent them, except in very exceptional cases, from changing the dynasty of their rulers. If the dead man has left behind him a son of full age and respectable qualities, he will, without dispute, be acknowledged Sheykh. If not, an uncle, a nephew, or a cousin will be chosen. Only in extreme circumstances of general danger, or of failure of heirs male, can the member of a new family reasonably aspire to power. Moreover, there is no uniform law of election. The meeting does not pretend to give a right, only to confirm one, for the right lies, not with the electors, but with him who can maintain his election. There is, therefore, no formal system of voting, but the elders having ascertained who among the dead man's relations commands the strongest following, proceed to acknowledge him by the ceremony of giving him their hands. He then becomes their Sheykh. It sometimes happens, however, that parties are so evenly divided between rival leaders that the tribe divides, one section going this way and the other that, until one of the leaders gives in his submission; otherwise the quarrel is decided by the sword.—Fortnightly Review.

Why should we insist on bearing our own cares, when God is ready to bear them for us? Why do we magnify them, and multiply them, and brood over them, as if in so doing we could relieve ourselves? Let us go with them at once to him, knowing that it is no self-righteous to keep our cares as our sins from him. Let us go to him with thanksgiving as well as prayer. Oh, how thanksgiving lightens all burdens and scatters all shadows! How quickly care leaves us when we rebuke it with "Bless the Lord, O my soul!"—H. Bonar.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. S. PFISTER,

Millinery and Dressmaking,

539 Magazine Street,

Bet. St. Mary and Felicity. NEW ORLEANS.

Bonnets and Hats Cleaned, Dyed and Altered.

E. E. LELAND,

No. 185 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

IMPORTED

MILLINERY

French Flowers and Feathers,

ORNAMENTS

Fringes and Tassels, Dress Trimmings, Novelties in Buttons, Ribbons, Corsets, Novelties in Ladies' Neckwear, Veilings and Crapes, Velvets, Lace Goods, Etc., Etc., Etc.

Special attention paid to Country Orders.

CRESCENT INSURANCE COMPANY,

Incorporated as a Mutual Company in 1869—Re-organized as a Stock Company in 1880.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - - $100,000.

Has paid nearly NINE MILLIONS for losses since 1864.

Annual and Term Policies Issued on Desirable Fire Business.

W. R. LYMAN, ...President.
CHAS. M. EDSON, ...Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICE, ...Secretary.

TRUSTEES:

Samuel H. Kennedy, Victor Maurer, W. B. Conery, George W. Scholl, A. C. Monlton, Charles Newman, C. Marlborn, Lucien Dalcey, Charles H. Edson, Reuben G. Rush, John Ader, S. C. Cuning, W. A. Phelps, McGibbs, Paul E. Moritzier, Joseph Bowling, S. Hernsheim, Ed. J. Gay, Edwd Nalle, J. J. Reiss, Louis Prados, W. W. Swain, Harry L. Fleck, John Brunaso, A. H. Steward, E. H. Adams, Sigmund Katz, N. H. Wallace, W. R. Lyman.

See our Agents throughout Louisiana Texas, Mississippi and Arkansas.

Factors' and Traders'

INSURANCE COMPANY,

19 CARONDELET STREET,

Paid Up Capital ..... $1,000,000.

ED. A. PAYFREY, President,
JOHN PHAFFE, Vice President,
THOS. F. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies, Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks At the Lowest Tariff Rates.

TRUSTEES:

John I. Noble, Wm. Ward McElroy, R. M. Widmeyer, T. Lyell Lyon, Wm. J. Behan, Chas. Chalfe, Wm. Hartwell, A. L. Jenks, Henry Abraham, A. Bayliss, Wm. Cumming, R. T. Buckner, John Chalfe, Samuel Friedlander, A. H. Mott, Samuel H. Byrd, B. F. Eshleman, A. C. Jeffry, C. J. Lewis, A. M. Blackham, Louis Bush, G. W. Scovell, John T. Adams, Wm. A. Gwyn, Chas. E. Black.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S

MAMMOTH

QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 100 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF

CROCKERY

Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods

OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS

JOHN CAUCHE,

AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,

109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,

Branch House, Nos. 103 and 110 Chartres Street.

HOW TO PAINT.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut, staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture, cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures.

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations whenever they can serve to make it "object plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

TRADE MARK — QUALITY NOT QUANTITY — PURITY

A TRUE TONIC.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS are a certain cure for all diseases requiring a complete tonic; especially Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Intermittent Fevers, Want of Appetite, Loss of Strength, Lack of Energy, etc. Enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. Acts like a charm on the digestive organs, removing all dyspeptic symptoms, such as fasting the food, Belching, Heat in the Stomach, Heartburn, etc. The only Iron Preparation that will not blacken the teeth, or give headache. Sold by all Druggists at $1.00 a bottle.

BROWN CHEMICAL CO.
Baltimore, Md.

See that Trade Mark and Crossed Red Lines are on Wrapper. Take no other. None genuine without them.

CAUTION: IMITATIONS.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.

SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Wgt with Comp. yoke & frame	Comp. Bell & Hang'g.
No. 6, 27in.	540 lbs.	$ 75 00
No. 6½, 27½in.	540 lbs.	88 00
No. 7, 30in.	890 lbs.	90 00
No. 8, 34in.	730 lbs.	75 00
No. 9, 38½in.	925 lbs.	130 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

H. D. McCOWN,

DEALER IN FINE

CLOTHING,

SHIRTS

AND

Mens' Furnishing Goods,

Cor. Common and St. Charles Sts.

NEW ORLEANS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S

—MANUAL—

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, JR.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages--Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—acquired analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, In Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $2 50.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price. Address

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

NEW HOME!

SEWING MACHINE

Is More Perfect, Costlier to Make, More Durable, and made of Finer Material than any other Machine, and

SOLD FOR LESS MONEY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: If you do not wish to buy the New Home, I advise you to wait until other machine companies make a machine equal to it.

HEADQUARTERS, 170 CANAL ST.,

GUSTAV SEEGER,

Sole Agent.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ORDERS

—FOR

Fresh, First-Class Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Etc.,

—SENT TO—

E. H. ADAMS & BROTHER,

WILL RECEIVE THE

PROMPTEST AND MOST CAREFUL ATTENTION.

AS THEY DO NOT DEAL IN

"Damaged Goods," "Auction Goods," or "Job Lots,"

THEIR PATRONS ARE SURE TO GET GOOD VALUE.

No. 594 Magazine Street, New Orleans.

D. H. HOLMES,

155 Canal Street, - - - 15 Bourbon Street.

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in

Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.

HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.

D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, New Orleans.

WHEELER & PIERSON,

(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Howell)

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,

Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40.
6 Shirts for $9
Business Suits, $12 to $36
Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices from Wholesale Department up stairs.

U. S. BONDS.

Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.
Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

58 CAMP STREET.

JAMES COBBS,

Attorney at Law,

16 ST. FRANCIS STREET,

MOBILE, ALA.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,

112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

I have decided to distribute the remainder of

My Stock of Pictures

among my customers, rather than sacrifice them. Any person buying $5 and upwards of other goods, will be entitled to select from Arches of Pictures ranging in price according to the size of bill purchased. No additional price will be put upon the goods, as this is entirely a bonus to induce sales during the dull Summer months.

My stock is comprised in part of Carpets, Oil Cloths, Upholstery Goods, Mantings, Wall Paper, Widow Shades, Cornices, Curtain Goods, Wire Screens Frames, Mouldings and Mirrors.

E. HEATH,

97 and 99 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The Shortest and Quickest Route to all Eastern Cities.

THROUGH WITHOUT CHANGE TO

Nashville, Louisville, Lynchburg, Washington, Cincinnati, Columbus, O., and St. Louis.

ENTIRE TRAINS THROUGH FROM NEW ORLEANS TO LOUISVILLE.

	Leave:	Arrive:
Express	7.02 A. M.	10.02 P. M.
Canal Accommodation	3.32 P. M.	9.12 A. M.
Fast Mail	5.00 P. M.	10.02 A. M.

ONLY ONE CHANGE OF CARS TO NORTHERN AND EASTERN CITIES.

Ticket office corner St. Charles and Common sts. where Sleeping Car accommodations can be secured

C. P. ATMORE, General Passenger Agent;
J. H. SMITH, Ticket Agent;
J. T. HARAHAN, Superintendent.

FURNITURE.

W. C. TEBAULT,

47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. C. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!

Personal experiences in the

UNITED STATES and CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES,

By J. B. HOOD,

Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army.

Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund, by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.

Price in cloth binding, $3; in leather, $4 50.
Mailed, post paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street.

Liverpool and London and Globe

INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT,

Office, Cor. Carondelet and Gravier Streets.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, in which shares must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

STATEMENT OF THE COMPANY, JANUARY 1, 1881.

Gross fire assets	$12,167,458 41
Fire liabilities, including paid-up capital	5,875,057 54
Net surplus,	$6,292,400 87

STATEMENT OF THE U. S. BRANCH, JULY 1, 1881.

Assets	$1,656,218 78
Liabilities	2,000,000 00
Surplus	$1,942,051 91

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from liability thereon, leaving the Company on record, even pending litigation with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

J. F. SCHLOEDER, Esq., Commission Merchant, of the firm of J. F. Schloeder & Co.
NEWTON BECKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Latimore.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson & Simpson.

HENRY V. CHILTON,
Resident Secretary.

JULES P. POEY, Assistant Resident Secretary.
CLARENCE F. LOW, Deputy Assistant Secretary.
New Orleans, October 20, 1881. (myr.com.)

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30, and upward.
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward.
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
All guaranteed.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Corner Bourbon and Royal Sts.

New Orleans Pacific Railroad.

TRAINS WEST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
New Orleans, leave	7.00 A. M.	5.00 A. M.
Algiers	7.40 A. M.	5.20
Harvey	7.45	5.27
Company Canal	7.50	5.30
St. Charles	8.00	5.34
St. John	11.15	11.05
Vacherie	1.00 P. M.	10.57
St. James	1.15	10.40
Donaldsonville	2.30	11.30
Bayou Goula	4.15	12.21 P. M.
Plaquemine	4.45	12.36
West Baton Rouge, arrive	7.00	1.30

TRAINS EAST.

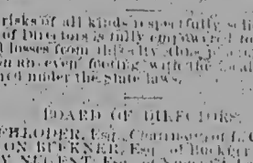
	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
West Baton Rouge, leave	7.00 A. M.	2.30 P. M.
Plaquemine	8.27	3.14
Bayou Goula	9.14	3.57
Donaldsonville	10.31	4.50
St. James	12.00 M.	4.59
Vacherie	1.00 P. M.	5.12
St. John	2.00	5.17
St. Charles	2.15	6.17
Company Canal	2.30	7.11
Gretna	2.35	7.26
Algiers	2.45	7.36
New Orleans, arrive	3.00	8.00

For rates and information address

H. S. MORSE, Superintendent. M. H. SPELMAN, G. P. and T. Agt.

New Orleans, October 1, 1881.

BEE CULTURE.



MANUAL OF THE APIARY.

By A. J. COOK,

Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.

THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being new it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SULLIVAN & BURGER,

97 CAMP STREET,

Plumbers and Gas Fitters,

DEALERS IN

Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all kinds, Iron, Lead and Terracotta Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges, also, different kinds of Gas Machines, for country use.

All Orders Promptly Attended to.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. J. JONES & Co. Nassau, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House Ann Arbor, Mich.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, Feb. 6, 1882.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day:	Sat.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	8⅞	8⅞
Ordinary	9⅛	9⅛
Good ordinary	10⅜	10⅜
Low middling	11⅛	11⅛
Middling	11⅝	11⅝
Good middling	12	12
Middling fair	12⅜	12⅜
Sales to-day	2,000 bales.
Receipts since our last	9,363 bales.
Receipts previously	1,61[illegible] bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	6@	6⅛
Fully fair	—	—
Prime	—	—
Choice	—	—
Yellow clarified	8¾	8¾
White clarified	8¾	8¾
Powdered	—	—
Crushed	—	—
Molasses, in bbls., ₱ gallon:
Common	—	—
Fair	—	—
Prime	—	—
Choice	—	—
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	5	5
Fair	6	6
Prime	6¼	6¼
Choice	6¾	6¾

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	—	11
New York	13	—
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio, ordinary	8¾	9¼
Rio, fair	9¾	9¾
Rio, prime	10¾	11
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	—
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands	—	14@
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.:
Choice Kiln	—	4 50
Flour, ₱ bbl.:
Superfine	5 00	5 25
XX	5 50	5 75
XXX	6 00	6 50
Choice	—	—
Choice fam	—	—
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1 in bbls	8 25	8 00
Half barrels	4 50	5 00
Kits	2 75	3 00
Mackerel, No. 2 in bbls	7 40	8 00
Half bbls	4 00	4 50
Kits	2 50	2 75
Mackerel, No. 3 in bbls	7 10	8 00
Half bbls	3 85	4 50
Kits	2 40	2 75
Codfish, ₱ lb	—	—
Herring, ₱ box	—	—
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Coal, in cases	—	—
Coal, in bbls	—	—
Linseed, raw	67	68
Linseed, boiled	69	71
Cotton seed	35	41
Lard	80	1 00
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia	—	2 25
Olive	—	2 50
Palm	—	—
Castile	—	2 60
Soda, ₱ lb	—	—
Starch, ₱ lb	—	3¾
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse	75	85
Fine	95	1 20

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	—	—
White	88	89
Mixed	—	80
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	57	58
Red rust-proof	70	75
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs.:
Choice	1 45	1 50
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	—	24 00
Choice	—	26 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed	—	—
Clay	1 75	2 00

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	11¾	12
Shoulders	—	7¾
Sides, clear rib	10¾	10¾
Sides, clear	—	11
Hams, sugar-cured	12¾	13
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	19 00	19 50
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb:
Clear rib sides	—	10¾
Clear sides	—	10
Shoulders	7	7
Lard, ₱ lb:
Choice, in kegs	—	12¾
Choice, in tierces	11¾	11¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl:
Irish	3 75	4 00
Sweet	—	2 00
Onions, ₱ bbl	2 00	2 50
Apples, ₱ bbl	3 00	4 00
Cabbages, ₱ lb	—	—
Sour Kraut, ₱ bbl	—	8 00

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
India	—	—
Jute	—	—
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	—	15
Ties, ₱ bundle:
20 lbs and under	—	1 50

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ doz:
Grown chickens	4 50	5 00
Young do	3 00	3 50
Ducks	3 00	3 50
Geese	4 50	5 00
Turkeys	15 00	18 00
Eggs, ₱ doz:
Western	20	25
Southern	20	25
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon	—	—
Comb, ₱ lb	—	—
Pecans, ₱ lb
Louisiana	—	12
Texas	—	—
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	—	—
Foreign, ₱ box	1 00	5 00
Wool, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	22	23
Texas	—	—
Feathers, ₱ lb
Geese	—	—
Hides, ₱ lb:
Country green	6	7
Dry salted	10	10¾
Dry flint	12	12¾
Ox Horns, each	—	6
Tallow, ₱ lb	6¼	7¼
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton:
In sacks	—	—
Meal	23 50	24 00
Oil cake	25 00	26 00
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	2 50	2 75
Molasses barrels	—	1 35
Half barrels	—	1 05
Kegs	—	70
Oak Staves, per 1200:
Kegs	—	60 00
Barrels	70 00	75 00
Extra claret	100 00	105 00
Extra hogshead	140 00	145 00
Extra pipes	190 00	195 00
Tobacco:
Low fugs	—	6
Medium	—	7¾
Good to fine	—	—
Low leaf	—	8
Medium	—	9¾
Good	—	10
Fine	—	12½
Selections	—	—

DON'T DREAM.

Sleep, to be most refreshing, should be dreamless. Use Brown's Iron Bitters, and you will enjoy healthful, dreamless slumber. It strengthens every part of the body, and is very soothing in its effect on the brain and nervous system. It is the best medicine in the world, and assists nature in removing all symptoms of ill-health.

—The wife of the new Chinese Minister is the first Chinese lady of rank who has visited this country. The women of that country are interdicted from going abroad.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Jan. 31.—A fire broke out at 10 o'clock this morning in the building corner of Park Row and Beekman street, recently occupied by the New York World. The flames spread rapidly and involved the entire block as far as the Times office. The latter suffered some damage, but the fire was extinguished before doing serious harm to the Times. All the other buildings in the block were practically destroyed.

It is known that one woman was killed in trying to escape by the window. She broke through a canvas stretched to save her, and her head was crushed. It is supposed other lives were lost.

The pecuniary loss is very heavy; in the block were a large number of offices of weekly and other newspapers and periodicals, among which were the Scientific American, New York Observer, Turf, Field and Farm, Scottish American Journal, Thompson's Bank-note and Commercial Reporter, Forest and Stream, and Italian, Spanish, Swedish, German, and Portuguese weekly journals, and a number of advertising agencies. The building at 35, 37 and 39 Park Row was also involved.

TRENTON N. J., Jan. 31.—Oscar L. Baldwin, late cashier of the Mechanics' National Bank, of Newark, appeared before the United States Court here to-day and pleaded guilty. He was sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment in the State Prison.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 31.—The Richmond Board of Health reported 21 deaths from small-pox last week, 8 white and 13 colored. During the same period 15 new cases were reported, 7 being small-pox and 8 variolod.

MERIDIAN, Miss., Jan. 31.—The trial of Bud C. Jones, white, and Billy Miller, colored, for the murder of three sons of Judge J. P. Walker, of Alabama, took place yesterday at Aberdeen. Jones pleaded guilty and Miller not guilty. Both were found guilty and sentenced to be hanged March 3.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—The Committee on Elections in the House of Representatives to-day dismissed the contested election case of B. H. Lanier against Hon. J. Floyd King, for the seat of the latter in Congress. The vote to do so was unanimous. The committee is composed of eleven Republicans and four Democrats.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—In accordance with the application recently made by Mr. Blanchard, Gen. Hazen, Chief Signal Officer, has determined on the location of cotton belt signal stations at Alexandria and Natchitoches, and also for the extension to those towns of the frost warning system of the department.

NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—The Herald furnishes the following:

PARIS, Feb. 2.—The following important dispatch was received direct this morning from Lieut. Danenhoner at Irikutsk:

Our three boats left Semeowsky Island on the morning of September 12th, bound for Barkin, 95 miles distant. We got clear of the ice at noon. There was then a heavy gale from the northeast, and the boats dispersed. During the night the captain's boat, which was loaded deeply, lost her masts and sails. We made land on the 17th, in shallow water.

The boat was abandoned two miles from the beach, and one party waded and reached the deserted village of Sagopp. We catched log books, and proceeded South on September 19. Lieut. Delong's last record, which we have found, reads as follows:

"SATURDAY, Oct. 1, 1881.—Fourteen of the officers and men of the Jeannette reached this hut on Wednesday, September 28th, having been forced to wait for the rivers to freeze over; are proceeding to cross to the west side this morning on their journey to reach some settlement on the Lena river. I have two days' provisions, but having been fortunate enough this far to get game in our pressing need.

"We have no fear for the future. Our party are all well, except Hans Erikson, whose toes have been amputated in consequence of frost bite. Other records will be found in several huts on the east side of the river, along which we have come from the North.

GEO. W. DELONG."

"Three other records have been found. Erikson died on October 7. The party were in great distress from want of food. Naros and Nintiemann were sent ahead for relief on October 9. They marched South for fifteen days, and were found in a staryling condition on October 24 by three natives, who took them to a settlement. They could not make themselves understood.

"News of them reached us on October 29. Immediate search was commenced, and the party were traced to a wilderness on the west bank of the Lena. The natives refused to do further work and a return to Batanorga was necessary, to get Russian assistance, on November 28.

"A large force is now searching, having to dig out everything, as the ground is deeply covered with snow. The wilderness is devoid of game.

"Very prompt and efficient action was taken by the Russians; every effort is being made. Jack Cole is tranquil to-day. He is violent only at times. He has softening of the brain.

"My left eye is ruined, and my right one is badly impaired. Other men are well. "JOHN W. DANENHOUER,
"Lieut. U. S. Navy."

CHATTANOOGA, Feb. 2.—There has been very great damage done by floods in the Warrior and Tombigbee rivers in Central Alabama. Through trains came in last night over the Alabama Great Southern Railway for the first time in ten days, and it is now clear. Four or five negroes were drowned and a large amount of live stock. Several parties have lost from 100 to 150 head of sheep. A large number of fine Cashmere goats were lost by one farmer and several lost a number of horses and mules. Farmers have suffered great losses of crops, etc.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—The consideration of the Mormon question by Congress is about to receive a fresh impetus through the presence in this city of the committee appointed by the General Conference of the reorganized Church of Christ, Latter Day Saints, to wait upon the President and Congress, and present their version of the Utah problem, and their proposed solution.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 3.—The Conference of Methodist Episcopal Missionaries, which has been in session here for a week, ended to-day. Twenty-three missionaries attended the Conference which was presided over by Bishop Andrews, of Washington.

According to reports submitted, the year's work has been remarkable. It is stated that the number of churches established is beyond the means and men at the command of the commission.

The most notable event of the year was the conversion of a prominent and learned Spanish priest, Dr. Frientes.

SHREVEPORT, Feb. 3.—Heavy rain fall here for the past thirty-six hours. The overflow of the whole lower country seems inevitable. The lakes above here are higher than for the past six years. Many plantations above and below are already under water and the levees are said to be giving away.

AUSTIN, Texas, Feb. 3.—Small-pox has disappeared at the Camp. There have been 19 cases and 10 deaths; 7 recovered and 2 are convalescent.

CHICAGO, Feb. 5.—The news is received here that the Pope is about create the office of Papal Delegate to America, and that Bishop Fitzgerald, of Little Rock, will probably be appointed to that office.

JACKSON, Feb. 6.—The Grand Royal Arch-Chapter of Masons met to-day in their thirty-fourth annual convention.

JACKSON, Feb. 6.—The Senate passed a bill to-day appropriating $50,000 towards immigration.

FOREIGN.

HONG KONG, Jan. 12.—The relations between China and Japan are still unsatisfactory. China is gradually adding to her naval and shore strength. A Corean envoy has been dispatched to Pekin to complain of ill treatment of the Coreans by Japanese.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—A St. Petersburg dispatch to the Daily News says: Gen. Ignatieff, minister of the interior, in receiving a Jewish delegation, said he hoped that before many months were over the western frontiers would be opened to the Jews.

A St. Petersburg dispatch to the Daily Telegraph says: The murder of a Jewish family of six persons, near Novidvor, was committed by a body of peasants without the smallest provocation.

Mrs. Nancy Harman, of Mansfield, O., writes: "I have been under the care of a physician during the past seven years Sometimes I would feel better, and then again I would feel worse. The past two years nothing seemed to help me. About two months ago my doctor seemed to be getting discouraged, and I lay completely bed-ridden. I grew very nervous: the least noise gave me great irritation. The doctor, I suppose more to get me off his hands than anything else, as he said I would never leave my bed, told me I might try Brown's Iron Bitters, at the same time remarking, 'It was a good tonic, and help to keep me alive.' I have used the remedy about two months, and have been out of bed nearly two weeks, and now help about the house. It has acted like a miracle in my case."

THE RICHEST MINES IN COLORADO.

The late discoveries at Rico, in the San Juan country of Colorado, have caused as much excitement as that which attended the first opening of the Leadville camps, and have induced many thousands of the old miners and operators to go into the new section. The first mines opened at Rico were on the east side of the Dolores valley, and the remarkable richness of the ores, as well as apparently inexhaustible resources of the fissure veins and deposites, quickly attracted there the most energetic and enterprising people in the state. The population of the town is over 3000, and it has every kind of business houses, fine buildings, mills and smelters, that a progressive people could possibly place there within the two years of its existence. After the wonderful wealth of the Newman group, which are the principal mines in the east side of the beautiful valley was put into active production, investigation showed that the west side contained a rare wealth of mineral that is not less in importance and profit than the first discoveries. Capitalists and working forces were put into action to develop the mines, and they indicated such great value that arrangements were immediately made to secure every appliance necessary to an economical development of the mineral which is stored there. The Denver and Rio Grande Railroad Company, has rapidly extended their line by way of Durango, to be first in the field and capture the profitable trade and transportation of that section. The mild winter has permitted constant work on the line and the road will be finished to Rico in May of this year. Already the vast quantity of mineral shipped from the place indicates that when all the forces for perfectly economical production and shipments are perfected, this region will be the largest producer of mineral in the Rocky Mountain country. In the valley of the Dolores, in which the town of Rico is the county seat and central trading point for all the surrounding camps, there are vast deposites of anthracite and bituminous, gray ash coal, iron, lead, salt, pipe clay, lime, wood and many materials necessary to the milling and smelting of mineral into bullion. The agricultural resources of the creation are extensive and sufficient to sustain at cheap prices for provisions, a large population. Pre eminent among the new discoveries, is the Little Sadie. This mine is a surface fissure vein, averaging about six feet thickness of deposit, and so situated it can be worked more economically than any other mine in that region, say at $2 50 per ton. A mill placed on the site at the base of the mountain can be easily supplied with from thirty to fifty tons of ore, shot into it from the chute of the mine. The Little Sadie is being operated by the same parties who so successfully opened and controlled the rich mines on the east side. These gentlemen are now the active spirits of the Dolores milling and mining association of Colorado, and with their remarkable push and energy will make it one of the most profitable enterprises of the San Juan silver region. The plan is to not sell mines, but they are selling stock, to secure an increase of capital, with which to enlarge their facilities and property, so as to make it as profitable an investment as possible to those who are interested. They have the best of credential and references to bankers and prominent business men in New Orleans and Denver, and what they offer as inducements to those who desire such an investment, is certainly more promising of profits than accrues from almost any other kind of legitimate business. The representative men of the association are Mr. Wm. F. Marrs, the treasurer, and Wm. Y. Elrode, Esq., in Parlor C of the St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans, where they have specimens of their ores and will explain the plan of the association.

—Patrick Henry was twice married and left fifteen children, and there are now living, probably, more than one hundred of his descendants. William Wirt Henry, a member of the Richmond bar and representative of that district in the state senate, is his grandson. Senator Reane, of Virginia, was his grandson and General Joseph E. Johnston is his great nephew, as also William C. Preston, the distinguished senator in Congress from South Carolina.

The District Stewards of Woodville District, Mississippi Conference, will please meet at the Methodist Church in Greensburg, on Wednesday, February 15, 1882, at eleven o'clock, A. M. I hope the brethren will appreciate the importance of the business to be transacted enough to attend the meeting.

R. A. LITTLE, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

GREENSBORO DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Greensboro station	Mar. 4, 5
Newberne circuit, at Mt. Hermon	11, 12
Greensboro ct., at Mt. Pleasant	" 17
Havana circuit, at China Grove	18, 19
Green circuit, at Pleasant Grove	25, 26
Livingstone and Eutaw, at Eutaw	Apr. 1, 2
Gainsville circuit, at Sumpterville	8, 9
Cuba circuit, at Carl's Station	15, 16
Demopolis station	29, 30
Forkland circuit, at Trinity	May 6, 7
Belmont circuit, at Belmont	13, 14
Gaston circuit, at Coke Chapel	27, 28
Choctaw circuit, at Mt. Arcurat	June 3, 4
Butler and Mt. Sterling, at Mt. Sterling	10, 11

District Stewards will meet on Saturday, April 1 at Eutaw.

6 H. PRICHART, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

NEW ORLEANS DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Algiers	Jan. 28, 29
Moreau street	Feb. 5
Lobdell's Avenue	12
Felicity street	19
Baton Rouge	25, 26
Grosse Tete, at Rosedale	Mar. 1, 5
Bayou Lafourche, at Houma	" 11, 12
St. Charles Avenue	19
Carondelet	26

The District Stewards will convene January 30, at Carondelet Street Church, 7-P. M., in pastor's office.

3 CHRISTIAN KLEINTZ, P. E.

OPELOUSAS DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Washington	Jan. 21, 22
Plaquemine Brulee and Kimball's chapel	" 28, 29
Lake Charles	Feb. 4, 5
Abbeville	" 11, 12
Sugartown	" 18, 19
Opelousas	" 25, 26
Pattersonville and Morgan City	Mar. 4, 5
New Iberia	" 11, 12
Franklin	" 18, 19
Vermillionville	" 25, 26
Calcasieu mission	Apr. 1, 2
Grand Chenier	" 8, 9

3 LEWIS A. REED, P. E.

DELHI DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Waterproof, at Waterproof	Jan. 21, 22
Tensas, at Jordan Chapel	" 28, 29
Monroe, at Monroe	Feb. 4, 5
Trenton, at Trenton	" 11, 12
Lake Providence, at Lake Providence	" 18, 19
Winnsboro, at Winnsboro	" 25, 26
Delhi, at Delhi	Mar. 4, 5
Rayville, at Rayville	" 11, 12
Oak Ridge, at Prairie	" 18, 19
Lind Grove, at Bartholomew	" 25, 26
Bastrop, at Bastrop	Apr. 1, 2
Floyd, at Floyd	" 8, 9

2 H. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

SILVERPORT DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Coushatta, at Coushatta	Jan. 21, 22
Springville, at Armstead chapel	" 28, 29
Logansport	Feb. 4, 5
Cadilo, at Liberty	" 11, 12
Mooringsport	" 18, 19
North Bossier, at Concord	" 25, 26
South Bossier, at Bellvue	Mar. 4, 5
Shreveport	" 11, 12
Mansfield	" 18, 19
Natchitoches, at Natchitoches	" 25, 26
Many, at New Hope	Apr. 1, 2
Anacoco, at Holy Grove	" 8, 9
Sabine, Bayou Sea	" 15, 16
Pleasant Hill	" 22, 23

District Stewards' meeting will be held at Shreveport, March, 11, A. D. 1882.

3 T. H. MCLENDON, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT—FIRST ROUND.

Meridian	Jan. 7, 8
DeSoto	" 14, 15
Waynesboro	" 21, 22
Winchester, at Hebron	" 28, 29
Chickasahay mission, at Mineral Rights	Feb. 4, 5
Shubuta, at Shulata	" 11, 12
Paulding, at Paulding	" 18, 19
Enterprise and Quitman at Enterprise	" 25, 26
Enterprise, at Chunkey	Mar. 4, 5
Marion, at Marion	" 11, 12
Lauderdale, at Lauderdale	" 18, 19
Linwood, at Linwood	" 25, 26
DeKalb, at DeKalb	Apr. 1, 2
Lone Creek mission, at Oak Grove	" 8, 9

JAS. A. GODFREY, P. E.

JACKSON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Canton	Jan. 1, 2
Jackson	" 7, 8
Edwards	" 14, 15
Bind's mission	" 17, 18
Bolton	" 21, 22
Madison, at Wesley	" 28, 29
Soule Chapel	Feb. 1, 5
Sharon, at Union	" 11, 12
Benton	" 18, 19
Silver City	" 25, 26
Yazoo City	Mar. 1, 5
Bover	" 11, 12
Mt. Carmel	" 18, 19

4 W. L. C. JOYNICOTT, P. E.

BRANDON DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Marvin circuit, at Wesleyana	Jan. 7, 8
Cato circuit, at Clear Creek	" 14, 15
Trenton circuit, at Pokeville	" 21, 22
Raleigh circuit, at Raleigh	" 28, 29
Brandon station	Feb. 1, 5
Fannin circuit, at Holly Bush	" 11, 12
Lake circuit, at Lake	" 18, 19
Walnut Grove circuit, at Hillsboro	" 25, 26
Carthage circuit, at Goshen	Mar. 4, 5
Newton circuit, at Newton	" 11, 12
Forest circuit, at Grange Hall	" 18, 19
Beeds Springs mission, at Mill Dale	" 25, 26
Decatur mission, at Mt. Hebron	Apr. 1, 2
Philadelphia mission, at Philadelphia	" 8, 9
Ludlow mission, at Conrell	" 15, 16

District Stewards will meet at Morton, on Friday, February 3.

4 J. M. GANN, P. E.

WOODVILLE DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Amite City	Jan. 7, 8
Clinton	" 14, 15
East Feliciana	" 21, 22
Pinckneyville, at Pinckneyville	" 28, 29
St. Helena	Feb. 4, 5
Amite	" 11, 12
Jackson	" 18, 19
Pipkins and Port Hudson	" 25, 26
Bayou Sara	Mar. 4, 5
Livingstone	" 11, 12
East Baton Rouge	" 18, 19
Wilkinson	" 25, 26
Wilcoxville	Apr. 1, 2
North Wilkinson	" 8, 9

Address, Greensburg, La. Pastors, by card, Inform Presiding Elder of place for First Quarterly Meeting.

35 D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Crystal Springs	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Wesson and Beauregard, at Wesson	" 7, 8
Hazlehurst	" 14, 15
Brandywine, at Behoboth	" 21, 22
Summit, at Summit	" 28, 29
McComb and Magnolia, at Magnolia	Feb. 4, 5
Providence, at Hahala	" 11, 12
Bayou Pierre, at Pleasant Ridge	" 18, 19
Adams and Bogueschitto, at Adams	" 25, 26
Scotland at Bethesda	Mar. 4, 5
Spring Ridge, at Forrest Hill	" 11, 12
Terry, at Pleasant Grove	" 18, 19
Brookhaven	" 25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in Hazlehurst, January 14, 1882.

52 J. A. B. JONES, P. E.

VICKSBURG DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Natchez	Dec. 31, Jan. 1
Vicksburg	Jan. 7, 8
Warren circuit, at Bovina	" 14, 15
Port Gibson	" 28, 29
Rocky Spring, at Grand Gulf	Feb. 4, 5
Cayuga, at Utica	" 11, 12
Fayette circuit, at Fayette	" 18, 19
Meadville, at Oak Grove	" 25, 26
Kingston	Mar. 4, 5
Clover Hill, at Mayerville	" 11, 12
Rolling Fork, at Rolling Fork	" 18, 19
Mt. Olivet at Satartia	" 25, 26

The District Stewards will meet in the Methodist Church at Port Gibson, January 28, at 10 o'clock A.M.

52 R. S. WOODWARD, P. E.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WINONA DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Iuka	Feb. 18, 19
French Camp	" 25, 26
Kosciusko circuit	Mar. 3
Kosciusko and Durant	" 4, 5
New Hurt	" 11, 12
Richland	" 18, 19
Lexington	" 25, 26
Winona and Valden	" 30
West	Apr. 1, 2
Wilkins circuit	" 8, 9
Walthall	" 15
Carrollton	" 15, 16
Black Hawk	" 22, 23
Minter City	" 29, 30
Greenwood	May 6, 7

Preachers on French Camp and Zilpha will please inform me where their Quarterly Conferences will be held. My address is Durant, Miss.

3 THOS. Y. RAMSEY, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SINGER — 40 — OBELISK

BORROWED BY I. M. SINGER TO BUILD THE FIRST SUCCESSFUL SEWING MACHINE AUGUST 1850

THE GENUINE SINGER MACHINE HAS BEEN AWARDED THE FIRST PRIZE OVER ALL COMPETITORS

HIEROGLYPHICS THAT EVERYONE CAN UNDERSTAND

200 TIMES

SALES OF THE GENUINE SINGER FAMILY SEWING MACHINE

1860	SOLD 12,489
1871	219,758
1873	232,444
1874	241,679
1875	249,852
1876	262,316
1877	282,812
1878	356,432
1879	MACHINES SOLD 431,167
1880	538,609

TRADE MARK

BEING OVER THREE-QUARTERS OF ALL THE SEWING MACHINES SOLD THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

BUY NONE BUT THE GENUINE

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END

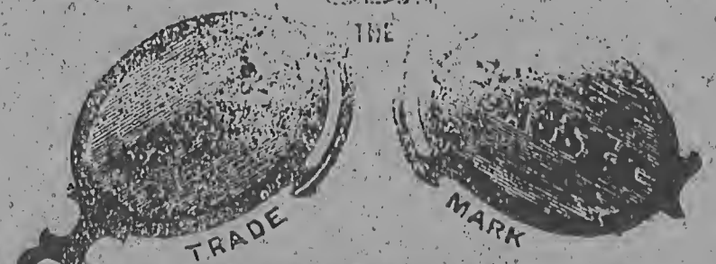
THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

85 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

$5 to $20 per day at Home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co. Portland, Maine.

No. 56 Charles St.



A WONDERFUL and

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, AND possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, as when first you use them. They have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European oculists, and that the MEDICATED GLASSES have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that is usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.
2. The chemicals make the glasses hard; they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first.
3. The chemicals keep the glasses cold, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.
4. With these glasses you can read, write or sew all night, the light having no effect on the eye, with no distressing or tiresome sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS—NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED.

The MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the frame H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED.

Dealers Supplied Wholesale at Liberal Discount.

ALL EYES SUITED. Persons residing at a distance who may wish to procure these spectacles can send for a circular containing description, prices, etc., and directions for insuring a perfect fit, and have them sent by mail, by addressing

HERC. HOUSAH,
CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,
56 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing mention this paper.

CHURCH'S MUSICAL VISITOR,

AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF MUSIC.

Every number contains 32 large pages filled with Musical Sketches, Original Articles, Criticisms, Poetry, Notes, Musical News, and five to ten pages of New Music. Every subscriber receives free, the choice of 10 Elegant Premium Volumes!

Each premium contains 32 pages of Sheet Music. Full particulars and list of contents of premiums sent on application.

Subscription only $1.50 a Year!

Agents Wanted in every Town and City, to whom a liberal commission will be paid

Circulars, blanks, etc., supplied free.

Send Stamp for Sample Copy.

PUBLISHED BY

JOHN CHURCH & CO.,

New York Office, 5 Union Square. | CINCINNATI, O.

DIUTURNITY:

A COSMICAL ESSAY,

By REV. R. ABBEY.

Concerning the World's Present Infancy, Its Immense Future, Its Undiscovered Treasures, Its Indestructability, The Wisdom of Providence, The Office of Science, The Scope of Christianity, The Folly of a Millennium, The Non-human Second Coming of Christ, and The Glorious Destiny of Mankind.

"No ordinary ability is displayed. We have read the whole book with unflagging interest. It is suitable, readable and remarkable."—N. Y. Methodist.

"One of the most remarkable books we ever read."—Christian Advocate, Nashville.

"The author is a man of mature and scholarly mind."—American Christian Review.

"An entirely original argument. Readable and remarkable."—Missouri Presbyterian Herald.

"Diuturnity is the name of the book of the age."—Gospel Herald.

"Clear thinking, wonderful originality. Vast amount of information."—Home Monthly.

Highly commended by more than a hundred writers. Price, $1.50.

Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville,
G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS.

Dealers in all kinds of

LUMBER, SHINGLES, &C.

AND IN

ALABAMA COAL.

Shipments made from either Mobile or New Orleans or from Mills or Mines direct.

WANTED.—White Oak Staves, Red Cedar and Black Walnut logs, received at either New Orleans or Mobile. Highest cash price paid.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

W. F. MELLEN,

Attorney at Law,

12 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,

RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,

220 Jackson St., Bet. Chestnut and Coliseum

NEW ORLEANS.

Office Hours—Eight A. M., and three to four P. M

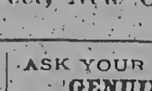
ROSES We give more and better plants for the money than any other house in the country. Catalogues for 1882 now ready, free to all. Send for one and see for yourself the beautiful plants we offer. MILLER & HUNT, Wrights Grove, Chicago.

ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR THE GENUINE AND ORIGINAL

"ESTERBROOK" "Falcon Pen, No. 048."

Beware of Imitations! The Genuine Falcon Pens are stamped "ESTERBROOK."

TAKE NO OTHER



Every Box bears our Signature, thus:

R. Esterbrook & Co.

Esterbrook Steel Pen Co., 26 John St., New York

TURK'S POSITIVE ROTARY HYDRAULIC MOTOR,

For running all kinds of Machinery by

Water Power.

Send for Circular and Price List to
G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SEND 25 CENTS

For a copy of the new

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Mailed post-paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

KNABE

PIANOFORTES.

UNEQUALED IN

Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

Nos. 204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore
No. 112 Fifth Avenue New York.

DR. ELY'S PATENT ARTIFICIAL LIMBS. The Best and Cheapest. Satisfaction guaranteed. I keep on hand a large assortment of Trusses, Shoulder Braces, Abdominal supporters, Elastic Stockings, etc., at moderate prices. Send for pamphlet and price list.

A. MEDERMOTT, Manufacturer,
153 Camp St., New Orleans

CANCERS ARE CURED.

(Without knife or pain.) Patients not laid up a single day by treatment, but improve from the beginning. ALL DISEASES OF FEMALES, (no matter how long standing) are speedily and happily cured; as, irregularities, nervousness, tumors, ulcers, displacements, fistulas, etc., by

T. G. BRACKING, M. D.,
134 Canal street, New Orleans, La.

Those afflicted had better call at once.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. G. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT a specific for hysteria, dizziness, convulsions, Nervous Headache Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions Prem

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 28.—NO. 7. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1882. WHOLE NO. 1393.

PUBLISHED FOR THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.

Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. FELIX R. HILL.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE.

BY MRS. M. E. SANGSTER.

Come, old fellow, the grain in the manger,
Is yours, and you've earned it. No wonder you stare,
Annoyed and displeased, when a pert little ranger
Comes hopping in boldly your dinner to share.

O beautiful creature! so rugged, and steady,
So swift and sure footed, so willing and wise;
Whoever may need you, so gentle and ready,
I know what you're thinking; it beams from your eyes.

He ruffles his feathers, this pretty intruder,
And arches his crest, and is gallant and gay.
Can aught in the world possibly seem to you ruder
Than his, as he leisurely stands in your way.

You say, Why, you'd scorn to be put in a passion;
The cause is too slight. You will patiently wait
The satisfied rooster, in vain rooster fashion,
Flies off, without thanks, to some meek little mate.

The thoroughbred follows the law of his being,
To only with equals he cares to contend;
He bears with annoyance quite patiently, seeing
That sooner or later annoyance must end.

William Winans, D. D.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Hon. J. F. H. Claiborne, of Natchez, Miss., through Dr. W. G. Austin, of this city, sends us a letter written by Dr. Winans to Col. Claiborne, dated Centerville, Amite, Miss., January 9, 1855. Col. Claiborne, when Bishop McTyeire was editor, wrote a most entertaining series of sketches for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE over the nom de plume of John Bunyan. We are much obliged to him for the letter. The first part of it is taken up with personal and private matters, omitting this, the balance is as follows:

I shall now proceed to answer your questions regarding myself, as well as I am able, in the limited space allowed me in a letter.

1. You ask me to inform you of "the place of my nativity and any incidents of my early life." I was born near Braddock's Grave, in Pennsylvania, on the third day of November, 1788, and, at two years of age, was left to the sole care of my mother, having three sisters and a brother, all older than myself. My mother was poor and depended upon the labor of her own hands, with the slight assistance of her older children, for the support of herself and children. She was, I believe, the most industrious human being I ever knew. I scarcely ever saw her unoccupied, day or night. She usually lulled me to sleep at night with the sound of her Scotch wheel, and aroused me in the morning with the bustle of housekeeping occupations. We never wanted bread to eat nor raiment to wear; and, besides this, our careful mother taught, or had us all taught, to read. By some means, I do not know how, my brother, four years older than myself, learned to write; and from him I learned enough, as, by dint of perseverig application, to write in the plain, inartificial manner in which this letter is written. This is the amount of the education I received, except that, when I was about eighteen years old, I received instruction in arithmetic during fifteen and a half days. This enabled me to return the obligation conferred upon me by my brother in teaching me calligraphy, as I initiated him in the science of figures and calculation. When I was two years old, my mother removed to Ten-Mile creek, in Green county, Pa., where she remained some seven years, and then removed to George's creek, Fayette county, Pa., near Union Town. Here we continued till I was sixteen years old, and then removed to Clermont county, Ohio, where I remained till I entered the itinerant ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

2. When, where, and under what preaching I was awakened to a sense of duty; when I united with the church, and when I experienced conversion," etc. To the former part of this question, I can give no very explicit answer, as I can recollect no period of my life when I was not awake to a sense of religious and moral obligation. My excellent mother was sincerely pious, long before I was born, and she diligently imparted pious and moral instruction to her children as soon as their minds could receive it. There were, however, quickenings and recessions to the strength of the impressions, so made upon my mind, by the preaching of the gospel at sundry times, and by various ministers. When I was eight or nine years old, I heard Valentine Cook and James Smith, and was deeply impressed by their ministry, so that I earnestly desired to be a Christian. But, during the following six or seven years, my associations, which were as bad as any out of the infernal regions could be, led me into many vicious habits: Dancing, Sabbath-breaking, card-playing, and even drunkeness were vices in which I frequently indulged, and with keen and still increasing relish. I lived in the vicinity of large iron works, and was employed in them; and, in those days, the characters of those employed in that business were, perhaps, unparalleled for wickedness. In 1803 or 1804, a young man, named Davidson, came to my mother's, and proposed to make her house a preaching-place on the circuit. He prayed with us with great fervor and unction, and left an appointment to preach; but severe affliction prevented his doing it, and I never saw him again. His manner, his conversation and his prayer made a deep and lasting impression on my mind and heart. Soon after, Simon Gilespie, James Hunter, William Knox, Thornton Fleming and Andrew Hemphill successively preached at my mother's house, and formed a small society of which I was a member. My association, which had been so pernicious to my morals, still continued; but I was graciously enabled to resist its influence and to maintain a consistency with my engagement so far, at least, as external conduct was concerned. The preachers, whose influence with me was most powerful, were Hunter and Hemphill, especially the latter. In 1805, we removed to Ohio, and I took with me the proper voucher of my membership in the church. But, the dissipating influence of emigration and a protracted separation from the ordinances of religion had brought me into so careless a state, that when I had an opportunity to claim my membership in the church I declined doing so, under a conscientious persuasion that I was unfit for the relation. My love to the church and my desire to be a Christian continued however, and I was, perhaps, as punctual as any member in attending the means of grace, including love-feasts and class meetings. This continued till on Christmas day, 1806, I was shut out of love feast by John Collins, a preacher whom I venerated more than all others. I then determined that I would not again be excluded from love-feast; and, accordingly on the same day—my certificate of membership, brought from Pennsylvania, being now a nullity—I joined on trial. I was sincerely desirous to be a Christian, but not very earnest in my efforts to that effect till in March, 1807. Then I became truly penitent and sought diligently and in bitterness of soul for pardon. On Easter Sunday, March 29, at a prayer meeting at night, and while I myself was leading in prayer, God spoke peace to my soul and wrought a wonderful change in my whole moral nature, shedding his love abroad in my heart. I was soon after appointed class leader, and, on the twenty-ninth of August, received license to exhort. I first made an attempt to preach in a private house—my mother and the rest of my family in the congregation—on, I think, the sixth of June, 1808. The presence of my family, my mother especially, embarrassed me more than would that of the President and Congress have done. I have not dared to attempt preaching on the same text since, though I have written a sermon on it. It was Eph. v. 8. On the twenty-seventh of August, 1808, I received license to preach, and immediately entered upon the work of the itinerant ministry, though I was not formally admitted into it till the following October. My first regular appointment was to Limestone circuit, including Augusta, Washington and Maysville, and, before the year expired, by a uniting of the Limestone and Flemming circuits, Flemingsburg, in Kentucky. My second appointment was to the Vincennes circuit, Ind. This circuit included all the settlements on the Wabash and White rivers, from the Indian line to the Ohio river. I went to this circuit, October 17, 1809, and left it October 23, 1810. I was the second preacher appointed to this circuit, and, during the whole year, I never saw an itinerant preacher, and had but little assistance from local preachers, of whom there were three, I think, on the circuit. Here my acquaintance with President Harrison commenced; and I was enjoying his hospitality at the time of his council with Tecumseh, which met on the lawn before Harrison's door. This council was held between two men, than whom few have lived who were more patriotic, wise or brave. They viewed the matter in debate—a into land sale to the United States by the Miami tribe—from different standpoints, and both honestly believed they were defending the right. Tecumseh had spoken very ably from ten A. M. till two P. M., (his speeches being twice interpreted;) and Harrison had spoken, by way of introduction, ten minutes, and had entered upon the merits of the dispute in a second speech, when, upon the interpreter translating it into the Indian language, Tecumseh, who was sitting on the ground, sprang to his feet, and said, fiercely: "That's a lie!" Immediately the Indians, who were of his party, also sprang up, and as fiercely assented to his negative. I happened to be standing at the back of Gen. Gibson's chair, and heard him whisper to the officer in command of a guard of thirteen men: "Have your men ready; these fellows intend mischief." He had lived twenty years among the Shawnees.) The men were brought immediately in front of Tecumseh and his confederates, with arms presented and ready for instant action. Had the Indians attempted violence, all their chiefs would probably have fallen, as the guard were not more than five paces from them and covered them with their muskets. But for the presence of this guard, I have no doubt there would have been a horrible massacre of the whites; as few of them had any arms, and as the Indians were well armed for close conflict, though without fire-arms. The "Life of Harrison" does my gallantry more credit than it is entitled to. It represents me as going to the door to defend the women and children; whereas, in fact, I do not know that I thought of them. I had seen a musket, with a fixed bayonet, standing by the door, and thither I went that I might arm myself if a conflict ensued—the door was in a few feet of where the council was held. I have thus answered your second, third and fourth questions, without attending to your division of the subject.

5. "When I came to Mississippi; where I have labored, and what changes I have noted, showing the progress of Methodism in Mississippi; what it was then and is now." I came to Mississippi, on horseback, from Vincennes via Shelbyville, Ky., the seat of the Conference that year, and arrived at Port Gibson, December 5, 1810. My fields of labor have been as follows, in the order in which they are stated, viz: Claiborne, Wilkinson, Natchez and Claiborne two years; New Orleans, 1813-14, Natchez and Claiborne, Wilkinson; local five years, on account of ill-health; Natchez circuit 1821, Mississippi district four years; Washington station, Washington district three years; missionary agent, three years; superannuated 1833; New Orleans district, one year; Wilkinson supernumerary, one year; Woodville station, one year; agent for New Orleans Church, 1837; New Orleans district, one year; Natchez district, four years; New Orleans district, three years; agent for Centenary College, 1846; Natchez district, two years; Woodville station, agent for Centenary College, superannuated, four years. I have been a delegate to General Conference nine times, and delegate to the convention which organized the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

When I came to Mississippi in 1810, the Mississippi work of the itinerant preachers extended over what is now the territory of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama Conferences. The number of itinerant preachers, then occupying this extensive area, was ten, and the number of members in the church was 500. Now the number of itinerant preachers must be over 300, and that of the members of the church over 50,000. Thus has the number of itinerant preachers increased thirty-fold, and the number of members nearly, perhaps fully, one hundred and sixty-fold, within the forty-four years of my connection with the Methodist ministry of this country. Besides this, we have contributed a good deal towards forming the Memphis, Arkansas, two Texas, and Florida Conferences, and somewhat towards that of the Conference in California. To God alone be praise!

Permit me to hope that you will no longer defer to seek that most important of all blessings, of which you acknowledge yourself to be still destitute. You have passed the meridian of your life. Your sun will soon wheel its downward course to the close; and, oh, how dreary will be its setting, if the grave be not illuminated with the hope of a glorious immortality!

WILLIAM WINANS.

P. S.—I forgot to reply to one of your questions in its proper place. You wish to know whose funeral it was which I preached at Washington, and which was published. It was not the funeral of either Ellen Hewitt or Elizabeth Freeland; but it was that of Mary Magruder, of Eliza Magruder, wife of John, and of Robert Dunbar, son of Joseph Dunbar, Esq. I have but a single copy, or I should send you one. W. W.

Change of Pastors.

MR. EDITOR: The Georgia letter from Bro. Wadsworth opens questions which can not be too much discussed for the good of the church.

First. Frequent changes of the preachers. The old custom was to change often, almost invariably each year; then, sometimes, quarterly and semi-annually. The principle upon which these changes appear to have been made was this: If a preacher was not accomplishing something, move him where he could show fruit, and send a man in his place to do that work. It was no reflection on him. It was simply considered a case of lack of adaptation. It was never presumed that every good man would be equally useful at every place. I knew a good man once sent to a very good place. He asked for a change because, as he said, "he did not strike their flint, and they did not strike his." In the case under review, it is said that one of our Bishops has held the Conference three years out of four, and that most of the preachers were moved. Doubtless it was needful. His holding the Conference so often made him familiar with the men and the work. It is by no means sure that, on the average, only three minutes were given to the consideration of each case. I heard a presiding elder say of Bishop Dogget, that at a certain session of the Conference he had almost perfect knowledge of the Conference when he went into the cabinet. It is the main work of the Bishops to fix the appointments. They have from May till the ensuing session of the Conference to study and arrange the work. They have the church papers and minutes of the Conference, as well as their own knowledge and the advice of the presiding elders. Perhaps, in three-fourths of the cases, clerical work would be all that was necessary in the cabinet. Nor is a Bishop entirely confined to his cabinet for information. Whether lay delegation intentionally carried with it advice to the Bishops, or not; yet, practically, it has inevitably done so. It is unreasonable to suppose that great and good men in the church shall leave places of prominence and influence at home to go to a session of the Conference, with hearts full of anxiety for their church, and with heads full of information, and yet impart none of it to the Bishop.

Because a man has been poorly supported, is that the reason why he should be returned to the same fare? or sent to a contiguous charge to be valued at his former price? These removals are needful to the man and the church. If he is doing but little, and receiving less, the change may stir him up to strive harder, and may also beget within the church a feeling to aid him as never has been done before. If the move does no other good it may cause a good man to drop into his normal position, that of a local preacher.

Bishop Pierce has presided in Arkansas about as often as all the other Bishops together; and nowhere is there a finer itinerant spirit, because he has not allowed the members of the Conferences to become local itinerants. Twelve months ago he moved almost every man who had been at a place two years for that reason alone, so I have been informed. My ex-presiding elder tells how the good Bishop gained him by a move across the Conference. He thought himself ruined, yet the Bishop had simply opened up for him a career of increasing and continued usefulness now entering its thirteenth year.

Second question. Strengthen the episcopacy. Our good Bro. Wadsworth is right here, though wrong in the way that he reached this conclusion. It has ever been the head of Methodism; one good eye of the wise, one good ear and one good eye is not enough. The time of the greatest growth of Methodism has ever been when the superintendency was the most general. And like a general providence it necessarily carries with it a special. From the days when the apostles were scattered abroad by persecution, and went everywhere preaching the gospel, till now, we have needed our chief pastors often among us. This planted Christianity, at least, from the pillars of Hercules to the gardens of Babylon. Mr. Wesley, facing the snow storms of the mobs of England, with fortitude, dotted the whole land with societies. Asbury and McKendree, men whose home was the saddle, knew all the preachers, all the work, and made all the appointments. What would they think of two sessions of the cabinet a day? And yet, who ever made such necessary appointments? After the traditionally abused General Conference of 1866, what a rapid growth we had. So great was the faith, so far-seeing were those wise men, that they added four more to the college of five Bishops. Since then our membership has increased two-fold. The momentum was given by this new strength to the episcopacy. The order was to advance all along the line. Like a Wellington at Waterloo, our leaders were right among us to put us on the back and tell us: "Up and at them." This spirit animated our Bishops till Bishop Marvin flying around the world, staggering to hold his Conferences, and fe[illegible] very beat of the action, ripe in experience and rich in information, which we never received because we had worked him to death. The church realized then that these dauntless spirits had been over taxed, and the cry went up to halt them. It ought to have been to reinforce them. Their numbers had not been increased to meet the increased demands of the church. It was time to rest them. Another soon followed. And yet another tarries on the boundaries of the better land. Of those that remain, one is more than superannuated, the next has so incessantly proclaimed the glad tidings that he is almost voiceless. Of the three active Bishops, the senior, with his eighty years of youth upon him, shouted "hallelujah" up and down the shores of the Pacific, into Texas and back to his native State in less than a twelve month. The second, in perils by land and perils by sea, and not dreading the other perils, has had the moral courage to move "114 out of 178." I dare say, because they ought to have been moved. The third, tackling the "Virginia idea," gives the "indefinite extention" a few strokes of the pen; the fur flies vastly, yet he is still ready to do his duty, and if not in Mexico before the meeting of the General Conference, it will be because his body can not keep up with his heart. These men need help. If the General Conference of 1882 has the courage of the General Conference of 1866, we will have twice six new Bishops. We have doubled our membership since that time, and there ought to be a proportionate increase of the episcopacy. When we have that general supervision, and the responsibility is thrown upon the Bishops in making the appointments, then moving men about will be so frequent, that its strangeness will cease to cause dissatisfaction. It is said that west of the Mississippi river we need a Bishop. We need three. Missouri, Colorado and Illinois surely need one. Arkansas and the Indian Territory is a heritage the church ought not to neglect. Texas, now locked by bands of steel to New Mexico, surely can not do with one Bishop. She possibly may by her Northern Conferences lying near the episcopal resident at Little Rock. Not meaning that our men must be elected (though we have competent ones;) but that they must come and live among us and give us their presence and oversight. What would be thought of all the preachers in a district living near one point, or all the presiding elders on one side of a Conference? We need a resident Bishop now. We are suffering for the want of his labors. A Northern Methodist Bishop has been visiting Little Rock recently. The secular papers had more to say of him than they did of all the Southern Methodist ministers combined during the entire year. This alone is no little matter; besides other reasons.

G. A. BASKERVILL.

ARKADELPHIA, ARK., Feb. 2, 1882.

That Bible Address.

MR. EDITOR: I beg leave to thank you for publishing that superb, original and masterly address on the Bible, delivered at the anniversary of the Bible Society by Rev. Dr. Carter. It is full of marrow; an enriching, continuing, enlightening and very eloquent address. It reminds me of the professedly inexperienced stranger amongst the gold mines of the West. He waited to find a mine. But in order thereto, he went among the old miners and observed the eying of those skilled in the business. As he looked about he saw vast heaps of pulverized rock and earth, from which, as was supposed, all the valuable nuggets had been extracted. Here and there he found hitherto undiscovered lumps of the precious metal and put them in his wallet. When asked what he was about, he said he was hunting a gold mine. But he was diligent in going from one great hill, or mountain, to another, gathering fresh treasures—taking no sand, no silt, no mere microscopic atoms, only full nuggets, which other eyes had not been keen enough to discover, nor hearts patient enough to toil for and secure. One day he was found packing for a journey, and was asked: "Whither away?" He replied: "Homeward." "Why, have you found your mine?" or, "are you disheartened?" "No," he said, "not disheartened, but I have gathered as much as I can carry and am going to take it home."

Dr. Carter broke into stores of exhaustless wealth, and looking around was overwhelmed with the riches. Only apparent to an unlustructed eye; ready to be seen by a true observer, and everywhere displayed in greater or less profusion and variety. But, not having unlimited time, and wisely anxious to secure some material as a reward of his endeavor, he commenced collecting specimen nuggets and coining them as he hurried over the boundless acres of golden wealth, until, when their limited homeward steps behold! he has arrived at union, full of the rarest of garnered treasures, both in quality and abundance. Doubtless many thousands of your readers will join me in thanking the orator for the valuable contribution.

Now, I want others to read it, and to have it put into tract, or pamphlet form, and circulated as a Bible currency among the people at large. Such presentations of the claims of God's holy word, aiming to meet no brawling blasphemer in his pathway through the Golgotha of bald and brainless skulls, is often productive of more good than a pitched battle with special foes. When I had read to the last word I blest Heaven for men so endowed as to exalt the word of life in the hearts of their fellows as brethren, and my heart went out in a new fresh joy over the glorious book of books, which the address had presented so charmingly to the understanding and the heart. Still, as imperfection attaches to all human productions, so a great one is quite conspicuous in the address—it was entirely too brief. The Bible Society ought to put it in a pamphlet form for still wider circulation. Yours,

C. K. MARSHALL.

VICKSBURG, MISS., Feb. 1, 1882.

Good Words.

No shattered link of covenant
We ever need regret,
For out of disappointment
Flow sweetest odors yet.
The discord that involveth
Some startling change of key,
The Master's hand revolveth
In richest harmony.

—Belief in a future life is not the result of inductive and inferential reasonings—such as the incomplete justice here, or the dissatisfaction with all earthly good—but that, rather, these result from the instinctive belief in immortality. Savages and children never doubt it: and the nearer you approach the instinctive state, the more indubitable it is. It is only when refinement, civilization and science come that it grows dim. The attempt to rest our intuitions on a scientific basis, inevitable as the attempt is, brings with it doubt—and you get back faith again when you quit logic and science, and suffer the soul to take counsel with itself, or, in Scripture language, "when you become again a little child."

—How possible it is to mix together the vigor of a masculine and manly intellect with the tenderness and charity which is taught by the gospel of Christ. No man ever breathed so freely when on earth the air and atmosphere of heaven as the Apostle Paul—no man ever soared so high above all prejudices, narrowness, littleness, scruples, as he; and yet no man ever bound himself to the ignorance, the scruples, the prejudices of his brethren. So that what in other cases was infirmity, imbecility and superstition, gathered around it in his case the pure, high spirit of Christian charity and Christian delicacy.—Robertson.

—Let us remember that we are always casting the shadow of our real life upon some one; that somebody is following us as John followed Peter into the sepulcher. Happy if, when all the influences of life flow back and meet us at the judgment, we can lift up clean hands, and spotless robes, and say: "I am free from the blood of all men." Happy, then, to hear even one soul saying to us out of the great multitude, that, following the shadow of our Christian life and devotion, he found Jesus and heaven.

—What contrasts of permanency and durability with change and decay arise in the mind contemplating the fixed stars from this world of ours. What an image of immutability and eternity is a fixed star—pointing us to another and endless existence—to another and better life; a lighthouse of the skies, beckoning the mariner on the ocean of time to a haven of eternal rest; a window in the heavens revealing glimpses of glory, which eye hath not seen and which ear hath not heard.

—No shrinkage or decay may come to Christian hope. Its nature is to become healthier, lovelier, richer, fuller of inspiration thrills. It has in it the quality of eternal youth. Its dreams can never be too extravagant, nor its poetries too brilliant, nor its ambitions too lofty. Years can never dim its eye, nor clip its wings. The frosts of experience may never chill its blood, nor hush its song. Time and age only make it more radiant, robust and fleet.

Prayer of a South Sea Islander, after Sabbath service: "O God, we are about to depart for our homes. Let not the words we have heard be like the fine clothes we wear, soon to be taken off and folded away in a box till another Sabbath comes round. Rather let thy truths be like the tattoo on our bodies, ineffaceable till death."

God's will is so high above humanity that its goodness and perfectness can not be scanned at a glance, or it would be very terrible if it were not for his manifested love, manifested in Jesus Christ. Only that holds our hearts together when he shatters the world.—E. B. Browning.

—There are three distinct realms in the empire of Jehovah; the moral, intellectual and physical. These would be harmonious and a unit and perfect but for sin, which, so far as man is concerned, has ruptured its harmony and marred its perfection. —Rev. H. J. Eddy, D. D.

Supposing all the great points of atheism were formed into a kind of creed, I would fain ask whether it would not require an infinitely greater measure of faith than any set of articles which they violently oppose.—Addison.

"There is nothing," says Sir Samuel Romilly, "by which I have through life more profited than by the just observation, the good aphorism and the sincere and gentle encouragement of amiable and sensible women."

—We can not skip the seasons of our education. We can not hasten the ripeness by a single day, nor dispense with one night's nipping frosts, nor one week's blighting east wind.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1882.

THE HEAVENLY SOWING.

BY REV. DR. H. BONAR.

Sower Divine!
Sow the good seed in me,
Seed for eternity.
Plough the fallow soil,
Break the obdurate toil
Make it a fruitful field
And the true yield
...
Sower Divine!
Sow in this waste ground
...
Has made it fertile
...
Darkness and in light.
Sow in the early and the latter rain,
The seed shall harvest grow
...
Sower Divine!
Sow deep this heart of mine
...
Sower Divine!
Let not this harvest-day
Lead the to thrive away,
...
Fit me by fruitfulness
Be ripe like the not in ripeness;
For in this field be dry,
Refresh it from on high,
Sower Divine,
Water this heart of mine!

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENEL.

First Quarter—Lesson VIII.

SUNDAY FEBRUARY 19, 1882. MARK iv, 1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."—Revelation II, 19.

THE SOWER.

1. And he began to teach again by the sea-side: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, so that he entered into a ship, and sat in the sea; and the whole multitude was by the sea, on the land.

2. And he taught them many things by parables, and said unto them in his doctrine,

3. Hearken; Behold, there went out a sower to sow:

4. And it came to pass as he sowed, some fell by the way-side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up.

5. And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth:

6. But when the sun was up, it was scorched; and, because it had no root, it withered away.

7. And some fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

8. And other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up, and increased, and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some an hundred.

9. And he said unto them, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

10. And when he was alone, they that were about him, with the twelve, asked of him the parable.

11. And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God; but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables:

12. That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.

13. And he said unto them, Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables?

14. The sower soweth the word.

15. And these are they by the way-side, where the word is sown; but when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.

16. And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness;

17. And have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time: afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

18. And these are they which are sown among thorns; such as hear the word,

19. And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

20. And these are they which are sown on good ground; such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirty-fold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

The increasing popularity of the great Teacher attracted a multitude of hearers from all the country round. For his own convenience the Master withdrew from the city, and returned to his favorite preaching place, the seaside, and began again to teach. His boat, pushed out from the shore, and afloat on the sea, made his pulpit, the gentle sloping shore his auditorium. The arrangements were happily chosen. The preacher sat in the boat, in full view of all on the shore, nothing back of him to catch the eye but the round sky bending down to meet the sea in the far distance. The conception was his own. His eyes had ere this beheld a throne, before which was a sea of glass, ever whose crystal surface resounded, day and night, the holy, holy, holy of the four living creatures of song. The throne of God has a sea before it.

The water and the winds, one the readiest conductor of sound, the other the obedient carrier, became his messengers, and wafted every syllable of his lips to the outermost man in that vast multitude. Not a word or tone was lost to any ear. The winds, in reverent hands, bore his words, and the sea gave her aid in transmitting this wondrous speaker's tones. What manner of man is this? the very winds and sea obey him.

He taught them many things in parables, and said unto them in his doctrine, Hearken, behold, there went out a sower to sow. He begins by drawing in their hearing an exquisite word-picture, by which he portrays to the untutored multitude the nature and laws of a spiritual kingdom he came to set up in human hearts, and, wonderful to relate, his pictures are grouped out of the most familiar things in life. He indoctrinated those unspiritual hearers in the mysteries of a spiritual kingdom by using such terms and such objects as they were familiar with. The Master, unlike all other teachers coming to introduce new philosophies, used no new terms, but took such as men were already acquainted with. Every other teacher coming to announce some new or strange doctrine begins by fixing a vocabulary of words and terms, but Jesus took human language, and used it as the vehicle of spiritual truth. It was a stupendous task, fraught with inextricable difficulties, to couch spiritual truth in the words of men whose spiritual faculties were all but extinct. How would you proceed to teach the deaf-born the note of a clarion, or the blind-born the color of crimson? But this Teacher, with consummate wisdom and skill, and with no apparent effort, uses the symbols of visible and tangible to teach the invisible and intangible. He expressed the profoundest spiritual mysteries in formulated equations, in which there were not a single unknown term, and the resultant truth was the mysteries of godliness made plain.

Hearken! Who had better right to demand attention than this Teacher, whose every utterance upon any subject was final, and left absolutely nothing further to be spoken. Behold! The style of his teaching is dramatic—a scenic illustration of the truth. The Saviour puts upon the canvas of the imagination a single individual. The Sower, the ideal Husbandman, who wishes to have the greatest yield from his field, and plants all of it. Sowing not only the best prepared parts and the most fertile, but the stony places, the paths, the turn rows, where the cattle trod when turning, and in the fence corners, where the plow could not come; no place was left for weeds. To plant all the field, good and bad, and to plant it with good seed, such was the part of a wise Sower, and such would be the planting. He states the yield. Some did not spring up at all. Some sprang up, and then withered away. A third lot of seed sprang up and grew, but yielded no fruit, and a fourth sprang up, grew, and yielded fruit, some much, some more and some most. Notice, there were three causes of unfruitfulness: birds, stony places, thorns—but only one cause of fruitfulness—good ground. There are three degrees of fruitfulness: thirty, sixty and one hundred fold. He closes the simple recital of this frugal husbandman with the singular and significant advice: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

The idea Christ would convey in these words is that these divinely provided organs of hearing, along with the word spoken in our hearing, fastens responsibility upon the man which he can not shake off, and which he would do well to heed. The order of grace is "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Men have a careless way of hearing; they abuse and misuse their ears, and hear not the still small voices which whisper the most important truths. To men who have only eyes, seeing the truth, creates obligation to obey it. Those having only ears, hearing the truth, fastens the obligation to obey it. So with the mind, the heart, the will; so that a man must be less than a fool to escape obligation, "for the way-faring man, though a fool, need not err therein." God puts the necessity of ignorance upon no man, but leaves men without excuse.

Those words set the disciples to thinking on the Lord's parable. His earnest words made them feel that there was something more in the simple recital of this story of the Sower than that which appeared in the mere surface, that there was a deeper hidden meaning. So keeping his words, as soon as opportunity offered, they ask the Master for an explanation. Good for the disciples; to him that hath shall be given. Only they that ask are to receive, and they that seek find. Had they let the subject drop, we never would have had the explanation of this parable from the mouth of the great Expositor. We would not have had this key to all his parabolic teachings. We would have been left without this infallible guide to all future interpretation. By referring to Matthew's account, and comparing it with Mark's and Luke's, we will find that a double question was asked. First, why he spoke in parables to the multitude, and, secondly, as to the meaning of the parable. His answer is: Because unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God, but unto them that are without all these things are done in parables; parables can be acted as well as recited; example: "healing the leper," "cursing the fig tree," "raising Lazarus from the grave;" singular answer. Did Christ design to reveal truth to some and not to others? Why should he speak plainly to the disciples and hide his revelation from others? Shall these that are without perish? Who fixed the boundaries? Was there any superior qualities of soul in those disciples that they should have a place in the inner circle of his confidence to exclusion of all those perishing souls who were without? What a mystery meets us here! Why were the disciples who were so slow to believe and so stupid in learning so highly privileged above others?

The answer Christ gives is that unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God. Why unto them is the power to know granted? By that invariable rule of God's gifts. To him that hath shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but to him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he seemeth to have. The grant was made to the disciples because they heard his words and kept them. The conditions for the bestowment of knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom are: 1. An earnest desire for them. Man can know just as much of God as he wants to know. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." 2. Cherishing and using the gift. He that heareth and doeth my sayings is like a wise man that built his house upon a rock.

God locks up the walls of salvation to all but the thirsty. None find but those who seek; none receive but those who ask. To none is the door of heaven opened but to those who knock. We may ask and receive, and seek and find, and then lose all we have received, and the treasure we have found, if we but fail to cherish and use it. Faith works by love. Oh! if you would have your feet on the Rock, and your eye pierce heaven, hear these sayings, and do them; keep them. But why did the Master veil his truth behind these similitudes. For the same reason that veiled his divinity and omnipotence in the flesh for the same reason that God hides himself in his person, in his providences, in his government, in his works—that man may be untrammeled, be left free to choose, that he might exercise his freedom of will. Christ could have so revealed the truths of his kingdom that men perforce would have believed. He could have so revealed his mysteries of the kingdom, as to make his revelation as irresistible to the conscience as the truth of mathematics is to the mind, and then man would not have had the liberty of doubting. This King cometh not with observation; so his kingdom wants no such subjects. This kingdom is to be one of free souls. All its offers are to free men; it obtrudes its claims on none; it coerces no will; its conquests are all by love. Hence the doctrines by which it is to be propagated in human hearts must be couched in terms which leave men free. The parables of Christ are like the providences of God. There is always room left to explain them upon natural principles, and eliminate from them all of the supernatural; otherwise men would have no option, the truth would drive them with its irresistible force, and men would cease to be men, but would be like motes in the storm.

Christ explains exactly why he used parables—that seeing they may see and not perceive, and hearing may hear and not understand, lest at any time they would be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them. If Christ had used direct methods, revealed his truth as God did on Sinai, let through his glory and majesty, with every revelation, there would have been no room for doubt, no permission to see and not perceive, none to hear and not understand, so that at any time they saw or heard they would by the irresistible power of his presence and word be tured, converted, and their sins would be forgiven them; a forced repentance would bring a forced pardon, and the great principle of co-operation of God and man, in salvation of man, would be ignored.

But to the interpretation of the parable. Christ has beautifully explained it. The divine Artist, having outlined his picture, now sheds upon it a flood of light, which brings out in clear relief all the hidden lines and touches. We shall not attempt to add any word to his. But we will gather up some of the lessons taught in this picture. The first and fundamental mystery revealed is the co-operation of the divine grace with the human will in salvation. Salvation the result of the co-operation of grace and faith.

As long as fruit grows from seed, and the seed needs a soil in order to its springing, growing and fruiting, so long will the law of the harvest be a fit symbol of the nature of the co-operative work of grace, and the human will in the salvation of a sinner.

The fruit comes not forth from the earth without a seed, nor the seed prosper and grow without the will of the soil; so in salvation, the man can not bring forth fruit unto eternal life unless divine grace drop the seed of a new life in his heart.

Christ says the sower soweth the word. The seed in this spiritual harvest is the word of God. The field is the world, the different soils in the fields are human hearts. The word of God is a seed, quick and powerful, a seed whose germ never dies, can not be too old to sprout whenever the right conditions are furnished in the soil; it prospers. The word of man sows itself in human hearts and lives, how much more the word of God.

Once in the history of the world the earth brought forth grass, herbs and trees without seed being planted. God spoke, and they sprang up and bloomed and fruited. God's word was the seed of the first natural harvest, the seed of that harvest came from God's granary; afterward each plant had its seed in itself. In the spiritual harvest this is not true; every harvest of souls must come from planting the divine seed—the word of God. Faith is the only principle of life; it is the gift of God, and it cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. The seed of life eternal is not in man; there is no spontaneous growth in grace. The divine Sower must drop the seed from heaven. In the spiritual harvest there is a difference in rate of growth and in law of growth. There comes in the element of time in both harvests. Babes in Christ do not grow to manhood in an hour; neither can we limit the time; we can not say how long or how short our probation. But herein the type fails. In the natural harvest God puts the germ in the seed, and conditions of growth in the soil, necessary to germinate the seed; but in the spiritual harvest, where the divine seed is dropped in human souls, the conditions of the soil are left to man. God reveals to him the necessary condition to fruitful growth, but the man alone can supply them. Here is a soil with a will of its own. Men are responsible for the condition of the soil. There is in the economy of grace all that is needed to make the stoniest heart soft and generous. If no fruit is gathered the sower is not to blame; the soil must be, for the seed was good, and all the field was planted.

That "Voice from the Pew."

MR. EDITOR: "Justitia," in the ADVOCATE of January 19, utters some sentiments, which suggest the propriety of a prefix un or non to his nom de plume.

He writes of church government, and the voice of the people in it, opening his lecture with this remarkable sentence: "We claim to have a republican form of government, which is confined altogether to civil rights." "Confined altogether to civil rights" is a bold assertion. What authorized exponent of our church polity ever said that our economy involved nothing but "civil rights?" Yet these words, "confine altogether to civil rights," can mean no less than this. I have an idea, somehow, that church government is strictly moral, and not civil, in its objects and effects. If John Rogers holds estates by a more valid legal title than Robert Rowe, and Rowe becomes clamorous about it, appeals to civil—not moral nor criminal—judges, and they give the estates to Rogers, I know of no church government by which Rogers could be tried. Certainly "civil rights" have a small, if any, claim in our church government. "Justitia" would do well to revise his lecture, and strike out the first paragraph, as untrue or irrelevant.

The second paragraph should go out for the same reason. He says: "Methodism is rapidly assuming a monarchial form of government." This is his count in the indictment—his charge against "our beloved Methodism." The specifications, the no. gistea, by which he labors to sustain this charge, are: 1. "A private member has no voice whatever in church government." "Church government is a code of laws—a set of rules—for the guidance of a religious assembly. Under our code—Discipline—"a private member" is alone competent to sit in judgment on the character of a member of our ecclesia. None else can expel the wicked from our midst, none else are responsible for their retention in our communion. These rules—the Discipline, from one end to the other—are enacted by a General Conference, composed of just as many "private members" as preachers. No church authority can make a preacher, unless the "private members" say so. The proof is against this specification, and it must go out.

As to the second specification; that involves one of those restrictions to which Bro. "Justitia" assented when he came among us. For the common good the preachers and "private members," from the beginning, gave up the right of choice, in order that ministerial talent might be more equally distributed among the people. This is no evidence that "our beloved Methodism is rapidly assuming a monarchial form of government."

As to the third specification, it is sufficient to say that "our people's feelings," though they are as if the people had been "imposed upon," are no evidence of the monarchial form of government, "in our beloved Methodism." This is, most emphatically, true when the "people," as in this case, have no just grounds for such feelings. Every one of these "people" consented to this feature in our "government" when they became subjects of it. Moreover, as it is apostolic, as good, law and gospel abiding "people," they should learn to be a little less selfish, and let others have the benefit of this "much" loved preacher. Specification No. 3 wont do.

To No. 4 I may just say: No matter if Bro. "Justitia" can ascertain the "sentiments of the people more fully than the preacher or the presiding elder can" it was expressly stated, when this preacher, "whom we learned to love very much," was sent as "our pastor, that he might be recalled at the end of the year. Let No. 4 go out also.

No. 5 is simply a "privilege question," and reminds me of a paragraph in my own experience. In —— I was sent to —— circuit. The year before Bro. —— was there, whose two grown sons were in school. Our Bro. C. was called on by the steward for quarterage, but he declined, saying: "Me and my boys work for our money, and —— can't get it to keep them boys out of the field." But time came for my steward to make his call for quarterage for myself, but, instead of money, he got this: "Mespay Bro. ——? Why, he has made more on the farm than I have!" I do not say Bro. "Justitia" would do this way, dun all his poor mortal were his "pastor," and spent all his time "cultivating his own garden, and chopping his wood," and preparing sermons, and letting Bro. "Justitia" and the sick and afflicted alone, never visiting them, he would expect a worse bill of indictment against him than that now under review. Turning this after the others, we will examine the sixth specification in this bill.

As we look at it we think of "the clamor's desolation."

"The factors have to face a woe,
They can't wield tools and hoes,
And while they seek work they find sorrow,
They bring reproach upon her."

Looking over the statistics of one of the conferences, the first name before me is that of the son of one of our Bishops, and a graduate from a first-class college. His "total receipts" were $307 75 for a full year's work. Another who was educated for the priesthood in the Romish church, received for a full year's work, $65. Still another, who has left a law practice worth about $1 000 a year, received the full sum of $—— for a year's service in the ministry. Whether or not these men "cultivated their own gardens, and chopped their own wood," I can not tell, but one thing is certain, they could not be "gentlemen of leisure" in any degree to hurt anybody, not even Bro. "Justitia." In Plaquemine parish, La., the average pay of a freedman is $300 per annum. In the same region of country, the Opelousas District, of the Louisiana Conference, the average salary of a preacher is $257 89. But some people who have no income claim to be "gentlemen of leisure" may be it is so with Bro. "Justitia."

My idea of a "gentleman of leisure" is a man who has as much money as he needs, and nothing to do but enjoy it. I am getting real curious to know Bro. "Justitia's" idea of "a gentleman of leisure." If he means a person who works one half his time for the public, at his own charge, and the other half at close living rates, and is "dead-headed" or "half-rated" on his Conference trips, and on his tuition bills, or one who works for the church one half his time and employs the other half of it in scrambling for subsistance for that half given to the public, then I must admit that preachers "are fast becoming gentlemen of leisure." Bro. "Justitia," I move that this indictment be nolle prossea.

EXCELSIA.

Bro. S. H. Nettles, writing in the Alabama Christian Advocate, tells the following. It is almost as good as some of Bro. Jones' Culpepper Skolebus:

Not long since I called to see a good old Methodist sister (not in my charge), and asked her to subscribe for the Advocate. She told me that she had never seen a copy of it. I took a copy from my valise, read several pieces to her, and then gave it to her to examine for herself. She looked at the caption of each piece and then handed it back to me. I then asked her how she liked it, and her reply was: "Well, I likes it purty well; but I don't think I likes it as well as the one I've been taking." I then asked her what one she had been taking, and she said: "The Orleans one." I told her then that I would like for her to take the Alabama paper, but if she preferred "the Orleans one" I would take great pleasure in sending for it for her. She then dropped her head, and after thinking a few moments, said: "I am not certain I would like the Orleans one as well now as I did." "Why not?" "Well, I see that the funny man has quit writing for it, and I did like it so much on that account." "What funny man do you refer to?" With a smile, she said: "Mr. Jones, de culpotur." After calling to mind some of Bro. Jones' pieces, and thinking how he would like to be called a funny man, I said to her: "Well, madam, he did get off some funny pieces, didn't he?" "Yes, sir, he did; that piece about de wild cat man and de revelation, and dun dat piece about de soft soap. They was so funny that I thinks about dem and laughs till dis day. If I just knowed that he would write any more I wouldn't mind taking it again." Just here I thought that honesty was the best policy, and told the good sister that her funny man had quit the business she was in when he wrote those pieces; but, for aught I knew, he would have something more funny than wild cats and soft soap to write about before this year closed, and that she had better subscribe for the paper at once, that she might be in time to catch it all. I think the good sister will let her pastor send her one of the papers for her as soon as she can get up enough butter and eggs.

Who would have thought that the cessation of wild cats, revelations and soft soap would have deprived the "Orleans" paper of a subscriber?

"Going to Church."

"BY H. H. HARRIS."

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of the twelfth instant I noticed a poem with the above heading. The said poem may be found in "Cyclopedia of Illustrations of Moral and Religious Truths," by John Bate, London, 1850, page 161, in which J. T. Watson is the recognized author, and not H. H. Harris. Please make correction.

WM. HART.

PLEASANT HILL, LA., Jan. 21, 1882.

A dear old friend of mine used to say, with the truest Christian charity, when he heard any one being loudly condemned for some fault: "Ah! well, yes, it seems very bad to me," because that is not my way of sinning."

Marriages.

COLLINS—WARD.—January 3, 1882, at the Methodist Church, in Big Cane, La., by Rev. F. White, Mr. Wert Collins to Miss Clara Ward, all of St. Landry parish.

MAY—TINDOL.—January 19, 1882, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. H. B. Register, Mr. Alexander D. May to Miss Ann Eliza Tindol, of Holmes county, Fla.

BRANNAN—APPLEBY.—January 25, 1882, at the residence of the bride's father, East Feliciana, La., by Rev. A. G. Miller, Mr. W. M. Brannan to Miss L. J. Appleby.

WILLIAMS—WILLIS.—January 26, 1882, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. B. F. White, Mr. Arthur M. Williams to Miss Ida O. Willis, both of Ouachita parish, La.

PARSONS—NIX.—January 24, 1882, at the residence of Seaborn Covington, near Summit, Miss., by Rev. H. P. Lewis, Mr. F. F. Parsons and Miss Nix, all of Pike county.

JOHNSON—DYER.—January 26, 1882, at the residence of Mr. Noah Cox, Autauga county, Ala., by Rev. L. C. Calhoun, Rev. H. T. Johnson, of Alabama Conference, and Miss Willie Dyer.

ARMSTRONG—O'PRY.—January 26, 1882, at the residence of Mr. J. T. O'Pry, Salome parish, Louisiana, by Rev. William Hart, Dr. R. L. Armstrong to Miss Hattie O'Pry.

Obituaries.

MORRIS.—Mamie Octavia, daughter of W. and S. Morriss, died at James B. Molliey, January 6, 1882.

Azrael's wing hath cast its shadow between us and the golden gleam of the morning sun. Deadly shrouded our house and hearts in mourning are taken from our midst the faithful wife and mother.

Early in life she evinced most unmistakable signs of a sprightly reflective mind, outstripping her classmates in class, day at once the pride of her family, the marvel of her teachers. At the early age of fifteen she won the first honors of her college and was chosen valedictorian of the class of 1855 at Summerfield. Later in life, after her marriage, she united herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and ever afterward lived a faithful, consistent Christian. As demonstrative as was her habit she valued not her religion to the world, and prayerful on the sacred borders of heaven by men, but reposing in the sacred privacy of her home her prayers were fervent and devout, her Christian zeal like the zeal people of ardent hearts ever shining itself, was felt by all who knew her. During a long and painful illness she complained not of her sufferings but dwelt largely upon the cross of Christ, exclaiming in her happy moments, "none but Jesus." Her charity consisted not alone in giving alms to the poor but in every sense of the word her heart was unutterable full of it. A virtue. Charitable to the shortcomings of her fellow creatures she would often find a palliation where others censured. In giving food and shelter to the destitute she often, I doubt not, "entertained angels unawares." Knowing her so intimately the writer feels forcibly the utter inadequacy of words to do her memory justice by attempting a portrayal of the many noble endowments of her mind and heart. As a wife she was the ideal of perfection, the helpmate of her husband, loving, patient, kind without dissimulation, vigilant and careful of the wants of her household ever ready to soothe the distress or alleviate pain, in sickness or in health, cheerful, obliging, kind to "the stranger within her gates" she was the model hostess, entering at once into their wants with a gentleness of manner and a hospitality liberal and sincere, their sojourn was pleasant, the parting ghest ever leaving a blessing on her house. As a mother she was twice-told, the noble genial woman.

What mean this passionate grief of men and women? What these cries of anguish that cannot be appeased? The lamentations of her daughters and sons, refusing to be comforted, are wet more fitly than is given to the power of language to describe. The universally sad procession, with downcast looks, moving slowly and silently itself on noiseless wheels speaks in glowing triplets to the deep virtues of the dead. Loving her in life they feel to follow her to her last resting place and there in sorrow drop a parting tear to the memory of one so much beloved. Whispering her last moments we seemed to hear the angels sigh, and the Master saying, "Friend, come up higher."

A FRIEND.

WHITAKER.—Mrs. E. Eugene Whitaker, nee Saunders, was born July 8, 1821, and died December 28, 1881, at her residence in Wilkinson county, Miss.

She is remembered as a brave, frank, noble hearted woman, possessing an unusually vivacious temperament, a noble taste for the beautiful in art and nature, a tenderly earnest sympathy for the suffering and a profound reverence for the good and truths. She was a remarkably quick and apt observer of events with a wonderful grasp of mind, and of character possessed a rare insight. As age and experience matured her character, and a strong faith gained control of her life, came to the full fruitage of her many splendid endowments. As a friend she was peculiarly lovable, sympathetic, ever ready to help and cheer the afflicted and sorrowful, and to minister to their comfort. As a wife she was devoted, loving, tender and true, and as a mother she was unutterably

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1882.

COMPENSATION.

It was the time of autumn,
When leaves are turning brown,
Green to yellow, and pied to black;
And some were tumbling down.

It was the time of autumn,
When fruits are gathered in,
One for the press, some for the vat,
And some for the mill's bin.

The poor man felt a-playing,
For he had their work was over;
And the farmer felt a-sighing
That they could play no more.

For the summer time is cheery
For the man have leisure to play;
But the summer time is a weary time
While who must work all day.

Then thanks to God the Giver,
Who lays to little and much shall;
Every one be something gives,
But to no man giveth all.

The man, who careth for himself
Finds, after pleasure, pain;
But the man whom God careth for Rests, and is glad again.

—London Spectator.

Meetness for Inheritance, with the Saints in Light.

BY REV. FELIX R. JILL.

"Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light."—Col. 1, 12.

It is the special glory of the gospel that it has brought life and immortality to light. This is a wonderful revelation, and can not fail, if received in the proper spirit, to change the whole aspect of our present life.

Our text teaches that there is an inseparable connection between the present life and that which is to come; that here we are being educated for eternity; and that, if through eternity we would enjoy heaven, we must be properly prepared here to enter into that immortal and glorious state.

This truth I would impress upon you from the words of Paul: that instead of estimating heaven by earth, to estimate and govern earth by heaven.

I desire, my friends, to make you sensible of the fact that the heavenly world is the great model, the perfect pattern of the Christian's earthly life; that its temper and spirit must be the standard and test of all our motives and actions; that our lives here must be transcripts of heaven, if we would hope to enjoy "the inheritance of the saints in light."

Now, if heaven be the model of our earthly life, it behooves us to know what that model is, and to enquire somewhat into the nature of heaven. And yet, how little do we know of heaven! I admit that it is beyond our highest conception; that not until the mortal is swallowed up in immortality, can the loftiest imagination compass its glories, or conceive adequately its beauties; still, by keeping in view the text, we may be able to arrive at something like a correct knowledge of the principles of that life that belongs to and governs heaven; and it is these general laws of heart and spirit that constitute that heavenly pattern after which we are to govern our lives in order to have the meetness here alluded to.

In the first place, you will observe, that in this passage the inhabitants of that heavenly world are called "saints," which means, that they are holy, and that their natures are the bright similitudes of God—transcripts of his nature, and therefore associated, in eternal fellowship, with him and his holy angels.

In the next place, they are represented as being "in light," which, in the Scriptures often stands for holiness.

From these allusions, then, we have placed before us that simple and practical view of heaven which is necessary to our present purpose. They show us that the soul and substance of the heavenly life is holiness—a conformity to the will and spirit of God. This is holiness, and this is the character and life of every saint in light.

Their office and clothing will of God, and their happiness consists in the fact that their work is done willingly and perfectly. With them to love God and willingly submit the whole nature to him is an essential feature of their nature and existence; for to be there, without this, would be to be locally present in heaven, and yet spiritually absent from it; would be to live visibly with angels in glory, and yet be as miserable as it abiding with fiends in torment. The temper and spirit then, of the saints in light is the temper and spirit of holiness, of joyful acknowledgment of God, of willing obedience to him in all things; all of which recedes within them a blessedness, consisting not merely in exemption from the sins and sorrows of this life, but made up of direct communications of purity and rapture from God himself.

Here is the representation given us of heaven throughout the Scriptures, and this is what seems to me to be plainly intimated by the expression: "inheritance among the saints in light."

This, then, is the heavenly existence, or life, which constitutes the only proper and perfect model for our earthly life.

And, now, if the text teaches anything at all, it teaches us that we are to seek for and expect in this life a personal meetness from heaven—an inward preparation for that blessed and eternal state; and that in this way the true life that we are to live through eternity is already begun within us; that we are, all and from the very hour of our regeneration, introduced into the spiritual world—a world which, though we do not fully comprehend its mysteries, is nevertheless a vital reality, and with which the true believer is as spiritually connected, as he is materially connected with the world of sense around him. No thought, surely, can be more awakening than this: that there is a oneness in our lives through time and eternity, and, that in order to enter heaven, our hearts and lives must be moulded after the model of heaven.

It is just at this point, dear brethren, that we are all, more or less, in danger. We are apt to forget that a religious life in this world, in order to be of any value, must be the first stage of heaven itself. And there is a great mistake just here, that we have need to guard against with much prayer and self-examination; it is the false theory of separating in idea, at least, a life from a personal meetness for heaven.

Now, I would not undervalue that meetness for the heavenly inheritance, which a man has grounds to hope for judicially; for it is a doctrine very full of comfort, that a sinner bankrupt in goodness and condemned to eternal death can be pardoned, and it is that pardon, or acquittal, which gives him a judicial fitness for heaven; but the point I make, and which I desire you to see and feel, is that you can not separate, in fact, the pardon from personal holiness as a preparation for the heavenly world. The one necessarily supposes the other, and the hope of having received a judicial meetness in the absence of having that personal meetness, referred to in the text, will, when presented at the high chancery of the skies, prove a sad delusion.

Now, to illustrate this point, I will suppose such a case as some of you, perhaps, have witnessed. Suppose that a man is arraigned at the bar of his country for some criminal offense, of which he is guilty, and which if he be convicted will separate him from society, either by imprisonment or death. Suppose now that this guilty culprit, this man of crime is, by the skill of his advocate, or the falseness of his judge and jury, or, as is common, by some technical irregularity, acquitted and turned loose upon society. He is thus pronounced judicially meet for society; but does this judicial pardon or acquittal give him a personal meetness to associate with an innocent and honorable community? Does it change his disposition, his temper, or his character? Does he not carry with him the burden of a curse from which no judicial act can free him, the pangs of remorse from which there is no escaping, and the agony of punishment which makes conscience, with the guiltless and pure, a hell to his clamoring conscience?

And so, my friends, if it were possible for a sinner, by a bare act of justification, to enter heaven, to receive pardon, and yet retain his unsanctified nature; I say, if such a thing were possible, his agony would still be as great, if not greater, as though he were shut up eternally in the prison-house of the damned. The lack of personal meetness for the associations of heaven would make his bosom a solitary hell, and the very contrast between himself and the holy ones around him would kindle that hell into more intense flame.

To connect, then, "for the inheritance of the saints in light," there must be a purity of heart, a correctness of principle, a rightness of character wrought by the power and operation of the Holy Spirit; for these are the requisites for a proper correspondence and fitness of life here for life in heaven. Without this personal spiritual fitness, we will be entirely unprepared for either the kingdom of grace on earth, or the kingdom of glory hereafter.

Rich as are the provisions of Divine mercy, there is in the economy of grace no way to enter heaven except by that personal meetness—procured. It is true, by faith in Jesus Christ, yet a faith resulting in obedience and morphing, by the help of the Holy Spirit, the entire life and character for God, for heaven and immortality.

And now, brethren, in view of these solemn truths that I have presented, I desire to urge upon you the importance of seeing to it above all things else that you have within you, this indispensable fitness. Let me exhort you so to employ your time and consecrate your talents that you may be educated for heaven. If it be true that in childhood we should busy ourselves to learn what it will most be our interest and happiness to know in manhood, how diligent should we be to master in time what we shall need most in eternity. And yet, alas! how indifferent most of us are to this culture. How we suffer most of our lives to be moulded after the similitude of this world instead of heaven! How we suffer our affections to cling to the things of earth, while an opened heaven and a celestial immortality are inviting them! How we feed our appetite for happiness on things that are perishable, while a thousand voices are telling us that the immortal only can satisfy it!

Oh, how we turn away from this wealth of glory, and, with an infatuation bordering on insanity, content ourselves with the direst poverty of spirit, when we might claim an eternal heritage! We know that we are hastening to that high session of heaven's judgment, when he that is filthy must remain filthy forever; and yet who among us is living so, as that each day will testify, that we have conquered some unholy appetite, estranged some vagrant desire, triumphed over some besetting sin, and engrafted on the soul some fresh attribute of heaven? Who among us is watching for and improving every opportunity to make perfect our "inheritance for the saints in light?" Who is living up to the full measure of duty in this all-important work of preparation?

Brethren, in the name of the Captain of our salvation, I summon you to this high duty; and that you may enter upon it with heart and soul, I point you to what you are, and to what you may become. I point you to the inheritance for which you are to contend, and to the certainty that if you would enjoy it, you must now be in a state of preparation for it.

In view of that inheritance, what manner of persons ought we to be. If our "conversation," our "citizenship" is in heaven, ought we not even now to be deporting ourselves as citizens of the heavenly country? If we are "pilgrims" here, and if we are seeking "a city which hath foundations," our whole spirit and conduct ought to reflect the light which streams through the gates of that city. The ivory of our souls should be tinged with the hues of that glory to which we are hastening. The very happiness and holiness of which our anticipated paradise is so abundant those should mark every disciple of Christ; these, as he advances in years, should brighten and deepen upon and around him, until the distinction of earth and heaven are almost lost, until earth becomes heaven's border-land, and death alone will mark the narrow line of separation between this state of probation and the realms of glory everlasting.

In this I am presenting no impossible ideal; yet, alas! for my feeble imagination and stammering tongue, the full fashion and stammering tongue, the full range of Christian character and Christian enjoyment is far above any outline that I can draw. Are you God's children now? Then, only think what you are, if you would be impressed with the high gifts and privileges to which, as to a glorious heritage, you are invited in the gospel. Only think that you are "beings invested already with deathless lives," already adopted into the immediate family of God, already enrolled in the brotherhood of angels; you, of the Lord of the angels, of kings, who mind all the revolutions of earth and sky, feel and know yourselves to be indestructible, feel and know yourselves capacitated to outlast the universe, and destined to become sharers in the immortality of God; only think of yourselves thus, and what language can exaggerate the awful glory of your position?

And now, dear brethren, go forth remembering that for this sublime destiny, for this heavenly inheritance you were born again, that for this God's Son has redeemed you, that in the hour of your conversion you received its germ life your souls, and that the Father expects you to live as citizens of the immortal empire.

The world expects it too, and they have a right to expect it, and, as you meet this expectation, will they estimate religion. Let the impress of the heavenly country be on your foreheads.

Let the angels see that you know yourselves their fellows. Let the spirits of just men made perfect—yea, let the general assembly and church of the first-born in heaven—behold in you a meetness to share in their glorious inheritance; and, O, may the Holy Spirit make the truth heard by you this day, the seed whose flower will be the beauty of present holiness, and whose fruit will prove immortal glory.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—The Rev. Young J. Allen, of the Southern Methodist Mission in China, has, says the New York Independent, the superintendent of that important work and, has projected a college for Shanghai. Mr. Allen was for upward of eighteen years connected with the Chinese Government, having the editorship of the Official Foreign News Gazette. His resignation of this influential office was regretfully received by the Chinese authorities, and the position, which was vacated last November, has not yet been filled. Mr. Allen edited the periodical according to his own inclination and discussed all questions freely in the light of Christian civilization. He gave him an opportunity, which he improved, "to teach hundreds of young men for official service, translate important text-books and numerous historical and scientific works for schools and general circulation." Through the Gazette "a thousand prejudices have been allayed, ten thousand new ideas introduced, and a constant tendency to a better understanding and appreciation of foreigners and their religion, and civilization promoted." The mandarins tried to induce Mr. Allen to withdraw his resignation, offering him $4,500 a year with honors; but he deemed the call of his church imperative. A year or two ago, we believe, a high honor, never before given to foreigners, was conferred on Mr. Allen. He writes as follows of his plans for the future:

"The first step toward the accomplishment of this purpose, as you, doubtless, already know, is my determination to place our mission here on a firm and enduring basis, and call to its support the hitherto indifferent or dormant energies and interests of the foreign communities of Shanghai and the higher classes of the Chinese in this great and populous city. Such a step implies no little boldness and an intrepidity of faith that few dare exercise. * * * My plans contemplate the transformation of our hitherto numerous but comparatively inefficient mission day-schools into a series of high-schools worthy the patronage of all classes, even including the government officials, and ultimately crowning the movement with a well-equipped college in the center of this great city. Already two of the high-school buildings are under erection and will have capacity for two hundred and fifty to three hundred pupils each, while the interest manifested in the enterprise foretells its success. Large subscriptions are promised here, the foreigners and Chinese alike coming up to the help of what they conceive is an opportune and worthy departure from the old ruts in our ordinary missionary methods."

—Gentile religious influence began to be felt in Utah about ten years ago, but activity and enlargement belong to the last five years only. Here is the result of toil up to date. There are 26 churches in Utah, with a membership in the Protestant portion of 926. In addition, there are 52 Sunday-schools, with 180 teachers and 2,250 scholars in them. Of day-schools there are 34, with 3,821 scholars and 120 teachers. Of these the Presbyterians have 10 churches, 16 ministers, 31 schools, 42 teachers, 1,300 scholars; the Episcopalians 4 churches, 7 ministers, 7 schools, 15 teachers, 600 scholars; the Congregationalists 2 churches, 1 minister, 2 schools, 5 teachers, 200 scholars; the Methodists 8 churches, 11 ministers, 7 schools, 10 teachers, and 350 scholars.

—Perhaps the most eminent convert ever won from the Moslem to the Christian faith is Ahmed Effendi, who was recently baptized in London. He stood in the very front rank of the Turkish hierarchy in learning and reputation, and was condemned to death by the government for assisting in the translation of Christian books. By the interposition of Sir H. Lavard, his sentence was changed to banishment for life to the Island of Chio. Escaping from there he made his way to England, and though intellectually convinced of the truth of Christianity, it was a long time before he consented to baptism, a rite which would separate him entirely from wife, children and country.

The Presbyterian Boarding School for Christian girls, at Dehra, was the first institution of the kind organized in North India, and it still holds its lead of all similar institutions, with 150 pupils, chiefly from twelve to sixteen years of age. Mr. Herron is at the head of the school, the management of which, under his supervision, rests with Miss Craig, Miss Pratt and Miss Herron. The school is very successful in its scholarship, and has frequently received flattering testimonials from the Inspectors of Education of the Government of India. The first girl in all India to pass the examination for entrance into the Calcutta University was one of its graduates.

—The Mission Rooms of the Methodist Episcopal Church, sends out an article by Rev. John Butler contrasting Protestant Missions in Mexico five years ago with the present. In advance of this we last week furnished figures translated from the Spanish and now give the figures as they were five years ago according to Mr. Butler: Congregations 125, churches 11, halls of worship 99, value of church property $133,000, free day-schools 28, night-schools 28, presses 6, religious periodicals 6, agents employed 122. Then it will be observed no members were reported, now there are over ten thousand with nearly twenty thousand adherents.

—The Philadelphia MeRodist says: Rev. James Blackledge, well known as one of the most promising young men of the Philadelphia Conference, we learn, is under appointment to re-enforce our promising mission in Japan. He goes out to take the position of Professor of Greek and Hebrew in the Theological Seminary recently established in Yokohama, for the education of native preachers. He will sail for his new field of labor immediately after the session of the Conference.

—Miss Belle Thoburn and party have been heard from at Cawnpore and Lucknow. At the former place they were greeted by the McGraws, the Lares, and Miss Easton, and at the latter place by the Badleys, Cravens, and pretty much all the church at the depot and at Lal Bagh, the Bible women and school children were "in line."

—The Ohio Wesleyan University is represented by two missionaries in Japan, six in China, three in India, one in Italy, two in South America, and one in Mexico.

—A new college, known as the Selwyn College, has been founded at Cambridge, England, for the training of missionaries.

—The Leipsic Missionary Society (Lutheran) employs 20 missionaries in the Indies, and has 12,000 native members in its mission churches.

—The Congregational Church of Oberlin, Ohio, sends this year eleven of its members to the foreign mission field.

—The Cumberland Presbyterians have reports of protracted meetings, with many conversions, in their Indian missions.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Hon. Charles L. Wood, president of the English Church Union, in a recent printed letter, thus states the position of the Ritualists:

"The Bishop of Manchester is determined to leave nothing undone to Force the authority of the Privy Council upon the clergy of his diocese. Having discovered, in the person of Mr. Green, that, by consenting to their prosecution and imprisonment, he can not extort their submission to the judgment committee and Lord Penzance, he has now recourse to the forms of a synod in order to accomplish under ecclesiastical disguise the same ends. Let it be understood once for all that there is a large body of clergy and laity who will refuse at once, under whatever form it may be proposed to them, to acknowledge the authority and the decisions of the Privy Council. The issue is too clear to be misunderstood. Surrender under existing circumstances the Ritual proscribed by the Ornaments Rubric—ritual which the Bishop of Liverpool proclaims is to be put down because it symbolizes the Catholic doctrines of the Real Presence and the Eucharistic Sacrifice—and the authority of the Privy Council over the Church of England is established; maintain that ritual, and its authority is destroyed. With the words of McKonihy and the Bishop of Capetown ringing in our ears, we intend, God helping us, to destroy it, and we shall not be cajoled into surrendering up the rights and liberties of the Church of England, her sacred ceremonies, and her proscribed ritual into the hands of the Privy Council at the bidding not of a synod, for that is no synod in which the presbyters are forbidden to speak; but of a Bishop who has so little regard for the glory of God and the law of his Church that at the very time when he seeks to suppress the prescribed ritual of the prayer-book he expressly excepts from the operation of his ordinances those who fall short of the standard he seeks to impose, upon what he considers the unpopular section of his clergy."

—The Roman Catholic Church is steadily gaining in England, says the Liverpool Catholic Times. There is no break in the steady flow of conversions.

—The Catholic directories just to hand tell the tale as far as it can be put in figures. A year ago there were 1,962 priests in Great Britain; now there are 2,036, an increase of no less than seventy-four. The churches, chapels, and stations have in like manner grown from 1,175 to 1,190, an increase of fifteen or something over one for each diocese. The greatest efforts have been made in Newport and Menevia, in which nine churches and chapels have been opened, while Plymouth and Leeds have gained three each. Since 1872 there has been an increase of churches amounting to 185 in England and Wales and 68 in Scotland, and of clergy amounting to 437 in England and Wales and 70 in Scotland. Thus in nine years there has been a very substantial addition to our religious machinery and resources. Westminster, for example, increasing by 30 per cent. in priests and 11 per cent. in churches; Beverley now two sees, by 35 per cent. in priests and 21 per cent. in churches; Birmingham, 20 per cent. in priests and 9 per cent. in churches; Clifton, nearly 40 per cent. in priests and 19 per cent. in churches."

—According to the English Congregational Year-Book for 1882 there are in Great Britain and Ireland 4,307 churches and 809 mission stations. There are also 581 churches in the colonies, not including the churches sustained by the London Missionary Society in heathen lands, where there are employed 152 English missionaries, 363 native ordained missionaries and pastors, and 4,679 native preachers, the churchmembers numbering 92,474, and native adherents 313,738. Of the churches in the United Kingdom 2,000 are under ordained pastors, 38 are served by lay pastors, and there are 130 evangelists. For the 305 churches without settled pastors the services of 271 ordained ministers are to some extent available. In the Metropolitan area there are 259 churches and 127 mission-rooms.

—There has been no little excitement in the English possession of Gibraltar over the appointment of Dr. Gonzalo Canila as Vicar Apostolic over the fifteen thousand Roman Catholics there. The laymen of Gibraltar possess the right of administering the temporal affairs in connection with the Vicar Apostolic. The present appointee is young and is not regarded by the laymen as possessing the dignity and rank that should belong to the office. His attempts to take possession have been resisted by force and he has not been allowed to take possession of the official residence attached to the cathedral.

—Twenty-one cents a year has been the average offering for ten years per member of the Evangelical denominations of this country for foreign missions; and twenty-eight cents for home missions.

—There is a congregation of Colored Roman Catholics in Marion County, Ky. At a recent special service one hundred and seventy-nine persons received the communion, twenty-nine for the first time.

—Former Dickens, a nephew of the novelist, Charles Dickens, has been elected a deacon of the Methodist Church by the Rock River Conference in Sycamore, Ill.

—The colonial secretary of Gladstone's government announces the disestablishment of the Anglican Church in the Straits of Malacca.

—There are 80,000 Methodists in Iowa, and they are building churches in that State at the rate of one every two weeks.

—No opium smoker is admitted to church membership by any Christian mission working in China.

—Hamburg, Germany, has eighteen Protestant Churches.

—There are 95,103 Presbyterians in New Zealand.

Our Young People.

SENDING A VALENTINE.

BY KATE KELLOGG.

I might begin, "The rose is red"
(Though that is not so very new),
Or this the boy of Dublin is good,
"If you love me as I love you."

But, sometimes, a valentine
Is nicer, when you do it so
The sender not going that every one
Keeps on in the old way.

And I could laugh at the Cupid
With crown up on the wrong head.
She would n't see the humor at first.
But I'd get her, in the end.

The question still to be answered is,
Why—love," she said, "and shining eyes,
A kiss, and hair just what they please"
It can't be hard if that is all,
So I'll begin essaying this:

The rose is red, the violet blue,
I love you, Pauline and this—
The sparkling, laughter-ing eyes she has—
The [illegible]
[illegible]
And [illegible]
The very sweetest [illegible]

There! Now it's finished. Who will do
For [illegible] of me and then another,
Who'd rather take it? Why, of course,
I'll send it right away to mother!

—St. Nicholas.

Queer Company Home.

We Brownlee children were delighted to find the days drawing in, and the leisure of the long autumn evenings which came each year with a sense of novelty, once more upon us. Instead of going to bed at nine with the sun just fairly out of sight, as in summer, now when work and supper were over, and the moon rising over the hill, there was a whole long evening before us. We felt as if we must celebrate this luxurious leisure, and fixed on going to see our next neighbor over the south hill, nearly a quarter of a mile away.

Though it was late October night was around us, with clear skies and the full moon sailing splendid above the autumn haze, and the frost-mist glimmering in the air. The sweet scents of ripening grasses and resinous plants which hangs long in the air, were blended with a breath of red leaves and ripening frost-grapes in the ravine at Pine Hollow two miles away. It was the complete charm of a northwestern evening, a night for children to go wild with joy in the very splendor and temper of the air.

People were always ready and glad to see each other in those early days when neighbors counted for something. It made no matter that Mr. Forrest was trying King Philip corn for seed, or that Kate and Ruth were slicing pumpkin for next day's pies. Work was our life in those hardy Wisconsin days, and we had not learned to pity ourselves for it. Work was turned off with quips and jokes, and we had more fun over a busy day than girls nowadays find when they lounge about with pockets full of caramels, and give their minds to doing nothing.

I can see Ruth, getting up one of those great Wisconsin pumpkins, in her neat brown print dress, fresh as paint, a glossy orange pumpkin held between arm and breast, with the sharp knife turning off thin crescents to be pared and cut up by the others. A good knife goes through a firm, fine fleshed pumpkin with something of the same feeling as a jack-knife goes through soft pine—a touch whose fascination has made generations of whittlers and ponderers.

The oak fire burned briskly in the polished stove, and puffs of delicious air came in with the opening of the door, making the lamps burn bright, while we girls pared and clipped the golden rind, and mother Forrest told us a story of her own childhood.

Notice so ready for a new country as an old pioneer; and this woman with the bright black eyes and hair, contented with her children and grandchildren on the new prairie farm, was brought up on the mountain sides of west Pennsylvania, where it was the home of panthers and bears, who were very sociably frequent and familiar. Her father moved from Delaware county, N. Y., when she was a little girl, and she grew up as much at home in the wilderness as the catamounts. All summer long she roamed the woods with her brother and sisters after berries and flowers and fun; the woods their playgrounds from the time sap flowed in sugar-making till hazel-nuts were hidden by the snow. The mountains were a free, breezy, sunny home for them; and though there were plenty of "creatures," that is, wild ones, the children were wild and fearless, and brought up to take care of themselves.

"I wasn't a bite afraid of animals," said the smart, comely woman, who never would grow old. "Only one thing skeered me, and that was men. If I saw or heerd of a man out on the woods, I would cut and run like a deer. It was a rough, hard set, got loose among the mountains in those times. But I had the queerest company home one time ever you heerd of, or anybody else so far as heerd from. The fall I was fourteen, my next youngest brother and sister and me, father took us down to the Island, 'bout eight miles from our place, to pick apples on shares. Our trees hedn't got to bearin' yet, and we was mighty glad to get 'em this way, pickin' two baskets for the farm-folks and keepin' the third for our own. We went Wednesday, and were goin' to stay three days, and father was coming with a team for us and the apples were gathered. We slept at the farm-house, and had plenty of provision along, and the folks gave us all the bread and milk and cheese we wanted, and we had a real larkin' time. By Saturday we were good ready to go home and see mother. We waited till near sundown, when my next oldest brother came for us and said father couldn't take the team off that day and we were to walk home, and he would send for the apples next week. We had between seven and eight barrels picked, enough to do us all winter. How them Pennsylvania orchards did bear those times! Bill had been started after us early in the forenoon, but he played along the way and took a swim, and hunted a woodchuck, and picked berries, till, instid of gettin' there 'bout two o'clock and givin' us plenty of time to get home on, it was most night. The folks told us we'd better stay over night, but we was so anxious to seem other and get home, it seemed we couldn't stay over Sunday nohow. So we took some apples in a basket and started just a little while before sundown.

"The road went along the mountain, with the steep bank like a wall on one hand, goin' down just as steep to the bed of the river on the other, and it was woods nearly all the way. We was so glad at the thought of gettin' home and seein' mother by ten o'clock that we was pickers full as we could be. We sang, and ran, and whooped, and joked about wolves and bears, and those first two miles didn't take very long to get over. But then it was fairly dusk, and the woods darker than a pocket, so dark you couldn't make out anything, and we was glad to hear something come along pit-pat, and find the old dog from the farm had come after us. We could just see his head and each other, spots darker than the dark. We couldn't lose the road, for it was the only one, and on among the black trees, and all we had to do was to follow our noses over the mountain straight home. By way of keepin' our spirits up, we began to sing.

"We mocked every creature we knew. We hooted like owls, and screeched like cats, 'n' howled like wolves, and sang and hollered at the top of our voices, and we warn't weak lunged either. And that sober old dog trotted 'long side of us, never chaingin' his gait or gettin' ahead, but allers keepin' up with us. I was awful glad of his comin', for I didn't like the idea of walkin' six mile through the woods black as darkness 't he'l never been skinned. The walk was nothin', for we could go six miles any time after huckleberries, but I didn't know what we might meet before we got through.

"We called to the dog and tried to stir him up, but he kept the same trot, just behind us, and wouldn't take any notice of our 'shoes.' We called him, 'Jeff, Rover! good, Rover! good old fellow!' but he wasn't to be turned from his stubby path. Billy began to say he didn't believe the dog know his own name, or he'd got changed in the dark, and by that time we began to feel a little creepy and exert ourselves to keep our spirits up. We sang and hollered, and we set on the dog, and called him all the names we could lay our tongues to. 'Oh! Jack-at-the-woods,' 'old Treat-on-his-tail,' 'old Blackin'.' Seems 's if I never heer'd a regiment of 'em make quite so much noise 's we children did out on the mountain that night.

"There was one clearin', less 'n three miles from our house, and we felt most home when we came in range o' that. It was a lonesome cabin standin' by itself in the middle of a field. We were gettin' skeery by this time, 'n' we agreed not to go any further, but stop over night with the folks whom we knew, and go home next mornin' before breakfast. We didn't like the idea of facin' the dark any further through the woods. As we started for shelter, our courage began to run out at elbows when we heerd a voice somethin' 't we knew and we piled over the rail fence and put for the house, where a light was burnin', as light as we could get.

"And what do you think we heerd from our mild companion I've been tellin' your 'bout?

"That least 't had been with us, it give a jump and lit on the top rail as light as a cat, and gave one long, mayful screech that just lifted us. 'Twant no dog in this world, but a painter, 't had been hidin' with us all that evenin' when it was so dark we couldn't make him out. How we stumbled along over the rough ploughed ground I can't tell ye. Seemed as if we never could get to the house, and our hearts hurtin' our breasts, and throats chokin', we was so scared. Seemed 's if I was all insides for that one burnin' minit we were gettin' over that field! The woman in the house was doin' that night sittin' up frowin', and she heerd the panther's scream, and 'she was seaing to death,' and just had time to drag her husband's tool-chist against the door, when we ran in too out of breath to call, and just came bouncing against it. She thought it was the panther, and was nearly dead with fright. We screamed out to her to let us in, and she pulled the door open just wide enough to let us tumble in, the last one buggin' and cryin' for fear the panther would claw him before he could get in, and the chist was dragged back and the door fast before we had sense to know we were safe.

"There was a bright fire on the hearth, and it shone out of the windows, and we know the panther wouldn't be likely to come very close, creatures are so 'fraid of fire. The woman, along with her baby and children asleep, was dretful glad to have us with her that night. We put all the loose boards in the loft-chamber up to the windows, for fear that thing might try to get in, and we sat up learnin' it screech round the house fit to tear itself in pieces, it was so mad to think we'd got away. The fire burned down, and there was no more wood in the house, and we didn't dare to stir out for a stick, for all the pile of brush lay close to the door. But by and by the screams died away, and after watchin' an hour more we were glad to go to bed. Next mornin' we found the earth all clawed up round that back doorstep, and the bark scratched off the logs round the window where we'd fastened the collar door up for a shutter, right at the foot of the bed. It must have come smellin' round after we thought it had gone off, and done that mischief.

"We never could tell why it hadn't attacked us in the road, unless it was actually scared of us, we showed so little fear and kept up such a racket. They say 'panthers like singin',' and that may have kept it quiet; or it may have been a young one, or not hungry.

"Next mornin' father and the boys drove up bright and early to see if anything had been seen of us. After my brother Billy started the day before, they heard from a neighbor out lumbin' that a big panther had been round the places up the mountain, stealin' sheep out of the pen, and it had carried a sheep off day before. Mother had been dreadfully anxious when we didn't get home at sundown, and father began to worry about us when we didn't come by bedtime. He had been out to meet us, and then started with the team as soon as it was light enough to see. Father said it was well we hadn't gone any further, for the woods was wildest our end of the road, and there our panther might have got his courage up and wanted to make acquaintance with us. We was a little shy a good while after that about bein' out late after dark."

"I should thought you'd been afraid," said Ruth, drawing a deep breath as she took up her knife again to attack a pumpkin.

"Afraid, child, 'fraid? We wasn't 'fraid neither, only most scart to death, 'cause all the cattle near the old lady would notice. There was evidently a decided difference with her between sudden panic and cowardly fear. Don't you think there is too?—Susan Coolidge, in Wide Awake.

A New Jersey court has awarded fifteen dollars damages to the amount of $5 and costs to a Mrs. Carey who sued a saloon-keeper for selling her husband liquor.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. J. W. RUSH. REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY. REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D.
REV. J. T. SAWYER.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1882.

The revelry and gayety of the season is reaching its culmination. Star actors and actresses have created no small stir. The pleasures and fashionable dissipations of the people have cost them in money a hundred times more than their charities and their religion. Some people professing godliness have recently had an excellent occasion for self-denial, but they were not all equal to the occasion. The amusements of many of our Christian families call for larger expenditures than they bestow upon the support of the institutions and enterprises of the church. Some nights the receipts at the Opera were, we have been told, as much as ten thousand dollars; and some of our devout friends, who are opposed to foreign missions, helped to swell the extravagant receipts of these foreign operatic and theatrical stars.

The Mardi Gras festivities are at hand, and attended with the usual excitement and dissipation. The saddest thing connected with the season of pleasure is the fact that many, who have solemnly vowed "to renounce the devil and all his works, and the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh, so that they will not follow nor be led by them," will have soiled their souls in this mire of worldly lusts, and have brought reproach upon the cause of Christ. Alas! for those who have named the name of Christ, and yet have not departed from iniquity. Thousands are being drawn into this vortex of madness and frivolity, many of them never to be recovered.

A heavy responsibility will rest upon Christian parents, and prominent and mature members of the church, who yield to this insane delusion of worldliness, and by their example countenance these ungodly diversions. Their children, and the young people of the church, wrecked in character and in religion through these fatal examples, will rise up in the judgment against them. May God in mercy save the church from being utterly swamped in this flood of worldliness.

The Bishop question continues to occupy much space in our Southern Methodist papers. We scarcely know why this is. There is no difference of opinion in regard to the office as a part of our polity. The qualifications for the position have been under discussion for about a hundred years, and the conclusions reached are that our Bishops should be good and spiritual men, of vigorous minds, and apt in affairs. We doubt whether a particle of new light will be shed upon this aspect of the question.

As to the men to be chosen, it is generally conceded that it is not in order to nominate them. But there is a disposition to approach very closely to a personal nomination by indicating the class of preachers from which they should be chosen, and by urging the claims of Conferences and sections to furnish the men. Discussion on this line, if not unseemly, is at least inexpedient. It approaches the character of a personal canvass, and is an appeal to class and sectional passions and prejudices.

The number of the new Bishops, and their distribution, as to residence, after their election, are points of some moment; but it seems to us that these can be, as they must be, safely left to the Committee on Episcopacy, and to the deliberate judgment of the General Conference. We doubt exceedingly whether all this discussion in the press will help in securing the best men for Bishops, or for the prominent offices to be filled by the General Conference.

We have admitted to our columns articles on the question of Bishops, and about as much on the subject as the most of our readers care to see. Matters of more edifying character are certainly not hard to find. While we do not absolutely rule out articles on the subject, we make no promise to publish them, and submit that in no case are nominations, direct or indirect, in order.

Our Work Among the Negroes.

The negro ought to be educated and Christianized as much and as fast as possible, and so ought every other race and class of people. It can hardly be disputed that the Southern Methodist Church is bound to do what it can for the negro.

The work done among the colored people by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, before the war is proof of our disposition; and that work is the foundation, and most of the superstructure, of the work of the Northern Methodist Church among them to-day. That church found an organized and trained body of Christians, and simply transferred them in solido, by military, political, pecuniary and other influences, to their own ecclesiastical fold. The minds of our colored members were purposely alienated from us, and they were exhorted to come back to the "mother church." After prejudicing them against their Southern benefactors, and taking them away from the people who had brought them to Christ, and after working them politically to the extent of their power, these Northern brethren turn round and charge the Southern Church with being indifferent to the welfare of the negroes. By military aid, by operating upon the prejudices of the negro, and by subsidies of money, they took our colored work out of our hands, took possession of it themselves, and now condemn us for not doing more for the negro.

The truth is they did not wish the negro to be under the influence and control of the Southern Church. Now that the negro has lost much of his political significance, this feeling may have become somewhat modified, but the work of the colored church, organized under the guidance of our General Conference, has received no Northern sympathy or support, but has met with at least local antagonisms from the Methodist Episcopal Church. We doubt whether our efforts to reclaim our lost members, or to build up a colored membership in the Southern Methodist Church, would be regarded favorably by the Northern Methodists. After despoiling us of the fruits of our faithful evangelical labors, and after using every means to alienate the colored people from us, we are censured for our neglect. After doing all in their power to hedge up our way, and to make the negro inaccessible to us, we are blamed for our inaction.

Well, we are willing to let all this go, and to do what we can for the negro. Only we insist that our past record is sufficient proof that the Southern Church is not indifferent, and never has been indifferent, to the negro's salvation. It was the course of the Southern Church in 1844, and afterward, that saved Methodism to the South, and gave the gospel to the negro; and the best material in preachers and members, in the Methodist Episcopal Church among the blacks in the South to-day is that which was trained and furnished by the Southern Church.

The way may be opening for us to do something for the colored people, and, if there be an open door, it should be entered. Even, if we have been partially derelict since the war, we insist that any word of censure comes with a bad grace from Northern Methodists. Yes, let us do what we can for the negro. There are other things demanding our care and means, but this is among the objects which should engage our thoughtful, prayerful and liberal effort. In this matter the Southern Church has shown its faith by its works, and we doubt not, when the effects of perverted teaching and the passions engendered by the war have abated, a noble work may be done for the colored people. Our people are forward to do it, when the way shall be clear, and when their means shall enable them to undertake it. At the close of the war it was taken out of our hands, wrested from us as by violence. In due time it may be restored to us, and in the future, as in the past, be the crowning glory of Southern Methodism.

Distant Recompense.

To the politic Pharisee the advice of the Master savored of anything but sagacity and worldly wisdom. The idea of calling to the feast the poor, the maimed, the lame and the blind, instead of kinsmen and rich neighbors, was to him preposterous. Those poor unfortunates could not return the favor. In such a course there was neither money nor fame. The Saviour apparently aims to bring his entertainer up to the point of doing a benevolent thing without hope of present reward. He makes this the chief reason for doing it, that temporal recompense would be impossible. Instead of inciting his host to works of mercy by the promise that he would get his pay in this world, that Providence would more than restore what he should give to the poor, Christ tells him plainly: "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

We do not know when the saying of Christ, quoted by Paul, "that it is more blessed to give than to receive," was uttered, but the reference might have been to this passage. Substantially, and almost literally, it is in this narrative. A present material and worldly compensation is ruled out. The moral and spiritual blessing is not excluded, but everything else is. The generous act is to be performed with no thought of earthly reward; perhaps with no thought of reward hereafter. The recompense will come, but it will be among the last things.

Much that passes for benevolence may be little else than selfishness. The giver has often an eye to the transaction as a profitable investment. Perhaps the zealous appeal is backed by the intimation, that if a hundred dollars be given, good crops and fortunate business ventures will follow. God will pay it back in this world abundantly. It may be so, and the motive is too often made prominent in our efforts to raise money for religious and benevolent objects. Paul's quotation was accurate, no doubt, but the gospel incident will bear this interpretation, not only that it is more blessed to give than to receive, but that it is most blessed to give without receiving. The giving or the doing, in which temporal compensation is utterly out of the question, is that which the Saviour most highly commends.

This is one of the best arguments in favor of foreign missions. There are temporal blessings in this cause for those to whom the gospel is sent, and, in the course of time, it helps to open channels of trade and profitable International intercourse; but for the time, and to the immediate giver, there is nothing in sight. In building churches at home, and in supporting the gospel, there are present and temporal rewards. In sending the gospel to the heathen, we are calling the poor, the maimed, the lame and the blind to the feast. It is not so wonderful that foreign missions should be so far above the appreciation of many people; nor is it wonderful that people, enlightened and spiritual, should be enthusiastic in their advocacy and support. Here is a giving without receiving.

Religious duty abounds with what we call thankless work. It has ever been so. In the records of those of whom the world was not worthy, in the history of prophets and apostles, in the annals of Christian labor and sacrifice, how much there is of unappreciated service? The greatest work of nearly all consecrated souls has been that for which, at least in their lifetime, they received the minimum of credit. Nothing is farther from the Saviour's teachings than cherishing a restless, discontented and murmuring spirit under this consciousness of unappreciated and uncompensated labor. The good deeds which command the applause of men, and the careers that are regarded as most successful now, may be lowest in the scale of the final recompense: "I shall get no credit for this or that." This is the excuse for avoiding difficult and, at present, unprofitable duties. "Neither the world nor the church will miss me when I am dead." This, again, is the reason, sometimes framed, for avoiding toils and sacrifices, and labors repugnant to our taste, which, so far from advancing our temporal interests, are scarcely recognized by those whom we seek to benefit.

Self-seeking in the work of Christ is the last place where self-seeking should be felt. Not only is it unseemly and most unspiritual, but it cuts the sinews of a vigorous and healthy faith, and robs the soul of the final reward. They who go forth seeking to please God and to do good, expecting neither human credit nor human commendation, are pointed to the resurrection of the just. It may seem long to wait, and that pay-day is far off. But it is the opportunity most to be coveted, and a service of highest privilege. There is in such service no place for vaulting ambition, none for vanity, none for covetousness. It is a work rather of self-abnegation, of meekness, humility, and of a robust and all-conquering faith.

Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman.

This distinguished preacher, it seems, is about to leave, if he has not already left, the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is to become the settled pastor of an independent congregation in the city of New York. The first time we ever heard of him was about the close of the war. His conduct was so strange that our attention was then fixed on him, and up to this time we have watched his course with peculiar interest. He came to Mobile with the Federal troops, holding authority to seize our churches and property there, and to use them for the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) as he or some other idolizer of loyalty had already felt constrained to do in the neighboring city of New Orleans. This was in the days of Drs. Hamilton, Cotton, Hargrove and Dorman. Afterward he was one of the commissioners appointed by his church to help remove all obstacles in the way of formal fraternity which lay between the two great Methodisms, and took an active part in the famous Cape May Conference. On that grand historic occasion, to the utter surprise of everybody, he was one of the foremost on his side to recognize and admit the justice of the demands made by the commissioners of the Southern Church in order to the settlement of a basis of fraternity. Before this, and after it, he was much about Washington City, the intimate personal friend of Gen. Grant, and the pastor of the church attended by the President's family.

Before his militant visit to Mobile he had traveled in the East, and had published quite a handsome volume of observations and reflections on that interesting region. Subsequently, also, as an officer of the government, a kind of general inspector of the consulships of the United States in foreign lands, he traveled pretty well round the world. This was a special appointment given him by his friend, Gen. Grant, and one which, we believe, no other man ever had. He has been a member of the General Conference, and was a delegate to the Ecumenical Conference. At Cincinnati and London he not only sustained, but enlarged his fame as a preacher of uncommon brilliancy, who was sincerely devoted to the economy, usages and doctrines of Episcopal Methodism.

The fact is that Dr. Newman, in the thirty years of his ministry, has obtained about all the worldly advantages the Methodist Episcopal Church could give him, and the value of these advantages is by no means insignificant. He has gotten also nearly all the honor his church could give, except the honor of being a Bishop. This the last General Conference denied him, though it was generally understood that he was a candidate before that body for the episcopal office. His last appointment was purely a nominal one. Dr. Curry says: "He is named in the minutes as secretary of the New York Conference Education Society, a purely imaginary institution."

But, after all, it seems he has gone, or is going. And what of it? Well, first, we are sorry, and, secondly, we are glad. Sorry to see any man, who has been made great, or whose greatness has been made conspicuous to others and serviceable to himself by the peculiar opportunities so gladly furnished by Methodism, turn his back upon that church unless forced to do so by the profoundest convictions of conscience or points of doctrine or principles of government and polity. Sorry because, although he is unquestionably possessed of varied gifts and attainments, this change will make men believe that the honors the church has put upon him, and the attentions with which Gen. Grant has bedizened him, have created a strange but real disgust for the plain life and simple duties of a Methodist preacher, which he himself has lauded so eloquently and so often. Sorry because it is the end of a series which, when looked at in its continuity, makes his ministry appear as if it had been for years too much controlled by the aims, ends and motives of the mere politician, seeking, amid the multiplied interests and complex machinery of a great and useful church, not so much the glory of God as the aggrandizement of self. And sorry, above all, because "the last end of that man" fixes unerasably the impressions of his character, made by his presence in Mobile, as a special and voluntary agent to confiscate the property of a church, which he himself afterward, speaking for more than a million of constituents, declared, in the face of the world, was a church Scriptural in its doctrine and legitimate in its origin.

For these reasons we are sorry—profoundly so. But we are glad also, only, however, for this reason: his going shows that there are limitations in Episcopal Methodism, North and South, upon the gratification and success of maneuvering ambition and selfishness.

J. W. R.

North Louisiana Items.

MR. EDITOR: After a long and tedious trip we arrived in Shreveport last Tuesday. We beat Bro. Pipes and the New Orleans Pacific a few hours. Our labors began last Sunday with every prospect for a successful year. The people are inclined to take hold with a will of all church work. On next Sunday we will announce the leaders and divide the membership into classes for the year. We remember your once stating that "a class leader should always have on a full head of spiritual steam." Such leaders are hard to get, but by using such as we have in time, some of them may develop into the high standard you set for leaders. The great need is, as directed, to divide up the church and appoint leaders. If we do so, I am sure that as of old, God's blessing will be upon this peculiar and best feature of Methodism. The plantations along the river below here are generally under water, as is the Silver Lake region in the suburbs of the city. Saturday morning at one o'clock the watchers at the dam on Tone's Bayou were overpowered by masked men and the dam cut. The Shreveport Daily Times has the following:

After they had captured the watchers they marched them to within a hundred and fifty yards of the dam and guarded them with shotguns while the balance of the party did the work of cutting. They were all in mask and armed with double-barrel shotguns. After they had succeeded in making the cut some eight feet deep and thirty feet wide, they marched Mr. Oury and men back to quarters and warned them not to come out or watch the direction of their departure.

It has been raining for about five weeks almost constantly; yesterday was bright and beautiful, but the clouds envelope us to-day. The roads have become very bad, and consequently business is greatly hampered. Our people generally have been or are being vaccinated, as they want to be ready for the coming of the foul disease that is moving over the land. The illness of our beloved presiding elder has filled us all with sorrow, and we sincerely trust that he may be able to continue on our district. His faithful labors last year were fruitful of great good and his indisposition and possible retirement from the work are deplored by all. Bro. McCleudon certainly has the sympathies and prayers of the preachers and people of the Shreveport district.

J. T. S.

SHREVEPORT, LA., February 7, 1882.

Letter from Hot Spring's, Ark.

The last week has been an eventful one for our city in the number of distinguished guests we have entertained. Cornelius Vanderbilt and the celebrated Dr. Tanner are still here, and serve to make the vulgar stare and the idle joke. Judges of the Supreme Court of Iowa and Mississippi, and men notable in crime, the arts and trade linger, among our hotels and bath houses, although the season for visitors has barely opened. Yesterday Gen. W. S. Hancock, after a brief visit, started homeward with the intention of stopping for recreation with his son, Russell Hancock, a successful farmer in Coahoma county, Miss. Quite a number of citizens, irrespective of party affiliations, called in a body to pay him their respects, and welcome him to the hospitalities of our city. The General made a brief speech, simply of thanks, and excused himself from any reference to the great questions now occupying the public mind. He is not much of a speaker, and yet, if "Silence is golden," he ought to be credited with glowing eloquence as well as statesmanship, albeit he is charged with folly in some precipitate utterances upon the "tariff." I heard him in Booth's Theater, in New York, on Decoration Day, four year's ago. W. T. Sherman had read, from printed slips, an elaborate oration, prepared for the occasion, and its personnel suggested the smoke and din of his obstinate campaigns. N. P. Banks followed in a written address of more polish and more demagogism, and which adapted so carefully to the prejudices prevalent in such an audience, was greeted with thunders of patriotic applause. Henry Ward Beecher had opened the exercises with a prayer, faultless in elocution, rhetoric and sentiment, and Mrs. Geo. Vandenhoff had recited, with the weird power of a charmer, the "Bivouac of the Dead," and yet the audience longed for one burst of natural, unpremeditated eloquence, and called for —— "Beecher!" but he had slipped the crowd. Upon the platform sat a half dozen Federal generals in full uniform, and Hancock's commanding figure soon caught their eye, and in an instant the house resounded with his name. He was wise and brave enough to step before the footlights and declare that he had nothing to say. Not many men of his past record and present position, borne to rostrum by the imperious calls of such an audience, and on such an occasion, could have been so courageously silent. I thought of what Sidney Smith called "Brilliant flashes of silence."

Among other honored visitors we have had Miss Frances Willard, who, to rest from the labors of our State Temperance Convention, in Little Rock, dropped in upon us for a few hours. We facilitated her repose, as is often done for Methodist preachers, by making an appointment for her. She entertained, thrilled and aroused a large audience for one hour upon "Prohibition." She is a grand woman, and, say what you please about the propriety of her sex upon the platform, she did then, as often before and I pray God she may continue to do, a vast deal of good. When the wrongs of ages thrill and find a voice and an audience, it is no time to talk of propriety. Women, who have been the victims of masculine debauchery and its consequent insult, neglect and violence, and who have fought against despair and sung requiems to breaking hearts, are entitled to be heard in the presence of their tormentors and their political accomplices. And she was heard and felt. Hot Springs has enjoyed the disgraceful pre-eminence for furnishing all possible advantages for all kinds of debauchery, and Arkansas in other days was the paradise of drunkards. So far as the State at large is concerned, this cursed reputation is waning. During the temperance convention, to which I have referred, there was what we would call a "love-feast," in which opportunity was given for scraps of experience. (Once Methodism was separate from the world, but our peculiarities are becoming everybody's very rapidly.

During this meeting it was disclosed that liquor was now banished, "prohibited," from three-fourths of the counties in the State. Miss Willard told me that Arkansas has marched to the front of all the States in the character of her temperance legislation. We put the control of this contraband in the hands of the churches and schools, and give women the right to vote in enforcing this authority. The State is fast recovering from its long intoxication, and now with compressed lips and clenched fists its women, its churches and its schools declare that "prohibition does prohibit."

Yours truly,

CHARLES F. EVANS.

February 6, 1882.

Letter from China.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Jan. 10, 1882.

DEAR BRO. PARKER: We have just returned from the city of Soochow, where we have been to attend the dedication of our new church, the gift of our dear Bro. Buffington, who is now among the saints in glory. You may be sure it was a great day, a day of rejoicing with us all, who have earnestly prayed for such a glorious event in this great heathen city. That morning, that beautiful Sabbath, the eighth of January, 1882, will long be remembered by us all, and by many of the heathen who gathered around to see and listen. Many of these poor heathen who knew me when I preached in the little room, fourteen years since, and only a short distance away from this beautiful church, came to see the church when it was opened, and my heart was full of thanksgiving to God for this blessed day. Fourteen years ago, as I stood on the ground floor in that small room, which would only seat twenty persons, and there preached the glorious gospel of Christ to a few poor silk weavers, who came to hear me, my prayer to God was, Lord, open to us an effectual door among this heathen people in this great city. Often my heart was sad and heavy, for there was but one Christian native in that small assembly who did say "Amen" to such a prayer, but at the opening and dedicating of this beautiful church, in sight of this little room, we had present at least forty persons who could unite with me in thanking God for the progress of this work, and that God's people had been prospered in the completion of this beautiful house of worship. The Lord has been with us, and we are greatly blessed in thus being able to plant the standard of the cross in this great heathen city. We had at least two hundred persons present at the opening service, and I feel quite sure I never had a more attentive audience at any time since my first arrival in China. We believe the Lord was present with us, and we felt that it was a time when we could rejoice and praise the name of the Lord. On Monday many of those poor silk weavers came to see me; said they remembered me when I preached in the little room, north of this place, many years ago, and when they heard we had opened a large church they wanted to come and see me. God has said of his word: "It shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." These blessed passages in God's word bring joy to our hearts. This work can not be in vain. The Lord will bless his word. Let the church pray earnestly for us and for this work, and the Lord will hear and pour out a rich blessing upon his church in this land. I ask an interest, dear brother, in your prayers.

I remain yours,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

Aaron's Rod in Public Morals, a plea for prohibition, is the title of a well written pamphlet by Rev. Chas. B. Galloway, of Jackson, Miss. It argues the question clearly and fairly, and presents an array of facts truly startling. We hope it will have a wide circulation and a careful reading. On the subject of prohibitory legislation, Bro. Galloway says:

There is a growing and profound sentiment in the State and nation, in favor of repressive legislation against liquor. As to the matchless evil, there is no question; but as to the civil measures to be employed in its repression or prohibition, there is wide difference of opinion. This, therefore, calls for calm and grave consideration.

1. The principle of prohibition is just and right. Adopting the narrowest definition of the limits of State legislation, granting the largest liberty to the individual, it yet appears luminous as sunlight, that prohibitory laws are just and necessary. It is fundamental to the very idea and existence of government. If whisky is an evil—which few will deny—then its regulation or prohibition is the subject and imperative duty of legislation. But it is claimed as one of man's natural rights to buy and sell, and drink intoxicating liquors, and that to deny or abridge this right "is to unjustly interfere with his natural freedom from restraint." Such a claim has neither the warrant nor pretense of plausibility when fully investigated. Natural as opposed to civil rights never had an existence. The idea is a mere figment of a diseased brain—"a fable without the merit of being cunningly devised." Man is a social being, born in society, with social and reciprocal obligations and duties, as natural and necessary as air to the lungs and food to the tissues. He is neither a Sitting Bull nor an Alexander Selkirk, governing his own narrow realm with the sceptre of a despot, without regard to, and in defiance of the existence of others. God never made man an independent sovereignty. If so, government would be an impossibility, and warfare our only employment and pastime. But even granting the claim, when man passed from his natural into his social state, "he merged his natural in his social rights." Mr. Justice Cooley, an eminent and undoubted authority, has defined civil rights to embrace "the right to do everything not harmful to the public or to other individuals!" On this definition, an able writer in the Princeton Review, makes the following judicious and almost axiomatic observations:

"Whenever a private right becomes injurious, noxious, or offensive to the public good, the private right becomes subordinate to the public right which a community has to demand a protection therefrom. Acts innocent themselves, acquire, from circumstances the quality of injuring the public. To carry arms about one's person for purposes of self-protection is in itself an innocent act. But where citizens generally do the same thing, the tendency is to create disorder and cause the unjustifiable taking of human life; the State, therefore, prohibits the carrying of the dangerous weapons concealed upon one's person. So it may be said of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, that notwithstanding it may be innocent in itself, it may nevertheless, by force of circumstances, be injurious to the public welfare and dangerous to the public peace. And if this be so, the private right of sale has become subordinate to the public right of protection. We conclude, therefore, that no man has a natural or a civil right to indulge in a traffic which renders life and property insecure, which promotes immorality and creates public paupers to be supported at the State's expense. If it appears that the traffic in intoxicating liquors does all this, the justice of the principle that would prohibit and stamp out the miserable traffic can not be denied." Where is the jurist or logician that can discover a flaw in that argument? Where the weapon, that can penetrate the joints of that harness?

2. But the principle of prohibition already exists in Mississippi and in every other State in the Union. Every statute which regulates the sales of liquor, guarding it with severe penalties and expensive license, out of all comparison with other lines of business, is grounded upon the principle of prohibition. The right to regulate, is involved in the right to prohibit. Our present laws recognize it as an evil that must be controlled and may be prohibited.

A contributor in Central Christian Advocate, writing about the "utterly utter" in preaching, says:

Now the misfortune about this kind of stuff is that with many it passes current as the product of genius, creates a false taste among superficial hearers, and induces not a few weak-minded young men to make fools of themselves by imitating it. As a matter of fact it is one of the easiest things in the world to manufacture. Any fool almost is capable of it; a genuine wise man only is incapable of it.

William Taylor in his "Model Preacher," gives some striking illustrations of "extravagant flights of fancy" by preachers. He tells of one who represents an "angel running on a rainbow with a basket of stars in each hand," and of another who said, "I will jump astride a streak of lightning, put spurs to it, and dash off to glory." Also he tells of a young man (and we are grateful to be informed that he was discontinued from the work) who made this deliverance: "Yes, my friends, the mind of man is so expansive that it can soar from star to star, from satellite to satellite, and from seraphene to seraphene, and from cherry-boom to cherry-boom, and from thence to the center of the dome of heaven!"

The sad thing about this "utterly utter" style of preaching is that it is a hollow mockery, a deceitful sham. It is of no use to tell me that any man who knows or cares anything about the true business of one whom God has put in a Christian pulpit, will talk to men in any such way. I am reminded of an anecdote I lately heard of a young and conceited preacher who was very anxious to have a certain elderly preacher hear him deliver one of his "star sermons" that he might receive his praise. At last he had the satisfaction of preaching before the old pastor, and he coruscated and scintillated with unusual brilliance. When the service ended he turned to the senior and said, "What did you think of my sermon?" The old gentleman made the crushing reply: "I think somebody ought to take you out in the woods and kick you!" My conviction is that if that kind of medicine could be administered regularly and in allopathic doses, it would effectually cure some men of this "utterly utter" style of preaching.

—Mrs. Margaret Haughery died at her residence in this city Thursday night, February 9. She was better known simply as "Margaret," and few of the old citizens of New Orleans were more widely or more favorably known. Margaret's Bakery was one of the institutions of New Orleans. Her business energy and capacity were remarkable, and her success surprising. She was a Roman Catholic, and we suppose that the most of her income was devoted to the support of the charitable institutions of her church. She had, however, an open hand for all, and gave liberally to benevolent objects outside the pale of her own church. Respected by people of every faith, her death will be universally regretted, and her name will long survive amid the scenes of her generous and benevolent labors.

—The Minutes of the recent session of the Louisiana Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have been brought out in pretty good style. The quality of the paper does not appear to be first-rate, but the typography is good, and the proof reading seems to have been attended to with care. The secretary, Rev. J. T. Sawyer, and assistant secretary, Rev. J. M. Beard, prepared the copy, and the latter, we believe, did the proof reading. The printing contract was with G. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street. We suppose copies will be forwarded at once to presiding elders for general distribution.

—Rev. Dr. John Mathews has been spending a few days in New Orleans. He preached at the Carondelet Street Church, on Sunday night, to a large congregation. Dr. Mathews expected to leave on Wednesday of this week, with his family, for Kansas City. It is with regret that our people here give up the doctor and his excellent family. May the Master's presence and blessing attend them in their new and distant home.

—It may not be amiss to remind the brethren, both of Mississippi and Louisiana, that the collections for expenses of delegates to General Conference should be attended to at an early date.

Rev. J. W. Medlock and wife have been called to give up a beloved child. May they be graciously sustained.

Mattie W, infant daughter of Rev. J. W. and Mrs. Fannie Medlock, was born at Bellevue, La., September 3, 1880, and died at Vienna, La., February 2, 1881. She filled her little mission in the world, having given to us much joy in her life, and chastened us with a holy sorrow in her death. HER PARENTS.

The following extract, from a letter received in this City from the wife of Bishop Wightman, has, says the St Louis Christian Advocate of Feb. 8, been furnished for publication. Let the reader offer prayers for the Bishop's restoration to health.

CHARLESTON, S. C., January 27th, 1882

The Bishop is emaciated and weak. I nurse him like an infant; and do very little but that, day and night. He talks very little, and suffers from indigestion. He is resigned to God's will, and ever prays that it may be done. The doctors do very little for him. We have to give him whatever he can take in his weak state, and watch lest we give anything to do harm. God only knows the result. We can only do all we can, looking unto him for his blessing. If my husband ever gets well, it will be of the Lord.

Mr George I. Seney, whose noble character ought to entitle him to the prefix "Hon," was interviewed by a New York Tribune reporter the other day concerning his motives for giving so profusely of his wealth to public causes. His reply is worth pondering: "First of all, because I feel that I am a trustee, responsible for the right use of the money given me. With the experience that I have, I believe that I am the person best qualified to carry out the provisions and duties of that trusteeship. What certainly have I that those provisions and duties would ever be duly carried out after my death? Absolutely none. Whereas now, by making those gifts in my lifetime, I am sure that the precise object I desire is accomplished in just the way I want. And then, too, I am more and more convinced of the truth of the words: 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.' The great danger of here-asing riches is that it fosters a disposition to hoard money only for the sake of hoarding it. Slightly to alter a common word, it becomes a money mania with them; they gloat over their millions, just because they are millions and not because of the happiness producible from them. Now I maintain that such a spirit is unworthy not only of a true Christian but of a true man, and I have determined never to let it appear in my character." His gifts to date amount to $1485,000.—Northern Christian Advocate.

The publication of La Flaceola (The Torch), a monthly paper formerly edited by Dr. Vernon, which during the past year has merged in L'Italia Evangelica, an undenominational weekly, is to be resumed the present year. Dr. Vernon will, however, still co-operate with the weekly. We are informed that Count Campello contemplates becoming the editor of a daily paper in Rome in the interest of evangelical principles. Dr Vernon writes this concerning him: Count Campello is a man of culture and of good natural gifts, and it has been hoped he might become a minister, and do effective service in the preaching of the Word. Entirely unused to the pulpit, however during the last twelve years, now fifty years of age, and also seriously affected with a chronic throat difficulty, any very important service from him as a preacher may reasonably be held to be rather problematical. He has a strong inclination to journalistic labors and is deeply impressed that whatever else he may do, or it may be his duty to do, it is his providential duty to establish and direct a daily journal to be wielded especially in the interest of the Gospel among his fellow-countrymen. The urgent need of such an instrumentality is seen in the fact that, aside from the Romanist papers, there is not a single daily journal in Italy that is not either rationalistic or infidel. * * * Count Campello has the sympathy and support of numerous influential parties, Italian and foreign, and has high hopes of real success and usefulness. The hour and the general circumstances offer a great opportunity, and this line of labor, prudently developed and wisely directed, may be made of large and lasting advantage in the present condition of this people.—Central Christian Advocate.

Rev. Dr. Cuery, in a recent speech before the American Institute of Instruction, presented the facts supported by figures, showing that much misapprehension existed in the public mind in reference to what the South had done for educational purposes. The South before the war, in proportion to white population, taking man for man, sustained a larger number of colleges, with more professors, more students, and a greater annual cost than was done in any section of the Union. The same thing is true of academies and private schools. If the census of 1880, as taken by the United States authorities, be correct, the white population of the Northern States in that year was nearly 19,000,000, and of the Southern only a little over 8,000,000. At that time the North had 205 colleges, the South 262; the North had 1407 professors, the South 1188; the North had 29,044 students, the South 27,055; the North paid for these colleges $1,514,203, the South $1,662,419.—Appeal.

The royal yacht "Osborne" will leave England for the Continent early next month, to bring the Princess Helene, the fiancee of Prince Leopold, to Osborne, where she will be received by the Queen. Claremont is to be the residence of the young couple. The place is now in the hands of decorator and the sanitary engineer, for, as in all old houses, the drains need renewing. The application to Parliament for a settlement for the Prince will cause much opposition. A number of Sir Charles Dilke's constituents are getting up a deputation to request the under secretary of foreign affairs to oppose and vote against any proposal for such a parliamentary grant.—N. Y. Independent.

The Choir of Virtues.

I think you will agree with me that the passage, II Peter i, 5-7, has afforded, not an unconnected series of injunctions, but a symetrical combination, forming a perfect Christian character. I would call your attention to the healthful tone of the sanctification of which the passage speaks, and the Bible everywhere speaks. There is nothing false, or meretricious, nothing of morbid sentimentalism, about it. There is the development of all that is tender and lovely in our human nature, but there is nothing mawkish or lackadaisical about it. These virtues are sturdy, substantial virtues, and, when combined, their combination forms a perfect character. There is no sanctification enjoined in this text, or anywhere else in the word of God, in the sense of seclusion or keeping away, even from wicked people. The whole system of monasticism and seclusion, and shutting ourselves away from our fellow-men, plausible I admit it is, and has seduced some of the very purest minds in the whole church of God for ages after ages—perhaps, the very purest have been found within the limits of monasteries—but the idea is false, and contrary to God's plan for the propagation of the gospel. And what has been the consequence? The outcropping fruit of it was destruction and death. The whole monastic system ended—for what is now on earth is only the shadow of what it used to be—in the foulest corruption. The very aim of Christianity is, that we shall exercise brotherly love and charity. What sort of an exercise of it would it be for me to have my head shaved and wear no matter what kind of garment in token of humiliation, and live in a cell in meditative seclusion? Any imitation of monasticism ought to be avoided. I should say that the imitation of it, even in so small and accidental a way as in the matter of peculiar dress, partakes of the same false character, and will in the long run lead to similar evil results. That excellent society, called the Society of Friends or Quakers, has been hampered in the development of the Christian life and the propagation of the gospel by the adoption of a peculiar dress.

I do not mean that it is right for us to follow the fashion of the time, whatever that fashion may be, in any kind of extravagance. It is the tendency of the human mind to run into extremes. Put a drunken man on horseback, and he will oscillate from side to side, now on this side, now on that, in vain endeavoring to keep the balance of a well-trained rider. There is no warrant in Christianity for wasteful or foolish expenditure or outlay upon the person. All this is to be ruled by temperance and moderation, so as to run into no extreme. But, on the other hand, the attempt to mark this church, or that, by a uniform or regimentals, and so to set it apart from the world, is part of the old monastic idea, and must come to naught.

Our duty is to live in this world, and do all the good we can in it. We are put in a certain system of society which God upholds as the very theater of his kingdom upon the earth. It is here that the great problem of the world's salvation is to be wrought out; and you and I, as individual agents for Christ's kingdom, are to do his work. You may mingle with all men of every class and creed; you have no need to shrink from them; but take care that you fall not into the ways of these men from sheer cowardice, on the one hand trying to save your soul, on the other yielding to the current, and thinking you are safe because you go with the stream. You are put into a worldly atmosphere, but only to purify it. You are, perhaps, a student. Your studies are to be secular studies—science, literature—apart from the study of the word of God; and yet none of these studies are secular if consecrated to the service of God. And so it is in every walk of life. If we have faith at bottom we shall consecrate our activities in all lines of duty to God's service. But remember, "he that heareth these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins." That is to say, as a backslider he has wandered among the dogs and sorcerers of the earth, has surrendered his primal, trusting faith, and has returned to all his old evil ways.—Dr. John McClintock, from "Living Words."

Personal and Other.

—Ministers' Sons.—Samuel J. Mills John N. Nason, Robert Hall, Gardiner, Spring, Dr. Samuel Cooper, and many more are mentioned by a recent writer in the Christian Observer who maintains that the ministry is, out of all proportion, largely recruited from the parsonages. He mentions the following noted divines, whose sons entered the ministry; Charles Chauncy, second President of Harvard, 6 sons; John Eliot, the apostle to the Indians, 4 sons; Rev. Theo. Frelinghuysen, 5 sons; Robert Smith, of Penn., 3 sons, two of them college presidents; Dr. Samuel Spring, 2 sons; Wm. Tennent, 4 sons; Archibald Alexander, 3 sons; Charles Hodge and Jonathan Edwards, each a son to carry on their work after they laid it down.

—Perhaps the most eminent convert ever won from the Moslem to the Christian faith is Ahmed Effendi who was baptised in London, Nov. 11th. He stood in the very front rank of the Turkish hierarchy in learning and reputation, and was condemned to death by the government for assisting in the translation of Christian books. By the interposition of Sir H. Layard, his sentence was changed to banishment for life to the Island of Chio. Escaping from there he made his way to England, and though intellectually convinced of the truth of Christianity, it was a long time before he consented to baptism, a rite which would seperate him entirely from wife, children and country.

—Rosa Bonheur in her studio and at home, wears the costume of a man and wears her hair cut and parted at the side. When she goes to Paris she dresses in the uniform of her own sex; but she never assumes petticoats without deprecating the custom, and complaining of their interfering with the freedom of the limbs, and thereby impeding the power of locomotion.

—It is said that the Natural Bridge property in Virginia has been purchased by a stock company, of which Gov. Cornell, of New York, is president. A new railroad is to be built and other efforts made to bring it up as a popular summer resort.

—The will of the late Miss Sarah Gage, of Hudson, N. Y., gives to the St. Lawrence University, for the theological department, $30,000; to the New York State Convention of Universalists, $20,000; to the First Universalist Church of Hudson, N. Y., $3,000.

—Leopold von Ranke, the German historian, has just celebrated his 87th birthday. At this age he is a strong and active man, in full vigor of mind and body. He has just published the third and fourth volumes of his "Universal History."

—Rueben's picture, the "miracles of St. Benedict," sold by the successors of Tence, of Lille, has been disposed of at Paris for 170,000 francs. The purchaser was the King of Belgium, in whose Royal Museum nearly all of Rueben's works are to be seen.

—The monument to Gen. Garfield which the Society of the Army of the Cumberland proposes to erect is to cost $200,000, and will probably be placed in Washington. The society has appointed a committe to attend to the work of collecting subscriptions.

—The princess of Wales has sent her photographs to King Kalakaua, together with those of her sons, to be sold at a bazar which will be held in Honolulu, for the purpose of raising funds to build a cathedral in that city.

—The wife of the new Chinese minister, a lady of high rank in her own country, will not at present enter Washington society. She speaks only her own language. Her little feet will not permit her to go about unsupported, and she is, to crown all, exceedingly bashful.

—The last clerical act performed by Dean Stanley was his defence of the Revised New Testament. During his visit to this country 1878 he preached in New York at both Trinity and Grace churches.

—Benjamin Philbert has just died in St. Louis, worth $300,000. He never rode in a railroad-car or a steam-boat, and had not been out of the city for sixty-three years.

—Dr. Stevens' Madame de Staël has been re-published in London by Murray. The London Post says it is by far the best treatise on the subject that has ever appeared in English.

Books and Periodicals.

—Yorktown is the title of a paper covered octavo of sixty-two pages, by Jacob Harris Patton, A. M., published by Fords, Howard & Hulbert, New York. The author gives a compendious account of the campaign of the allied French and American forces, resulting in the surrender of Cornwallis, and the close of the American revolution: also an account of the recent centennial anniversary. The work is illustrated with portraits of many of the distinguished generals connected with the campaign.

—The Fortnightly Review, January, 1882, George Munro, publisher, New York, has: 1. On Land Owning Cultivators; 2. Note on Mary, Queen of Scots; 3. Photographic Chronicles from Childhood to Age; 4. The Future of Islam; 5. Pietro Cossa-Dramatist; 6. Sir Charles Lyell; 7. Vivi-section, four replies; 8. Memorials of Caroline Fox; 9. Home and Foreign Affairs; also the Freres, by Mrs. Alexander.

—We have received a copy of the thirty-second annual report of the Southwestern Bible Society. Besides the report of the Board of Directors, the pamphlet contains the eloquent address, delivered at the anniversary, by Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

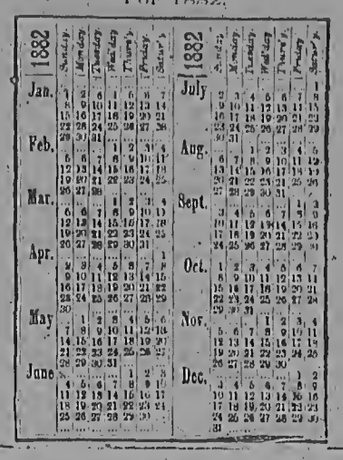
—The February number of the Louisiana Journal of Education completes the third volume of that valuable publication. We can commend the journal as an important agency in promoting the cause of education. Robert M. Lusher and Wm. O. Rogers, editors and proprietors; New Orleans, La. Price $1 a year.

—"Children's Museum" is the title of a handsomely illustrated monthly, E. B. Goddard & Co., publishers, New York. Price $1 a year.

—Vicks Illustrated monthly for February has been received.

Advocate Calendar,

For 1882.



Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

See the Ink Bottle on the Table. It is Full of Nice Black Ink. If you Want to, you can Pour the Ink out on the Carpet. It makes the Carpet look Black, but does it not Sit down on the Carpet and Put both of your Little Pebbles in the Ink? See, your Fingers are covered with the Ink? What a Nice picture you can Make on the Wall Paper now. Make a Picture of a Big Man and a Little Girl. Do you want to Put Some Ink on the Lace Curtain? Very well. Put it on Carefully, for you Should never Waste the Ink or anything Else. This will be Quite a Surprise to Mamma when she Comes in.

The great music house of P. Werlein continues to supply the world with musical instruments, and thousands of homes have been made happy by the possession of a piano or an organ through his low prices and astonishingly liberal terms. The name Werlein has become so identified with pianos that you hardly can think of pianos without thinking of Werlein. Go and try him, and our word for it, you will be pleased.

A judge and a joking lawyer were conversing about the doctrine of the transmigration of souls of men into animals. "Now," said the judge, "suppose you and I were turned into a horse and an ass, which would you prefer to be?" "The ass, to be sure," replied the lawyer. "Why?" rejoined the judge. "Because," was the reply, "I have heard of an ass being a judge, but of a horse—never.

Two sons of Erin, shoveling on a hot day, stopped to rest and exchanged views on the labor question. "Pat, this is mighty hard work we're at." "Is, indade, Jerphy; but what kind of work is it you'd like, if you could get it?" "Well," said the other, leaning reflectively on his shovel and wiping the perspiration from his brow with the back of his hand, "for a nice, airy, clane business, I think I would like to be a bishop."

Darwin, in his new book, estimates that there are in gardens 53,767 worms to the acre. This tallies with our count when we were digging garden and didn't care about finding worms; but when we wanted bait for fishing the garden didn't pan out a dozen worms to the acre. They had all emigrated to the garden of some other fellow who never goes a-fishing.

Benificent nature seems to have planted in every clime the proper remedies for the diseases incidental to it. Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm is made of an herb which grows all over the Gulf region, and it has never failed yet to cure all kinds of coughs and colds.

A little fellow who was reading an account of a fire, came across the word "extinguish," and asked his mother what it meant. "To put out," was the reply. On the following day the mother heard her son scolding the nurse. "What is the matter, George?" she said. "Why," said George, "I told nurse to extinguish the dog, and she won't."

Occasionally we meet a philosopher. Ragbag did the coal-hole act, and got up terribly bruised and injured. But he was apparently not angry or grieved. Somebody said to him: "you don't seem to mind the fall?" He replied: "I didn't particularly like it, but, of course, I'm going to get over feeling mad about it some time, and I may as well begin now as to-morrow."

The Boston Journal tells how a friend humorously and with applause related a story of his visit to New York. "I vos eating a long time, veh a valter he comes oop and he say: 'Will you have some doodings more?' And I say, 'No, I will not; bring me another slice of roast beef.'"

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said a blundering counsel in a suit about a lot of hogs, "there were just thirty-six in the drove. Please remember the fact—thirty-six hogs; just three times as many as in that jury-box, gentlemen." That counsel didn't gain his case.

Two boarding-house keepers are comparing notes. "It 'pears to me, Mrs. Miggles, that your chicken salad is never found out—leastways, I never hear none of the boarders complain." "You see," explained Mrs. Miggles; "I allus chops up a few feathers with the veal."

A little boy called out to his father, who had mounted his horse for a journey; "Good-bye, Papa. I love you thirty miles long." A little sister quickly added: "Good-bye, dear Papa. You will never ride to the end of my love."

"No perceptible change," said he, as he read the headlines in the evening paper. "No, nor there hasn't been any for a week," said she, turning his vest-pockets inside out: "and if some isn't forthcoming pretty quick, there'll be trouble."

"That's what I call a thrilling sermon," said a lady to her husband, as they wended their way from church. "Yes," was the reply; "that do you know, I thought it never would be."

The reason why some men get along so slowly in this world is because they spend two thirds of their time talking about what they are going to do, and during the other third they have to sleep.

Female diseases, brought on by imprudence, exposure, or the use of improper medicines, are quickly relieved with Brown's Iron Bitters.

It is said that thirty persons in a small town in Michigan were poisoned recently by eating sausages. This comes from having brass collars on dogs.

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend or the next year and you will not regret it.

A reporter of a California free fight says: "Col. Higgs was shot once in the left side, once in the right shoulder, and once in the drinking saloon adjacent."

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

WERLEIN'S,

NEW ORLEANS.

Make your home happy by purchasing one of those superb

CHICKERING, MATHUSHEK, or HALE PIANOS.

If you should not want a Piano buy an Organ:

MASON & HAMLIN'S

LEAD.

STERLING ORGANS

Are Good and Cheap.

GOOD VIOLIN, BOW AND BOX, $5.

I am prepared to supply all persons with good bargains. If you will write for catalogue and prices you will be convinced that we do offer good inducements

Instruments sent on trial, and if not satisfactory, no sale nor expense.

PHILIP WERLEIN,

135 Canal St., New Orleans.

ROSES! from Sunny-Side, excel in vigor, abundant and beautiful bloom. 6 for $1; 14 for $2, post-paid. A choice collection of Carnation Pinks, 5 for 50c., 12 for $1. A large assortment of Greenhouse and Bedding Plants especially suited to the South. Choice Vegetable and Flower Seeds. Catalogue Free. JOS. T. PHILLIPS, West Grove, Chester Co., Pa.

CHAPEL HILL ACADEMY,

MARSHALL COUNTY, TENN.

Opens the next session, the Sixteenth, under present principle, January 2, 1882. Course: English; Classics, Mathematics and Sciences. Thoroughness, Cheapness and Progress are all combined here. Efficient teachers employed, such as know how to teach, and are up with the spirit and progress of this age of Education. Entire expense, $70 to $80 per session of twenty weeks. Music by skillful teachers for $25 per session.

O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., editor Christian Advocate, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., of this school, says: "Unsolicited, we speak a word in behalf of this school. The Chapel Hill community is one of the best in the country, the location is beautiful and healthful, and Prof. S. V. Wall is a teacher whose skill as an educator is only equaled by his qualities as a Christian gentleman. All of which we say because we know it is so."

Pupils can enter at any time and will be charged only from time of entrance. Tri-weekly stage from Nashville to this place, distance forty miles south.

Address S. V. WALL, Principal,
Chapel Hill, Tenn.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,

MONUMENTS.

Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,

MARBLE, SLATE,

And Iron Mantels and Grates.

114, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans

FOR $2.50!

Mailed Postage Paid.

I have nineteen copies left of the

Complete Church Register,

Historical and statistical, comprising: A General Index; An Alphabetical Register for Church Members; Register of Official Members, of Baptisms, Marriages and Deaths; Register of Annual, Quarterly and Church Conferences; Tables for Church Collections; and an Annual Summary of the Yearly Work and condition of the Church.

It is substantially bound in cloth, leather back, ruled and printed, size about 10x15 inches, over 200 pages, and no more can be had when this lot is disposed of. Original price $5. All in perfect order.

Address G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

Indian Turnip

COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by B. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street. And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & CO. Augusta, Maine.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
O. Box, 598, New York.

Agricultural.

THE POTATO IN ITS NATIVE COUNTRY.—An English gentleman who long resided in Chili collected from different persons the following facts in relation to the way potatoes are cultivated there:

"I got some valuable information from intelligent workmen born and bred in the South, some of whom had wrought in the gold-fields when young men and are now employed on the railway. One of them, Jose Maria Lores, is from the province Chiloe south lat. 42°. He thinks there are no good potatoes out of his own country, and I believe there is some reason for this opinion, for, north of the rest of Chili, the potato is their staple article of food; consequently more attention is paid to the selecting of good varieties and to the best modes of cooking. He said: 'Here in the North the people don't know what potatoes are. They neither know how to cook them nor how to eat them. And the potatoes are not so good as in my country. There you have something worth eating—potatoes so mealy that you can't boil them, for breaking them to pieces.' Potatoes are roasted in the ash-pits in wood ashes. They are always ready there, and if a friend comes in, he is offered a hot potato out of the ash-pit, with salt or a piece of dried fish. They are white and floury and fall to pieces when the roasted crust is taken off. In fact, Chiloe is the Ireland of Chili as regards potatoes. Jose did not know much about their cultivation, but he had never heard of any disease attacking them. Chiloe is very rainy. Indeed, it rains almost continuously there, while the greater part of the rest of Chili is dry. In the report for 1873, issued by the Santiago Meteorological Office, the annual rain fall of Valparaiso is given as twelve inches; that of Ancud, in Chiloe, fifty-two inches. The varieties grown there thrive with rain and suffer from the want of it. Seed taken from Chiloe ought to suit Ireland and the west of Scotland and England. The following is the mode of cultivation in the chacra, or large kitchen-garden: The plot of ground selected for potatoes is sown with barley in March or April, as soon as the previous crop has been harvested. The barley grows till August, when it is in the ear. The ears are then cut off and sold for feeding horses, cows, and pigs. The long green stubble is plowed or dug into the ground, where it soon rots and serves as manure. In October the ground is prepared for planting. The seed is planted at a depth of from eight to ten inches below the surface, in rows one "vara" apart thirty-three inches. However, the seeds are not put in singly, but in groups of four, and the distance between the groups is also one "vara." Some people put four small potatoes in each group; but the newer improved method is to put in four sets of one eye each, cut from the one or two principal eyes of large potatoes. If there are any small eyes in the sets, they are destroyed, to prevent them from growing. After the plants are well through the ground, they are dug all round and the ground is thoroughly loosened. Some time after, the earth is hoed up about them into round piles, like big mole-hills, and when further grown they get another hoeing up. I am assured that immense crops are procured by this method—as much as eighteen tons per English acre—mostly of large potatoes. The rotation includes maize, French beans, pumpkins, etc. I do not know the order, but have been told several times that you always get a good crop of potatoes after French beans. As regards the varieties cultivated in the country, some are adapted for early consumption, other for keeping through the winter. I have a good deal about "papas reynas." The potato men cry them in the streets of Valparaiso. They are fine, dry, mealy potatoes and really the best in Chili, but do not keep well during the winter. They become soft and black. The "borrauja," a red potato, keeps well. I see by the Blue Book on the potato crop that the Peruvian guano has been blamed for producing the disease, or for carrying it to Europe, and it is well to remember that, though guano exists in Chili, it is or none is used. The soil is composed of disintegrated granite. The torrents descend from the mountains loaded with earthy matter, and, where irrigation is practiced the water deposits part of this in the fields, so that the soil is being constantly renewed. I have inquired about the wild potato, but nobody knows it. Most of the people have heard that the potato is a native of Chili, but think of it only as a cultivated plant, and have never seen it on the hills, except where planted.

Juan de Dios Maraboli describes the mode of cultivation practiced by the large growers for the Valparaiso and Northern markets: "I was born in the Province of Talca, where my father was a tenant-farmer. I used to work on the farm till I was eighteen years old, when I came to the North. When a field is to be planted with potatoes, it is plowed as soon as the previous crop of wheat or barley has been cut. The stubble is left long, and this, plowed in, is the manure for the potatoes. By the time the rainy season is over—in September or October—the stubble has decayed, and the ground is again plowed, in some cases as often as five times, and harrowed well each time. The rainy season extends from April to September; that is, from about the vernal to the autumnal equinox. In November it is drilled. The distance between the drills is one step (about thirty-three inches), and they are made as deep as possible (about sixteen inches).

The potatoes are planted whole, a short step apart (about two feet), by a man carrying a basket on his shoulder. He walks erect and quickly, drops a seed each step, and presses it into the ground well by his naked foot. If, when he puts his hand into the basket, he gets a small one, he takes two seeds and plants them together; if very small, he puts in three. The largest potatoes are not planted; but middle-sized and small ones. The seed is covered by splitting the hills, and the field is harrowed flat and remains so till the potatoes are dug. As the rainy season is now past, new weeds grow, and they are soon smothered by the tops, but sometimes they are cut down with hoes. If the land can be irrigated, it is watered once or twice in January or February, after the tops are well up, the leaves of which are not wetted. The crop is ripe in April and is dug after the first rain, never before, one reason being that the ground is so hard the potatoes could not be got out easily till it rains. After the potatoes have been dug, they are spread on a high piece of ground and repeatedly turned, till they are quite dry. They are then piled in heaps and covered with rushes. Sometimes dried rushes are put under them, but not always. The pits (for pits are made use of) are made early morning, when the potatoes are cold, as well as in the afternoon, when they are warm with the sun. Trenches are dug round the heaps, to take away the water, and the potatoes keep dry and good all winter. On some estates they are all taken into sheds, with thatch roofs, and laid on wooden shelves. They keep good both ways."

Felipe Diez was also born and bred in Talca. His statement was almost exactly the same as that just now given. He laid great stress on making up the pits when the potatoes were cool. He had often to get up at three in the morning to do this work. Don Augustin Herreros has rented an estate near Santiago for the last eight years, and grows potatoes for the Santiago market. The land is good, irrigated from the river, and requires no manure. He can grow potatoes on the same ground year after year, but generally raises the three following crops in successions: first, wheat; second, French beans; third, potatoes; then wheat again. He sometimes plants his own seed, but usually gets it from estates further south. The smaller potatoes are selected for seed and are always planted whole. He never saw any disease. The details as to planting and treatment are nearly the same as given by Juan de Dios Maraboli, but he plants earlier in September or October and keeps down the weeds by hoeing. Near Santiago potatoes seldom get rain from the time they are planted till they are ripe.—New York Independent.

THE CASTOR BEAN.—A Kansas farmer having had many years experience in the culture of the castor bean, sends the following to the Farming World: Any land that will produce corn will grow castor beans. They are planted the same as corn. Plant so as not to have them up till all danger of frost is over, as a light frost kills the young plants. They usually come up in from ten days to three weeks. Plant heavily enough to have a good stand—four or five beans in a hill. When from four to eight inches high, thin to one thrifty plant; you will find this enough, as they are great branchers. They are cultivated just as corn is, and a good hoeing or two is a great help to them when young. Aim to keep them clean of grass and weeds, as this is nearly one half of the battle. They usually begin to ripen August 1. Ripening is shown by the balls on the spike showing signs of bursting open. Do not cut the spike before this or the beans will be light in weight. In regard to gathering, there are several methods; I have tried all of them. When I first began raising beans I left the space after every sixth row six feet wide, through which I drove a narrow sled with a ten-bushel box on it, at gathering time, and cut and threw the spikes of beans in it. This, however, is a slow way, besides being hard on the horse and a waste of land, as you lose one in every twelve. Another way, which I have tried with success, is this: Plant same as corn, leaving no wide middle as before described. Make a cart of the hind wheels of your wagon by putting a long pole under the hind-bounds into the axle-tree, and securely fastening it. Get a box that will hold twenty-five bushels; six feet long, three feet wide and two feet deep will hold that amount. Make the hind end of the box on the same principle as the end-gate of a wagon, so that by unhitching your team the beans can be dumped out without handling. Fasten this box on between the standards and you are ready. Many simply use these wagons in gathering, which is as good and speedy a way as any, but in using either cart or wagon, always drive on the same row; that is, if you wish to gather five rows at one through, run drive on centre row having two rows on either side. This you should do over after in going over the field, and in that way avoid breaking down beans unnecessarily. The bean yard, where the spikes are thrown as cut to pop open by the heat of the sun, should be a good one. This can be had by taking a piece of sod land, breaking the sod two or three inches and scraping it off; then with brooms sweep off all the loose dirt, so that you have a perfectly smooth yard. A very good yard can be made on old ground, but not ploughing it, but simply clearing it off when wanted. The yield per acre depends on several things—the stand, the condition of crop when laid by, and the diligence used in gathering the crop, as they will not wait upon a person when ripe. The general average in Franklin county has been from twelve to fifteen bushels per acre. The average for the seven years I raised them was about eighteen bushels per acre. The standard bushel is forty-four pounds. It was formerly forty-six, and is forty-six, in Illinois. I have received per bushel for them from eighty cents to $2. They do not pay to raise for less than $1 per bushel. Grasshoppers, chinch bugs and other pests do not harm them, and they stand an unusual amount of dry weather.

WINTER CARE OF FOWLS.—In building a hen-house the requirements of the fowls are always to be considered; these are warmth, light, fresh air, an earth floor and sufficient space to avoid crowding and allow of freedom, as a hen will not do well at laying unless she is contented. Hence, there must be space, not only in ground surface for freedom, but height for better ventilation as well, the windows so arranged and of number and size, as to admit copious air in summer. They are needed in winter a row of low windows on the south side for light, doubling the sash in winter; this is necessary for warmth and does it effectually, as it forms a dead air chamber, single glass admitting cold without any benefit from the air. If the building otherwise is well fortified against the cold, and double sash well fitted in use with dry earth floor, fowls will do well if a good breed for winter laying, like the Asiatic, and well taken care of, the care to be constant and required more in winter than in summer. Fresh water must be supplied with a variety of food, including occasional feeds of vegetables and meat of some kind, corn being the principal grain, affording heat as well as substance for eggs.—Country Gentleman.

FEEDING FOR MUTTON.—The influence of food on mutton is not to be doubted. Plenty of corn and hay, with juicy Swede turnips, will give a superior meat. A writer says that the merino, although a wool sheep and worth very little for mutton, if well bred and well fed produces mutton but little inferior to the celebrated Southdown.

SEED CORN.—It is the opinion of many farmers that seed corn should not be brought from any great distance. If you get the best seed from your own vicinity you will succeed better than with that from another State.

HOT BEDS.—These should be started six weeks before it will be safe to set out the plants. Keep the horse manure where it will not get too wet and fork it over occasionally.

Household.

HOW TO TAKE MILK.—Milk is a food that should not be taken in copious draughts like beer or other fluids which differ from it chemically. If we consider the use of milk in infancy the physiological ingestion, that is, of food provided for it. Each small mouthful is secured by effort and slowly presented to the gastric mucous surface for the primal digestive stages. It is thus regularly and gradually reduced to curd, and the stomach is not oppressed with a lump of half coagulated milk. The same principle should be regarded in case of the adult. Milk should be slowly taken in mouthfuls, at short intervals, and thus it is rightly dealt with by the gastric juice. If milk be taken after other food it is almost sure to burden the stomach and to cause discomfort and prolonged indigestion, and this for the obvious reason that there is insufficient digestive agency to dispose of it, and the better the quality of milk the more severe the discomfort will be under these conditions. Milk is insufficiently used in making simple pudding of such farinaceous foods as rice, tapioca and sago. Distaste for these is engendered very often, I believe, because the milk is stinted in making them or poor, skimmed milk is used. Abundance of new milk should be employed, and more milk or cream should be added when they are taken. In Scottish households this matter is well understood, and a distinct pudding plate, like a small soup-plate, is used for this course. The dry messes commonly served as milky puddings in England are exactly fitted to create disgust for what should be a most excellent and delicious part of a wholesome dinner for both children and adults.—Popular Science Monthly.

TO CLARIFY DRIPPING.—Take the dripping hot from the fire, and pour it into a basin with half a pint of boiling water, stir well and let it stand till cold. The impurities will settle in the water and at the bottom of the cake of fat; this can be scraped off with a knife, when the dripping will be quite pure. Or you may put the dripping into a basin with a little water, and let it simmer in the oven for half an hour (taking care that it does not burn.) When cold the water and sediment will sink. The dripping should then be scraped, and will be ready for use. Another plan is to have a stewpan kept for the purpose, into which all dripping may be put indiscriminately. Add to this a very small proportion of water (about half a small teacupful); place over the fire until it begins to steam, which shows that the water has evaporated. Turn out into a basin at once to cool. Bacon fat, which is too often wasted after frying, may be clarified likewise, and forms an excellent substitute for lard in pastry-making.

SCRAMBLES.—Mince a small tin of chicken, a quarter of pound bacon, three gherkins and six pickled onions together; season highly with pepper and salt and a very little nutmeg; pour in a teacupful of good gravy (in which sufficient gelatine has been dissolved to make it jelly when cold), with a teaspoonful of made mustard. Butter some teacups, and fill them with the mixture, placing at the bottom of every cup a tiny red star of beet-root. If a dozen scrambles are, half of them can be garnished in this manner, and half with stars cut out of the white of egg boiled; the yolk can be cut in slices and laid on the top of some of the scrambles. In this manner can be made quite a novel and piquant dish for luncheon.

FIG CAKE.—An elegant cake to be baked in layers with a filling of fig paste is made thus: Take one cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three cups and a half of flour, half a cup of sweet milk, the whites of seven eggs, two teaspoonful of baking powder; cream the butter and sugar till very light—and, by the way, this should always be done when you wish nice cake. Beat the eggs to a stiff froth. For the filling take one pound of figs, chop them fine and cook them until soft, and smooth with a teacupful of water and half a cup of sugar. Another but less desirable way to prepare the filling is to take ten ounces of figs and five ounces of raisins. Stone the raisins and then chop them and the figs fine; then soak them all night in enough brandy, wine or cider to make with them a paste which will spread almost like a thick custard.

A PLAIN DINNER.—Here is a recipe for a dessert for a plain dinner: Make a crust as for baking powder biscuit; roll it thin as for pie crust; cut out round cakes with the cover of a one-quart tin pail; wet them with cold water; drop a tablespoonful of quince, red or black raspberry jam in it; fold it together as for a turnover; bake from fifteen to twenty minutes in a hot oven. This is to be eaten with sauce. Take one tablespoonful of butter; two of flour, and three of sugar; put them in a basin on the hearth of the stove. When the butter is soft rub all together, and add boiling water enough to make the sauce as thin as you like to have it; flavor with nutmeg, cinnamon, vinegar, etc.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKES WITH WHITE SAUCE.—Wash them well, peel and shape to a uniform size; throwing them into boiling salted water, and let them boil fifteen to twenty minutes; drain them at once thoroughly; put them on a dish and serve, with the following sauce poured over them: Mix over the fire one and one-half ounces of butter with a tablespoonful of flour; add half a pint of boiling water, white pepper and salt to taste; stir till the sauce thickens; then take the saucepan off the fire and stir in the yolks of two eggs, beaten up with the juice of a lemon and strained.

TO WHIP CREAM.—Rub four or five pieces of sugar on a lemon, then add the juice to them with a good tablespoonful of brandy; when the sugar is dissolved and sweetened to taste put it into a basin; take a half pint of cream and pour in, gently stirring it with the whip; then continue to whip steadily, not too fast, until the cream becomes thick, but be careful not to turn it to butter. Put it away for a few hours into a cold larder, then it will become quite thick and ready to put over your jelly or trifle. It is best to whip it the day before it is wanted.

RABBIT.—An economical and delicious way of cooking rabbit is to take a nice fresh rabbit, put it into joints, and fry it brown, with some slices of pickled pork and some onions sliced finely. When nice and brown take it out of the frying-pan with water sufficient to cover it. Pepper and salt to taste. Thicken with some flour and butter; add forcemeat balls; but be sure not to pour the fat out of the frying pan. Let the gravy be of the richness of thick cream.

Scientific.

—THE POSSIBILITIES OF CHEMISTRY.—The London Observer in a striking article upon this subject, says: Chemistry is the science of the world and of the future. It has put in our hands gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, dynamite, and, above all, fulminate of gold—an explosive so terrible that if an ounce of it be left in a stoppered bottle, its grains falling among themselves by their own weight will create a convulsion sufficient to lay all London in ruins. It has given us poisons so subtle that, were we to employ such means of warfare, we could sail in a balloon over the camp of the enemy and drop upon it a shell, the bursting of which would kill every human being within a mile of its range. The possibilities of chemistry are almost too terrible to be contemplated. As the science at present stands any student can, if he have access to a well-stored laboratory, carry away in a pill-box matter sufficient to lay London in ruins, or to poison the whole community of its inhabitants. The chemist can, as every school-boy knows, convert water into ice in the center of a red-hot crucible. He can construct a shell the size of a cricket-ball, which will explode the moment it touches the water and overwhelm in flames a hostile fleet. Indeed, the chemist reduces the world to its original and primal elements. For him, even more than for the engineer, nothing is impossible. And yet his power, vast as it is, is limited. He can more easily destroy than construct. He can take life, but he can not give it. He can level the city with the plain, but he can not build it again. He can create prussic acid; but he is ignorant of its antidote. He is like the fisherman who rashly opened the vessel sealed with the ring of Suleiman Ben Daoud. The forces at his control are beyond his command; the powers he can evoke he can not lay. It is the old story of Cornelius Agrippa—those who trifle with nature's secrets do so at their peril."

—HOW CONDENSED MILK IS MADE.—A writer in the Scientific American thus describes the process:

When the milk is brought into the factory it is carefully strained, placed in cans or pails, which are put in a tank of water kept hot by steam coils. When hot it is transferred to larger steam-heated open vessels and quickly brought to a boil. This preliminary heating and boiling has for its object the expulsion of the gases of the milk, which would cause it to foam in the vacuum pan, and also to add to the keeping quality of the milk by destroying the mold germs. A second straining follows, after which the milk is transferred to a vacuum pan, where, at a temperature below 150° Fahrenheit, it boils, and is rapidly concentrated to any degree desired. The vacuum pan employed is a close vessel of copper, egg-shaped, about six feet high and five and a half in diameter. It is heated by steam coils within, and by a steam jacket without—inclosing the lower portion. In one side of the dome is a small window, through which gas illuminates the interior, while on the opposite side is an eye-glass, through which the condition of the contents may be observed. The pan is also provided with a vacuum gauge and test sticks.

Much of the milk used in cities is simply concentrated without any additional of sugar. The process of concentration is continued in the vacuum pan until one gallon of the milk has been reduced to a little less than a quart—one volume of condensed milk corresponding to about four and three-tenths volumes of milk. Condensed milk intended to be preserved for any length of time has an addition of pure cane sugar made to it during the boiling, and is usually put up in sealed cans. The sugared or "preserved" milk, when properly prepared, will keep for many years.

—A LAKE 2,000 FEET DEEP.—Several of our citizens returned last week from the Great Sunken Lake, situated in the Cascade Mountains, about seventy-five miles northeast from Jacksonville. This lake rivals the famous valley of Sinbad the Sailor. It is thought to average 2,000 feet down to water all around. The depth of the water is unknown, and its surface as smooth and unruffled as it is so far below the surface of the mountains that air-currents do not affect it. Its length is estimated at twelve or fifteen miles, and its width ten or twelve. There is a mountain in the center having trees upon it. It lies still, silent and mysterious in the bosom of the everlasting hills, like a huge well scooped out by the hands of the giant of gonil of the mountains in the unknown ages gone by, and around it the primeval forests watch and ward are keeping. The visiting party fired a rifle into the water several times at an angle of forty-five degrees, and were able to note several seconds of time from the report of the gun until the ball struck the water. Such seems incredible, but it is vouched for by our most reliable citizens. The lake is certainly a most remarkable curiosity.—Jacksonville (Oregon) Record.

—M. Trautschold, of Moscow, maintains that the level of the ocean is getting lower, and that the total quantity of water on the surface of the globe is diminishing. This view is in accordance with that of most of our leading scientists. If the central portions of the globe are heated there must be a limit to the descent of the surface of meteoric waters. As this central heat is growing less with each passing century, the depth to which the waters are carried must increase in the same ratio. The entire volume of surface water may in time disappear within the bowels of the earth. This is perhaps the condition of the moon at the present time.

—There is a rich field yet open for botanical explorations in even the older settled portions of the United States. It is not long since a form (Asplenium parradon) was known as a native of Mexica. The latest additions of our hand-books do not yet include it among American species. A few years ago it was found sparingly in the South. Several collectors have since met with it, and now Mr. Harvey tells the Botanical Gazette that "it is one of our common ferns in Arkansas."

—A form of the English pansy has been long supposed to be in all probability a true native of the United States, though doubted by some botanists. Dr. Thomas C. Porter sends to the Botanical Gazette some additional facts, placing it almost beyond doubt that it is a true native. It has been found on high altitudes in Colorado, where it could scarcely have been introduced.

—Remains of lake dwellings have been discovered by a peat bog near Milan, and in a street in Milan, excavations for a house have brought to light what are believed to be vestiges of the old Roman theatre.

EDUCATIONAL.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,
GREENSBORO, ALA.

Second term opens February 20, 1882. The University is out of debt and has a full faculty.

For information address,
F. M. PETERSON,
Secretary of the Faculty.

WOODVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY,
Woodville, Wilkinson Co., Miss.
INVITES PATRONAGE.

Buildings are good and comfortable grounds beautiful and ample; location healthful; Faculty full and efficient. Charges for board and tuition, per ba's academic year, $75 to $85.

East Mississippi Female College.
MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.
REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.

One of the most accessible and prosperous schools in the South. Its facilities, course of study, system and faculty are superior. It is a growing and popular Institution and is the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"It has developed into great usefulness, and has established itself in the hearts and confidence of the people."—Mississippi Conference.

"The college is finely located to command a large patronage, and its management has been such as to secure the confidence of the people. It is an institution that deserves the liberal support and patronage of the Methodists of Mississippi."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Send for catalogue and examine terms.

Whitworth Female College,
BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.

Will re-open September 21, 1881. Number of pupils last term, 231. Number of teachers 18. Board per half academic year, $85; Tuition from $15 to $25; Incidental Fees from $1 to $4.

The languages, ancient and modern, mathematics, the sciences, music, drawing and painting thoroughly taught.

The continued success of this school is the best indorsement. There has not been a death in the college for years past. Send for a catalogue.

H. F. JOHNSON, A. M., D. D.,
President.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.
NASHVILLE, TENN.
Session 1881-82.

THE Academic, Biblical and Law Departments open September 1. The Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Departments open October 1.

The fees are as follows: Academic Department, $65; Biblical $15; Law, $100; Medical, $65; Dental, $90; Pharmaceutical, $65.

Ten scholarships, worth $100 each, were awarded by competitive examination at the close of the last session. Four Graduate Fellowships, worth $300 each, and two Post-graduate Fellowships, worth $500, each, were likewise conferred.

The various Chairs of the University are filled by forty Professors and Instructors. Six hundred and thirty-two students, from twenty-one States, were matriculated last year.

For the ANNUAL REGISTER, or further information, address J. M. Leech, Secretary of the Faculty; or LANDON C. GARLAND, Chancellor.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,
ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kuerninger, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Sciences and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

The Fall Session will begin September 15, 1881.

Send for catalogue to
REV. E. E. WILEY, D. D., President.

Millwood Female Institute,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.
Founded 1866. Chartered 1870.

This school opens the first Monday of September 1881, with efficient accomplished teachers in every department.

Expenses, per session of five months, including Tuition, Board and Washing, $75.

Music on Piano or Guitar, with use of instrument and class singing, $25.

For further particulars send for catalogue.

MISS McCALMONT, Principal.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,
AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin October 5, 1881.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to
W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Principal,
D. B. MAGRUDER, A. M., Assistant.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Session 1880-81, had 133 students, six professors and teachers and three A.B. graduates. The entire expenses for board and tuition for scholastic year need not exceed $144; in Preparatory department, not $161; in College classes. Next session begins September 5, 1881. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,
HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

The thirty-second year begins August 31. A more healthy location can not be found. The College was never in more prosperous condition. A full Faculty of thorough teachers, splendid buildings and a complete outfit for all departments, literary, music, languages and Art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Prices reduced to suit the times. Special inducements offered. For terms and new catalogue address

REV. A. H. JONES, A. M., President.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.
FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Next session opens September 21, 1881. The services of experienced and successful teachers secured. Buildings undergoing necessary repairs. Every room being thoroughly renovated, and newly and handsomely furnished. No pains will be spared to give entire satisfaction. For further information address,

Rev. T. C. BRADFORD, President.
Port Gibson, Miss.

READYVILLA SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

Will open on the first Monday in October. For terms and circulars, address,

MRS. MARY W. REED,
Principal.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE
Female College,
TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

The next session of this school will open on Monday, September 19, 1881. We ask attention to the following points:

I. Our curriculum embraces a good course of study which we teach thoroughly.

II. We are prepared to satisfy the most cultivated taste in the departments of Music and Art.

III. We employ the best teaching talent within the range of our knowledge.

IV. We keep a good table in the College Boarding Department.

V. This school has a health record which is unsurpassed.

VI. Our charges are as moderate as they can be made without offering the best results in culture.

For full information, send for catalogue.

JOHN MASSEY, President.
Tuskegee, Ala.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,
EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded in 1849, offers superior advantages and Healthy Location.

The MALE DEPARTMENT is located in a quiet farming community ... miles from Sweetwater East Tenn., Va. and Ga. R. R.

The FEMALE DEPARTMENT is located in the model town of Sweetwater, in a lovely section. Experienced teachers, good work and low charges in both departments. Patronage merited.

For particulars address,

REV. J. H. BRUNNER, D. D.,
Hiwassee College, Tenn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

In the South-west is now in stock and ready to all orders large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at the notice, and prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application. Also a general line of

School Supplies,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for Sunday-schools, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. O. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,
DEALERS IN
BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,
AND AGENTS FOR THE
Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,
AND
Shultz Belting Company,
18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

NEW GOODS.
GREAT REDUCTION IN
CARPETS,
Tapestry Brussels,
Seventy Cents a yard up to $1 05.
Wiltons, Axminsters, Velvets, Moquettes, Brussels, Ingrains, Three Plys, Window Shades, Lace Curtains, Cocoa, Napier and China Matting, Turkey Rugs, Crumb Cloths, Rugs and Mats in great variety.

A. RHOMSEAU'S SON,
37 Chartres St.

Call and see for yourself.

S. K. RUSS,
—WITH—
Ayers, Richard & Co.,
WHOLESALE GROCERS
—AND—
COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
74, 76 Magazine, 88, 90, 92 Poydras St.
NEW ORLEANS.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box, 598, New York.

Christian Advocate.

The true Propaganda.

A correspondent writing to this paper over the signature of "A. C. C.," says:

"The language of the Master, 'Go teach all nations,' is perspicuous, unambiguous, and contemplates immediate, persistent and continued action until final and glorious consummation.'

"We respectfully submit, as regards this assertion, if "A. C. C." be correct, the disciples deliberately and consistently disregarded the divine injunction. But, as we have previously remarked, we prefer to believe that the disciples were in a position to know what the Master wished them to do, and, rather than think they had disobeyed him, we are forced to conclude that "A. C. C." doesn't know as much about it as he imagines he does. One thing is very certain, and that is a fact as to which there can be no controversy: if the above command was really given as "A. C. C." declares— which we deny—it has most conspicuously failed of fulfillment. Nearly nineteen hundred years have passed since that alleged command issued; untold myriads of missionaries have gone forth; countless millions of money have been spent; innumerable cruel wars have been waged and oceans of human blood spilled; and yet, out of the total population of the world, not one-fifth are professing Christians to-day! The worshippers of Buddha outnumber the followers of Christ by more than 100,000, while the religion of Mahomet has for years past been making tremendous strides, gaining converts at the rate of 100 where Christianity gained one, or numbering its accessions in Africa alone at 50,000,000 of souls.

If experience be worth anything at all, these facts prove that we are simply squandering life and treasure in vain endeavor. They prove that commerce is the true and only vehicle whereby to convey the religion of the world to the world. It is by the example of our civilization, our science, our peaceful arts, that we can pave the way for the successful introduction of our theology. As commerce spreads and establishes its footing, civilization and Christianity will keep pace, and this will follow by natural processes, and cannot be forced or hastened by missionary enterprise. It is history. It is fact. Surely after nineteen hundred years of experience, we might afford to recognize the truth.

The above article, on the "True Method of Propagating Christianity," we copy from last Tuesday's Times-Democrat. If the subject is not handled with the ability which is found in other editorials that appear in that journal, that is due, no doubt, to the fact that the subject was not as carefully studied. Common readers might easily be mistaken on this point. In the interest of those of our readers who might be influenced by its opinions, we beg therefore to call attention to two serious mistakes which the paper maintains, The one is its premises, and the other its conclusions.

We admit that the story of Christianity sounds incredible. That a dozen men of a despised race—men without prestige, learning or influence—should have impressed their convictions on the world, is more than any dozen philosophers or kings could have done or would have ventured to attempt. But although we do not possess the detailed account of the labors of all of them, we find the traces of these labors everywhere—even in the most unlikely places—even in the palace of Nero himself.

When we reflect that the half of the first century had passed away before the aggressive movement of Christianity upon the world was fully developed, the story of its progress is more strange that any dream of romance. But on this point, we have the unanswerable testimony of the heathen themselves. Before that century closed, Tacitus speaks of the Christians in Rome as "a vast multitude." Pliny, Governor of Pontus and Bithinia, half a century later, is perplexed by the magnitude of the questions which he must deal with, as a heathen governor, in dealing with Christianity, and writes to the Emperor for directions. He speaks of Christianity as "a contagion that has attacked cities, villages and the open country," and states that the heathen temples had been "almost forsaken." A little later Justin declares that "there is no nation—greek, Barbarian or Asiatic, or any other amongst whom prayers and thanks-givings are not offered to the Father and Creator in the name of the crucified Jesus."

Tertullian in the begining of the next century (A. D. 200), addresses the Roman governors as follows: "We are but as of yesterday, and we have filled your cities, towns and villages; the Camp, the Senate and the forum."

It would be easy to multiply testimony of this kind, from the copious citations of Giesler and others. Even Gibbon feels compelled to admit that Christianity continued to Iberia, Ethiopia, Caledonia, and beyond the Euphrates. Missionaries found their way to China. The invasion of the Goths, Huns, and Vandals, brought into contact with it, the Scandinavians, and the roving tribes of northern Asia. To use Gibbon's own language, "it obtained a victory over the established religions of the earth," "it derived new vigor from opposition, and finally erected the triumphant banner of the Cross on the ruins of the capitol. Nor was the influence of Christianity confined to the period or the limits of the Roman Empire. After a revolution of thirteen or fourteen centuries, that religion is still professed by the nations of Europe, the most distinguished portion of human kind in art, in learning, as well as arms."

Scarcely a century of the time of Tertullian (A. D. 312), Christianity, in the conversion of Constantine took possession of the sceptre of the world.

The Roman empire had represented the might and majesty of heathenism. It issued its edicts to the world, under the badge of heathenism. Its traditions, history, laws, philosophy, manners, literature art, and every part of its proud record were saturated with heathenism.

How grand and beautiful Christianity must have seemed, when for his sake the successors of Tiberius and Caligula could resolutely renounce their part in that vast inheritance of achievement and renown! But they did renounce the heathenism of their ancestors, and all their interest in it, and proclaimed Christianity the religion of the State.

The effect of the conversion of the Emperor became apparent at once. Liberty of conscience was declared. The missionaries of Christianity were no longer imprisoned, mutilated or killed. They were protected by Roman law. Laws were enacted by and for the maintenance and protection of Christians. Christianity was recognized throughout the world as the religion of the empire; and thus the empire itself, which ruled the world, became a preacher of Christianity to the world. Any one who wishes to see how largely the laws of the empire were every where made to announce and enforce the claims of Christianity, need only turn over the "Corpus Juris Civilis," a work with which every man of liberal education is supposed to be acquainted. Thus the Roman empire itself bears testimony on this subject. The laws enacted by the masters of the world, fully confirm the sentiments of the historians, that Christianity was as a matter of fact, and in an incredibly short time proclaimed to the world. The fact is, that Roman law, as embodied in the Institutes of Justinian, was proclaimed to the world in the name of Jesus Christ.

The argument, that "because relatively a large proportion of mankind was not converted, the Gospel could not have been preached throughout the world," will not bear examination. A large proportion of our citizens—relatively—do not profess to have been converted to Christianity, as witness our churches on the Sabbath. But does this prove that Christianity has never been preached throughout the city of New Orleans? Of course it does not prove anything of the kind, and it cannot prove more in the one case than it does in the other.

Such are the facts. Every scholar knows that we have only quoted a small portion of the evidence of them, which is accessible. They serve to show that the Times-Democrat is mistaken on both points. In the face of those facts, we cannot think that any candid man will deny that Christianity has been, in a genuine sense, preached throughout the world. And any one who takes a look at these facts, will not be likely to infer that Christianity owed its triumphs to Commerce.

It addressed itself to the philosopher, the prince, and the slave, and claimed possession of all hearts, by right of eminent domain; proving that in Christ Jesus there is neither Greek nor Jew, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free. And such has its prerogative always been. Such it is to-day. It owes nothing to civilization. On the contrary, it is the parent of civilization in its purest forms. Even intelligent Hindoos —as a distinguished Brahmin tells us—regard Christianity as the great civilizing power of the world."

We cannot therefore accept the testimony of our contemporary in regard to Christianity; and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we emphatically deny that it is any better informed on the subject of Mohammedanism.

It is only just however, to say that the theory it advocates, has been entertained in former years by some intelligent Christians. This argument was used against the establishment of the Foreign Missionary Society in England; but the wonderful success of Foreign Missions in modern times, has effectively answered the argument. The common sentiment of Christians now, is, that the grand success of Foreign Missions in preaching the Gospel throughout the world, is the peculiar glory of the age in which we live.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

Wolves in France.

One of the few remaining institutions of the ancien regime is, in all probability, about to disappear from the soil of France. Ever since the establishment of the Republic there have been increasing complaints of the inefficiency with which the louveteers discharge their nominal duty of extirpating the wolves, and the immense extension of private property has made their interference with the rights of individuals seem unconstitutional and intolerable. A commission appointed by the Chamber to inquire into the whole question has just presented its report, which either incorporates or supercedes reports presented by previous commissions, and we may expect to see a law brought in in accordance with the recommendations it has laid down. The report calculates the number of wolves actually contained within the French frontiers at five thousand, and the amount of damage inflicted by them on the farming class at no less than forty or fifty millions of francs per annum. These numbers are not, of course, to be compared to those of the middle ages, or even to those of a century ago. In 1798 no less than 6,487 wolves were killed in a twelve-month, and a memorial of one Arnould du Buisson, presented in 1779, estimates the number of sheep annually devoured by wolves at a million at least, without reckoning the cows, horses, mules, asses, and goats which they had likewise disposed of. It must be remembered, however, that at present the wolves are in the main concentrated in a few districts, especially in Lorraine, Dauphine and the Pyrenees, so that the mischief done by them is not spread over the whole of France. Their ravages in both French and German Lorraine were very serious in the past severe winter, and the German authorities were obliged to lay a heavy price on their heads in order to stamp the evil. The principles of those louves is, indeed, the obvious one for dealing with the matter. It and us of the wolves of England; it was adopted by the revolutionary government in 1793 (though its efficiency was considerably marred by the fact that the high sums promised were also realized, assignats), and it will doubtless clear them out of France in the course of a generation.—Saturday Review

Self-Conceit. Others we and hero-ship we hear much. But there is a spiritual heroism, little known, that of the man who resolves to conquer himself—hardest of all conquests. Impatience, envy, rage, selfishness, eager for success or sullen at defeat, passions of the flesh and passions of the spirit—these are his enemies. In the silent depths of the heart he fights his battle. What he does and what he suffers no man knoweth; God only knows. Not one bloody day does he fight—at Waterloo or Yorktown, and win fame forever; but all through his life does he wage the war and win no fame. Not to lift himself to honor, but to forget himself, to still the throbs of self-conscious disquiet and all selfish passion—this is his endeavor. In the midnight and in the morning, in the throng and in the silent hour, ever is it his holy care and prayer to keep all right within him, to keep all just and true, to keep all pure. Loneliness and neglect and sorrow may be upon his path, even as they were upon the path of Christ.—Orville Dewey.

—The identical table used by Thomas Jefferson for ten service at Monticello is in the possession of W. N. Ruffin, of Danville, Va., one of his lineal descendants. The table is neatly made of hard oak, about six feet long and four feet wide, with two small folding leaves. Jefferson presented it as a wedding gift to Thomas Jefferson Randolph, a grandson, who, in turn left it to his daughter, Mary Anne Randolph, upon her marriage to R. G. Ruffin, who afterward gave it to her son, W. N. Ruffin.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. S. PFISTER,

Millinery and Dressmaking,

539 Magazine Street,

Bet. St. Mary and Felicity. NEW ORLEANS.

Bonnets and Hats Cleaned, Dyed and Altered.

E. E. LELAND,

No. 185 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

IMPORTED

MILLINERY

French Flowers and Feathers,

ORNAMENTS

Fringes and Tassels, Dress Trimmings, Novelties in Buttons, Ribbons, Corsets, Novelties in Ladies' Neckwear, Veilings and Crapes, Velvets, Lace Goods, Etc., Etc., Etc.

Special attention paid to Country Orders.

CRESCENT INSURANCE COMPANY,

Incorporated as a Mutual Company in 1849—Reorganized as a Stock Company in 1859.

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - $100,000.

Has paid nearly NINE MILLIONS, for losses Since 1849.

Annual and Term Policies issued on Desirable Fire Business.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.
CHAS. H. DOLSEN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. PICE.....Secretary.

TRUSTEES.

Sam'l H. Kennedy,	Paul E. Mortimer,
Victor Meyer,	Joseph Bowling,
W. H. Gerger,	S. Hirschfield,
George W. Sentell,	Ed. J. Gay,
Alf. Moulton,	Edwd Sidle
Charles Newman,	J. J. Leiss
P. Marinoni	Louis Prados,
Lucien Delery,	W. W. Swain,
Charles H. Dolsen,	Harry L. Flash,
Reuben G. Bush,	John Dauphin,
John Calder,	A. H. Steward,
S. S. Coulon,	E. H. Adams,
W. A. Phelps,	Sigmund Katz,
M. Gillis,	N. D. Wallace,
	W. R. Lyman.

See our Agents throughout Louisiana Texas, Mississippi and Arkansas.

Factors' and Traders'

INSURANCE COMPANY,

49 CARONDELET STREET,

Paid Up Capital.....$1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President.
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President.
THOS. E. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

TRUSTEES.

John I. Noble,	John Chaffe,
Richard Milliken,	Sam'l Friedlaender,
R. M. Walmsley,	A. H. May
I. Lyle Lyon,	Samuel B. Boyd,
Wm. J. Behan,	B. F. Eshleman,
Chas. Chaffe,	L. C. Jurey,
Wm. Hartwell,	C. J. Leeds
A. T. Janin,	A. M. Bickham,
Henry Abraham,	Louis Bush,
A. Brindle,	G. W. Sentell,
Wm. Cunningham,	John I. Adams,
R. T. Buckner,	Wm. A. Gwyn,
Chas. E. Bloch.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S

MAMMOTH

QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 164 pieces, for $12

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF

CROCKERY

Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods

OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS

JOHN CAUCHE,

AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,

109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,

Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

H-O-W T-O P-A-I-N-T.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures.

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations wherever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

TRADE MARK. QUALITY. PURITY. QUANTITY. REGIST'D. MARCH 1869.

A TRUE TONIC.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS are a certain cure for all diseases requiring a complete tonic; especially Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Intermittent Fevers, Want of Appetite, Loss of Strength, Lack of Energy, etc. Enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. Acts like a charm on the digestive organs, removing all dyspeptic symptoms, such as tasting the food, Belching, Heat in the Stomach, Heartburn, etc. The only Iron Preparation that will not Blacken the teeth or headache. Sold by all Druggists.

BROWN CHEMICAL CO.
Baltimore, Md.

CAUTION.—Be careful in purchasing to see that the Trade Mark and wrapper are as above.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.

SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Wt with yoke & frame.	Cost of Bell & Hang'g.
No 6,	25 in.....230 lbs.....	$ 25 00
No. 6,	27 in.....340 lbs.....	38 00
No. 7,	30 in.....490 lbs.....	50 00
No. 8,	34 in.....730 lbs.....	75 00
No. 9,	38 in.....925 lbs.....	130 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

H. D. McCOWN,

DEALER IN FINE

CLOTHING,

SHIRTS

AND

Mens' Furnishing Goods,

Cor. Common and St. Charles Sts.,

NEW ORLEANS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S MANUAL

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, JR.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages--Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was in produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price: In Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

NEW HOME!

SEWING MACHINE

Is More Perfect, Costlier to Make, More Durable, and made of Finer Material than any other Machine, and

SOLD FOR LESS MONEY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: If you do not wish to buy the New Home, I advise you to wait until other machine companies make a machine equal to it.

HEADQUARTERS, 170 CANAL ST.,

GUSTAV SEEGER,

Sole Agent.

$66 a week to your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ORDERS

FOR

Fresh, First-Class Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Etc.,

SENT TO

E. H. ADAMS & BROTHER,

WILL RECEIVE THE

PROMPTEST AND MOST CAREFUL ATTENTION,

AS THEY DO NOT DEAL IN

"Damaged Goods," "Auction Goods," or "Job Lots,"

THEIR PATRONS ARE SURE TO GET GOOD VALUE.

No. 594 Magazine Street, New Orleans.

D. H. HOLMES,

155 Canal Street, - - - - 15 Bourbon Street

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in

Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines, in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.

HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.

D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,

(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hayes.)

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,

Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to 025
6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department in store.

U. S. BONDS.

Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.
Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

58 CAMP STREET.

JAMES COBBS,

Attorney at Law,

48 ST. FRANCIS STREET,

MOBILE ALA.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,

112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

I have decided to distribute the remainder of

My Stock of Pictures

among my customers, rather than sacrifice them. Any person buying $5 and upwards of other goods, will be entitled to select from a class of Pictures ranging in price according to the size of bill purchased. No additional price will be put upon the goods, as this is entirely a bonus to induce sales during the dull summer months.

My stock is comprised in part of Carpets, Oil Cloths, Upholstery Goods, Mattings, Wall Paper, Window Shades, Curtains, Curtain Goods, Wire Screens, Frames, Mouldings and Mirrors.

E. HEATH,

97 and 99 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS

Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The Shortest and Quickest Route to all Eastern Cities.

THROUGH WITHOUT CHANGE TO Nashville, Louisville, Lynchburg, Washington, Cincinnati, Columbus, O., and St. Louis.

ENTIRE TRAINS THROUGH FROM NEW ORLEANS TO LOUISVILLE.

	Leave.	Arrive.
Express	7.02 A. M.	10.02 P. M.
Coast Accommodation	3.45 P. M.	9.12 A. M.
Fast Mail	5.00 P. M.	10.02 A. M.

ONLY ONE CHANGE OF CARS TO NORTHERN AND EASTERN CITIES.

Ticket office corner Charles and Common sts, where Sleeping Car accommodations can be secured

C. P. ATMORE,
General Passenger Agent.
J. H. SMITH,
Ticket Agent.
J. T. HALLEN,
Superintendent.

FURNITURE.

W. G. TEBAULT

47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. G. TEBAULT,

47 Royal Street,

New Orleans.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!

Personal experiences in the

UNITED STATES and CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES.

By J. B. HOOD,

Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army.

Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund, by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.

Price in cloth binding, $3; in leather, $3 50. Mailed, post paid, on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street.

Liverpool and London and Globe

INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT.

Office, Cor. Carondelet and Gravier Streets.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there will be added the unlimited liability of the Corporators.

STATEMENT OF THE COMPANY.

JANUARY 1, 1881.

Gross fire assets	$12 167,858 41
Fire liabilities, including capital and reinsurance fund	5,276,778 51
Net surplus	$ 6,891,080 90

STATEMENT OF THE U. S. BRANCH.

JULY 1, 1881.

Assets	$4,652,248 18
Liabilities	2,506,606 82
Surplus	$ 2,145,641 36

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on the very footing of the 14 Companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

J. FISCHBODER, Esq., Chairman of L. Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY PITCHER, Esq., of Nugent & Hillandis.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson & Sanderson.

HENRY V. OGDEN,
Resident Secretary.

JULES F. ROUX, Assistant Resident Secretary.
CLARENCE F. LOW, Deputy Ass't Resident Secty.

New Orleans, October 20, 1881. novsom

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upwards
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upwards.
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upwards.
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upwards

All guaranteed.

A. B. GEISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal sts.

New Orleans Pacific Railroad.

TRAINS WEST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
New Orleans, leave		10 A. M.
Algiers	7.00 A. M.	8.30
Gretna	7.10	8.40
Company Canal	7.30	9.00
St. Charles	10.56	9.31
St. John	11.15	12.49
Vacherie	1.00 P. M.	10.5
St. James	1.15	10.6
Donaldsonville	2.50	11.4
Bayou Goula	4.15	12.21 P. M.
Plaquemine	5.15	12.36
West Baton Rouge, arrive	5.30	1

TRAINS EAST.

	Freight and Accommodation.	Mail and Express.
West Baton Rouge, leave	6 A. M.	6 P. M.
Plaquemine	6.15	11
Bayou Goula	6.30	11
Donaldsonville	10.11	1.21
St. James	12.40 P. M.	1.50
Vacherie	1.5 P. M.	1.
St. John	2.0	1.
St. Charles	3.15	4.1
Company Canal	6.00	7.11
Gretna	6.20	7.38
Algiers	6.45	8.00
New Orleans, arrive		8.30

Express and information address.

H. S. MORSE, Superintendent. M. [illegible] VAN, G. P. and T. Agt.

New Orleans, October 1, 1881.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.

By A. J. COOK,

Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.

THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being now it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SULLIVAN & BULGER,

97 CAMP STREET.

Plumbers and Gas Fitters,

DEALERS IN

Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all Kinds, Iron, Lead and Terracotta Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges, also, different kinds of Gas Machines for country use.

All Orders Promptly Attended to.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. 1 Jones & Co Nassau N Y.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, Feb. 13, 1882.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Sat.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	8¾	8¾
Ordinary	9⅞	9⅞
Good ordinary	10⅜	10⅜
Low middling	11	11⅛
Middling	11⅝	11⅝
Good middling	11¾	11⅞
Middling fair	12	12⅛
Sales to-day	1,500 bales.
Receipts since our last	7,023 bales.
Receipts previously	1,129,759 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	— @	6⅜
Fully fair	— —	7⅛
Prime	— —	7⅝
Choice	— —	7⅞
Yellow clarified	— —	8¼
White clarified	— —	9
Powdered	— —	— —
Crushed	— —	— —
Molasses, in bbls., ₱ gallon:
Common	38	41
Fair	48	50
Prime	— —	— —
Choice	— —	— —
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	4¾	5
Fair	5¾	6
Prime	6¾	6¾
Choice	6¾	7¼

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	13	18
New York	— —	— —
Coffee, ₱ lb.
Rio, ordinary	—	8½
Rio, fair	— —	9¾
Rio, prime	— —	10¾
Cheese, ₱ lb
Western factory	— —	— —
English dairy	— —	9½
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands	—	14¾
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.
Choice K. D.	4 65	4 75
Flour, ₱ bbl.
Superfine	— —	— —
XX	5 00	5 25
XXX	5 50	5 75
Choice X	6 00	6 25
Choice fam	— —	— —
Choice fam	— —	— —
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1 in bbls	5 25	5 00
Half barrels	4 50	5 00
Kits	77	82
Mackerel, No. 2 in bbls	7 40	8 00
Half bbls	4 00	4 50
Kits	70	77
Mackerel, No. 3 in bbls	7 10	7 75
Half bbls	3 85	4 10
Kits	64	73
Codfish, ₱ lb	— —	— —
Herring, ₱ box	— —	— —
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Coal, in cases	— —	— —
Coal, in bbls	— —	— —
Linseed, raw	— —	— —
Linseed, boiled	65	67
Cotton seed	67	70
Lard	85	44
Lard	80	90
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia	— —	2 25
Olive	— —	2 70
Palm	— —	— —
Castile	— —	2 60
Soda, ₱ lb	— —	— —
Starch, ₱ lb	— —	3¼
Salt, ₱ sack
Coarse	75	85
Fine	95	1 20

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	— —	— —
White	— —	— —
Mixed	— —	80
	— —	76
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	54	65
Red rust-proof	65	70
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs.:
Choice	— —	1 45
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	20 00	21 00
Choice	23 00	24 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed	— —	— —
Clay	1 75	2 00

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	11	12
Shoulders	— —	7¾
Sides, clear rib	— —	10¾
Sides, clear	— —	11
Hams, sugar-cured	12	13
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl.	18 75	19 25
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.:
Clear rib sides	— —	10
Clear sides	— —	10¼
Shoulders	6¾	7
Lard, ₱ lb.:
Choice, in kegs	— —	12¾
Choice, in cases	— —	13¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl.:
Irish	3 25	4 00
Sweet	—	2 00
Onions, ₱ bbl	2 75	3 00
Apples, ₱ bbl.	5 00	6 00
Cabbages, ₱ lb	— —	— —
Sour Krout, ₱ bbl	— —	8 00

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
India	— —	— —
Jute	— —	— —
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	— —	15
Ties, ₱ bundle:
50 ties and buckles	—	1 50

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen
Grown chickens	— —	50
Young do	2 00	2 50
Ducks	2 00	2 50
Geese	4 00	4 50
Turkeys	10 00	12 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen:
Western	20	22
Southern	22	25
Honey.
Strained, ₱ gallon	— —	— —
Comb, ₱ lb	— —	— —
Pecans, ₱ lb.:
Louisiana	9	10
Texas	— —	— —
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	— —	— —
Foreign, ₱ box	1 90	2 50
Wool, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	20	22
Texas	— —	— —
Feathers, ₱ lb
Geese	— —	— —
Hides, ₱ lb.:
Country green	5	7
Dry salted	— —	10
Dry flint	— —	12
Ox Horns, each	— —	6
Tallow, ₱ lb	6¾	7
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton:
In sacks	— —	— —
Meal	23 50	24 00
Oil cake	25 00	26 00
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	2 50	2 75
Molasses barrels	— —	1 55
Half barrels	— —	1 05
Kegs	— —	70
Oak Staves, per 1200:
Kegs	— —	60 00
Barrels	70 00	75 00
Extra claret	100 00	105 00
Extra hogshead	140 00	145 00
Extra pipes	190 00	195 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs	— —	6
Medium	— —	7¾
Good to fine	— —	— —
Low leaf	— —	8
Medium	— —	9½
Good	— —	10
Fine	— —	12½
Selections	— —	— —

NATURE'S BEST ASSISTANT.

No matter what your ailment is, Brown's Iron Bitters will certainly do you good by assisting nature in strengthening every part of the body. This remedy is soothing and refreshing, and cannot possibly do the most delicate invalid any injury.

—The dispersed religious orders in France are beginning to show their despair of a change by selling their empty establishments. The Italian Barnabite Monastery in Paris has been demolished, and the Jesuits' College is advertised for sale.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

CHATTANOOGA, Feb. 7.—Mormon missionaries are hard at work in Union county, East Tennessee, and have secured quite a number of converts, notably some negroes. The community is wrought up against them and there are threats of lynching them if they do not leave.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—The Telegram says: Information was received in this city to-day, in a private letter dated January 30th, addressed to a gentleman here, that about half the population of Port-au-Prince, Hayti, is suffering from yellow fever.

A son of the United States Minister was dangerously ill with fever, and it was spreading throughout the island. Port-au-Prince is rigidly quarantined, and regular steamers can not enter the harbor.

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 8.—The sixty-fourth annual session of the Grand Lodge of Masons of Mississippi convened to day. About two hundred and fifty delegates were in attendance. John F. MacCormick is Grand Master. Six Grand Masters were present. A Grand Lodge charity fund is to be created by a per capita assessment of ten cents on each Mason in the State, the membership being about ten thousand. The Grand Chapter adjourned yesterday. A committee was appointed to consider the propriety of rescinding the action heretofore taken consolidating the Chapters and Councils, and which has been styled the Mississippi plan, the committee to report next year.

JACKSON, Feb. 8.—The vote whereby the Senate voted to adjourn over from Thursday to Monday was reconsidered. Senators Dalton and Jefford were added to the committee on the Perkins-Wadsell case.

The following bills were indefinitely postponed: An act to prevent trespass on chartered or secured ferry franchises; an act making chancery clerks ex-officio commissioners.

Bills passed: An act to authorize Boards of Supervisors to have their proceedings published; an act to change the time of holding the Circuit Court in the Fourth Judicial District; to amend section 80 of the Revised Code; to incorporate the Widows and Orphans' Protection Association; to fix the time of holding chancery courts in this chancery district.

Bills referred: An act to increase the pay of jurors.

In the House the following bills passed: To incorporate the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company; to amend the section incorporating the Vicksburg Bank; and the State Deposit Bank, of Vicksburg; to authorize boards of supervisors to exchange school lands for other lands; an act supplemental to the act incorporating the Capital Land and Building Company; an act making appropriations for the Asylum for the Blind. An act fixing punishment of persons convicted of capital offenses failed to pass its third reading. The prohibition bill passed the House by a vote of 54 to 51; the bill now goes to the Senate, and as that body has already prepared rules on the same subject, there will be clashing, and the whole matter must finally revert to a committee of conference.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 9.—The Methodist Book Committee to-day decided to abandon the Book Concern at Atlanta, on account of losses incurred in its maintenance.

STARKVILLE, Miss., Feb. 10.—The committee appointed by the joint houses of the Legislature to visit the Agricultural and Mechanical College of this State and inquire into the management of the same, accompanied by several ladies and distinguished gentlemen from different portions of the State, arrived at the college to-day, and after making careful inquiry as to the management of the same appeared to be well pleased with the manner in which Gen. S. D. Lee, the President, was conducting the institution. The committee leaves for the capital this morning.

VICKSBURG, Feb. 10.—The officers of the City of Vicksburg report that the Stockner levee had caved in above Lake Providence when the Vicksburg had passed. The inhabitants had succeeded in constructing a run around the break, which, it was thought, would protect the back lands.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 10.—At a meeting of the Methodist book committee yesterday, Messrs. Walden and Stowe, of this city, were empowered to make arrangements at Atlanta, for the sale of the books there. It was decided to discontinue the Methodist Advocate at Atlanta, if its income and subsidy failed in any one quarter to pay expenses. The sum of $78,000 was appropriated for the salary of Bishops this year.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—The total visible supply of cotton for the world is 3,151,599, of which 2,536,983 is American, against 2,839,111, and 2,419,000 respectively last year.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—The bulls threw cotton overboard and broke the market thirty points, at which shorts covered freely. Louisiana consols are being sold short in this market. Most Southern securities are hurt by Tennessee's duplicity. A Paris cable reports failures all over France and predicts unsettled markets for sixty days. Cotton was assisted in the decline here and at Liverpool by a false rumor that the failure of a prominent bull house was impending. The market closed feverishly steady. Coffee is firm on small reports of reduced stock at Rio. Texas Pacific bonds declined four per cent.

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—An immense tract of land set aside by the State of Texas to pay for the erection of a new state-house, has been transferred by the State during the past two days to Abner Taylor, Hon. C. B. Farwell and John V. Farwell, of Chicago, and A. C. Babcock, of Canton, Ill., who will furnish the necessary funds for erecting the building. This domain is larger than the State of Connecticut, and five times larger than Rhode Island. It is in the northwest corner of the State, and the survey extends south 197 miles, with an average width of 27 miles. Two railways are already projected through this section of the State. The transfer of these lands is probably the largest sale ever made to private parties, and the purchasers are the largest land owners in the world.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Representative Gibson, of Louisiana, introduced a bill in the House appropriating $100,000 for a public building at Morgan City, La., and Representative Darrel, a bill appropriating $10,000 for the establishment of a Marine Hospital at Morgan City, La. Representative Ellis, of Louisiana, introduced a bill directing the Secretary of War to cause a survey to be made for a ship canal from a point on the Mississippi River, near Carrelton, to connect with Lake Pontchartrain—the canal to be not less than four hundred feet wide and thirty feet deep.

WATERPROOF, La., via Rodney, Miss., Feb. 13.—Kempt levee has broken. The crevasse is three hundred feet wide and two to four feet deep. This is the largest levee in the State, and is situated in the lower end of Tensas parish. It broke on Saturday night.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 7.—Until the settlement of the troubles in Jalisco by the Federal Senate, the Chief Justice will act as Governor, to the exclusion of both. A legislative decree will be published to-morrow calling an extra session of Congress to consider this, the Guatemala matter and treaty question.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—Parliament reassembled to-day. The House of Commons was well attended, but sparse attendance in the House of Lords. Mr. Bradlaugh was under the gallery of the House of Commons. The Queen's speech was read by the Lord High Chancellor, Lord Selborne. In the House of Commons, after a new member had been sworn in, Bradlaugh advanced to take the oath. Sir Stafford Northcote moved that he be not allowed to swear. Bradlaugh, at the request of the Speaker, withdrew, asking a hearing before the question is decided.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—Three hundred Jewish refugees from Russia will sail from Liverpool on Saturday, in the steamship Illinois. The pastoral of the chief Rabbi here points out ten of thousands of Jews are likely to flee from Russia, and urges his co-religionists to help them to migrate to distant and happier lands. He says enormous sums will be required for that purpose.

PARIS, Feb. 10.—The first trial of strength in the Senate, since the recent election of Senators, resulted in the rejection of the bill against domiciliary visits and expulsions from monastories by a vote of 157 to 101, showing that Jules Simon's party no longer have the casting vote on such questions.

The latest estimate of the population of the globe has just been issued by Behm and Wagner's Bevolkerung der erde. It reports Europe as now having a population of 315,929,000 inhabitants; Asia, 834,707,000; Africa, 205,679,000; America, 95,405,000; Australia and Polynesia, 431,000; the Polar regions, 82,000; giving a total of 1,455,923,000, being an increase of 16,778,000, according to the latest known censuses. At the end of 1877 Germany had a population of 43,943,000; Austria and Hungary, (1879,) of 38,000,000; France, (1876,) of 36,900,000; Turkey in Europe, of 8,860,000; Russia, of 87,000,000. In Asia, China possesses 434,000,000 inhabitants; Hong Kong, 130,144; Japan, 34,300,000, according to the census of 1878. The British possessions in India number 240,200,000 people, (an estimate made before the census of this year;) the French possessions, 2,000,000; Cochin China, 1,000,000; the East Indian Islands, 34,800,000; the Islands of the South Sea, 878,000. The area of Africa is estimated at 29,383,000 square kilometers, divided as follows; forests and cultivated land, 6,300,000; savannahs, 6,235,000; steppes, 4,200,000; deserts, 10,600,000. The inhabitants of British North America number 3,800,000; of the United States, 50,000,000; of Mexico, 9,485,000; and of Brazil, 11,100,000. The Polar regions extend round the Arctic circle with an area of 3,859,000 square kilometers, and the Antartic regions about 600,000. The population of the former is small, with the exception of Iceland, which has 72,000, and Greenland, 10,000.

THE ARCTIC.—The following is furnished by the New York Herald.

PARIS, Feb. 8.—The following dispatch from Lieut. Danenhauer, dated Irkoutsk, February 4, has just been received here:

"De Long's party is between Stations Bulour (Bolinoi) and Systerouck (Ust Olonsk,) in a narrow wilderness, eighty miles long, devoid of habitation and game. Jerome J. Collins volunteered to stand by the dying seaman, Hans Brickson, and let the others of the De Long party push south. The new search builds huts and goes over every inch of the region, which is plowed by heavy drift ice every spring. We visited Nordenskjold's winter quarters, and found that he was safe, before we entered the ice near Herald Island. The general health of the crew during the twenty-one months' drift was excellent; no scurvy appeared. We used distilled water and bear and seal meat twice a week. No rum was served out. We took plenty of exercise. Everybody hunted. Game was scarce. We got about thirty bears, 250 seals and six walruses. No fish or whales were seen.

"All possible observations were made during the drift, the result showing a northwest course. The ship was keeled over and heavily pressed by ice most of the time. The mental strain was heavy on some of the ships company. The result of the drift for the first five months were 40 miles. There was a cycloidal movement of the ice. The drift, during the last six months, was very rapid. Soundings were pretty even; there were 18 fathoms near Wrangel Land, which was often visible 75 miles distant. The greatest depth found was 80 fathoms and the average was 35. The bottoms were blue mud; shrimps and plenty of algological specimens were brought up from the bottom. The surface water had a temperature of 29° above zero. The extremes of the temperature of the air were: 58° below zero, and the greatest heat 11° above zero. The first winter the mean temperature was 38° below zero, the second winter it was 31° below zero. The first summer the mean temperature was 40° above zero. The heaviest gale showed a velocity of about fifty miles an hour. Such gales were not frequent. The barometric and thermometric fluctuations were not great. There were disturbances of the needle coincident with the auroras. The winter's growth of ice was eight feet; the heaviest ice seen was twenty-three feet. Engineer Shock's heavy truss saved the ship on November 21 from being crushed. The telephone wires were broken by the movement of the ice. The photographic collection was lost with the ship. Lieut. Chipp's 2000 auroral observations were also lost. The naturalist's notes have been saved. Jeannette Island was discovered May 16, in latitude 76° 47' north, longitude 158° 50' east. It was small and rocky, and we did not visit it. Henrietta Island was discovered and visited on May 24, in latitude 77° 8' north, longitude 157° 32' east. It is an extensive Island. Animals scarce and glaziers plenty. Bennett Island lies in latitude 76° 28' north, longitude 148° 20' east. It is very large. On it we found many birds, old horns, driftwood and no coal, but seal or walrus. Great tidal action was observed. The coast was bold and rocky. The cape on the south coast is named Cape Emma. We drifted back during the first week of retreat twenty-seven miles more than we could advance. The snow was knee deep. We had to go thirteen times over the track, seven times with loads. Lieut. Chipp's boat did better than ours (Melville's) the three boats having got clear of ice off Semionsky Island, at noon of that day. About dusk he was a thousand yards off our weather quarter and lowered sail as if rounding to. We lay to twenty-four hours under triangular drag. Nothing was seen of Lieut. Chipp's boat at daylight. He could not get back to the island in a northeast gale. He was unable to carry his share of provisions. I observed a strong, easterly current near the Lena delta. There were masses of driftwood between the Siberian Islands. Jack Coles' mind is not wholly alienated. He has not been visited for twelve days, but is happy and harmless. Getting home may restore him."

Mr. Robert Mc Nealy, Hagerstown, Md., writes: "I was reduced to a living skeleton by distressful ailments that completely exhausted me of all vitality. All the organs of my body—lungs, liver, kidneys, heart, sight, hearing, brain, nerves, etc.,—were in disorder, and each gave me trouble in a greater or less degree. I doctored for kidney complaint and dyspepsia; I took consumption cures; I did everything in my vain efforts to find relief. Mr. Wells, in Morris' drug-store, told me to try Brown's Iron Bitters. Two bottles have made me feel like a new person, and I believe I am permanently cured of all my distress. I weigh twenty-four pounds more now than I did a month ago."

A RAPIDLY DEVELOPING SILVER CITY.

The rush of old miners and the unusually large number of claims that are being created and opened in the Dolores valley and especially the camps, at Rico in Southern Colorado, indicate very clearly that there is a solid basis of vlist mineral deposites in that section to invite and induce as large an immigration. These rich mines were prospected only two years ago when there were no human being but the savage Utes in that country. Now the city of Rico contains 3000 inhabitants, has two daily mail deliverers, a postal order office, banks, fine stores, residences, churches and the best mills with the latest improvements for reducing and smelting ores. The railroad that was then two hundred miles distant is now being rapidly advanced and will have a terminus at the real silver city of Rico before the first of June this year.

In this vicinity there is every kind of minerals that are useful for reducing ores, as well as for all ordinary purposes. These consist of iron, lead, lime, and unlimited fields of anthracite and bituminous coal which furnishes gas and coke to any extent that will be required for reduction of minerals, and other uses. The ores of the Rico camp are of every quality and grade, but chiefly consists of fissure and contact veins that are easily and cheaply worked. The appliances for example that are necessary to work to its fullest development the yield of the Little Sadie mine, are as simple and inexpensive as those of a Pennsylvania coal chute. Taking the latter industry as a basis for calculating the expense of mining, it is evident that if it costs one dollar and a half to work a ton of coal in the eastern mines, and say two dollars a ton for the products of the Little Sadie laid in the mill, the profits accruing from active working of the mill and smelters in silver must yield an enormous profit. The parties who are operating the Little Sadie are among the most experienced and successful managers of such interests in Colorado. They thoroughly understand what are the best methods of getting out of the highest and lowest grade ores, all that there is in them and hence are developing their interests to the most profitable extent possible. Their fine property, the Little Sadie is an inexhaustible mine, very conveniently located, with constant water power and the best means of access for transportation. All that it requires to make it one of the best paying mining properties in Colorado, and to furnish an assured profit of from fifty per cent. upward, is an increased working capital, with which to place the necessary machinery and develop the rich resources of its inexhaustible six foot vein.

The managers have a large variety of the ores and take pleasure in exhibiting them and explaining their place and the object of their presence here to all who call on or address them on the subject. The indugements that they offer to planters, country merchants, and people with surplus capital, are very inviting and promise more certain assurances of profit than can possibly accrue from any other kind of business. The treasurer of the Dolores mining and milling association of Colorado, is Mr. W. F. Marrs. He and Mr. W. Y. Cirode, are in Parlor C, St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans, La.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

GREENSBORO DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Greensboro station	Mar. 4, 5
Newberne circuit, at Mt. Hermon	11, 12
Greensboro ct., at Mt. Pleasant	17
Havana circuit, at China Grove	18, 19
Green circuit, at Pleasant Grove	25, 26
Livingston and Eutaw, at Eutaw	Apr. 1, 2
Gainesville circuit, at Shumpertville	8, 9
Cuba circuit, at Carl's Station	15, 16
Demopolis station	29, 30
Forkland circuit, at Pebley	May 6, 7
Belmont circuit, at Belmont	13, 14
Gaston circuit, at Cake Chapel	27, 28
Choctaw circuit at Mt. Aconi	Jun. 3, 4
Butler and Mt. Sterling, at Mt. Sterling	10, 11

District Stewards will meet on Saturday, April 1 at Eutaw.

6 H. F. SHEPHARD, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

NEW ORLEANS DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Algiers	Jan. 28, 29
Moreau street	Feb. 5
Louisiana Avenue	12
Felicity street	19
Baton Rouge	25, 26
Grosse Tete at Rosedale	Mar. 4, 5
Bayou Lafourche, at Houma	11, 12
St. Charles Avenue	19
Carondelet	26

The District Stewards will convene January 30, at Carondelet Street Church, 7 P. M., in pastor's office.

3 CHRISTIAN KEENER, P. E.

OPELOUSAS DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Washington	Jan. 21, 22
Plaquemine, Brulee and Kimball's chapel	28, 29
Lake Charles	Feb. 4, 5
Abbeville	11, 12
Sugartown	18, 19
Opelousas	25, 26
Patterson ville and Morgan City	Mar. 4, 5
New Iberia	11, 12
Franklin	18, 19
Vermillionville	25, 26
Calcasieu mission	Apr. 1, 2
Grand Chenier	8, 9

5 LEWIS A. REED, P. E.

DELHI DIST.—FIRST ROUND.

Waterproof, at Waterproof	Jan. 21, 22
Tensas, at Jordan Chapel	28, 29
Monroe, at Monroe	Feb. 4, 5
Trenton, at Trenton	11, 12
Lake Providence, at Lake Providence	18, 19
Winnsboro, at Winnsboro	25, 26
Delhi, at Delhi	Mar. 4, 5
Rayville, at Rayville	11, 12
Oak Ridge, at Prairie	18, 19
Lind Grove, at Bartholomew	25, 26
Bastrop, at Bastrop	Apr. 1, 2
Floyd, at Floyd	8, 9

2 A. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and can not be sold in competition with the multitude of low test short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Co., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SINGER 240 OBELISK

THE GENUINE SINGER MACHINE HAS BEEN AWARDED THE FIRST PRIZE OVER ALL COMPETITORS MORE THAN 200 TIMES

HIEROGLYPHICS THAT EVERY ONE CAN UNDERSTAND

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

85 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

$5 TO $20 per day at Home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co. Portland, Maine.

No. 56 [illegible] St.

A WONDERFUL and

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, AND possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, as when first you use them. They have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European oculists claim that the MEDICATED GLASSES have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that is usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.
2. The chemicals make the glasses hard; they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first.
3. The chemicals keep the glasses cold, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.
4. With these glasses you can read, write or sew all night, the light having no effect on the eye, with no distressing or tiresome sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS—NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED.

The MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the frame H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED.

Dealers Supplied Wholesale at Liberal Discount.

ALL EYES SUITED. Persons residing at a distance who may wish to procure these spectacles can send for a circular containing description, prices, etc., and directions for insuring a perfect fit, and have them sent by mail, by addressing

HERC. HOUSAH,
CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,
56 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing mention this paper.

CHURCH'S MUSICAL VISITOR,

AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF MUSIC.

Every number contains 32 large pages filled with Musical Sketches, Original Articles, Criticisms, Poetry, Noted Musical News, and five to ten pages of New Music. Every subscriber receives free, the choice of 10 Elegant Premium Volumes!

Each premium contains 32 pages of Sheet-Music. Full particulars and list of contents of premiums sent on application.

Subscription only $1.50 a Year!

Agents Wanted in every Town and City, to whom a liberal commission will be paid.

Circulars, Blanks, etc., supplied free.

Send Stamp for Sample Copy.

PUBLISHED BY

JOHN CHURCH & CO.,

New York Office, 5 Union Square. CINCINNATI, O.

DIUTURNITY:

A COSMICAL ESSAY,

By REV. R. ABBEY.

Concerning the World's Present Infancy, Its Immense Future, Its Undiscovered Treasures, Its Indestructibility, The Wisdom of Providence, The Office of Science, The Scope of Christianity, The Folly of a Millenium, The Non-Human Second Coming of Christ, and The Glorious Destiny of Mankind.

"No ordinary ability is displayed. We have read the whole book with unflagging interest. It is salable, read able and remarkable." N. Y. Methodist.

"One of the most remarkable books we ever read." Christian Advocate, Nashville.

"The author is a man of culture and scholarly mind." American Christian Review.

"All entirely original arguments. Readable and remarkable." Missouri Presbyterian Herald.

"Eminently in the name of the book of the age." Gospel Herald.

"Clear thinking, wonderful originality. Vast amount of information." Home Monthly.

Highly commended by more than a hundred writers. Price, $1 50.

Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS.

Dealers in all Kinds of

LUMBER, SHINGLES, &C.

AND IN

ALABAMA COAL.

Shipments made from either Mobile or New Orleans or from Mills or Mines direct.

WANTED.—White Oak Staves, Red Cedar and Black Walnut logs, received at either New Orleans or Mobile. Highest cash price paid.

A. C. DANNER & CO.,

W. F. MELLEN,

Attorney at Law,

12 CARONDELET ST.,

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,

RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,

226 Jackson St., Bet. Chestnut and Coliseum

NEW ORLEANS.

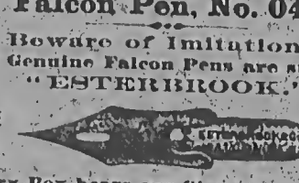
Office Hours—Eight A. M., and three to four P. M.

ROSES We give more and better plants for the money than any other house in the country. Catalogues for 1882 now ready, free to all. Send for one and see for yourself the beautiful plants we offer. MILLER & HUNT, Wrights Grove, Chicago.

ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR THE GENUINE AND ORIGINAL "ESTERBROOK" "Falcon Pen, No. 048."

Beware of Imitations! The Genuine Falcon Pens are stamped "ESTERBROOK."

TAKE NO OTHER



Every Box bears our Signature, thus:

R. Esterbrook & Co.

Esterbrook Steel Pen Co., 26 John St., New York

TUCKR'S ROSITIVE ROTARY HYDRAULIC MOTOR,

For running all kinds of Machinery by

Water Power.

Send for Circular and Price List to

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp Street, New Orleans.

SEND 25 CENTS

For a copy of the new

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Mailed post-paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

KNABE

PIANOFORTES.

UNEQUALED IN

Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

Nos. 204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore

No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

THE REY'S PATENT ARTIFICIAL LIMBS. The best and cheapest. Satisfaction guaranteed. I keep on hand a large assortment of Trusses, Shoulder Braces, Abdominal Supporters, Elastic Stockings, etc., at moderate prices. Send for pamphlet and price list.

A. McHEHMOTT, Manufacturer.
153 Canal St., New Orleans

CANCERS ARE CURED.

(Without knife or pain.) Patients not laid up a single day by treatment, but improve from the beginning. ALL DISEASES OF FEMALES, (no matter how long standing) are speedily and happily cured; i. e. irregularities, nervousness, internal ulcers, displacements, fistulas, etc., by

T. C. BLACKING,
154 Canal street, New Orleans.

Those afflicted had better call at once.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantee issued only by F. FRIEDRICHSON, Wholesale and Retail Druggist, New Orleans. Orders by mail at regular price.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 28.—NO. 8. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1882. WHOLE NO. 1394

PUBLISHED FOR THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.
Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. RUNNICUTT.
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. FELIX R. HILL.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KRENER.

DON'T TAKE IT TO HEART.

There's many a trouble,
Would break like a bubble,
And cast the waters of Lethe depart,
Did we not rehearse it,
And tenderly nurse it,
And give it permanent place in the heart.

There's many a sorrow
Would vanish to-morrow,
Were we but willing to furnish the wings,
Sensibly furnishing,
And quietly banishing,
What we count all sorts of horrible things.

How welcome the scouting,
Of looks that are pouting,
Whether one's wealthy or whether one's poor,
Eyes bright as a berry,
Cheeks red as a cherry,
The frown and the curse, and the heartache cure.

Resolve to be merry,
All worry to ferry
Across the famed waters that all so forget,
And no longer fearful
But happy and cheerful,
We've life has much that's worth living for yet.

—Tinsley's Magazine.

"Immigration." Another View.

BY REV. W. C. BLACK.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of February 9 your correspondent, W. L. C. R., has an article headed "Immigration," which, in my judgment, ought not to pass unnoticed. I do not propose to controvert his views in regard to the usefulness of Sambo in the capacity of "a hewer of wood and a drawer of water." Some of the statements contained in this part of his article are a little inaccurate; but, in the main, his views are correct. "Our Brother in Black" is an important element in Southern society, a potent factor in the development of the resources of our heaven-favored section. But what has this to do with immigration? Will the immigration of European whites necessitate the emigration of American blacks? Is it fully capable to compete with Paddy and Hans as a tiller of the soil? Is Mississippi so densely populated that she has no room for any of the thousands of Europe's sturdy yeomen who are now seeking homes in this "land of the free?" Is there a proposition before the Mississippi Legislature to kick out Sambo, in order to make elbow room for somebody else? Would not the people of Mississippi welcome black as well as white immigrants? Do not Mississippi planters go, or send agents every winter, to Georgia, Alabama, and other States in search of black labor? Let your correspondent, then, allay his tears. Sambo will not be hurt even if Chris' and Hans shouldn't hear of "Dixie's land."

Your correspondent also, although writing on immigration, takes occasion to deprecate the emigration of "our strong young men" to Texas, California and elsewhere. That is all very well. Every good citizen of Mississippi doubtless regrets to see the Western States filled with good citizens at our expense; and, but your correspondent stopped with mere deprecation and with counseling our young men to stay at home, his views would have met with a hearty response from every good citizen of our great commonwealth. But when he invokes the Legislature, and suggests that the strong arm of the law ought to be wielded to "keep our young men at home," that is a very different matter. Is the man in earnest? Is he serious in calling upon the State to prevent the emigration of our enterprising young men by legislative enactment? Has he forgotten that this is free America, and not down-trodden Russia? Does he not know that the right of expatriation—the right to emigrate from one State to another—is one of the most sacred and inalienable of all the rights of American citizenship?

Perhaps, he does not seek to prevent emigration by coercive measures, but to prevent it by holding out inducements in the shape of pecuniary rewards. Would he offer "forty acres and a mule" to every native Mississippian, white or black, who becomes discontented and determines to "go West?" The very suggestion of such legislation is preposterous. The only inducements the State of Mississippi has ever offered, ought to offer, or ever will offer to her sons to induce them to remain within her borders, is to give them wise laws and see that those laws are faithfully executed. These inducements Mississippi already holds out to her children, white and black. But when ardent, hopeful, enterprising young America resolves that no pent up Utica shall confine his powers, and cherks his baggage for the mines of Colorado, or the prairies of Texas, where is the legislator who would have the temerity to lay his hand upon his shoulder, and say: "Thou shalt not go." And would not young America laugh to scorn the offer of "forty acres and a mule?" All that the State can do in such a case is to say: "Go, my son, in peace." What would have been the condition of Mississippi to-day if such legislation had obtained years ago in the older States? Mississippi was settled by emigrants from Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia and other States. Now, that Mississippi is one of the old States, she must submit to the inevitable! "Westward the star of empire takes its way." She must allow her trans Mississippi sisters to grow rich by means of her nu-el and brain, just as she has grown rich by the muscle and brain of other States. Our children, as they attain their majority, will exercise their own judgment as to the choice of a home, just as their fathers did; and to propose to forestall that judgment by special legislative enactment, is "to exercise speech without thought."

As to foreign immigration your correspondent has this to say: "Pick and choose, as you may, four out of five foreign immigrants will be such people as we do not want. They will have no sympathy with our laws, our customs, or our religion. The most of them would ignore our Sabbath and scout our religious opinions. They would be politically, socially, morally and religiously antagonistic to us."

Now, this is very strong language. Notice the mathematical precision of his statements. He does not deal in general terms, he does not say that a large proportion, or a large minority, of foreign immigrants would be such as he describes; but he tells us the precise proportion—four fifths. He says, "Pick and choose, as we may," four fifths precisely of all the foreign immigrants we will ever get will be such as we do not want—will be hurtful to us, politically, socially, morally and religiously. Now, I confess, that when I read this statement, so broad, so strong, so positive, so precise, and so entirely at variance with public opinion generally, I expected to find some proofs adduced. Knowing your correspondent to be a man of trained mind, and, usually, a logical reasoner, I supposed he would not reach such a conclusion without being forced thereto by the logic of facts. I supposed that he had studied the question of immigration. I supposed that he had carefully perused the statistics of various States into which the tide of immigration had poured. Well, for aught I know, he may have studied the question very carefully; but if so, his article gives no proof of the fact. The only semblance of a proof he gives, is a statement made by some Texas man in regard to the foreign immigrants in a certain section of that State. Now, I propose to show, before I get through, that his own witness fails him, that the quotation from this Texas man does not, by any means, sustain the conclusion which he draws from it. But, suppose that it did, suppose that this Texan had stated (which he does not do) that these foreigners in that particular locality are hurtful to the State "politically, socially, morally and religiously," does that prove that all foreign immigrants will be of the same class. That would be logic with a vengeance! the logic of "the bloody shirt," which denounced all Southern people as villains and cut throats, because a few deeds of violence were committed on Southern soil. There are certain localities in Mississippi where the people are illiterate and immoral, where the Sabbath is generally desecrated, and where there are no churches or Sabbath schools; therefore all Mississippians are illiterate, immoral and irreligious. Does your correspondent accept that as valid reasoning? Well, if it is not valid when applied to Mississippians, how can it be valid when applied to Scotch, Irish, or Germans?

A man who feels himself competent to enlighten the Legislature of a great commonwealth, on a question of State polity, asserts, in the most positive manner, that all immigrants to the United States (no, not all; just four fifths of them) are of a certain kind, and when asked for proof of his assertion, he says: "Well, John Smith (or some other Smith) says that in a certain part of Texas they are so and so." If legislators laugh at him, who is to blame? What does the man mean? Why doesn't he turn his eyes toward some State that has foreign immigrants worth speaking of. Does he not know that the entire South, including Texas, only gets about four per cent. of the immigrants from Europe? Does he not know that Europe has poured into the lap of the United States seven fold of her population in the last thirty years? Does he not know, that in some of the Northern and Western States, foreigners constitute from twenty to thirty-five per cent. of the entire population? Why does he not take up the statistics of these States, one by one, and show the deleterious effects of this tremendous influx of foreigners. Certainly if foreigners are four-fifths of them dreadful creatures, as he imagines, then those States which have the most foreigners are in the worst condition, politically, socially and religiously. If this were so, would not some one in the States so cursed have found it out before? How is it, that for thirty years, the intelligent, enterprising, sagacious citizens of the greatest and most prosperous States of the Union have done all in their power to encourage foreign immigration, establishing by law immigration bureaus, and appropriating large sums of money to promote the cause?

(To be continued.)

"Be at Peace Among Yourselves."

As I grow older, and realize that I am nearing the once "seeming distant shore," I feel my heart kindling with more ardent desire, not only for complete personal fitness for the "inheritance of the saints," but my solicitude for the peace and prosperity of our Zion increases in the same ratio. Therefore, whenever I see cropping out anywhere a spirit of jealousy, a manifestation of the spirit of bitterness, or a disposition to find fault with brethren, it is painful. Painful because of the thing itself, and, doubly so, because of the effect such spirit has upon the world. "So shall the world know that ye are my disciples, because ye love one another," said Jesus to his first chosen followers.

My mind is specially exercised upon this subject while, as of late, I scarcely read any one of our otherwise excellent church papers, without finding something that savors of bitterness somewhere in some heart; especially if the point in controversy is some proposed General Conference legislation, the expression of an opinion as to the relative duties of official bodies in the church and the pastors of the church, or discussion of the relations existing between the "clergy" (I don't like this term) and the "laity."

Sometimes I read after a brother who thinks that the stewards of the church are shamefully derelict, and he speaks in no measured terms of their delinquencies. Then, some steward writes about the preachers in a style so unbecoming, if not disrespectful, as not only to degrade them personally, but greatly to mar their influence for good, by detracting from the dignity of their high vocation.

I have observed ever since it became a feature of Methodist economy, that "lay representation" has been a fruitful source of this bitterness. Perhaps I may be misapprehended, and I will rather say, that it has been the occasion of much more of the objectionable feeling than I had known before. This modification of our system was prompted, no doubt, by the purest motives. It was a voluntary offering on the part of the preachers, not the result of outside pressure, nor even in response to overtures from the body of our church. Nay, it was with difficulty, our brethren were persuaded at the first to avail themselves of the proposition. But now some preachers are heard to complain of the "interference of laymen at our Conferences. In one of our Advocates now before me, I find these words as these bearing on this point: "Hang around the Bishop's room," "pumping," "try to control." The lay side of this roof has of late become woefully leaky." All this, perhaps, and only because some lay man had felt it his duty, as it was certainly his privilege, to impart to the Bishop certain information, that he felt was important to the interest of that section of the church he had the honor to represent. To all this, a writer in the same paper replies in the following Christian (?) manner: "The drip comes through the outer net side of the roof hence the clerical side of this wonderful house needs a new roof to prevent it from leaking." The same writer says: "I suggest that the contribution box be passed around immediately, or the clerical wall of the itinerant house may rot down and spoil our Methodist building." This and such like is the style too frequently employed by brethren who litter, and who are wont to rush into print with their differences.

Recurring to what I said was the "occasion" of much of the bitterness, I wish to say that while the introduction of the lay element into our Conferences has served to enlighten the church greatly in regard to the practical working of our system, it has, in my humble judgment, failed to awaken, as yet, that sympathy between the two classes, the ministry and the laity, which was confidently expected; but, rather, as the specimens I have given show, it has had a counter-influence. Why? I am sure I can not divine. I believe our Bishops ought to be accessible, as well to laymen as to preachers, and alike to both. I have known some of our Bishops to invite laymen to call upon them at their "rooms." I have no doubt that in many cases it would have been well for the Bishop to have taken counsel of discreet and pious laymen. While I would approve this course, I am sure that justice to all parties demand that each be heard fairly and fully.

Now, in all I have said, I am not to be understood as being opposed to "lay representation," because it has been the "occasion" of much bitterness that I had not known before. On the contrary, I am now more fully persuaded than ever before that it was a wise provision to admit our lay brethren to full participation in the legislative departments of the church. What I deprecate is the friction that seems to be generated by this association. Let us "be at peace among ourselves."

W. J. HAWKINS.

LADONIA, TEXAS, Jan. 31, 1882.

That Neglected Law.

"A good law much neglected."—C. B. G.

"If any Mississippi judges should read this article, it is suggested that they call attention to this law in future charges to grand juries." Id supra.

My good Bro. G. has not looked at this law from the lawyers', or even grand jurors', standpoint; else he would not be so confident in pronouncing it good, except as a dodge. A "cloud without rain," "While in discharge of duty" (I quote from memory) takes all the practical good out of it, for who has seen a judge drunk while on the bench? A mayor while presiding in the Board of Aldermen, or acting in his ex officio capacity as justice? Yet such is the interpretation. Grand juries are forced to give the law by that ever repeated maxim, that the accused must have the "benefit of the doubt." The writer has been on a grand jury since the passage of that law, before which came positive proof of the drunkenness of high officials; but this qualifying clause saved them ("by the skin of their teeth"). Bro. C. B. G., will you do Mississippi judges and grand juries the kindness to get the Legislature to amend by striking out the qualifying clause.

Akin to this law is that in regard to carrying concealed weapons. It simply places the good citizens at the mercy of the lawless coward who makes himself a travelling armory. I doubt if taxes are paid on fifty pistols, sword canes, brass knuckles, etc., in Hinds county; yet, in any brawl, debauch, even upon the highways, the crack of the pistol is heard. Bro. C. B. G., try and get the Legislature to repeal this law and license the carrying of deadly weapons; and let the chancery clerk keep on record and for exhibition, a register of the licensed bullies of the county to the end that all peaceful men may keep out the way; then make it a felony for an unlicensed bully to exhibit one of these concealable weapons. What, you say, license such bullyism? Yes; we license gambling shops, and these concealed weapon carriers claim that it is right in order that money may be furnished for the school funds. Now, let them pay the school funds $25 a year, as compensation to the chancery clerk for advertising them as bullies.

E.

Bishop Wightman's Last Illness.

The editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, February 18, says:

Bishop Wightman died at his residence in this city, on Wednesday morning, at three o'clock, February 15. He was sinking all day Tuesday, and was not in a condition to converse for several hours before his decease. He sank into the arms of death as into a sweet sleep. Thus closes the mortal life of a great and good man.

Bishop Wightman's brother-in-law, George W. Williams, Esq., in an extended sketch in the Southern, writes as follows of the last illness:

I was with Bishop Wightman much of the time during his protracted illness, which gave me an opportunity of seeing with what Christian resignation he bore the severe afflictions that had fallen upon him. No murmur escaped his lips; with him it was, "God's will be done."

About the middle of December last the Bishop and his friends thought he would live only a few days. A chill having left him very feeble. One morning, as I was leaving, he requested me to remain, as he desired to give some directions in reference to his funeral, and other matters. He was calm and peaceful and his mind was as clear as I had ever seen it. The Bishop said: "You see I am a dying man, but my trust is in my Redeemer. It is a great disappointment to me that I am no longer able to do my Master's work. I must not complain; I have spent a long life in the service of Christ, and have tried to do my duty. Through the goodness of God I have enjoyed remarkable health for more than half a century previous to my present sickness; I did not lose one week from my various duties on account of physical disability. I feel that my time on earth is short. I am so feeble, and have been sick so long the good wife and kind friends are well-nigh worn out nursing me. A few more days, or weeks, it matters not which, I will be removed to my eternal home. In that direction all is well—all is well."

The Bishop expressed himself as having an abiding faith and trust in God. It was hard for me to believe that Bishop Wightman would not again be permitted to preach "the unsearchable riches of Christ." His life was ever a cheerful offering of himself to duty; allegiance to Christ was the law which governed all his actions; his desire was to do good and labor for others, it mattered not whether that labor was in the cabin of the poor or in the mansion of the rich.

During his long sickness the Bishop was surrounded by his devoted family and sympathizing friends. Everything that medical skill could suggest, or friendship perform, was done to prolong his useful life.

Bishop Wightman, from his youth, was a hard student; he had no time to waste in idle company or in trifling conversation.

In conversation the Bishop was not then, but was always interesting and instructive. In the pulpit he seemed at times to hesitate in selecting words, but the right and most expressive word was sure to come.

Although the Bishop was much enfeebled and emaciated by sickness, yet he suffered comparatively little pain; there seemed to be a gradual wasting of his vital powers, without any perceptible disease. His intellect remained unclouded nearly to the last. At times, when his strength would permit, I would get him to give me some reminiscences of his life and ministry. His Christian experience was a theme he delighted to review; his eye would flash and his voice became strong as in other days. The Bishop's ever watchful wife would put her finger on her lip, which I understood to mean "no more preaching to-day." His devotion to the church was worthy of all imitation. Methodism with him was "Christianity in earnest."

Temperance Notes.

The Czar of Russia has decreed that there shall be no more than one wine shop in any Russian village, and where two or three villages are near together, the one drink shop shall suffice for all, and this shall be managed by a "man born and resident in the village," who shall be appointed by the Common Council, and paid by salary. He is to derive no pecuniary profit beyond his salary, is to sell also food and fuel, and is liable to fine, dismissal, and even imprisonment, if he allows any man or woman to get drunk on his premises. In a given contingency, if the population should become riotously drunken and disorderly, the communal authorities are to interdict the sale of liquor entirely in that district or village for as long a time as they shall see fit.

Sir Leonard Tilley, addressing a temperance meeting in Ottawa, Ontario, among other things, said: "Forty years ago the consumption of spirits in the province was five gallons per head, while now it is only one and one half gallons. The cost to the consumers of liquor in Canada is $18 000,000 annually, and for every dollar expended for religious purposes seven dollars are squandered on whisky."

All persons entering the public houses, hotels, restaurants, and liquor saloons of Bristol, England, between the hours of seven and eleven o'clock on Saturday, January 7, were counted, with the following result: Of a population of 206 000, 105,000, or more than one half, entered the public houses in four hours. Of this number 51 071 were men, 39,803 women, and 13 115 children.

The Cincinnati Commercial says: "There was, perhaps, less drinking in this city at the New Year's receptions than at any previous New Year's day for many years."

The London Mail states that Great Britain spent last year for intoxicating drinks £122 276 276, or $611,000,000. This is an increase since 1860 of $165,000,000.

There was so much drunkenness in Salt Lake City, Utah, on Christmas that the authorities closed all the saloons on New Year's day.

The city of Brooklyn, N. Y., expects that the last year amounted to $208,000 of which the Catholic Asylum received over $30 000.

The liquor dealers of Savannah, Ga., have agreed to close their saloons on Sunday.—Methodist.

Good Words.

They pray the best, who pray and watch,
They watch the best, who watch and pray
They hear Christ's finger on the latch,
Whether he comes by night or day.
Whether they guard the gates and watch,
Or patient toil and pray and wait,
They hear his finger on the latch
Whether he early come, or late.

It is well to draw a line between the fruits of various kinds of delusion in religion. We mean by delusion the denial of any province to faith. Faith is contemptuously set aside by rationalists; it is decisively rejected by all schools of intellectual liberalists. The former will have none of the Bible because it contains matters of faith; and cut out all of the Bible that requires faith. They profess to follow alone the small light of their own reason, which leads them into darkness and quagmires.

—And, considering our age, and now established principles, views, and habits, it is no slight satisfaction to hope that we are now passed safe beyond the most unsteady, hazardous and tempting periods, feelings and scenes of life. Not that we can ever be safe but by divine preservation; but still it is no trifling advantage that some of the most pernicious influences of a bad world have necessarily, as to us, lost very much of their power.—John Foster.

To commit oneself to what is right is a great step forward. Then right-doing becomes easy, which before was difficult. These are the steps upward in life. Many people refuse to join some association for doing good, because they do not like to promise what they may not be able to perform. But to commit themselves will often help them to perform what they undertake to do. We unite with those who are wishing to do good things, and we find ourselves in a current which carries us forward in the right direction.—J. F. Clark.

—Who can doubt that in the progress of Christ's kingdom on earth the time has come when a revival bearing a distinctly missionary character in its consecration of men, and women, and money to the work of evangelizing the whole world to Christ is our own and the world's most pressing need. Practically the whole world is now open for the entrance of missionaries bearing the gospel in their hands; it is God's providence and man's opportunity.

—It is not by constraint or by painful effort that we make real progress. On the contrary it is simply a question of yielding up our will, or going from day to day, whithersoever God may lead us, discouraged by nothing, satisfied with the present moment, thankful to let him do all who has made all, and to leave our own will immovable within his will. How happily it is to abide in this condition! How satisfied is the heart, even though it may lack all else!

—My own experience is that the Bible is dull when I am dull. When I was really alive, and set in upon the text with a tidal pressure of living affinities; it opens, it multiplies discoveries, and reveals depths even faster than I can note them. The worldly spirit shuts the Bible; the Spirit of God makes it a fire, flaming out all meanings and glorious truths.—Horace Bushnell.

It is only he who labors in the church, taking his place and doing his share accordingly to its provision and demand, who will grow up in Christian symmetry. His faith may be good, so far as it goes, without the work, but it will be meagre, while all his graces will be stunted and dwarfed. It is saved as by fire where there is no record of noble deeds.

There is no life so humble that, if it be true and genuinely human and obedient to God, it may not hope to shed some of its light. There is no life so meagre that the greatest and wisest of us can afford to despise it. We can not know, at what moment it may flash forth with the life of God.—Phillips Brooks.

Most men live blindly to repeat a routine of drudgery and indulgence, without any deliberately chosen and magnificent aims. Few live distinctly to develop the value of their being; know the truth; love their fellows; enjoy the beauty of the world, and aspire to God.—W. R. Alger.

Humbleness is peculiar to Christianity. Goodness is admired and taught in all religions. But to be good and feel that your goodness is nothing; to renounce and become more conscious of pollution; to ripen all experiences, and, like corn, to bend the head when full of ripe and bursting grain, that is Christianity.

—One never knows a man till he has rebuked him something, and studied the effects of the refusal; one never knows himself till he has denied himself. The altars of sacrifice is the touchstone of character. The cross compels a choice for or against Christ.—D. P. Gifford.

I would rather be what God chose to make me than the most glorious creature I can think of. For to have been thought about, born in God's thought, and then made by God, is the deepest, greatest, and most precious thing in all thinking.—George MacDonald.

Chrysostom said, beautifully, so beautifully that the words have been preserved like a fly in amber: "God has given a man two eyes; if he lose one, he has another. But man hath only one soul; if he lose that, the loss can never be made up again."

If people could be made to feel that they incur God's displeasure by not attending church, their unsteady habits in that respect would be overcome. They do not feel so, and hence their negligence.

—Satan idols, but God foils him. He casts our crown upon the earth, but God despises it and replaces it on our heads. Satan suggests hard thoughts of God, but God giveth us tender proofs of his love.

The end of learning is to know God, and out of that knowledge, to love him and imitate him as we may the nearest by possessing our souls of true virtue.—Milton.

—"Faith," says Augustine, is "to believe what we do not yet see; and the reward of faith is to see what we believe."

—Though we must not tempt God in the neglect of means, yet we must trust God in the want of means.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1882

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

LINES INSCRIBED TO —— ON THE DEATH OF HER MOTHER.

BY A. W. * * *.

The cold, bleak winds of November
Have driven the children in,
In the parlor a fire is blazing
Where the blossoms of summer have been.

The first chill days of November
Have taken my mother from me,
And I sigh for a light in the darkness,
The why for I'm groping to see.

Since dawn I've stood in the doorway
Watching the brown leaves fall,
Gathering strength for the burden
From the treasury open to all.

The first chill blast of November
Once I hailed as the merriest sound,
For it gathered a group in the parlor
That the love of a mother had found.

Be still, sad winds of November,
And sing me the song as of yore.
So cold seems the glow that is shining
On the wall as I pause at the door.

Is there no balm for such sorrow?
Will mother never bless us again,
May her memory not serve as a power
To strengthen the links of our chain?

When again the winds of November
Sweep bright the heaven's blue dome,
May we wish the powers that bind her
Are, mother, heaven and home.

CENTREVILLE, Miss., Nov. 10, 1881.

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

First Quarter—Lesson IX.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1882.—MARK iv. 21-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"There shall be a handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon."—Psalms lxxii. 16.

THE GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM.

21. And he said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed? and not to be set on a candlestick?

22. For there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested; neither was anything kept secret, but that it should come abroad.

23. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

24. And he said unto them, Take heed what ye hear: With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you, and unto you that hear, shall more be given.

25. For he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

26. And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground;

27. And should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

28. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

29. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.

30. And he said, Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it?

31. It is like a grain of mustard-seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth:

32. But when it is sown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.

33. And with many such parables spake he the word unto them, as they were able to hear it.

34. But without a parable spake he not unto them: and when they were alone, he expounded all things to his disciples.

The lesson is part of the discourse of our last lesson. All three of the parables, the sower, the seed cast in the ground and the mustard-seed, present the one idea of growth or development of the kingdom of God—the first as respects the soil, or the mystery of its beginning, the second illustrating the relative independence of this development, and the third the wonderful extension of the kingdom in human hearts and in the world. We must keep the connection to understand the appropriateness of the question which opens this lesson.

Keep before your mind the question of the disciples: Why speakest thou unto them in parables? That question implied that he was rather covering up his meaning under the drapery of words. Why couch your truths in such forms, which are liable to conceal the vital truth behind the shadow of a truth not essential.

The Master answers by a question: Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel measure, or under a bed, and not to be set on a candlestick? Could any man be so foolish as to make such a use of a candle, and can you think that I, who am come to give light to every man, would thus conceal the light? No. I hide nothing, save for one purpose, namely: that it should be manifested. I keep things secret that I may reveal them. I frame these spiritual mysteries in words, which are signs of natural things, that I may formulate the unknown in terms well known. The parables are my candles; they are to give light, and not to conceal. They are nothing in themselves, only oil and the dead wick, but when once they are lighted they reveal all things. Men must light them; men who seek for light will light them. His parables are the oil wells hidden beneath his words: the entrance of thy word giveth light. Mine these words of Jesus, and you will strike wells of oil, whose inexhaustible supply will furnish light for every man in the world—all the light you need.

The mysteries of grace, hid from ages, has come abroad, and is published to the world. This thought, let out in these words of the twenty-second verse, is one of the longest plummets of thought that our Saviour ever dropped in conversation. It sounds the deepest depths of the wisdom of God; it is the glory of God to hide a thing. The truth he hides that it may be found out and manifested, to the intent that now unto principalities and powers in heavenly places might be made known by the church the manifold wisdom of God.

Christ followed his Father in the very methods of his teaching. He hid many things from his disciples; he hid his truth in parables, and revealed them only as they were able to bear it. His divine wisdom was revealed as much in what he did not say as in what he did say. Had he said all, the world could not have contained the revelations, and we would have been without the Bible, without the light, and without hope. We do not wonder that after such a profound utterance he should have repeated his caution. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear, and take heed what ye hear—how much you hear.

If you receive the truth in a scant measure you shall have it dealt out to you in that measure—unto you that hear with larger ears and readier attention shall more be given.

The flood-gates of truth are wide open, and see that you throw open the gates of your ears and of your mind and of your heart, for he that hath, to him shall be given; and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath. With the measure that we mete knowledge will depend God's bounty in bestowing upon us knowledge.

The parable of the seed growing secretly illustrates the general truth that in the kingdom of grace, as in the kingdom of nature, we are laborers together with God; the result of our work depends on him, and for the perfection of those works he takes his own time. It is for us to sow the seed, and it is for him to give the growth. Having sown, we are to wait on God, in his own time, to perfect it, and this he does according to a definite order of development; first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. We can not fix the time of this development in the spiritual harvest as we can in the natural. We can not say how long it will be before the babe in Christ will be man. We can not tell the times and seasons of the kingdom of grace as we can those of the kingdom of nature. This parable signifies God's methods of operation in the Christian church under the Spirit's dispensation. We should labor with God in bringing forth fruit in the kingdom of grace just as we labor with God in the kingdom of nature. The husbandman uses God's sunshine, his rain, his dews and light, his secret chemical forces in the soil and seed and atmosphere, to make his crop. The man uses God in nature, in everything he does, from the very planting to the reaping. His every calculation and prospect is based upon God, in the seed, in the soil, in the sky, in the seasons; and then, when the harvest is garnered, he calls it his, and claims to have made it. So we ought to use God in the kingdom of grace not only for our own salvation, but for that of others. We are God's husbandry, using God's grace in bringing forth fruit in our own hearts and in the hearts of others. The order of the co-operation, or copartnership with God in saving souls from death and putting sin out of sight, is about as well understood by the children of light as the average farmer understands the fact that he uses God at every step in the furrow. It is not God using us so much as God permitting us to use him. God lets us into the secret of the great powers of grace, and these we may wield, use, operate with. We are workers with God; as Moses worked his wonders with his rod; but God was in the rod. Who would be anxious about results with such an instrument in his hands. Oh! for faith in the operations of God.

As the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself, as if from a self-acting power, so in the kingdom of grace there are self-acting powers, quick and energetic through God's Spirit present in them, which may be absolutely depended upon to do the work of salvation. The mistakes opposed to this truth are, expecting growth without planting the seed, preaching yourself instead of Christ. Taking up the seed to see how it grows, exacting a certain kind of experience, testing it by our own measures, trying to make it grow according to our own notion, high pressure methods, logical and artificial, like germinating seed in hot-houses, and hatching eggs in warm sand-beds. How God has been dishonored, and the Spirit grieved, by some of these high flown methods of sensational evangelists, so-called. I knew an enterprising Yankee to come to our rich fields and plant his farm in beans that were kiln-dried. His folly was not greater than that of some of these evangelistic fanatics.

We must not press the last part of this parable, where he, the sower, when the fruit is ripe, straightway putteth forth the sickle, because the harvest is come. The only emphatic thought is the harvest is come, is come, not by anything that the man did, but through the power of the Lord of the harvest. The farmer says: See what a crop I have raised. He goes into the field when he sees the reaping time has come with sense of right to cut it down and gather it into his barn. So I have known preachers to be sent into fields which have long been planted with good seed, and, in the providence of God, the harvest time rolls round during their pastorate, they straightway thrust in the sickle, and gather the golden grain, and to hear them report their results in a comparative statement, what they found the church when they came, and what it is now, what before their coming, would lead one to think that the Lord had very do with it, and the result is due to their sickles. One brother goes to a church where holy men, in scores, have fought, bled and died, and lo! this last sent brother comes in on the opening harvest and reports in triumph that he has planted and nurtured and reared a great church. Satan must have been at their back and looking over their shoulder when they made out such a report, which takes all credit for self, and leaves none for the God of the harvest. It sounds not well for the mower, as he swings his scythe in thick standing grain, to glory over the weary plowman whose labors have been long and heavy in preparing the land and planting the seed.

The parable of the mustard-seed teaches us the law of development in this kingdom of grace. A mustard-seed was a well known Jewish type of anything exceedingly small; a small beginning, an exceeding small live thing.

It illustrates the contrast between the smallness of the gospel's beginning and the greatness of results. This illustration has given the commentators great trouble; they have sought long and far for a mustard-tree, whose limbs could furnish a roost for the birds. Travelers have measured the diameters of mustard-shrubs in the holy land, and have tested the strength of their limbs. They have been more or less successful, but the difference between the smallest seed and the greatest tree is nothing to that between a young convert on earth and a saint in heaven.

These are some of the samples of the parables by which our Lord clothed the doctrines of his kingdom. Without parables spake he not unto them; but when they were alone he expounded all things to his disciples. The interpreter's house was inside of the wicket gate. We must be his disciples if we would have the key to these parables.

My Vindication.

It may be that my jealous love for our own little church caused me to be too impetuous. Hearing murmurings and the cry of hard times on every side, some of our very best members speaking of withdrawing from us, in my desperation I wrote that unfortunate article ("A Voice from the Pew") which good Bro. R. considers aimed personally at him.

He is sadly mistaken if he thinks I regard our preachers as objects of charity. Far from it. In my humble estimation, the earnest, devoted, consecrated embassador of Christ is the noblest standard of manhood. He is by far the greatest earthly benefactor of sinful humanity.

No one is more welcome at my home than the messenger of truth, whom God hath appointed to proclaim the glad tidings of good news unto our fallen race. Words are inadequate to express my sympathy and love for that noblest band of women, the patient, self-sacrificing companions of our itinerant ministers. That innate love of home, sweet home, is more deeply implanted in the heart of the fair sex than in that of man.

What a sore test of their faith and devotion to the cause of Christ is this changing of home so frequently. But the good Lord, who calls the ministers into his service, also qualifies their companions for their mission.

I did feel, in the zealous, well-meaning Bishop's desire to serve his church most advantageously, that our little church (numbers well, but weak financially) would soon be numbered with the things that were.

Our new pastor is with us, and we will use every effort to prove we do appreciate and love him for his very work's sake. If Bro. R. thinks we are desirous of having our pastor earn his livelihood by his own labor he is again mistaken. We well know our pastors have to study, and a great deal too, in order to be useful servants in the vineyard of God. But for the good of his own health, and the beneficial influence of his industry, we did say, and say again, he should do some manual labor.

King Solomon tells us, "And much study is a weariness of the flesh." St. Paul says: "But we wrought with labor and travail day and night that we might not be chargeable unto you, not because we have not power, but to make ourselves ensamples unto you to follow us." We believe in itinerancy, but it can be carried to excess.

If many of our ministers had remained on their same work (where they had been only one or two years,) had now in their pockets the money spent in moving, would it require the profoundest mathematician to solve the problem whether they would now be better prepared to supply their family needs? When people and preachers are working harmoniously, would it not be better to let them work at least three years together? The Discipline does now allow any representation in the Conferences.

I have been a member of our church for twenty-six years; never in our instance have we common people been consulted even as to who should serve in our Sabbath-schools as superintendent. He was appointed. I make no issues with Bro. R. on this point, but simply state facts. I sincerely desire to do nothing wrong, for Vacare culpæ est suave. Hope Bro. R. has become reconciled, and thus let the matter rest forever. Requiescat in pace.

JUSTITIA.

Colportage Sketches—No. 21.

BY A. M. JONES.

A DRUNKEN WOMAN.

Whisky is intoxicating, and if a woman drinks enough it will certainly make her drunk. By continual tipling and tasting, by the use of morning drams and Christmas eggnogs, she is as liable to form an appetite, and create a thirst for the liquid fire, as her husband. A drunken man is no uncommon sight in America. In fact, from the immense sum of $600,000,000 annually expended in the United States for intoxicating drinks a stranger might be impressed that we are a nation of drunkards. In every village, town or city, or in almost any part of the more rural districts, the male inebriate, with his blood-shot eyes, idiotic expression of face, and bloated cheeks, may be seen, but never until the winter of 1878 did I have the misfortune of beholding a drunken woman. It was one of those chilly, cloudy days in December, in which the rain began to fall at sunrise, and continued, with increasing severity, until just before light the next morning. Having traveled for several hours, until fully wet, I stopped at the comfortable home of an old army friend, where a hearty welcome was extended, and put up for the day. In less than an hour our company was augmented by the introduction of another way-faring man, who was traveling on foot, dealing in spectacles. Without the least hesitation or ceremony he entered the room, bid us good morning, threw aside his baggage, and took a seat near the fire. He proved to be a man of intelligence, had traveled much, seen much of the world, and was entertaining. Doubtless he had a history, but, if so, kept it to himself. After dinner the conversation lulled. We were dry, warm and dull from the exposure to the weather early in the day. We were alone reading, everything about the place as quiet as night, when all of a sudden the voice of a woman was heard at the gate, saying: "Put me down; I am dying; I am dying; Oh! put me down; I am dying! I tell you I am dying." In a moment I was at the door, and, to my amazement, saw, near a covered wagon, a man and woman, one on each side of a poor drooping creature, whom I thought in the agonies of death. Without waiting for overcoat or umbrella, with head uncovered, I dashed into the rain, and as tenderly as possible aided in conveying the unfortunate girl into the house. Before reaching them she seemed to have fainted, and as we bore her along, I thought she was dying, and felt as if in the presence of death. When placing her in a chair near the fire she seemed to arouse again, and in a pitiable but much more feeble voice said: "Oh! I am dying. I will never see my poor old mother again. I am dying; I am dying." At this she swooned, and I thought she would never speak again. Calling for the camphor, I had her hands and face well bathed, applied it to her nose, and tried to get some in her mouth, but, alas! her teeth were set like a vice, her eyes rolled back, and the pallor of the face assured me she was already dead. By this time the gentleman of the house, for whom I had sent in haste, and I watched him with intense anxiety as he examined the dying woman's pulse, and turned away, saying: "She is all right. There is no danger of her dying now. You need not be alarmed." Again she recovered, and more feebly cried: "Oh! my poor mother; I will never see her again. I am dying. I heard the voice of God call me three times last night. I am dying, and going to rest in heaven. I am gone." Another swoon and holding of breath, but no one seemed alarmed, and it was of short duration. Having an opportunity now, for the first time, I asked how long she had been sick. Hearing my question, she turned her vacant, glazing eyes toward me, and said: "Mister, I am so sick. I have been sick all day. I am going to die, and will never see home any more." All the sympathy of my nature was stirred, but I was powerless to render relief. I did not know what to do, but the others seemed indifferent and unconcerned. But she continued: "They say I am drunk, but it is not so. I've only drank three drinks of whisky to-day." This last speech threw light on the subject, and, much embarrassed, I took my seat, and began to read a newspaper. The gentleman who had been so unnecessarily called from his business, giving me a significant look and smile, returned. On their way from market the party had all been drinking whisky during the day, and this poor, ignorant girl, about eighteen years old, was drunk. She never swooned any more, but in a short time, without my assistance they put her in the wagon and moved on. I have heard nothing more from them. In mixing with the world, I may be compelled to see the disgusting sight of a drunken man, but do hope to be spared the beholding of another intoxicated woman. Reader, "Touch not, taste not, handle not the liquid fire."

Ponchatoula, Louisiana.

HELP NEED.

MR. EDITOR: Our first quarterly meeting came off January 28-29. Bro. Little was prevented from attending on account of domestic affliction, but Bro. Cooper came in his stead, and preached twice. His presence cheered us very much, and the people generally were delighted. The attendance of official members was exceedingly small. The next quarterly meeting will be held at Springfield. I met my appointment on the first Sunday in January, and have been traveling and preaching continually since, though the weather has been exceedingly unfavorable, and the water courses very high. I have had only one "ducking," however, since my arrival on the work. I am now on my second round. This work is a newly-formed mission, and I trust the result will be a happy one. I am going to make an appeal to the brethren and friends of Methodism, if you please, through the columns of the ADVOCATE, for assistance to build a church in Ponchatoula. We are building a church at Springfield, which we will occupy at our next appointment, on the third Sunday in this month, and we hope to build a church at Kellams' Cross Roads with our own resources, but we need help to build in Ponchatoula. There is no aggressive movement on the part of any denomination in this community. There is no regular service held here, except by us. There are more Methodists than any other that claim any membership at all, and there is an earnest desire on the part of many that we erect a church here, and have regular preaching. We have no comfortable or permanent place of preaching. We preach sometimes in the Grange Hall, and at other times in a private room. We do not ask our friends to build for us, but simply to help us. A good brother has secured a lot, to which we have a deed, sufficient to build a church and parsonage. He has also secured material enough to build the church, and some money besides. Now, if our friends will help us we will build the church this year. We only need money now to pay the workmen.

Brethren, sisters, will you help us? If so, we shall succeed. If not, I fear we shall fail. Brethren, when you visit your people ask them for a contribution for the mission church at Ponchatoula. Christian friends, when your pastor calls and prays at the family altar for the success of the missionary and his work, help the Lord to answer the prayer by giving him (the pastor) a contribution for our church. Let pastors receive contributions, and forward them to me at Ponchatoula by registered letter, as they do not make payment on money orders at this office. I will report amounts received through the ADVOCATE.

Yours in Christ,

R. F. FLOWERS.

FEBRUARY 2, 1882.

From Franklin, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: The Louisiana Annual Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held its session here during the past week, and adjourned last Monday, Bishop Jesse T. Peck presiding. I attended some of the sessions, and, if I may judge by the reports, this Conference is upon rising ground. Its affairs were conducted with promptness, and with a knowledge of "the rules" that should govern deliberative bodies. Some of the speeches made were well expressed, and the subject under discussion well handled, with a pointedness that showed the matter in hand had been thought over, digested, and a conclusion reached by a correct estimate of the "pros and cons." This people are perfectly alive to their wants, and the necessity for education. This was evinced, when a motion came up to erect a college building in New Orleans, in which their ministers may be educated. About one hundred men, and they preachers, subscribed the sum of $5,600 for that purpose, and it was done with a will, an earnestness which showed more plainly than words that they meant to accomplish that end. The question of the Sunday law then came up, and a motion prevailed to memorialize the Legislature of the State, at its next session, to pass an act that would cause that day to be respected. Each preacher was requested to have his people sign a petition and forward the same to the representative of the parish in which his work laid. This is a move in the right direction, and, if pushed, will result in good; and a Sunday law of some kind must be passed. From my heart do I say, God bless the effort, and speed the day. Nor can I see why it may not come when both white and colored are pulling for the same thing. Give Louisiana a Sunday law, and her churches will be filled. Men will be brought under the power of the gospel, and sinners will be converted, an impetus given to Protestantism that will smack of the olden time, when Methodism led the van, and there was a mighty shout among her people, for the Lord was with them in his might and in his power.

Bishop Peck occupied the pulpit of the church South on Sunday night. His text was from First Corinthians iv, 20: "For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power." It was a Holy Ghost sermon, in which trip hammer blows fell upon sin in all its forms, grinding into powder the mere professors of religion, and worthy Christianity; then, in simple and loving tones, held up the cross of Christ, and called men back to the gospel way. Now, Mr. Editor, do not think I am ready to be given up, and to lose my identity and personality. I am not willing to be absorbed.

T. K. F.

JANUARY 31, 1882.

Pearlington Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I arrived at Pearlington on the first day of January, and commenced work in my new field of labor. An acquaintance of about five weeks with the charge has made a favorable impression on my mind, and I feel like giving expression to that effect. The people here are generally employed in the pursuit of an honest living, and there is less idling than I have ever seen in a place of the size of Pearlington; therefore sobriety and peaceable deportment are characteristics among the people. The large lumber business of Poitevant & Favre, at Pearlington, Carle & Weston, at Logtown, and Poitevent, at Gainesville, furnishes employment and sustenance for hundreds of people. Thus it may be seen how the capital of individuals may be made a blessing to whole communities. And when this controlling influence is consecrated to the Lord there is no telling the good it may do, directly and indirectly. It builds churches, establishes schools, and sustains the enterprises for the intellectual and moral improvement of the world. At Pearlington a new Masonic lodge has just been finished. A new Methodist Church is also in progress, which, it is hoped, will soon be ready for use. Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather, the congregations for religious services have been at a good average, and the interest is encouraging. As to the "reception," I may say there was on time for preconcerted action, and therefore no embarrassment on the part of givers or receivers, but the giving and receiving commenced the day we entered the parsonage, and has continued, at times, to this day, so that we may say we have "all and abound," and, while we thank the good people for their kindness, we would also say: "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

J. W. SANDELL.

Colporteurage in Louisiana.

I started out in August last. Received my books at the tramway in Rapides parish. I went up Bayou Lamoni and Bayou Robert, and down Bayou Beouff to Lecompte. In fifteen days I sold 247 books, and gave away 14. I found 121 families destitute of the word of God. Furnished 61 families with books. I found one colored man who wanted a Discipline; said many of his friends knew nothing about the doctrine of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. I did not have any, but told him I would bring him one. I was glad he felt concerned about the doctrine of our church. Many of our white brethren know but little about our Discipline, and but few have it. Where the people regard the Sabbath by going to church, and have schools, they were doing better than those who neglect such duties and privileges, and I sold more books. I had a very pleasant time; saw many of my old friends, who received me kindly, and helped me in my mission. When I read Bro. Jones' troubles in his colporteurage I feel to thank God for the kind friends I found. No one charged me anything for staying with them. May God bless them for their kindness. Our country is improving. Railroads are building. Success to the ADVOCATE.

D. B.

SPENCE HILL, Feb. 9, 1882.

Marriages.

SUTTOON—ABLES.—January 26, 1882, at Springfield, La., by Rev. R. F. Flowers, Mr. Marion Suttoon to Miss Caroline Ables.

FANT—GIBSON.—February 1, 1882, at Wesson, Miss., by Rev. W. W. Hooper, Mr. B. R. Fant and Miss E. J. Gibson.

ROSE—WILSON.—February 2, 1882, at Franklin, La., by Rev. T. K. Faint Lelloy, Mr. William Anderson Rose and Miss Ida Henry Wilson. Both of St. Mary parish, La.

CHILDS—GARECHT.—At the residence of the groom's mother, Franklin, La., by Rev. S. K. Faint Lelloy, Mr. Chas. M. W. Childs and Miss Rosena Garecht. Both of St. Mary parish, La.

DUKE—EPPERSON.—February 2, 1882, at the residence of Mr. R. S. Wilkins, Washington, La., by Rev. M. C. Manly, Mr. Mayo S. Duke to Miss Ida Epperson. All of St. Landry parish.

DELBACH—RICHARD.—January 26, 1882, by Rev. M. C. Manly, Mr. Alvin Delbach to Mrs. Richard. All of St. Landry parish.

Obituaries.

MELLOWN—JULIA MELLOWN, daughter of Mary and George Hopkins, was born near Newbern, Ala., January 28, 1840, and departed this life near Gaston, Ala., January 18, 1882, aged forty-one years, eleven months and twenty days.

At thirteen years of age she embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Newbern, Ala., her native place, and remained a devoted member till her decease.

From childhood the life of our sister was characterized by devotion to high moral and Christian principles. Of her only it be truly said she was faithful in all the relations of life. As a daughter trustful and conscientious; as a wife and mother kind and gentle; as a neighbor, generous and accommodating, and as a member of the church, she loved it and tried to observe its laws. As a book the Holy Bible was her richest treasure and she had read it through a number of times.

So quiet and gentle in her manners, so amiable in her disposition, so faithful in all her obligations to the Church and society her loss will be deeply felt at Coke Chapel, while the home of our brother will be deprived of its brightest jewel, and his life of its chief source of earthly happiness. Her last illness (a somewhat protracted one) and her sufferings severe, but her faith triumphed and she was ready to depart and be with Christ. An aged father, brother, sister, husband and three orphans are left to mourn their loss. God bless the bereaved ones and especially Bro. Mellown and his little children.

G. HAWKINS.

GRAHAM.—Died on April 1, 1881, at his plantation on Red River, Miller county, Ark., Mr. THOMAS GRAHAM, in the fifty-fourth year of his age. Mr. Graham was one of the early settlers of Bossier parish where he lived esteemed by all until the close of the war, when he, his sister and aged mother settled on Red River and there pursued his vocation of planter until his death.

He was born in Lowndes county, Ala., in 1827, where he remained until he was about ten years old, when his father, the late Capt. Joseph Graham, removed to Louisiana with a large family and where remains repose quietly in the beautiful family cemetery near Rocky Mount, Bossier parish. He married in 1860 Miss Virginia Strother, of West Virginia, but only lived about four years of married life. He did not leave any children; but a disconsolate aged mother of eighty years and a loving, confiding sister are left to bear their sad bereavement. He was respected by all for his many sterling qualities of charity, benevolence and integrity. He, like many others, lost much property by the war, but he seemed resigned to the will of God in all the sore bereavements that befell the family. Many of his former acquaintances will long cherish the memory of one they esteemed so highly, but this reminds of our own slender hold on life. Soon we and must "go the way of all the earth" as well as Joshua, the servant of God.

AMICUS.

MCBRIDE.—HENRY EDGAR, son of Hannah and Rev. A. L. McBride, aged four months, died February 1, 1882.

By the inscrutable will of an All-wise providence has this tender bud thus early been transplanted to the garden of Paradise. Whilst its angelic spirit beholds the face of our Heavenly Father may the bereaved parents, brothers and sisters console themselves with the precious promise that they may go to it although it can never come back to them. In submission to his will may the language of our hearts be, "The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

A FRIEND.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1882.

GOLD, FRANKINCENSE, MYRRH.

BY J. E. RANKIN, D. D.

[From the German of Erdmann Nemmeister.]

Jesus, wondrous, wondrous Star
Out of Jacob, who art rising,
Glad I greet thee, from afar,
Feeble gifts in love deviising.
Poor I am, yet do thou take,
And enrich them, for love's sake.

Take the gold of faith I bring;
'Tis the gift thy hand first gave me,
'Tis thy fav'rite offering;
Bring this chief, I know thou'd'st have me.
Make it pure, and it attest,
With thy image fair impressed.

Take the incense of my prayer,
Like a cloud to thee ascending;
Wailing stand I, everywhere,
Heart and humble service blending;
When I ask, speak thou again,
I am Yea, and am Amen.

Bitter sorrow take for myrrh!
Ah my sins, my sins, they grieve me,
When I kneel a worshiper,
Be thou faithful to relieve me;
This is all I have to bring;
Jesus, take the offering.

Mistakes.

BY A. M. H. B.

Reconcile yourself (if you are to remain in this world at all) to the conditions of your being; do not vex yourself, and break your heart, struggling against what is irremediable. Do not look to find here what is not to be found. Do not fancy that wiser and luckier folk have found it, and that you would have found it too but for some unhappy mistake you made at a critical turning in your life. The mistakes you have made, if you be an ordinary mortal living an ordinary life, have not, in fact, done your life much harm. You are making just about as much of things in this world as it was in you to make at all. Make the best of the bargain you have made, in this or that. Doubtless you see it was not a perfectly wise bargain. You would not make it again. Had you been considerably wiser than Solomon you might never have made it at all. But you are in for it now. Make the best of things, in good-nature and cheerfulness. Do not mope and keep thinking, thinking, how much you might have done, and like Mr. Bumble how cheap you went. So doing, you will be making the very worst of things. You will be deliberately blackening the sky under which you must live if you are to live at all: you will grow into a curse to yourself and a nuisance to your neighbors. There is plenty for you to do: Go and do it. There are people a thousand times worse off than you: Try and help them. And for any sake, do not be always thinking about yourself, get away from that unsatisfactory subject of contemplation. And be quite sure that if you have told your special friends, about ten times each, how unhappy you are and how many blunders you have made, they are by this time most uncommonly sick both of you and them.

Being what you are, it is quite certain that if you had not done the foolish things you did, you would have done something else as bad or worse. You married early, when you could not afford it: you had some anxious years: days have been when it seemed the poor head was to go under altogether. Well, but it did not. You have lived through these anxieties: Why recall them? You have got upon firm ground: Be thankful: It is far more and better than you deserve. And the burden which lay on you so heavily may have saved you from making an inexpressible fool of yourself. A man of sixty dangling after some silly girl of five and twenty is an amazing and humbling object of contemplation. Even he suspects himself to be a fool: everybody knows it. Now you, with your seven grown up sons, and with your masterful wife, are safe not to make a fool of yourself in that particular way. Other ways are open to you. But not one which leads to manifestations quite so deplorable and contemptible. It is likely enough you would advise a friend not to take the turning you did. A man who has a mother-in-law will generally counsel any mortal to marry an orphan. But this comes of your knowing the evils you have, and being unaware of those which are waiting round the corner, and from which no earthly lot is free. You must take all things here, your profession, your wife, your house, your horses, your servants, your native country with its climate, all your environment, for better, for worse. A friend worries you by little weaknesses; but he is better than no friend at all. He may be likened to a gift of a thousand pounds, subject to a deduction of two hundred and fifty. It is a disadvantage about a locomotive engine that it gets so hot. But you must accept the engine under that deduction. For it will not go unless it be so hot. If you being a human being living in this imperfect system of things, will break away from everything which has its inconveniences, you will leave yourself without any possessions or surroundings whatsoever.

To speak gravely: One remarks, in these advancing years, that the great anxiety and care of worthy men and women, growing old, are about their children: the lesser ones, still going to school: the bigger ones, for who you are seeking an aim in life, or who have gone far away. No doubt, if you had no children, you would be free from many anxious thoughts. The income would go much farther. The furniture and the painting of your house would last much longer. You could indulge in many luxuries, now impossible. You might buy books without stint, and cross the Alps yearly. But you would not have these selfish indulgences at the price. It is a cheerless thing, a childless home. No one will bear with you in the last fretfulness, and smooth the last steps of your way like your own boy or girl. If there be in you any good at all, it has been brought out mainly by the continual presence and charge of your children. And you have had gleams of a pure and unselfish happiness, which are unknown in a lonely life. Had you kept clear of the responsibilities of life, and given no hostages to fortune, you would, no doubt, have presented a narrow mark to the shafts of care. But, unless you were a very poor creature indeed, every time you heard the laughter of the little ones, and watched their winsome ways, their thoughtless merriment, your would have felt that you had missed the best happiness of this life. And to do that of your own free will is surely the greatest of all mistakes. Your library may be full of beautifully-bound volumes; your carpets unworn; your walls unmarked by little fingers; no sudden noises may jar your nerves; no eager little face look in when you are in the very middle of a complicated sentence, and break the tenor of your thoughts. And you never yet saw the childish eyes close upon this world; nor received the last kiss from lips that were growing cold, when Somebody as of old "called to himself a little child." You never knew that terrible trial, which no faith and no hope could make anything other. But neither did you ever see the bright looks lighten up when you return from a brief absence; nor did little pattering feet run to meet you. You never were earnestly questioned as to what you had brought; having earnestly considered London shop-windows in the search for something to bring. You may have been told, but you do not know, as you might, that these little creatures, coming from where Wordsworth tells us) whether abiding with you here, or gone on before you, are the instruments in the Best Hand to bring out the very best that can be made of his creatures here. All that good is worth having, even at what it costs. A great deal has to be paid for it, no doubt. But unless in morbid and transient moods you would not wish to have done without it.

Therefore, instead of moaning over days past, with their opportunities missed, and their idiotic sayings and doings, we shall all set ourselves to do the best we can in the days which yet remain. And if there be blots on the page, which can never be rubbed out where we are, there is a supreme consolation that some day we may hope to turn over a quite new leaf, and to make a quite fresh start, far away.—Frazer's Magazine.

Novel Reading.

One of the greatest powers for evil is the low and degraded writings our boys and girls are reading. Even educators, I fear, are not fully aroused to the terrible influence this reading is exerting upon the lives and characters of the young.

Some three years ago, in a lecture on "Fiction," before a Boston audience, the late Mr. Fields said that he visited the Pomeroy boy in prison, a few days previous, and asked him if he had ever read much. "Yes," replied the boy; "I have read a great deal." "Well, what have you read?" "Principally dime novels." "What novel did you like best?" "Buffalo Bill, because it is full of murders and pictures of murders." Doubtless this boy is naturally depraved, but the immediate cause of his committing his horrible acts was the class of reading which he indulged. A year or two ago, a number of lads from wealthy and refined families of New York City, through the degrading influence of dime novel reading, organized themselves into a band of burglars. Last year two youths murdered an old gentleman in Ohio, from the same cause. How frequently we read in the daily papers of boys running away from home with cards, revolvers and dime novels in their pockets!

Yet, compared to the vast numbers of our youth who are demoralized by pernicious reading, the cases that are reported in public print are the exceptions. The influence of this reading is seen in the slang language in which our youth indulge; in their disrespect for parental authority; in their treatment of the aged; in the wrong ideas of life which they entertain; and in the general spirit of insubordination.

Let us look at the circumstances in which our youth are placed in regard to literature.

At the homes of a large part of them there is scarcely a book, except the text-books of the children themselves. At the homes of a majority of those, remaining may be found a few books upon the parlor table, which are usually considered by the parent as too nice for the children to read. It is safe to say that very few indeed of our youth have access to a good home library. That child who is trained at home to a love of reading good books is the exception. Is it any wonder, then, that our youth yield to the temptation to read the worst kind of story papers and novels, which are everywhere thrown around them? In addition to other enticements, we find near all the large school buildings of our cities, shops which keep, besides pens, pencils and school-books, a large assortment of trashy story papers and novels. What a comment on the public schools! The venders of these papers place those having pictures of murders and Indian outrages, etc., in the windows. The children, attracted by these pictures, buy the papers and read the stories. They soon become intensely interested in the stories and in the slang language in which they are written. The boys and girls buy novels of the same or of a worse tendency for from five to ten cents. These are purchased and devoured, and thus by degrees is formed the habit of reading this pernicious class of writings. The children are not to blame. There is nothing in their home surroundings to counteract these evil tendencies. The schools have been standing by, saying: "Don't touch, don't touch," but doing nothing to interest the pupils in good reading.

Knowing from experience, as I do, that it is the power of the schools to control almost entirely the reading of the pupils, and to implant in them correct literary tastes, I appeal to boards of education, to superintendents and teachers, to take immediate and decisive steps to make this literary training in all the grades a prominent feature of school work, as the only effectual way to keep the youth of our country from reading the terrible dime novel is to interest them in the writings of good authors, and this must be done, if at all, by the schools.—John B. Peaslee on Education.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

The calling in of an American medical missionary, Miss Howard, by the wife of Governor-General Li, was an event in China missions a year or two ago whose results promise to be vast and far-reaching. The cure of Lady Li led to the establishment of a dispensary, of which medical missionaries were put in charge, and which is supported at the expense of the Governor-General. A similar event has just occurred in India, and it is thought of sufficient importance by the London Times to make the subject of a "leader." The facts are as follows: The wife of the Maharajah of Punnah, the capital of one of the native States of India, about two hundred miles north of Lucknow, fell sick, and, the custom of the country preventing her from employing an English surgeon (a Hindu lady of high caste is not permitted to be seen by a man other than her husband, father, or brother,) she sent to Lucknow, for a woman medical missionary. Miss Hollby, who represents a British zenana and medical mission, responded, and, journeying to Punnah, succeeded by her skill in restoring the Maharanee, and at the same time treated other patients. Before leaving Punnah, she had a touching interview with the Maharanee, who was most grateful for the relief which had been given her. She begged Miss Beilby to tell the Queen and the Prince and Princess of Wales and the people of England "what the women in the zenanas in India suffer when they are sick." The message was written down and placed in a locket and sent by Miss Beilby to the Empress of India. She did not ask that the barriers of caste be broken down or that the zenana be abolished; but that woman physicians be sent to India from Europe. The seclusions of high-caste women is more rigid in Bengal than in other presidencies, and Dr. Francis, of the Bengal medical service, says European women missionaries could easily obtain the monopoly of this practice. There are upward of 34,000,000 of women in Bengal, of whom perhaps one-seventh are among the secluded class and can only be treated by a foreign male physician through a native nurse. There is now open a wonderful field for woman medical missionaries of the right stamp. Missionary societies can afford to send all for whom an adequate training can be procured, for the practice in the high-caste zenanas will, doubtless, prove lucrative. Says the Times: "It is highly creditable to missionary societies that they should have initiated this method of spreading Christianity." The lady doctor, it adds, "will carry enlightened ideas into the darkness of Hindoo homes; and when the mass is once melted it will be ready to receive the impressions which our Christian missions seek to convey.—New York Independent.

Very unpromising material are the people at Banza Manteke, on the Congo River, to make Christians of. Mr. Richards, of the Livingstone Inland Mission, describes them as very stupid and depraved and most wickedly lazy. The women wear very scanty clothing. They like clothes, but are unwilling to work to procure them. Much of their food grows without cultivation and for the rest they have no care. They have no idea of immorality, no distinct idea of a soul or spirit. The word which most nearly conveys the meaning of soul or spirit is kivi, which means "shadow." They are strangers to gratitude and think that the missionaries have come to make them more comfortable, and that it is a great favor to permit them to provide food and clothes. It is very difficult to awaken in them any desire for improvement. When they are reproved for their heathenish practices they say: "You are one kind of men, we another. What is not good for you is good for us." They are not warlike. They have a great horror of slavery. They do not believe in the doctrine of human depravity and think themselves very good. Mr. Richards, who is assisted by his wife, says that women are not in the way on the Congo. On the contrary, they are a very great help and can do as much and as important work as men. The body of the Rev. Adam McCall, the head of the Mission, has just been brought to England for burial. One of his last letters, from Banana station, on the Congo, stated that delay was caused by the difficulty in getting Kroo boys. The natives are stupid and lazy. He wrote: "All our party have been down with fever already, with the exception of Waters, who is as yet perfectly well and strong and active. Ingham was the first to surrender." But he soon recovered and the others were in turn attacked. Mr. McCall himself recovered from that attack, and said he felt well and strong. The steam launch "Livingstone," on the Lower Congo, proves to be a great acquisition. A lady in Tasmania has promised a similar though larger steamer for the Upper Congo.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIANS.—The General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church appointed at its last session two Committees to revise the Confession of Faith. These Committees met last month and completed the work. The changes agreed upon were adopted unanimously. The aim of the Committees, as officially stated, has been "to make the Confession of Faith consistent in all parts with itself, and the whole consistent with the system of Bible truth held and taught by the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; also to reduce the statements of doctrine and render their meaning clear and explicit; and to render the form of government and other parts of the book conformable to the wants and usages of the Church." The text of the revision will be published shortly.

In the royal speech on the opening of the Prussian Landtag, January 14, the paragraph concerning the church expresses the lively satisfaction of the government at being able to re-establish regular administration in the several Catholic Bishopries. It announces an ecclesiastical bill, similar to that known as the July Law, granting to the government discretionary powers, but of larger scope than those of the May Law. Congratulatory reference was made to the friendly relations between Prussia and the Vatican, rendering the resumption of diplomatic intercourse possible. The motion of Herr Windthorst abrogating the law forbidding the exercise of ecclesiastical functions without government authorization was passed to a second reading in the Reichstag, January 13, by a vote of 233 to 115.

NO ROOM FOR BOASTING.—Trinity Episcopal Church, Newark, N. J., has had a sore experience of late. Baldwin, the cashier, who wrecked a bank so fearfully, and his relative, Theodore Baldwin, who helped him, were leaders in this church—the former a vestryman. And now Palmer, who has robbed the city treasury of a large sum, turns out to be of the same flock, possessed, too, of a fine taste in Christmas decorations and in floral offerings at Easter. But let no Pharisaism enter the hearts of the people of other communions—for rascality has many homes, and detected roguery may come from the sanctuaries of the most orthodox people.—The Presbyterian.

—A telegram from the City of Mexico, February 3, says: "The Conference of Methodist Episcopal Missionaries, in session here this week, ended to-day. Twenty-three missionaries attended. Bishop Andrews, presided. According to reports submitted, the year's work has been remarkable. It is stated that the number of churches established is beyond the means of the Conference. The most notable event of the year was the conversion of a prominent and learned Catholic priest, Dr. Fuentes."

—The Baptist Weekly bewails the meagre contributions of Baptists for foreign missions. It goes into statistics to show that the actual contributions of the churches is shockingly small. Of the income from churches and individuals, amounting to $169,885, it finds that $100,611 came from 178 churches and 61 individuals. Apportioning the balance among the rest of the patronizing churches, it secures as a result an average contribution of 11 cents per member.

—A Chinese hospital has been opened at Hankow, which, though wholly under native management and support, is conducted on Christian principles, and religious services are daily held in it. It was organized by the chief native assistant of the hospital under the care of the London Missionary Society.

—A missionary writes from Ceylon: "It is a noticeable fact that where Christian women are married to heathen husbands, generally the influence in the household is Christian; whereas, when a Christian man takes a heathen woman, he usually loses his Christian character, and the influences of the household are on the side of heathenism."

—There are thirteen missionary bishops in the Protestant Episcopal Church, each receiving $3,000 and having charge of about 400 missionaries. Three hundred of these labor among white people, forty-one among colored people, and fifty-two among Indians.

—At the Episcopal Missionary Conference held in Calvary Church last week, Dr. Nelson, of Shanghai, China, said, in regard to the work in that field, that the members of other denominations were going ahead of the Episcopal Church in every direction. It is not customary in the "American Church" to make such acknowledgments.

—The Church Missionary Society will send out eight missionaries to Central Africa, instead of five—three to Uyui, three to the South end of the Victoria Nyanza, and two to Rubaga, Mtesa's capital.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The question of the separation of Church and state in Switzerland is a disturbing element in some of the cantons, especially the French. It is difficult under the present laws, which confer universal suffrage without imposing any religious conditions, to keep ultra-radicalism from appropriating the pulpits, and the more faithful members of the National Protestant Church are organizing against the sweeping tide of Rationalism. Dr. De Pressense gives an interesting account of the struggle in the Canton of Neuchatel. Speaking of the National Reformed Church of the Canton, he says: "It has a cultivated, devout clergy, for the most part Evangelical, and it has so far resisted all attempts made to introduce Rationalism. We cannot, indeed, speak of its constitution as at all worthy of admiration. It has no confession of faith, and practically it embraces every shade of faith or no faith. No personal adhesion to the fundamental truths of the Gospel is required of either its members or electors. The union of Church and state prevails, with all its ecclesiastical consequences. There is no real guaranty in its institutions against the intrusion of a non-Evangelical pastor. If, as a matter of fact, this is generally, though not altogether avoided, there is no legal provision against it, if the claim were pressed by any section of the Church." The Evangelicals have established an organ which is taking ground in favor of a free Church movement such as that which has been inaugurated in Geneva. It has, however, a bitter opposition to contend with, and the strife has resulted in an ecclesiastical lawsuit. M. Narbel, of Orbes, one of the most industrious and faithful of Evangelical pastors, has been arraigned on such trifling charges as that on one occasion he was late at a funeral, that on another he had chanted some of the Psalms in which David exults over the discomfiture of his enemies, that he gave too much time to journalism, and that he sought the enfranchisement of the National Church. Dr. De Pressense thinks the case must end in the dismission or submission of M. Narbel.—N. Y. Independent.

—Mr. E. De Pressense says the Catholic theological schools supported by the state in France are practically useless. "They contribute nothing at all to the preparation of the ecclesiastics of the future. It is in the seminaries that the priestly recruits are trained, fashioned, and fitted for their office. On no consideration would the Catholic Church see its Levites exposed to the freer atmosphere of the theological faculties, even the most orthodox, for these come into inevitable contact with the other faculties forming part of the same university. Laymen, moreover, are admitted to share in the instruction. On all these grounds, they have always been regarded with suspicion by the Ultramontane Episcopate. Everywhere, except in Paris, their lecture rooms are deserted. The teaching in the Catholic theological faculty of Paris has been successful only because it has been comparatively liberal, enjoying the privilege of Father Gratry's services." Now the minister of public worship proposes to abolish all the theological faculties supported by the state. This is designed to inflict great injury on the Reformed Protestant Church.

—The following statistics are given for the Presbyterian churches of England and Scotland. Established Church of Scotland: 1,569 churches and preaching stations; 1,660 ministers and licentiate; communicants, 520,000. Raised for home and foreign missionary purposes, £377,750. The Free Church of Scotland: 1,006 congregations, 1,031 ministers, 230,000 communicants. Foreign missionary income, £75,000; raised for all church purposes, including missions, £330,000. The United Presbyterian Church: 519 congregations in Scotland and Ireland, and 587 ministers, with a churchmembership of 173,982. Foreign missionary income, £32,536. Total church income, £383,600. The Presbyterian Church of England: 272 congregations and 7 stations, with 35,286 communicants, 18 foreign missionaries. Foreign missionary income, £12,000. Total for all church purposes, £205,630. There are also 20 churches in England, formed into four presbyteries, in connection with the Established Church of Scotland.

—The report of the religious status of the students of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., as read before the students on the day of Prayer for Colleges, January 26, shows that that institution has enjoyed to an unusual extent the presence of the Spirit of the Lord during the past year. In the college classes there are thirty-two students, all of whom are Christians, or one hundred per cent. In the college preparatory classes there are forty-seven students, of whom forty-four are Christians, or more than ninety-three per cent. In the higher normal class there are twenty-one, of whom twenty are Christians, or more than ninety-five per cent. In the entire college department there are one hundred, of whom ninety-six are Christians, or ninety-six per cent. In the Normal School seventy-seven per cent. of the entire attendance are Christians. During the past year, since the last day of Prayer for Colleges, in 1881, eighty-six of the students have become Christians.—Christian Union.

Our Young People.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS.

Ev'ry little grape, dear, that clings unto a vine,
Expects some day to ripen its little drop of wine.
Ev'ry little girl, I think, expects in time to be Exactly like her own mamma—as grand and sweet as she.
Ev'ry little boy who has a pocket of his own,
Expects to be the biggest man the world has ever known.
Ev'ry little piggy-wig that makes its little wail,
Expects to be a great big pig with a very curly tail.
Ev'ry little lambkin, too, that frisks upon the green,
Expects to be the finest sheep that ever yet was seen.
Ev'ry little baby-colt expects to be a horse;
Ev'ry little pup expects to be a dog, of course.
Ev'ry little kitten pet, so tender and so nice,
Expects to be a grown-up cat and live on rats and mice.
Ev'ry little fluffy chick, in downy yellow dress,
Expects, some day, to crow and strut or cackle at its best.
Ev'ry little baby-bird that peeps from out its nest,
Expects some day to cross the sky from glowing east to west.
Now ev'ry hope I've mentioned here will bring its sure event,
Provided nothing happens, dear, to hinder or prevent.

Some Good Rules for the Young.

MR. EDITOR: Wishing to contribute to the ADVOCATE, allow me to say the dear old ADVOCATE, its weekly visits coming as a dear old friend with a balm for every woe.

"THE NURSERY RULES."

1. Rise early.
2. Wash your face.
3. Brush your hair.
4. Brush your teeth well.
5. Put everything in place.
6. Be kind to each other.
7. Don't tease.
8. Don't say I can't, I won't, or I don't want to, when bid to do anything.
9. Obey promptly, and in a cheerful manner.

The contributor would say, by way of encouragement:

Come, children of one household,
Unite and all agree,
To practice well the nursery rules,
Just nine in number, all told.

Found in the scrap-book of a mother who sedulously strove to educate her children for usefulness here, and happiness hereafter, sacrificing every comfort and self-ease, regarding, as she was known to say, "earth's cares were earth's pleasures." It was emphatically so with her, and, though long since passed away, being lent to us but a few brief years, we, who survive, regard her stay as a boon from heaven. Not dead, but gone before.

I've been working all an old lady could for the ADVOCATE, subscribed last year for one, and lend it out to others to induce them to take it; regret I could not pay in advance, which I expect to do hereafter. Regarding me a life time subscriber, I am yours,

MRS. S. A. HIVES.

HOLLY SPRINGS, MISS.

Wild Animals and Their Tamers.

Almost every dangerous creature in the best recent collections has been both wild and tame. The lions, the tigers, the panthers, are as large and terrible-looking as ever, and it would be just as dreadful a thing if they should get loose among the spectators. It is worth while, therefore, to see them all playfully submissive to a little man or woman with a mere whip in hand.

The more a wild beast can be taught, the more he is worth; but there is no telling how stupid some lions and other savages are. The very best of them, even after all kinds of good schooling, retain a lurking disposition to make a meal off their keeper, or of anybody else, if a good opportunity is given for it. 'Taming' is a process which has to be constantly renewed, for the tamest tiger is a tiger still, and there has been no change in his born conviction that all other living creatures are 'game' for him. The best lion and tiger 'kings' of to-day say that every time they enter a cage containing those fierce creatures they carry their lives in their hands.

'Gentle?' remarked one of these venturesome folk the other day. 'Those tigers of mine? Why, do you see that whip? I know, as well as I know anything, that if I drop that whip when I am in that cage, they'll be on me. Their idea of obedience is connected with the whip, first; then with my voice; then with my face. Severity? Cruelty? No use at all. I never use cruelty in training them. Only patience. When I take on a new cage of beasts I work to get them used to me; feeding them; cleaning the cage; talking to them; all that sort of thing; before I go in among them. Then I do that. It's a ticklish piece of business, going in the first time; and I pick my chance for it when they're specially peaceable. I go right in, just as if it were a matter of course, but I keep my eyes about me. It's all humbug that a man's eye has any power over a wild beast. Your eyes are to watch their motions—that's all. They'll find out quickly enough if you're getting careless. They're sure enough to be watching you all the time. Are they intelligent? Well, there's as much difference among 'em as there is among men. I can train a really intelligent lion, right from the wild, in about four weeks, so he will do all that the lion kings make them do. A lioness always takes a couple of weeks longer, and so does a leopard or a tiger. You can't get a hyena well in hand inside of two months. They're the meanest of brutes. They never understand anything but a club. The easiest to train, because they know the most, are pumas. I can teach a puma all it needs to know in four weeks. Affection? Touch those fellows if you dare, you? That's all nonsense. They'll fawn and fawn on you, you'll think you've done it, may be. Then you go into the cage, if you want to, without your whip, or when they're in bad temper, and find out for yourself what they'll do.

'There's great odds among them, though, and that young puma with her head up to be kissed is what you might call gentle. Only they're all treacherous. Every lion king gets sick of it after awhile. I could name more than a dozen of the best who have given it up right in the prime of life.'

The 'keeper' question is one of prime importance in collecting and managing wild animals. Trainers of the right kind are scarce, and although high pay can hardly be afforded, it will not do to put rare and costly animals in the care of stupid or ignorant men. Such qualities as courage, patience, good temper, and natural aptitude for the occupation are also needful, and they are not always to be had for the asking. Unless the right men are secured, however, the failure of the menagerie is only a question of time. As for the 'specimens' themselves, it is much easier to obtain them than it once was, owing to the better facilities for transporting them from the several 'wild-beast countries.' Catching them in their native wilderness has been a regular trade for ages.

The market price of a menagerie animal of any kind varies from time to time, like that of other merchandise, according to the demand and supply. A writer stated recently that zebras are sold at a little over $2,000 a pair, guns at about $800 a pair, while rhinoceroses cost some $6,000 per pair, and tigers about $1,500 each. A short time ago, however, and perhaps now, a very good 'unsalted' tiger could be bought in London for from $300 to $800. The same beast, the moment he takes kindly to learning and promises to be sparing of his keepers, doubles and trebles in value. There is no telling what he would be worth should he show further signs of intellect or good morals, but he is like a human being in this respect—the more he knows, the more it will pay to give for him. The same rule applies to the entire list, from elephants to monkeys, so that no precise idea can be given of the probable cost of a menagerie.—St. Nihilus.

A CLEVER DOG.—A young lady living in Shropshire owns a very handsome brown fox-terrier, named Minto. Minto is a great pet with every one; and, though she is a very gentle creature to those she knows, she is fierce at beggars or strangers who dare to set foot on her master's premises.

One day, Minto's mistress was much distressed, as she had lost a gold locket which she wore and valued. She remembered having crossed a field in her father's grounds in the morning, where the grass was growing for hay. After hunting everywhere else for her locket, the thought struck her that she might have dropped it in the long grass. She set off at once for the field, followed by her faithful companion, Minto.

She used to chatter to the dog in the same way as she would to a human being. In her distress, she turned round rather sharply to the dog, who was close at heel, and said:

"Minto, can't you find my locket?"

Minto looked at her for a moment, then suddenly left her side and ran on in front in the narrow pathway, with her nose on the ground, sniffing. Presently, the animal came to a tuft of coarse grass. She suddenly stopped, thrust her nose in among the grass, and then threw her head up and gave a long, low howl. Her mistress did not notice her at first, but at last she noticed the dog's strange behavior. On going up to the spot, she saw Minto standing, looking very proud, with the gold locket lying at her feet.

But for Minto she could not have found it, for it had fallen into the midst of the long grass.—Chatterbox.

"THE HEATHEN HAVE BEAT."—One day Robert's uncle gave him a penny.

"Now," said he, "I'll have some candy, for I've been wanting some for a long while."

"Is that the best way you can use your penny?" asked his mother.

"O, yes! I want the candy very much." And he hurried on his cap and off he ran in great haste.

His mother was sitting at the window and saw him running along, and then he stopped. She thought he had lost his penny; but he started off again and soon reached the door of the candy-store, and then he stood there awhile with his hand on the latch and his eye on the candy. His mother was wondering what he was waiting for; then she was more surprised to see him come off the stop and run back home without going in.

In a minute he rushed into the parlor with a bright glance in his eye, as he exclaimed:

"Mother, the heathen have beat! the heathen have beat!"

"What do you mean by the heathen have beat?"

"Why, mother, as I went along I kept hearing the heathen say, 'Give us your penny to help to send us good missionaries: We want Bibles and tracts. Help us, little boy, won't you?' And I kept saying, 'O I want the candy.' At last the heathen beat; and I am going to put my penny into the missionary-box. It shall go to the heathen."—Missionary Echoes.

THE TRIANGLE.—The name of this little instrument is said to have been derived from "thimbell," being at first thimble, and afterward thimble. It is a Dutch invention, and was brought to England about the year 1605 by John Lofting. Formerly iron and brass were used, but lately steel, silver, and gold have taken their places. In the ordinary manufacture, thin plates of metal are introduced into a die and punched into shape.

In Paris gold thimbles are manufactured to a large extent. Thin sheets of sheet-iron are cut into discs of about two inches diameter. These, being heated red-hot, are struck with a punch into a number of holes, gradually increasing in depth, to give them proper shape. The thimble is then trimmed, polished, and indented around its outer surface with a number of little holes by means of a small wheel. It is then converted into steel by the cementation process, tempered, scoured, and brought to a blue color.

A thin sheet of gold is then introduced into the interior, and fastened to the steel by means of a polished steel mandril. Gold leaf is then applied to the outside, and attached to it by pressure, the edges being fastened to a small groove made to receive them. The thimble is then ready for use.—Little Granger.

BRAGGING BOYS AND DUMB BOYS.—Have you not heard how some boys brag about what they are intending to do? They are always going to do wonders.

"You just wait," say they, "and we will show you, some day, what we can do."

Now is your chance, we would say to you. You are old enough now, and you will never have a better time. Better begin now: we are anxious to see your first effort. Let us at once see you animated by the practical purpose of doing, not by the dream, and then we will conquer your future for you.

Make an effort. Even if you shall fail the first time, a hundred times, still continue to try. The result is inevitable. It is only those who falter that come to grief.—Well Spring.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. J. W. BUSH. REV. W. L. C. HINSCOTT
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY. REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D.
REV. J. T. SAWYER.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1882.

Death of Bishop Wightman.

A press dispatch announced to us, on Thursday last, that Bishop Wightman died, at his residence, in Charleston, S. C., on the morning of February 15.

The sad tidings had been expected for some time. For several months there has been little hope of the Bishop's recovery. The long and painful suspense is ended, and another of our beloved and honored chief shepherds has been called away. For more than a year Bishop Wightman had been incapacitated for active duty, and, for much of this time, he had been confined to his room and bed. Blessed with a robust constitution, it has been stated that he had never been seriously ill until this sudden giving way of his health occurred. During these weary months he has suffered patiently, and occasional reports from the sick-bed have contained gratifying assurance of his great spiritual comfort, and of his entire resignation to the will of God. He has during this protracted illness witnessed a good profession. At evening time it was light. At this writing we have no account of his last moments, but we know that his last days were marked by a peace-passing understanding, and by a joy unspeakable, and full of glory.

In the midst of labor unabated, and while holding a District Conference, we believe, and while preaching, he was stricken, and, in weariness and pain, retired from his loved employ. Overwork may have brought on the attack, and hastened the general breaking down of his naturally fine constitution. But he was an old man, and in no event could his days of active service have been greatly prolonged. It is difficult, indeed, for us to realize that Bishop Wightman had passed the line of three-score and ten. Up to the time of his last sickness he showed none of the infirmities of age. He did not look old, and he seemed to be elastic and vigorous in body, and mentally at his very best. Years and labor were doubtless telling upon him before the final blow came which left him a physical wreck.

William May Wightman was born in South Carolina, in 1808, and he entered the itinerant ministry, in the South Carolina Conference, in 1828. He was appointed editor of the Southern Christian Advocate in 1840; elected president of Wofford College in 1854; chancellor of the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., in 1859, and at the General Conference, held in New Orleans, April, 1866, he was elected Bishop. If the above dates are accurate it will be seen that twelve years were spent in the pastoral work, fourteen as editor, twelve at the head of institutions of learning, and nearly sixteen as Bishop.

It can be said with truth that these important and responsible positions were filled by him with distinguished ability. With the bearing and manners of a refined gentleman, and with scholarly attainments and tastes, he was a model of gentleness and propriety. His habits as a student, educator and editor never seemed to impair his preaching power. In the pulpit, when we have heard him, he was a true embassador of Christ, plain in style, fervid in spirit, and strong in his declaration of the whole counsel of God. In his long career as editor, he always impressed us as a writer of remarkable brilliancy and strength. Some of his editorials, such, for instance, as that on the death of Bishop Bascom, were hardly to be equalled. A volume of surpassing interest and value could be made up from selections from his editorial writings. His life of Bishop Capers is one of our best biographies. He was appointed to write the life of Bishop Soule, and it is much to be lamented that he did not accomplish it. It would, we doubt not, have been a work worthy of the subject, and a treasure to the church. Probably the demands upon his time and strength after he was elected Bishop made any considerable literary work impossible. As an educator Bishop Wightman stood very high. His connection with Wofford, and also with the Southern University, demonstrated his eminent capacity and fitness to be at the head of great institutions of learning, and he did a noble and lasting work in this department of usefulness. His retirement from the chancellorship of the Southern University was a loss to that institution, from which it has never recovered.

When elected Bishop, although about sixty years of age, he was in his full strength, and in the ripeness of his mental endowments. He brought to this important office large attainments in knowledge, a thoroughly trained intellect, a wide and intimate acquaintance with connectional affairs, entire devotion to his church, and a heart deeply imbued with the loftiest sense of spiritual and Christly consecration. As a Bishop, he filled the position well. In the chair of the General and Annual Conferences, in the stationing of the preachers, in the pulpit, he showed himself equal to the responsibilities and duties of every occasion. In his mingling with preachers and people he grew more and more in the confidence and love of the church. The more intimately he was known the more deeply was he esteemed and loved. He was a well-rounded man, symmetrical, well-balanced. Not the greatest of men in every department of work, or in any single gift, but averaging high in many aspects of mind and character; and great in the assemblage of qualities, rather than in any one dominating feature. In every place he was called to fill he acquitted himself well, and his long life, as we now rapidly glance at it, seems replete with the noblest endeavor and with the truest success. Infirmities and imperfections probably clung to him, as to all mortals, but, whatever they were, they were overshadowed by virtues and gifts of greatest beauty and excellence.

Full of years and of abundant labors, and honored and loved by the church, he has entered into rest. While we can recall his career in life with satisfaction, we can also, with faith and hope confirmed, consider the end of his conversation. During these months of suffering, and consciously lingering and waiting on the confines of the eternal world, our beloved Bishop has been enabled to triumph through grace. The unsearchable riches of Christ, which he preached from the pulpit, were exhibited in greater power in suffering. The ministry of affliction, as it wrought for him the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, was never more beautiful, and never more manifestly illuminated by the light of the unseen world.

Pure from Blood.

Paul, in his farewell interview with the elders of the church at Ephesus, called them to witness that he had done his whole duty, and that if any were lost it could not be laid to his account. He had not shunned to declare to that people "all the counsel of God," and he had kept nothing back that was profitable to them.

There is vast significance in these expressions: "I kept nothing back," "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." There was a pressure which the apostle resisted. The preacher is tempted to keep something back, and to shun or avoid declaring some part of the truth. Some truths are offensive to the hearers. The people may be driven away by unpalatable doctrine, or by reproof of their sins.

The strongest declaration of the apostle was this: "Wherefore I take you to record this day that I am pure from the blood of all men." This conviction was connected with the fact that he had kept nothing back, and that he had not shunned to declare all; and yet it seems to be a broader statement, and a profounder persuasion of ministerial fidelity. True, he had taught publicly, and from house to house. He had used every means to reach the people, and to those whom he had reached he had preached the whole gospel. Paul could say truly, "I am pure of the blood of all men," and yet it almost startles us as we read it.

Pure of the blood of all those Ephesians may have been his meaning, but it must also apply absolutely to all men. Neither the Christian, nor the Christian minister, can be comfortable under any other persuasion. To have upon our consciences the blood of men is most intolerable—of men anywhere. It is the blood of souls, their spiritual and eternal death, their everlasting ruin, that Paul deprecates. He loved to preach, he preached from love, and yet this sense of accountability crops out in nearly all his allusions to the Christian ministry and Christian life and duty. Concern for sinners, love for them, deep anxiety and compassion, are another aspect of the question. To be pure from the blood of immediate hearers, friends, associates, children, neighbors is needful for our tranquility. Can we testify to them that we are thus pure? And, beyond the circle of our personal contact, is it certain that no blood-guiltiness rests upon us?

However it may be, the danger is suggested, the peril to ourselves is possible. Honest and candid inquiry concerning our Christian duty and obligations is likely enough to give us trouble. In the clear light of the gospel, and with conscience not perverted, can we venture the challenge: "Pure from the blood of all men?" There may be painful misgivings at this point, a feeling of unrest, a most disquieting lack of certainty. Perhaps there is a disposition to leave this question unsolved, or to disclaim and throw off the sense of responsibility. But this will not help the case. We may beclond the conscience, and for a time keep the real issue out of sight, but still blood-guiltiness is possible. It may startle us fearfully at some point in our future course, and, if not before, it may overwhelm us in the judgment.

Will popular sermons, or sermons of any kind alone, however faithful, release the preacher? And are Christian men and women, who give themselves little concern for the salvation of others, likely to escape? Here at least is a standard of duty set up, and a test of Christian fidelity. We may apply it to the duty we owe those nearest to us. Happy if we can stand the test even here! But going beyond, to the regions outlying, to the world, to the heathen, how is the verdict?

Not My Way of Sinning.

Some people have the gift of putting very large truths into very small packages. This in the ADVOCATE has impressed me very forcibly: "A certain person, on hearing another condemned for some fault, said: Yes, that is very bad; it seems very bad to me because it is not my way of sinning." The more that remark is pondered, the larger it seems to grow. We have been led to think a good deal in this direction lately in connection with the difficulty our preachers have in enforcing the "General Rules" of the Methodist Church. These "rules" cover a very wide territory, and embrace every sort of conduct to which moral obligation attaches. So various and so diverse are they that it is an exceedingly difficult matter to find a man or woman that keeps every one of them intact. Just at this point the difficulty begins. Everybody does not begin at the same point to violate obligation. Some begin at one place, others at another place, but by the time you have gone round you find almost every one guilty of a violation of some one of these "rules." And people are generally so sharp in the detection of other people's faults, and so ready to "blaze abroad the matter," that there has grown up in the church a very general spirit of condemnation, rife in every congregation. And what is peculiar about it is that only those are condemned whose violations of vows and obligations differ from the sins of those who condemn. To a person who does not understand much of human nature this is indeed a very curious thing. To be able to see things afar off, while things near are dim, if seen at all, is pretty good evidence of falling eye-sight. In spiritual matters this means backsliding. Lest all this should be misunderstood and misapplied, these illustrations and examples may be given to show the meaning. The general tendency is to condemn those who do not sin as we do. To state it in another way—if a man sins in the same way we do we are not so apt to utter words of condemnation against him as we are to utter them against the man who sins in a different way. Examples: The theater-going church members never condemn one another, but they are very hard on the sisters who go to class meeting with their necks haltered by huge gold chains. The whisky-drinkers and sellers are "hale fellows" with one another, but they are woefully distressed over the fact that Bro. Smith never holds prayer in his family. Those who indulge in "uncharitable or unprofitable conversation," and who enjoy themselves together for hours at a time in that exercise, will roll up their eyes in holy horror if it should be whispered that Miss Amelia Jones was actually seen reading David Copperfield. Those who have not religion enough to make them honest enough to pay their debts are "shocked to the very center of their being" because some church people attend dancing parties. Those who have not read a word in the Bible for months are so sorely grieved at heart that Bro. X. did not appear at the communion last Sunday, that the holy calm of that Sabbath eve had lost its charms. Those who are pettish and quarrelsome, and continually "returning evil for evil," have the keenest eyes to spy out the stingy souls who never contribute one dime to charity or to church. Those who profane every Sabbath that comes "by doing ordinary work therein" would apparently suffer martyrdom before they would "speak evil of magistrates and ministers." Those who put out their money on unlawful interest, and thus take advantage of necessity, and grind the faces of the unfortunate, have their righteous souls vexed to the "lower deeps," Sunday after Sunday, because some members are not regular attendants upon "the public worship of God." And thus it goes on through the whole category. Each can see and most piteously deplore the sins of the other. Each will berate, in the stoutest Anglo-Saxon, the other for not living up to the rules of the church.

"Oh! wad some power the giftie gie us,
To see oursels as others see us,
It wad frae monie a blunder free us,
And foolish notion."

C.

The Negro Bonanza—Extravaganza.

In these times of larger light, when the very points of the compass are changing, it seems to be the part of wisdom for every man to stop and dispassionately take his bearings.

Solomon teaches that there is nothing new under the sun, but in these stirring times we hear of a new South and of new light. We had thought that at least the antipodes of the world were fixed, that the South was and would always be the extreme absence of the North, and vice versa; but we are told that now, under this new light and new South, there is to be no North, no South, no East, no West. Are our relations changed? Are the foundations destroyed? How am I to think when I hear of the new South? Is it the antipode of a new North, or can there be a new South and an old North? Are the correlations which were supposed to exist between the North and South destroyed and clean gone forever? Has the world tilted over on one side, and the other in statu quo? I must confess that these new terms confuse me no little. I am at sea whenever you blot out the four bearings, and tell me I must carry myself as if there were no North, no South, no East, no West. According to the old reckoning, heaven overhead, earth beneath, the sun taking his spring from the east, and going down behind the western clouds, I feel comfortable and natural, as if I was just about where God put me, and here is my field of labor and sphere of duty. I hope no change will be made. But I feel a deep sense of alarm at the announcement of a new South and a new light, not our old sun, and when I am given to understand that under this new order of things past experience and old data avail nothing. The new relation creates new obligations.

Our papers are teeming with remarkable discoveries in the way of new leads of thought, which promise the nation important service. Dr. Haygood, in quiet Oxford, has found a bonanza, which, under his skillful and enterprising management, has turned out a handsome yield. His example has excited others to searching, and in Tennessee another discovery has been made under this new sun; a rich vein of non-explosive fraternity oil, which is offered to the two great bodies of Methodism for purposes of mutual lubrication, so that the two bodies may be preserved intact to the end of time. This find is taking well, and many are investing in it liberally, though as yet it is only a blind lead undefined, and, at best, can only be classed as a bonanza extravaganza. Dr. A. C. George has opened a well of oil in the same high strata of fraternity, only much further north. Dr. Haygood's bonanza may be styled a negro bonanza. His discovery amounts to the finding of six millions of brothers in black, but none the less brothers. This has electrified the nation North and South. The solution of all the troubles North, South, East and West is to be found in this bonanza. The idea seems to be that the negro, the brother in black, who has been the disturbing cause of the conscience of Christendom, is now discovered to be the means of appeasement, and by getting right with these just discovered brothers the new light and a better civilization breaks upon the South. Well, we are glad that relief is coming, but we, who have been here in the home of these brothers, and have grown up with them before the nation fathered them, do not see exactly where the relief is. We are inclined to think that there is a good deal more of sentimental theory in the discovery than real wisdom. The terms are all highly sentimental. Our brother in black, when you come in contact with him, will be found to be a black brother. The term is chosen with much skill, and is full of error and sentimental nonsense, calculated to deceive. It is a sentimental use of language, which ignores the real difference between the races, and vital to the fundamental basis of society. The true difference between the Caucasian and African is not in mere color of garb, which this taking title implies, but lies in the very natures of the two. Any basis of real harmony between two races which God has made so different must be based not on sentimental differences, but the real. We had hoped that we would find out some new light on this great question, on which the prosperity of the South depends, but when such sentimental terms are used, which do not touch the real point at issue, we reject them, and hold on to the light we have.

We think that all the sentimental methods of treating these actual issues are simple nonsense. We take no stock in a new South. There can be none without a new North. There is no new light. We will never have any newer than the Bible and conscience, and with these we accept the situation with good heart and hope.

CHRISTIAN KEENER.

From Atlanta, Georgia.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sunday evening Bishop Holsey, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church of America, preached in the lecture-room of Trinity Church. The congregation was not large for want of general notice, but appreciative and sympathetic. The sermon was delivered in a plain, practical manner, with much earnestness. The subject was "Christ and the devil." His principal object in visiting this place is to secure a house of worship for his people, who are not even organized here. The plans and undertaking were set forth in a very business-like way, stating the feeling his church possesses for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. To us they look for advice, counsel and pecuniary help. He spoke of the persecution his church has undergone on account of affiliation with us. He made no secret of names engaged in this business. I need not repeat. He spoke of his church in a very encouraging manner; said they were coming up, if slowly, surely; spoke of their two papers being well sustained, which you know, Mr. Editor, is a healthy sign. A denomination's papers are its banners, and as long as they are held forth to the breeze the church moves forward.

The Bishop spoke of purchasing a church here (brick,) belonging now to the Campbellites, for $7,500. One gentleman started the subscription with $1,000. A committee was framed from the different Methodist Churches (South,) to take the matter in hand, and see what could be done. On the stand with the Bishop was Dr. A. G. Haygood, whom you know is ever ready to help in any good work. Gov. Colquit and the Supreme Judge of the State, Jackson, made very earnest talks in behalf of the enterprise, and urged the people to come forward and help a people that have been so true to us. In this connection let me say what a grand thing it is to see the Governor and the Supreme Judge of a State standing up so boldly for the Lord. Gov. Colquit is always to be found at the social meetings of the church, aiding by exhortation, prayer and song. Judge Jackson has on several occasions filled the pulpits of ministers during their absence; teaches his class in Sabbath-school regularly. Ought not a people to thank God for such rulers? And why should we have any other than God-loving and God-fearing rulers? Ah! the answer is a deplorable one.

I hope to report to your the success of Bishop Holsey's enterprise. He wishes, after a short while, to establish a school of theology here for his church, on account of the central location.

H. H. C.

FEBRUARY 16, 1882.

Note by the Editor.—The above communication is most gratifying. The way of helping our colored people is made plain. By all means our people should aid Bishop Holsey in his church enterprise at Atlanta. And at other points we must give the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America a helping hand. Let our people help them promptly, vigorously, liberally. The opposition and persecution alluded to by our correspondent makes our aid and sympathy the more imperative.

From Arkansas.

MR. EDITOR: I am this year at Magnolia, down on the border of our Conference, sure enough, and I feel like promising to do better, in a certain direction, than heretofore. I think I shall have a better chance. We have been very kindly received by this people, and we are beginning to feel very much at home among them. There is one sad chapter, however, in connection with the church in this country. They once had a parsonage, and I have no doubt they ought to have kept it.

Our recent Conference at Pine Bluff was to me a very profitable occasion in many respects. The Bishop's sermon on Sunday will long be remembered by those who heard it, and his talk to the children and to the preachers, in the afternoon, was pleasant and profitable beyond measure. There seems to be a fixed determination on the part of the Conference to keep the law and preserve the integrity of the church, not for wrath, but conscience's sake. One member was expelled, another located, and two discontinued by the Conference. For years there has been a scarcity of preachers; now we are about full. One out of the six presiding elders was moved by the law of the church, four were moved by the necessities of the case, and three were unhorsed altogether. All this looks like taking hold of things with a purpose.

We are at sea on the paper question, the Western Methodist being strictly independent. I have a very distinct recollection of a speech that Bishop McTyeire made, in 1866, on the question of independent church papers. He said: "I like very much to drive a fast horse, but I always prefer to hold the reigns." We shall see what we shall see on this subject.

Fraternally, W. W. GRAHAM.

MAGNOLIA, ARK., Feb. 13, 1882.

New Orleans Christian Advocate—Its Origin, "Et Cetera."

BY A. H. MITCHELL, D. D.

Did you know, Mr. Editor, that your ADVOCATE was born on a steamboat on the Mississippi river, in the month of May, 1850? And I happened to be at its birth, and know something of its origin, and, thinking an item or two on this subject might be of interest to you and its many readers and friends, I have concluded to drop you these lines.

The General Conference of 1850 was held at St. Louis, and at that Conference the delegates from the Southwest made a strong effort before that body to have an organ of the church located at New Orleans, and for some reason, central influences, or something else, the project failed; and on board the steamer the delegates, on their way home, got to discussing the subject, called a meeting, and then and there the ADVOCATE had its origin.

Some of us, when the General Conference positively refused to countenance the enterprise, might have been discouraged, but there are men who say what ought to be done can and must be done, and such were the men who figured in this undertaking, for there were the Hamiltons, the Whans, the Drakes, and a host of others, most of whom have finished their work, well and gloriously done, and now rest from their labors.

A Southwestern organ was determined upon, an editor was elected, the enterprise was put on foot, the paper was issued, and the ADVOCATE was a grand success from the very beginning. And now, when we consider its origin, coming forth without the authority of the church, without means, without office, without type or fixtures, its career has certainly been a wonderful success; and what is still more, its course is still onward and upward, for I believe all are agreed that it stands higher to-day in the family of Advocates than at any former period of its history.

And now, Mr. Editor, I suppose you will not wonder and, I trust not, blame me much when you learn that some of us were made to feel very sad when, at the late Alabama Conference, we were told that our formal connection with the dear old ADVOCATE was forever dissolved. As one of the few of the old panuel who still survive, I wanted to make a short speech, but business was hurried on in rather hot haste, as some of us think, as Conference business is sometimes done in these fast days; I kept my seat, and the speech I wanted to make was to this effect.

Years ago I fell in with a good Presbyterian brother, who had been raised a Methodist, and by some means he wandered off into another fold, but who had not and could not forget his antecedents. There being a fine state of religious feeling in the Methodist Church, in a private conversation with me, he wanted to know if he could not be a Methodist too; he wanted to belong to both churches. And that was the feeling I had at the Conference. I wanted to belong to both churches. Now, some of us want it understood that, though we have taken out letters, we still belong to your church. Can this be allowed, Mr. Editor?

The ADVOCATE is still ours in a large and important sense. We can not afford to do without your wise and timely editorials; we want to read your chaste and judicious selections; we can not dispense with your large sources of general information; and we must be allowed to rejoice with you in the grand triumph of the church in your bounds and elsewhere over the earth.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., Feb. 15, 1882.

Note by the Editor.—We have not dropped our Alabama brethren in any way. The Conference dissolved its official connection with this paper, but preachers and people are free to take it, and to work for it. We hope that our Alabama friends will continue with us, that they will write for the paper, send items of news, religious and secular, and make themselves at home in our columns as in other days. For all practical purposes it is still their paper, and, in perfect harmony with their new organ, we wish to promote the interests of the Alabama Conference.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.—Our Nashville Sunday-school periodicals for March are out early, and in excellent style. In an editorial in the Sunday-school Magazine on "Our Sunday-school department," Dr. Cunnyngham says:

"As a church, we have now reached a point in our Sunday-school operations when the interests of the work require that the department be regularly and systematically organized. The legislation of the General Conference has hitherto contemplated nothing more than the pressing exigencies of the time demanded. This was wise, for it left a growing work free to develope itself normally according to the laws of the spiritual life which gave it birth. Therefore, like its parent Methodism, it is a growth, not a manufacture—a child of providence, not a product of ecclesiastical incubation. But it has attained a magnitude and an importance which render more thorough organization necessary, and we look to the next General Conference with hope that such action will be taken as shall adjust the whole system to the other parts of our church economy, and give us a well organized and fully equipped Sunday-school department."

We need not at present occupy time in illustrating what we have said by examples of incomplete legislation. Every well-informed minister and Sunday-school worker in the Southern Methodist Church will understand what we mean. The convention of Conference Sunday-school secretaries, which met in Nashville last May, took action looking to a modification of our present system and prepared memorials to be presented to the approaching General Conference asking for certain changes. These memorials will be presented in due time at the proper time. Our object in this article is to call attention to the general subject, and not to discuss in detail any specific plan of organization. We may do this hereafter, but at present we venture to offer a few suggestions only, which we trust will not be considered entirely out of place:

Would it not be well to have all the legislation of the General Conference in regard to Sunday-schools collected into one chapter in the Discipline? In this way the confusion which now seems to exist on some points would be avoided, and the whole subject appear in its integrity and unity.

Again, we would suggest that all legislation on the subject be confined strictly to the genius of our ecclesiastical polity. By this we mean to say, make our Sunday-school system an integral part of our Methodist economy, bringing the teachers and pupils into closer connection with the pastor and congregation. The Sunday-school is properly the Catechetical Institute of the church, and, as such, necessarily and naturally comes under the control of the pastorate, for the catechetical instruction of the children is a function of the pulpit and pastoral ministry. "Feed my lambs," said Christ to Peter, and through him to every minister of the gospel.

We would suggest that provision be made for a regular graded system of Sunday-school instruction, embracing the doctrines, discipline, and government of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and also a system of normal instruction by which teachers may be prepared for their work. A want of competent teachers in our Sunday-schools is deplored throughout the church. We have many well qualified, but not enough such to meet the demand.

Let provision be made, by the organization of a Sunday-school board or society, or otherwise, for raising funds by which Sunday schools in our missions, and other destitute parts of the country, can be assisted in purchasing books, periodicals, etc.

In connection with this provision, we would suggest such a modification of the law as would combine the duties of the Sunday-school agent and the Conference Sunday-school secretary in one office. This officer might be called Conference Sunday-school superintendent.

We have thus sketched in outline a few points connected with our Sunday-school system which we hope the brethren interested will carefully consider before the meeting of our next General Conference. In our next number we shall call attention to some other topics connected with the work. Our Sunday school department is in a very prosperous condition at present. We thank God, and take courage.

We regret to learn that Mrs. Jessie Tatum, wife of B. C. Tatum, and daughter of Rev. James L. Wright, of the Louisiana Conference, died at Bastrop, La., February 9. Sister Tatum was in her twentieth year, and had promise of long life up to the time of her sudden summons to meet her God. Her sorrowing father writes us: "She left with us a little baby boy to care for and raise. Our second oldest son died in August last; and now our second oldest daughter. She was a praying woman, though not in the church."

—At the recent meeting of the Book Committee in Cincinnati, Rev. Dr. Hartzell presented his resignation as editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate, and Rev. P. Cushman was elected in his place. Dr. Hartzell is assistant secretary of the Freedman's Aid Society, and will devote his entire time to the duties of that position.

—Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, presiding elder of the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference, passed through the city last week on his way to Georgia. He had been summoned by telegraph to visit his father, Dr. J. E. P. Hunnicutt, who was critically sick. Dr. Hunnicutt's home is in the neighborhood of Newnan.

—As we write, Tuesday, February 22, the Mardi Gras follies are in full blast. The displays are very fine. The people, by the acre, fill the streets and throng the galleries. A gay time is this carnival season. We are sincerely glad that it is about over.

—A telegram, dated Richmond, Va., February 18, and published in the city dailies, announces the death of the widow of Bishop Daggett. She died Saturday, February 18, aged sixty-nine years.

Welcome Home.

Rev. Wm. M. Patterson, D. D., superintendent of the Central Mexican mission, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, with his family, reached New Orleans, February 19. The voyage from Vera Cruz was not very rough, but all suffered much from sea sickness. The effects, however, passed off before the "City of Merida" reached her wharf, and all landed in excellent health. Dr. Patterson looks, indeed, the picture of fine health. He has not grown older in appearance, and the hard mission work, and the climate of Mexico, seem to have agreed with him wonderfully.

He reports the affairs of the mission as prosperous. Dr. Patterson will remain a week or two in this city, and will visit the churches generally during his stay in this country. We believe he expects to be absent from Mexico for two or three months.

After four years of almost unparalleled missionary labors, he is certainly entitled to a period of relaxation and change. It is due to him and to his family that they should visit their old friends, their country and their home, and we are sure that the church will everywhere give them a most hearty welcome. Dr. Patterson's presence in this country, and his mingling with our people, will do much to promote the interests of our Mexican mission.

Dr. Linfield's House Burned.

From the following note from Rev. J. G. Jones, dated Hazlehurst, Miss., February 20, it will be seen that the home of Rev. Dr. Linfield has been burned. This is a heavy loss to him and his family. We trust that in this hour of misfortune, Dr. Linfield's friends will come promptly to his relief. Bro. Jones says:

We had a very disastrous fire yesterday morning in this town. It required much care and exertion to save our parsonage and church. Sister Linfield's lot was cleared of everything on it. Household furniture mostly saved in a damaged condition. This falls with crushing weight on a needy, but industrious and most worthy family. Bro. Linfield, you know, is totally blind and a hopeless wreck in body and mind, and a heavy expense on the time, labor and means of his family. We are trying to do what we can for their present relief. Hope the great and good Dr. Linfield's friends, where he has heretofore preached the gospel so successfully, will help us build Sister Linfield another house for her large and unfortunate family. Anything sent to me, care R. W. Millsaps, will go to her benefit.

Death of Rev. C. H. Kelley.

The following from Rev. H. D. Moore, dated Mobile, Ala., February 20, brings us the sad tidings of Bro. Kelley's death.

MR. EDITOR: I have just been informed of the death of Rev. C. H. Kelley of our Conference. He was killed by a fall from a horse. A young man of rare promise, and of superior ability. His death will be regretted by those who knew but to love him. Truly, H. D. MOORE.

Bro. Kelley was in charge of Unionstown mission, Selma District, Alabama Conference. We knew him well, and esteemed him highly. We regarded him as a preacher of great merit, and one who promised to grow in power and usefulness. His character was marked for strength and purity. His brethren trusted, respected and loved him, and his death will be mourned by them deeply.

A Reminder.

MR. EDITOR: The Mississippi Annual Conference at its last session passed a resolution which (I suppose) to the modesty of our secretary does not appear in the printed minutes. The resolution was in substance about as follows:

Whereas, our delegates to the Ecumenical Conference have incurred considerable expense in attending said Conference; and whereas we regard it as sheer justice that the church should pay their expenses; therefore be it

Resolved, that we request each pastor to raise a small sum of money for this purpose, and forward it to one of the said delegates.

In accordance with this resolution, Natchez station has raised $3 and forwarded it to Dr. C. G. Andrews; although we had taken a collection for this purpose last year. If I mistake not quite a number of charges have never paid a cent into this fund. Is not it about time that their charges should fall into line? Is it right that our representatives should serve us at their own expense? Who is at fault in this matter? Is it the preacher, or the people? Have all the charges had this claim presented to them?

W. P. BLACK.

The following, from the Christian Union, is rather startling:

There have been so many Roman Catholic plots which never existed outside heated Protestant brains that it is only fair to allow our Roman Catholic friends the privilege of hatching an occasional Protestant plot; but the attempt of the "Catholic Review" to turn Methodism into a political schism has so many humorous aspects that we are uncertain whether to place it in the category of treasonable revelations or of practical jokes. According to this excellent periodical, the ingenious scheme which goes under the innocent name of Methodism was first devised by the Wesleys and has grown to enormous proportions without exciting the suspicions of the world. Recent facts, however, make it apparent that the plot is near its culmination. Methodism has captured many of the leading political positions of the country; the Methodist Book Concern, as the "Review" shows unmistakably, is an immense affair, controlling a great capital; and, more dreadful still, as a sign of the steady concealment which has characterized the development of Methodism, the "Review" calls attention to the fact that of the hundreds of Methodists newspapers only a very small fraction carry the word "Methodist" on their face, the greater number being disguised under such specious titles as "Christian Advocate." This word "Advocate" is so widely used that it can not possibly be accidental, but betrays some deep-laid plan. The "Review" puts these facts far more cogently and convincingly than my brief summary can do justice to, and it concludes that the day is not far distant, unless the people are aroused to the danger, when Methodism will control the political forces and administration of the country. This is an unexpected peril, and these facts ought to be circulated everywhere.

"I want to take the church paper," was, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, the language of a young man inquiring with a sister church. The root of the matter was in that man. He had entered on a new life, and he wanted all the helps he could get. He began right. He who seeks to know what his church teaches, and what it is doing, will become a co-worker and, as a consequence, an intelligent and useful member. If all who unite with our church would pursue the course of this young man, the power of the church for good would be largely increased. It is a very rare thing to find a man or woman ignorant of all the church teaches or is aiming to teach or do, that is of much force. No books read, no paper taken and read, is a pretty sure indication that the minister to such a flock is to have a hard time, and but little fruit will follow his labors that he can count as good. He who will devise a plan to get the Christian people to reading and thinking will deserve a monument of memory's brightest gems, and will get it. In the meantime let us do the best we can to help the children, so that we have no more generations of non-reading and non-doing people.

LIFE OF BISHOP ANDREW.—Dear Doctor: It is known that the family of Bishop Andrew selected Bishop Marvin to write his Life. He gladly accepted the office. The mandate which sent him around the world forbade his doing it before he left, and he returned to do ere it was begun. Delay has followed delay, but the family have put in my hands the papers, and I am at work on "His Life and Times." I have many letters never published which I will now bring to light. I am exceedingly anxious to get the letters of the Bishop to others. He carefully preserved his letters, and not only the family, but official letters have fallen into my hand—letters from 1813 to the time of his death. The letters of Bishop Soule, Bishop Paine, Dr. Summers, James A. Duncan, Dr. McFerrin, and others, surely were responded to by letters of his own. Will you help me to find them? It is more my purpose to let him write than to write myself. The work has been delayed too long, but enough material is already at hand to enable me to give a very fair view of one of the best, the ablest, and the most gifted men Georgia ever produced.

The letters will be carefully preserved and returned.

Please ask any one who has any recollections which are of interest to send them to me here. My post office is Macon, Ga. G. G. SMITH.

The secular press of Japan, according to a correspondent of the Churchman, is largely in favor of the spread of Christianity. The nichi-nichi Shimbun of Tokio, an organ of the government had recently an article on the folly of fighting the "foreign religion." Among other things, it said:

"Experience plainly proves that religious belief is to be left to men's consciences, and that the spread of a religion cannot be prevented for any length of time, even by the Government itself. The restoration fourteen years ago seemed to raise Shintoism to the position of the State religion, whereat the Shinto priests began to put on airs, and the Buddhists were in a state of constant apprehension; and yet Shintoism has not gained much influence, nor has Buddhism lost much by it. The rise or decline of a religion lies in the existence or non-existence of truth in its system, and it is therefore wholly a matter inherent in itself. If you priests feel truly anxious over the danger that threatens your religion, improve your virtues, quicken your learning, inquire for more truth, labor steadily to correct your conversation and conduct so as to receive credit in society."—Standard.

A Worthy Object.

The following communication from Bro. Bahin, of Natchez, is commended to the attention of our readers: The balance due on that church at Vidalia should be raised at once.

NATCHEZ, Feb. 18, 1882.

MR. EDITOR: Can I trouble you to make an appeal through the ADVOCATE in behalf of the Methodist Church at Vidalia? There is a debt on it, and if our people abroad knew of all the people have done to build this house of God they would respond to the appeal. Let our friends throughout Louisiana and Mississippi do something for them. I think about $800 will do it. Any amounts sent to Judge O. Mayo or Judge Wade Hough will be duly receipted for. These two men, not members of the church, have paid most of the money toward this church. As you know, we have but about ten members here, and half of them are children. Please appeal to the God-loving people to help this worthy object.

My union Sunday-school is doing well. We have a good house, all paid for, and ask for nothing but the prayers of all good people. I wish you could see it. My Roman Catholic class is sixteen strong, Jews seven and twenty-two Protestants of all denominations; have a good organ, and we sing from the gospel hymns. Please excuse me for troubling you, but pray for us, my brother.

Yours in Christ, G. J. BAHIN.

A Case of Need.

MR. EDITOR: Through the columns of the ADVOCATE please let it be known that Rev. Joseph Nicholson is now at his home in Ocean Springs, Miss., convalescing from the varioloid, or small-pox, contracted en route for his mission, in January, at Covington. He is much better, and, as yet, no one else has contracted the disease from him. In order to guard against infection, he will suffer the loss of clothes and bedding.

Through kind friends at Moss Point and Ocean Springs we have taken care of him and family, providing a suit of clothes, and some needed provisions. His voice has almost failed him, and eye-sight is greatly impaired, and thinks he is threatened with paralysis.

If any of his friends would like to aid in this hour of his distress, let them do so by sending the money to you, or by registered letter to me. If provisions are sent, let them be directed to him, my care, and be prepaid. Yours,

R. D. DOWNER.

OCEAN SPRINGS, Miss.

MARK.—There is no padding in Mark's Gospel. You may go through every line and find no redundant word. One of the marvels which daily and painfully beset us is the multitude of words which can be employed to say almost nothing. A man or woman of leisure can expand over four sheets of paper what a man of business would say on the first page. Mark's Gospel is a model of descriptive writing—noticing innumerable points in the story which the other Evangelists omit, yet always telling them in the compactest possible way. It would be a lengthening of days to editors if their contributors would study Mark's style as their model of composition.—London Christian.

El Bien Publico, of Nicaragua, says that Nicaragua has declared against the Jesuits, General Zavala proposes to expel them. La Verdad says this order has sustained its old reputation for secular and political intrigue. At Nataigalpa they incited the natives against authorities and are responsible for all the conspiracies of the Serviles against the Liberals throughout Central America. The Jesuit is the same in every clime and in every Society. All that this tiger absorbs becomes tiger.

The Official Members' Association of our church in this city have, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, through a committee of judicious laymen, secured a lot on the south-east corner of Boundary and Druid Hill avenues, upon which they propose shortly to erect a chapel, and inaugurate a new church enterprise. It is in a rapidly improving neighborhood, and none of our suburban localities promises more as to future outlook and growth.

The Presiding Elders are eyes and ears for the Bishop, and they are mouth to the people and preachers. They are to see and hear for the Bishop, and speak for the people and preachers of their District in the matter of the appointments. They travel at large in their Districts, and know the wants of the people and the adaptation of their preachers to a certain work. They are middle men; and, like most men of this designation, they are quite likely to be censured on both sides, even when they do their best. It would be better to pray for them more and censure them less.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

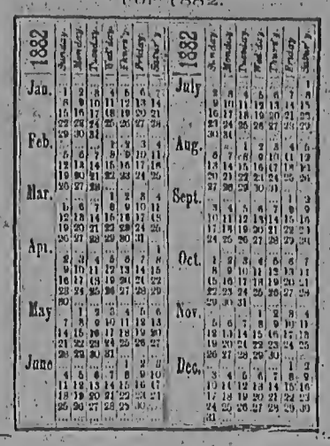
The next Annual Session of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be held at Fredericksburg, Va., commencing on Wednesday, March 8. Bishop McTyeire will preside.

God has given a man two eyes; if he lose one, he hath another. But man hath only one soul, if he lose that, the loss can never be made up again.—Chrysostom.

The Rev. Julius C. Brown and John W. Boswell have issued the prospectus of another new Southern Methodist newspaper to be published at Little Rock, and called the Arkansas Methodist.

Advocate Calendar,

For 1882.



Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as representated in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

During the hot days of August last, when the earth was perching under the intense heat, the Rev. Dr. —— was called to preach a sermon at F——. He was no doubt pleased with the many compliments that were given him after the sermon. But imagine his feelings when a good old deacon wrung his hand, with the remark: "Have had a pretty dry time, haven't we?" Its application may have been to the weather, but it followed pretty close on the sermon.

CONSUMPTION CURED.—Since 1870 Dr. Sherar has each year sent from this office the means of relief and cure to thousands afflicted with disease. The correspondence necessitated by this work becoming too heavy for him, I came to his aid. He now feels constrained to relinquish it entirely, and has placed in my hands the formula of that simple vegetable remedy discovered by an Eastern missionary, and found so effective for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Diseases; also all Nervous Complaints. Its remarkable curative powers have been proven in many thousand cases, and actuated by the desire to relieve suffering humanity, I gladly assume the duty of making it known to others. Address me, with stamp, naming this paper and I will mail you, free of charge, the recipe of this wonderful remedy, with full directions for its preparation and use, printed in German, French or English. W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Bishop Bloomfield had been a widower and had several children. He married a second time a widow with a family. One day he asked a country clergyman to dine with him, telling him: "You will only meet our family party." The clergyman found a much larger number assembled in the drawing-room than he had anticipated, and was introduced by the Bishop thus: "These are mine, those are hers, and those are ours."

Tommy was a little rogue, whom his mother had hard work to manage. Their house in the country stood raised a few feet from the ground, and Tommy, to escape a well-deserved whipping, ran from his mother and crept under the house. Presently the father came home, and hearing where the boy had taken refuge, crept under to bring him out. As he approached on his hands and knees, Tommy asked, "Is she after you, too?"

A bickering pair of Quakers were lately heard in high controversy, the husband exclaiming: "I am determined to have one quiet week with thee!" "But how will thou be able to get it?" said the taunting spouse, in that sort of reiteration which married ladies so provokingly indulge in. "I will keep thee a week after thou are dead," was the Quaker's rejoinder.

"What did you do with that letter that was on my table?" asked Gus. De Smith of the colored boy who cleans up his room. "I tuk it to the post-office, sah, and put it in de hole." "What did you do that for? Did you not see there was no address on the envelope?" "I saw dar was no writin on de kiverge, but I 'lowed yer did dat ar on purpose so I couldn't tell who yer was writin' to. I'se an educated negro, I is."

The great music house of P. Werlein continues to supply the world with musical instruments, and thousands of homes have been made happy by the possession of a piano or an organ through his low prices and astonishingly liberal terms. The name Werlein has become so identified with pianos that you hardly can think of pianos without thinking of Werlein. Go and try him, and our word for it, you will be pleased.

Little Jack has been a naughty boy, and his mamma says: "I shall give a sugar-plum to your brother, and none to you, in order to punish you." "Mamma," says the elder brother, eagerly, "hadn't you better give me the sugar-plum right away so as to produce more effect upon him?"

"You don't know how it pains me to punish you," said the teacher. "I guess there's the most pain at my end of the stick," replied the boy feelingly. "Tany rate, I'd be willing to swap."

When Pingrey heard of a bridal couple being thrown from their carriage, he remarked that it was the first marry-time disaster he ever heard of on land.

Remember all diseases of the stomach and intestines, urinary and digestive organs, cured by using Brown's Iron Bitters.

Never be at your place of business when a person wants to borrow money of you, because if you are in you will be out, but if you are out you will be in.

Bountiful nature seems to have placed in every clime the proper remedies for the diseases incidental to it. Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectural Balm is made of an herb which grows all over the Gulf region, and it has never failed yet to cure all kinds of coughs and colds.

A young man sent sixty cents to a firm that advertised a recipe to prevent bad dreams. He received a slip of paper on which was written: "Don't go to sleep."

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

Call me an octagon! said Mrs. Partington; why, the next thing you will call me a centurion, a relic of antipathy, and send me to the next imposition.

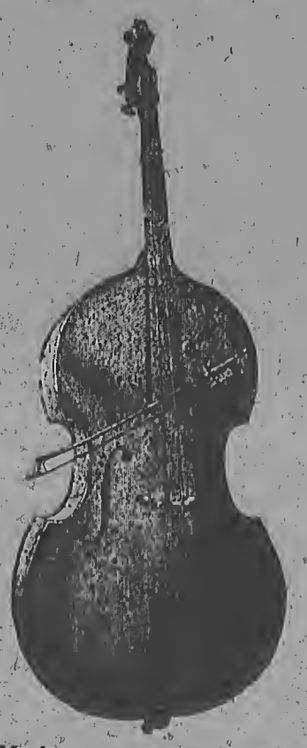
"Poor American infidelity," as one of our foremost scholars has said, "is clothing herself in the cast-off rags of her German sister."

An advertiser in Texas calls for "an industrious man, as a boss hand over five thousand head of sheep that can speak Spanish fluently."

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend for the next year and you will not regret it.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

WERLEIN'S,
NEW ORLEANS.



Make your home happy by purchasing one of those superb

CHICKERING,
MATHUSHEK,
OR HALE
PIANOS.

If you should not want a Piano buy an Organ;

MASON & HAMLIN'S
LEAD.
STERLING ORGANS
Are Good and Cheap.

GOOD VIOLIN, BOW AND BOX, $5.

I am prepared to supply all persons with good bargains. If you will write for catalogue and prices you will be convinced that we do offer good inducements.

Instruments sent on trial, and if not satisfactory, no sale nor expense.

PHILIP WERLEIN,
135 Canal St., New Orleans.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL
UNION
DEPOSITORY.

With a full line of Question Books, Catechisms, Hymn Books, Class Books, Library Books, Rewards, and everything needed in the Sunday-school. Send for catalogue.

Also Sankey & Bliss' Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs, Teachers' Bibles, Concordances, Bible Dictionaries, Commentaries, etc., at the Depository

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

CHAPEL HILL ACADEMY,

MARSHALL COUNTY, TENN.

Opens the next session, the Sixteenth, under present principals, January 2, 1882. Courses, English, Classics, Mathematics and Sciences. Thoroughness, Cheapness and Progress are all combined here. Efficient teachers employed, such as know how to teach, and are up with the spirit and progress of this age of Education. Entire expense, $70 to $80 per session of twenty weeks. Music by skillful teachers for $25 per session.

O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., editor Christian Advocate, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., of this school says: "Unsolicited, we speak a word in behalf of this school. The Chapel Hill community is one of the best in the country, the location is beautiful and healthful, and Prof. S. V. Wall is a teacher whose skill as an educator is only equaled by his qualities as a Christian gentleman. All of which we say because we know it is so."

Pupils can enter at any time and will be charged only from time of entrance. Tri-weekly stage from Nashville to this place, distance forty miles south.

Address S. V. WALL, Principal,
Chapel Hill, Tenn.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,
MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,
MONUMENTS.
Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,
MARBLE, SLATE,
And Iron Mantels and Grates.
114, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans

FOR $2.50!

Mailed Postage Paid.

I have nineteen copies left of the

Complete Church Register,

Historical and statistical, comprising: A General Index; An Alphabetical Register for Church Members; Register of Official Members, of Baptisms, Marriages and Deaths, Register of Annual, Quarterly and Church Conferences; Tables for Church Collections; and an Annual Summary of the Yearly Work and condition of the Church.

It is substantially bound in cloth, leather back, ruled and printed, size about 16x13 inches, over 200 pages, and no more can be had when this lot is disposed of. Original price $5. All in perfect order.

Address G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

Indian Turnip
COMPOUND
PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by R. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street.

And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co. Augusta, Maine.

Agricultural.

BUSINESS HABITS.—"There is probably not one farmer in ten thousand," says an exchange, "who keeps a set of accounts from which he can at any moment learn the cost of anything he may have produced, or even the cost of his real property. A very few farmers who have been brought up to business habits keep such accounts and are able to tell how their affairs progress, what each crop, each kind of stock or each animal has cost and what each produces. Knowing these points a farmer can, to a very great extent, properly decide what crops he will grow and what kind of stock he will keep. He will thus be able to apply his labor and money where it will do the most good. He can weed out his stock and retain only such animals as may be kept with profit. For the want of such knowledge farmers continue, year after year, to feed cows that are unprofitable, and frequently sell for less than her value one that is the best of the herd, because she is not known to be any better than the rest. Feed is also wasted upon ill bred stock, the keep of which costs three or four times that of well bred animals, which, as has been proved by figures that can not be mistaken, pays a large profit on their keeping. For want of knowing what they cost poor crops are raised year by year at an actual loss, provided the farmer's labor, at the rates current for a common labor, were charged against them. To learn that he has been working for fifty cents a day during a number of years, while he has been paying his help twice as much, would open the eyes of many a farmer who has actually been doing this, and it would convince him that there is some value in figures and book accounts. It is not generally understood that a man who raises twenty bushels of corn per acre pays twice as much for his plowing an harrowing, twice as much for labor and twice as great interest upon the cost of his farm as a neighbor who raises forty bushels per acre. Nor is it understood that when he raises a pig that makes 150 pounds of pork in a year that his pork costs him twice as much or the corn he feeds brings him but half as much as that of his neighbor, whose pig weighs 300 pounds at a year old. If all these things were clearly set down in figures upon a page in account book, and were studied, there would be not only a sudden awakening to the unprofitableness of such farming but an immediate remedy would be sought. For no person could resist evidence of this kind if it were once brought plainly home to him. If storekeepers merchants or manufacturers kept no accounts they could not possibly carry on their business, and it is only because the farmer's business is one of the most safe that he can still go on working in the dark and throwing away opportunities of bettering his condition and increasing his profits."

TOMATO CULTURE.—The chief requisites, says Joseph Harris, in growing good tomatoes are: First, good seed of a good variety; second, good stocky plants, and third, good warm, dry soil and good cultivation. The best crop of tomatoes I ever raised was treated in the following manner: Seed sown in hot-bed in March, in rows three inches apart and four or five seeds to the inch. When two inches high the plants were removed to another hot-bed and set out in rows five inches apart and the plants three inches apart in the rows. As soon as the plants began to crowd each other they were transplanted into pots and placed in the hot-bed, the pots being plunged into the soil level with the surface. This last point should not be overlooked. It gives the roots of the plants the needed "bottom heat," and the heat is much more uniform than if the pots are simply placed on the top of the soil in a hot-bed. The plants were allowed plenty of air and soon were hardened off. The last week in May the plants were set out in the open ground, in rows three and a half feet apart each way. The land was mellow and moderately rich. We made good sized holes with a spade where the plants were to be set out, and then with a rake or hoe filled these holes with fine, warm surface soil and put a tablespoonful of superphosphate in each hole, and worked it thoroughly into the soil with a hoe. Give the plants a thorough watering before removing them from the pots. Set the plants deep, or say till the first leaves are on a level with the surface. Press the loose, mellow soil firmly around the ball of earth and roots. Keep the ground very loose and mellow on the surface by the constant use of the cultivator and hoe. If you have no hot-bed start the plants in a box of light soil in the kitchen window. When the plants begin to crowd each other in the box transplant into other boxes, and when they are well grown harden them off by leaving the boxes out of doors during the day in fine weather. Good plants may be raised by sowing the seed out of doors early in the spring. Select a sheltered spot with a southern exposure; work into the soil some dry, sifted coal ashes. Sow the seed in drills, fifteen inches apart. For raising young tomato plants in this way the soil can not be too rich. But the land where the crop is to be grown need only be in good average condition, except that it should be made very fine and mellow.—New York Herald.

QUINCUNX.—The true quincunx method of planting out trees, as orchardists apply the term, consists in putting the trees equi-distant from each other in every direction. It is a very good arrangement, for it enables one to fill up his ground neatly and profitably, and does away with necessity of his cultivating a single foot of unoccupied space.

If you are proposing to plant some of the smaller varieties of pear trees; ten feet apart will, perhaps, give them space enough. For this distance lay off your rows eight feet eight inches asunder, and plant your first row of trees ten feet from each other. The first tree of your second row plant five feet from your starting line, and then go on ten feet apart as before. Begin and plant your third row as you did your first, and your fourth as your second and so on breaking joints, as it were, until your space is full. This will give an orchard in perfect quincunx, the trees standing ten feet apart.

If you desire to plant trees, say twenty feet apart, lay of your rows seventeen feet four inches asunder, and set the tress of your first row twenty feet from each other, following the foregoing directions; that is, setting first tree of second row ten feet from starting point, and the others twenty feet apart, and so on, "breaking joints" as you go.—Mobile Register.

PRUNING THE PEACH.—Mr. Downing long ago wrote of the peach, that it bears pruning especially well; and even late in the spring, when it is unsafe to prune many trees because the fresh wounds continue to bleed. A laborer can be shown in five minutes how to prune a whole orchard, for the best course is simply to shorten back all the strongest shoots, over the top of the tree, one-half. The philosophy of this is that the later formed buds seldom set fruit but drop off, while the best peaches are obtained from the stout triple buds that have been first formed low down on the shoot (early in the season's growth.) The side-shoots that grow out of strong leaders as a second growth are not so apt to hold their fruit as the slender shoots, often covered with fruit buds alone, which have issued lower down and earlier, and which dry up after bearing, and, in time, drop off. This pruning enables the tree to carry its burden more safely, and facilitates picking, besides conserving the health of the tree by removing the half-ripened wood liable to disease. This principle in pruning of cutting away before the spring sap flow, all unripe wood liable to injury by the winter, is applicable to other trees than the peach. The pear is especially safe-guarded by it, and grape vines, and roses, will grow much better by having this source of decayed and corrupting sap removed. Its virus is comparable to that of unhealthy pus absorbed by the blood, and spreading pyæmia through every vein.—Mobile Register.

LATE ORANGE CULTURE.—Don't cultivate your orange trees after the first of December, or even after the first of November would be better yet. Plants, like animals, require a certain amount of sleep, or rest, and the winter is the season for that rest. The result of a late cultivation is that you stimulate the plant or tree into another growth, with a very fair probability of that growth being stunted, if not directly killed, by one of the cold spells to which this country is liable. Thus your tree is not only deprived of a rest, but trapped into an undue growth, if not loss. Instead of cultivating your trees at this late date, merely clean around them good; removing brush or trash from the immediate vicinity of the tree, so that wood lice or other injurious insects may not deprodate on the tree. Don't cultivate below the surface at all.

Against the possible chance of injury from severe frost, we would suggest that small piles of sawdust be placed throughout the grove, especially on the northern edge. The piles could be set on fire, and the dense smoke would be an ample protection from the action of frost. Fortunately in this climate the chance of injury from frost is very slight; yet to be ready in case of one would be, as the ladies say, "so nice," and the sawdust could afterward be scattered about and advantageously incorporated with the soil. Hardwood ashes would be of direct benefit.—Barton Informant.

PREPARING CABBAGE FOR FOWLS.—A correspondent of the Poultry Journal and Record gives the following mode of saving and preparing green food, especially cabbage leaves, for fowls in winter: "It seems necessary for and beneficial to chickens to feed at all times on some green food. During summer it is quite easy to supply their wants, and our pets can get all they require if they are allowed free range, but it is necessary for us to provide for the hard winter months. A cheap and practical way to obtain green food during winter is the following method: Take all the outside leaves of cabbage, which are generally thrown away as useless, and put them in layers with common rock salt, in either, for that purpose, earthen pits or clean barrels; stamp as solid as possible, cover it up well and let it ferment. In a very short time a veritable sour cabbage is obtained which will keep through winter and will prove, as an addition to their regular food, very valuable to our pets. The cabbage can be given raw, but it is preferable to feed it cooked, in a lukewarm condition. The chickens eat it with great relish and thrive wonderfully, as it does not only add to their good condition during the hard and cold winter months, but induces them to commence laying early and continue diligently. Experience has shown in Germany the merits of feeding sour cabbage, and I can only advise the readers of your valuable journal to give it a fair trial, as it is not connected with any great outlay of either labor or expense, and I am certain that it will give satisfaction to all.

REMEDY FOR WHITE GRUBS.—A writer in an exchange says: "I keep my strawberries in stools, as I find it easier for me to keep the bed clean. Last August I found that the runner I set in July, in missing hills, looked wilted, and, examining one, I found it without roots. Digging out under it I saw the grubs were at work. Having spent a great deal of time very pleasantly in caring for my strawberries I determined to save them. Hunting up authorities on this point I found some recommended wood ashes, others sulphur. Having at hand a rich heap of hen manure composted, I took one-half bushel of that same measure of unleached wood ashes, one pound of flour of sulphur, two quarts of soft coal soot and one quart of salt. This I mixed thoroughly, and every hill afflicted I filled with this mixture (after digging out the grubs), sprinkling a little clear earth over before setting new plants. Those plants partly eaten I put back in the prepared hill, and in a week after upon examining them, I found them forming new roots. Never did I see such growth made in strawberries before. I have also applied this mixture to raspberries that made a feeble growth. They responded almost immediately. I now keep it on hand, ready to apply to any shrubbery I find languishing. The soot I regarded as the most valuable insect destroyer. I think it probable that if it was mixed alone with the hen compost it might be sufficient, but sulphur is a powerful fertilizer to plants, and at the same time very obnoxious to insect life."

PLUM CULTURE.—In a discussion on plum culture, at a meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, it was stated that Prof. Cleveland, of Maine, saved his plums by removing three inches of the soil and covering with air-slacked lime. One tree on which he tried this remedy bore three bushels of fruit. Mr. Bates succeeded by sprinkling the fruit, when damp, with air-slacked lime. Others showered the trees with lime wash. Another cultivator had covered his trees with mosquito netting, and obtained plums. There is no doubt that some of these remedies owe their partial efficacy to frightening away the curculios, in working at the trees to apply to them. All the washes and dustings, including the application of diluted tar, must be repeated several times, or as often as the rains wash them off, and the labor required for them is much greater than the regular and quick jarring on iron plugs, which we have recommended on former occasions, and which have always proved entirely successful.—New York Herald.

Household.

OUR TEETH.—They decay. Hence unseemly mouths, bad breath, imperfect mastication. Everybody regrets it. What is the cause? I reply, want of cleanliness. A clean tooth never decays. The mouth is a warm place, 98 degrees. Particles of meat between the teeth soon decompose. Gums and teeth must suffer.

Perfect cleanliness will preserve the teeth to old age. How shall it be secured? Use a quill pick, and rinse the mouth after eating; brush and castile soap every morning; the brush with simple water on going to bed. Bestow this trifling care upon your precious teeth, and you will keep them and ruin the dentists. Neglect it, and you will be sorry all your lives. Children forget. Watch them. The first teeth determine the character of the second set. Give them equal care.

Sugar, acid, saleratus and hot things are nothing when compared with food decomposing between the teeth. Mercurialization may loosen the teeth, long use wear them out, but keep them clean and they will never decay. This advice is worth thousands of dollars to every boy and girl. Books have been written on the subject. This brief article contains all that is essential.

Never have a tooth taken out if it be possible to have it filled. The loss of a single jaw-tooth will not only give the check a sunken appearance, but it will prevent the proper mastication of the food, and this is a long step toward dyspepsia, with its train of evils.

TO REPAIR WORN STOCKINGS.—Children will wear holes through the heels and knees of their stocking almost the first time they put them on. If before the stockings are worn the heels, toes, and knees are run on the wrong side with yarn the same color, catching the threads lightly, so that the right side of the stocking will not be marred, it will strengthen them greatly. When stockens became worn so that they can not be darned without looking rough and uneven, the best way to mend them is to knit over the hole. Pick up the stitches and knit on two needles apiece, matching the stocking as nearly as possible, large enough to cover the worn piece, sew it down on the remaining sides, and when pressed it will show very little. The heels may be mended in the same way, making a separate piece and sewing it over the old part. In knitting stockings it is a good plan to make the heel and toe of heavier yarn than the rest of the stocking, or to knit a heavy cotton thread the same color as the yarn, with the yarn. In mending stockings more than in most anything else does the old adage hold true, "A stitch in time saves nine."

THE EYES.—Never read in bed or in a reclining attitude; it provokes a tension of the optic nerve very fatiguing to the eye sight. An exchange says: "Bathe your eyes daily in salt water, not salt enough, though, to cause a smarting sensation. Nothing is more strengthening, and we have known several persons who, after using this simple tonic for a few weeks, had put aside the spectacles they had used for years, and did not resume them, continuing, of course, the oft-repeated daily use of salt water." Never force your eyesight to read or work in insufficient or too broad light. Reading with the sun upon one's book is mortally injurious to the eyes.

COLORING GLASS.—Colors are usually imparted to glass in the melting-pot; for blue, oxide of cobalt is used—for red or gold, sub-oxide of copper. Glass is stained by painting its surface with a fusible-colored glass ground to a fine powder and mixed up with gum-water or turpentine, and, after drying, then heating the painted glass in a furnace until the coating fuses. Collodion, shellac, or spirit-copal varnishes, properly colored with one of the coal-tar dyes, can in some cases be advantageously employed as a colored wash for white glass.

OPEN GRATES.—The most practical suggestion yet made toward economizing the use of coals seems to be in the use of solid bottoms in ordinary fire grates. It has been asserted, and indeed proved, that in any fire grate not exceedingly small a plate of iron placed upon the bars will nearly halve the consumption of coal, and also reduce the smoke and keep up a cheerful, free burning fire. Quite sufficient air will enter through the front bars and all poking should be avoided, and the fire will continue until all the coal is consumed, which will be done without leaving much ash or dust. A sheet of iron to fit easily into the grate will cost but a quarter of a dollar, and the coal bin will not need to be replenished so frequently.

IRON KETTLES.—The best way to prepare a new iron kettle for use is to fill with clean potato parings, boil them for an hour or more, then wash the kettle with hot water, wipe it dry and rub it with a little lard; repeat the rubbing half a dozen times after using. In this way you will prevent rust and all the annoyances liable to occur in the use of a new kettle.

CUCUMBER CATSUP.—Three dozen full grown cucumbers, eight white onions, peel both and cut as fine as possible, on this sprinkle three-fourths of a pint of fine salt, then put the whole in a sieve and drain for eight hours; then take a teacupful of mustard seed, half a cup of ground black pepper, mix them well with the cucumber and onion; then put the whole in a stone jar and cover with strong vinegar, closing it tightly. It is fit for use in three days, and will keep a long time.

When cucumbers are scarce take half green tomatoes and cucumbers, and it will make an excellent catsup.

HARD SOAP.—Twelve pounds of grease, twelve pounds of sal-soda, six pounds of lime. Put eight gallons of warm water on the lime and soda; let it stand over night and in the morning pour it carefully on the grease. Put more water on the lime to fill up with as it boils. Boil two hours. If the grease is very salt, it must be freshened. Cut in cakes, and leave in the air to dry.

TABLE LINEN.—Napkins of various tints, more properly called doilies, are used in serving fruits. For ordinary table use white table-cloths and white napkins are in vogue as they have been. There are cloths with narrow bands of scarlet crimson along the edge, with napkins of the same description, that are very tasteful.

A piece of zinc placed on the live coals in a hot stove will, it is said, effectually clean out a stove-pipe, the vapors produced carrying off soot by chemical decomposition.

Educational.

—The Territory of New Mexico, in point of natural advantages, is among the richest and most valuable portions of our great Western domain. Santa Fe, the capital, is one of the oldest cities in the United States, having been founded as long ago as 1610. It was settled by the Spaniards and has long been a center of Catholic influence and power. The territory is rapidly filling up with a population mostly Protestant, and good men are making commendable efforts to provide educational institutions to meet their wants. A little more than a year since, the Rev. Horatio O. Ladd, formerly principal of the New Hampshire Normal School and more recently pastor of the Congregational Church in Hopkinton, Mass., was sent to Santa Fe by the New West Commission, to do pioneer work in the territory. A Congregational Church has been organized and the University of New Mexico has been incorporated under favorable auspices. A house of worship is in process of erection and the academic department of the University has been organized, with an attendance of upward of 50 pupils. Among the trustees of the institution are several of the leading citizens of Santa Fe, who have taken hold of the enterprise with spirit and a fixed determination to carry it forward to success. The trustees looked to the East for the funds needed to lay the foundations of the University and carry it forward to the point where it may safely depend for support upon the citizens of the territory. Mr. Ladd, the president of the faculty, has been appointed an agent to solicit funds, and is now visiting New York and New England for that purpose.—New York Independent.

—The State of New York expended $9,675,992 last year upon her public schools—a larger amount than any other state. Illinois follows her on the list, with $8,735,478; then comes Pennsylvania, with $7,046,116. The smallest sum expended ($7,056) was that provided by Wyoming. New York has 286,225 illiterates out of a population of 5,082,871; and Massachusetts 168,615, out of a population of 1,783,085. Georgia is the state suffering most from illiteracy. It has a population of 1,512,180, and of this number 967,099 persons either can not read or can not write.

—All examinations for admission to the University of California are hereafter to be conducted in writing. Applicants must have their knowledge so available as to make a test portion of it known in a limited time. The requirements have been increased. Those admitted to the literary course must now be prepared with the elements of two sciences. The colleges of science now demand a more thorough preparation in English, but lower their requirements in mathematics.

—The Union Theological Seminary (Presbyterian,) in this city, has an attendance of 120 undergraduates, 6 graduate students, and 2 fellows. 43 of the undergraduates are in the junior class, 40 in the middle, and 37 in the senior. 47 colleges and 4 seminaries are represented by alumni and but 3 of the students are without a collegiate education. The faculty numbers 7, under the presidency of the Rev. Roswell D. Hitchcock, D.D., LL.D. There are, in addition, three lecturers and an instructor in elocution.

—Prof. Tyndall set aside the proceeds of his lectures in this country to found a fund to aid capable American students of physics who may wish to study in Germany. The original trustees were Prof. Joseph Henry, of Washington; Gen. Hector Tyndale, of Philadelphia; and E. L. Youmans, of New York; but, as the two former are dead, President Barnard, of Columbia College, and Prof. Joseph Lovering, of Harvard University, have been appointed in their places. This fund now produces enough to afford a moderate support for two students.

—Of the 257 living graduates of the Chandler Scientific Department of Dartmouth College 62 are civil and mechanical engineers, 30 lawyers, 22 teachers, 18 physicians, 23 merchants, 8 clerks, 6 professors, 7 farmers, 5 chemists, 5 mining engineers, 5 railroad men, 4 clergymen, 3 each journists, draughtsmen, cashiers, treasurers, and architects, 2 each artists, real estate agents, bankers, and 1 each in twelve other occupations. Of the 46 members of the last three classes 21 are civil engineers.

—The attendance at the University of Wooster, at Wooster, O., is now 477, the largest ever known in the history of the institution. There is a gain in every department over last year and the University is in a flourishing condition. There have been 1,233 students since the opening, of which number 240 are regular alumni. Of the present students about 50 are from Pennsylvania, 100 from other states than Ohio, and the remainder from that state.

—It is said that President Porter, of Yale, objects to the experiments now being made in other colleges in relieving students from the sense of constraint and accountability. He says that the temporary or permanent skepticisms of instructors are not meddled with and that they are not asked to formally express religious faith; but no influences or instructions to any unchristian directions are allowed.

—Gov. Ludlow, of New Jersey, in his first annual message to the state legislature, calls attention to the fact that increase of school-fund exceeds the legal expenditures that can be made from it. He recommends that a portion of the expense, for the purposes of education, now drawn from the state fund, may properly be transferred to the present strong school-fund.

—John P. Howard, of Burlington, has given $50,000 to the University of Vermont, the largest individual gift ever made to the institution. The income is to be applied to the endowment of the Howard professorship of natural history, the purchase of specimens, apparatus, etc. in the department indicated, and to increase the University library.

—Mr. William Bucknell, of Philadelphia, has offered to give $50,000 toward the endowment fund of the Crozier Baptist Theological Seminary at Lewisburg, Penn., provided that the further sum of $100,000 is secured.

—One year has been added to the Worcester high-school course, the reason for this action being the increased requirements for admission to college.

—Nebraska has just apportioned among her counties school moneys in the amount of $180,380 70. The school population is 153,125.

—England has 4 universities, France 15, and Germany 22, while the single State of Ohio boasts of 37.

—Dr. A. D. Hamilton, President of Andrew Female College, Georgia, has been stricken with paralysis.

EDUCATIONAL.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY,
GREENSBORO, ALA.
Second term opens February 20, 1882. The University is out of debt and has a full faculty.
For information address,
F. M. PETERSON,
Secretary of the Faculty.

WOODVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY,
Woodville, Wilkinson Co., Miss.
INVITES PATRONAGE.
Buildings are good and comfortable; grounds beautiful and ample; location healthful; Faculty full and efficient. Charges for board and tuition, per half academic year, $75 to $85.

East Mississippi Female College.
MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.
REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.
One of the most accessible and prosperous schools in the South. Its facilities, course of study, system and faculty are superior. It is a growing and popular institution under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.
"It has developed into great usefulness, and has established itself in the hearts and confidence of the people."—Mississippi Conference.
"The college is finely located to command a large patronage, and its management has been such as to secure the confidence of the people. It is an institution that deserves the liberal support and patronage of the Methodists of Mississippi."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.
Send for catalogue and examine terms.

Whitworth Female College,
BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.
Will re-open September 21, 1881. Number of pupils last term, 291. Number of teachers 13. Board per half academic year, $60; Tuition from $15 to $25; Incidental Fees from $1 to $4.
The languages, ancient and modern, mathematics, the sciences, music, drawing and painting thoroughly taught.
The continued success of this school is its best indorsement. There has not been a death in the college for years past. Send for a catalogue.
H. F. JOHNSON, A. M., D. D.,
President.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.
NASHVILLE, TENN.
Session 1881-82.
THE Academic, Biblical and Law Departments open September 1. The Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Departments open October 1.
The fees are as follows: Academic Department, $65; Biblical, $15; Law, $100; Medical, $65; Dental, $90; Pharmaceutical, $65.
Ten scholarships, worth $100 each, were awarded to meritorious students at the close of the last session. Four Graduate Fellowships, worth $300 each, and two Post-graduate Fellowships, worth $500, each, were likewise conferred.
The various Chairs of the University are filled by forty Professors and Instructors. Six hundred and thirty-two students, from twenty-one States, were matriculated last year.
For the ANNUAL REGISTER, or further information, address J. M. Leech, Secretary of the Faculty, or
L. C. GARLAND, Chancellor.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,
ABINGDON, VA.
In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.
Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.
Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kneringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.
A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.
The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.
Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.
$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.
The Fall Session will begin September 15, 1881.
Send for catalogue to
REV. E. E. WILEY, D. D., President.

Millwood Female Institute,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.
Founded 1866. Chartered 1870.
This school opens the first Monday of September 1881, with efficient accomplished teachers in every department.
Expenses, per session of five months, including Tuition, Board and Washing, $75.
Music on Piano or Guitar, with use of Instrument and class singing, $25.
For further particulars send for catalogue.
MISS McCALMONT, Principal.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,
AT BATON ROUGE, LA.
The next session of this school will begin October 5, 1881.
This is a family boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.
For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Principal.
J. B. MAGRUDER A. M. Assistant.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.
Session 1880-81 had 133 students, six professors and teachers and three A. B. graduates. The entire expenses for board and tuition for scholastic year need not exceed $144 in Preparatory department, nor $164 in College classes. Next session begins September 5, 1881. Send for a Catalogue.
C. G. ANDREWS, President.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,
HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.
The thirty-second year begins August 31. A more healthy location can not be found. The College was never in a more prosperous condition. A full Faculty of thorough teachers, splendid buildings and a complete outfit for all departments, literary, music, languages and art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Prices reduced to suit the times. Special inducements offered. For terms and new catalogues address
REV. A. B. JONES, A. M., President.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy,
FOR YOUNG LADIES.
